But ye that ought to be gouerned by your magistrates, as the heards by the heardman, and ought to be like sheepe to your king, who ought to be like a sheepeheard vnto you, euen in the time when your profit was sought, and better redresse was intended, than your vprlirs and vnquietnesse could obteine, haue beyond the crueltie of all beasts folwlie risen against your ruler, and shewed your selues worthie to be ordered like beasts, who in kind of obedience will fall from the state of men. A dog stoupeth when he is beaten of his maister, not for lacke of stomach, but for naturall obedience: you being not striken of your head but fauoured, not kept downe but succoured and remedied by law, haue violentlie against law not onelie barked like beasts, but also bitten like helhounds. What? Is the mischiefe of sedition either not knowne vnto you, or not feared? Haue not examples aforetimes both told the end of rebels, and the wickednesse of rebellion it selfe? But as for old examples, let them passe for a while, as things well to be considered. But at this present one thing more to be weied.

The presumptuous & arrogant vsurped rule of the rebels noted to the impeachment of princelie prerogatiue.

Looke vpon your selues, after ye haue wickedlie crept into this horrible kind of treason, do ye not see how manie bottomlesse whirlepoles of mischiefe yee be gulft withall, and what lothsome kinds of rebellion ye be faine to wade through? Ye haue sent out in the kings name, against the kings will, precepts of all kinds, & without commandement commanded his subiects, and vnruilie haue ruled where yee liked to command, thinking your owne fansies the kings commandements, and rebels lusts in things to be right gouernement of things, not loking what should follow by reason, but what your selues follow by affection. And is it not a dangerous and a cruell kind of treason, to giue out precepts to the kings people? There can be no iust execution of lawes, reformation of faults, giuing out of commandements, but from the king. For in the king onelie is the right herof, & the authoritie of him deriued by his appointment to his ministers. Ye hauing no authoritie of the king, but taking it of your selues, what thinke ye your selues to be? Ministers ye be none, except ye be the diuels ministers, for he is the author of sedition.

The kings maiestie intendeth to mainteine peace, and to oppresse warre; ye stirre vp vprores of people, hurliburlies of vagabonds, routs of robbers. Is this anie part of the kings ministerie? If a vagabond would doo what he lust, and call himselfe your seruant, and execute such offices of trust, whether yee would or no, as yee haue committed vnto another mans credit, what would euerie one of you saie or doo herein? Would ye suffer it? Ye wander out of houses, ye make euerie daie new matters as it pleaseth you, ye take in hand the execution of those things, God by his word forbidding the same, which God hath put the magistrates in trust withall. What can ye saie to this? Is it sufferable thinke ye? If ye told a priuat message in another mans name, can it be but a false lie I praie you? And to tell a feined message to the common-wealth, and that from the king, can it be honest thinke ye? To command is more than to speake: what is it then to command so traitorous a lie? This then which is in word a deceitfull lie, and in deed a traitorous fact, noisome to the common-wealth, vnhonourable to the king, mischieuous in you, how can ye otherwise iudge of it, but to be an vnheard of and notable disobedience to the king: and therefore by notable example to be punished, and not with gentlenesse of pardon to be forgiuen? Ye haue robbed euerie honest house, and spoiled them vniustlie, and pitiouslie wronged poore men being no offendors, to their vtter vndoing, and yet ye thinke ye haue not broken the kings lawes. The kings maiesties law and his commandement is, that euerie man should safelie keepe his owne, and vse it reasonablie to an honest gaine of his liuing: ye violentlie take and carie awaie from men without cause, all things whereby they should mainteine, not onelie themselues, but also their familie, & leaue them so naked, that they shall feele the smart of your cursed enterprise, longer than your owne vnnaturall & vngodlie stomachs would well vouchsafe. By iustice ye should neither hurt nor wrong man, and your pretensed cause of this monstruous sturre is to increase mens wealth. And yet how manie, and saie truth, haue ye decaied and vndone, by spoiling and taking awaie their goods? How should honest men liue quietlie in the common-wealth at anie time, if their goods, either gotten by their owne labor, or left to them by their friends, shall vnlawfullie and vnorderlie, to the feeding of a sort of rebels, be spoiled and wasted, and vtterlie scattered abrode? The thing that ye take is not your right, it is an other mans owne. The maner of taking against his will is vnlawfull, & against the order of euerie good common-wealth. The cause why ye take it is mischieuous and horrible, to fat your sedition. Ye that take it be wicked traitors, and common enimies of all good order.

The rebels outragious and intollerable demeanor descried.

Their disobedience notorious.

The rebels offend against the law of iustice & equitie.

The former matter vehementlie vrged.

If he that desireth an other mans goods or catell, do fault: what doth he (thinke you) whose desire taking followeth, and is led to and fro by lust, as his wicked fansie void of reason doth guide him? He that vseth not his owne well and charitablie, hath much to answer for: and shall they be thought not vniust,

vniust, who not onelie take awaie other mens, but also misuse and waste the same vngodlie? They that take things priuilie awaie, and steale secretlie and couertlie other mens goods, be by law iudged worthie death: and shall they that without shame spoile things openlie, and be not afeard by impudencie to professe their spoile, be thought either honest creatures to God, or faithfull subiects to their king, or naturall men to their countrie? If nothing had moued you but the example of mischefe, and the fouls practise of other moued by the same, ye should yet haue abstained from so licentious and vilanous a shew of robberie, considering how manie honester there be, that being loth their wickednesse should be blazed abrode, yet be found out by prouidence, and hanged for desert. What shall we then thinke or saie of you? Shall we call you pickers, or hid theeues; naie more than theeues, daie theeues, heard stealers, shire spoilers, and vtter destroiers of all kinds of families, both among the poore and also among the rich. Let vs yet further see. Be there no mo things wherein ye haue broken the kings lawes, and so vilelie disobeie him, flat contrarie to your bounden dutie and allegiance?

The rebels are still charged with their rapines, and violentlie inferred wrongs.

Ye haue not onelie spoiled the kings true subiects of their goods, but also ye haue imprisoned their bodies, which should be at libertie vnder the king, and restreined them of their seruice, which by dutie they owe the king, and appaired both strength and health, wherewith they liue and serue the king. Is there anie honest thing more desired than libertie? Ye haue shamefullie spoiled them thereof. Is there anie thing more dutifull than to serue their lord and master? But as that was desired of the one part, so was it hindered and stopped on your part. For neither can the king be serued, nor families kept, nor the common-wealth looked vnto, where freedome of libertie is stopped, and diligence of seruice is hindered, and the helpe of strength and health abated. Mens bodies ought to be free from all mens bondage and crueltie, and onelie in this realme be subiect in publike punishment to our publike gouernour, and neither be touched of *headlesse capteins, nor holden of brainlesse rebels. For the gouernement of so pretious a thing ought to belong vnto the most noble ruler, and not iustlie to be in euerie mans power, which is iustlie euerie liuing mans treasure. For what goods be so deare to euerie man, as his owne bodie is, which is the true vessell of the mind, to be measurablie kept of euerie man for all exercises & seruices of the mind? If ye may not of your owne authoritie meddle with mens goods, much lesse you may of your owne authoritie take order with mens bodies.

Libertie desired aboue all things.

*Fit epithets and terms for head and taile of this rebellion.

For what be goods in comparison of health, libertie, and strength, which be all setled and fastened in the bodie? They that strike other, do greatlie offend, and be iustlie punishable: and shall they that cruellie and wrongfullie torment mens bodies with irons and imprisonments, be thought not of others but of themselues honest, and plaine, and true dealing men? What shall we say by them, who in a priuat businesse will let a man to go his iourneie in the kings high waie? Do they not (thinke ye) plaine wrong? Then in a common cause not onelie to hinder them, but also to deale crueltie with them, and shut them from doing their seruice to the king, and their dutie to the common-wealth, is it not both disobedience, crueltie, and mischiefe thinke ye? What an hinderance is it, to haue a good garment hurt, anie iewell appaired, or anie esteemed thing to be defaced? And seeing no earthlie thing a man hath is more pretious than his body, to cause it to be cruellie tormented with irons, feebled with cold, weakened with ordering: can it be thought anie other thing but wrong to the sufferer, crueltie in the doer, & great disobedience and transgression to the king? How then be ye able to defend it? But seeing ye so vnpitifullie vere men, cast them in prison, lade them with irons, pine them with famine, contrarie to the rule of nature, contrarie to the kings maiesties lawes, contrarie to God holie ordinances, hauing no matter but pretensed and fained gloses, ye be not onelie disobedient to the king like rebels, but withstanding the law of nature like beasts, and so worthie to die like dogs, except the kings maiestie, without respect of your deseruing, do mercifullie grant you of his goodnesse that which you cannot escape by iustice.

The offense of excluding the kings subiects from the benefit of libertie aggrauated.

A pithie conclusion inferred vpon the premisses, in forme of sentence definitiue.

Yet ye being not content with this, as small things enterprise great matters, and as though ye could not satisfie your selues, if ye should leaue anie mischiefe vndone, haue sought blood with crueltie, and haue slaine of the kings true subiects manie, thinking their murder to be your defense, when as ye haue increased the fault of your vile rebellion, with the horror of bloudshed, and so haue burdened mischiefe with mischiefe, whilest it come to an importable weight of mischiefe. What could we do more, in the horribilest kind of faults, vnto the greatest transgressours and offendors of God and men, than to loke strictlie on them by death, and so to rid them out of the common-wealth by seuere punishment, whome ye thought vnworthie to liue among men for their doings? And those who haue not offended the king, but defended his realme, and by obedience of seruice sought to punish the disobedient, and for safegard of euerie man put themselues vnder dutie of law, those haue ye miserablie and cruellie slaine, and bathed you in their bloud, whose doings ye should haue followed, & not to haue appaired the common-wealth, both by destruction of good men, and also by increase of rebels. And how can that common-wealth by anie meanes indure, wherein euerie man without authoritie, may vnpunished slea whome he list, and that in such case as those who be slaine shew themselues most noble of courage, and most readie to serue the king and the common-wealth, and those as do slea be most vilanous and traitorous rebels that anie common-wealth did euer sustaine?

The rebels charged with the murder and bloudshed of the kings liege people.

A licentious common-wealth cannot indure.

For a citie and a prouince be not the faire houses, and the strong walles, nor the defense of anie engine, but the liuing bodies of men, being able in number and strength to maintaine themselues by good order of iustice, & to serue for all necessarie & behouable vses in the common-wealth. And when as mans bodie being a part of the whole common-wealth, is wrongfullie touched anie way, and specialle by death, then suffereth the common-wealth great iniurie, and that alwaies so much the more, how honester and nobler he is, who is iniuriouslie murdered. How was the lord Sheffeld handled among you, a noble gentleman, and of good seruice, both fit for counsell in peace, and for conduct in war, considering either the grauitie of his wisedome, or the authoritie of his person, or his seruice to the common-wealth, or the hope that all men had in him, or the need that England had of such, or among manie notablie good, his singular excellencie, or the fauor that all men bare toward him, being loued of euerie man, and hated of no man?

wherein and whereof consisteth a citie, prouince, or politike bodie.

Lord Sheffelds slaughter laid to the rebels charge.

Considered ye who should by dutie be the kings subiects, either how ye should not haue offended the K. or after offense haue required the kings pardon, or not to haue refused his goodnesse offered, or at length, to haue yelded to his mercie, or not to haue slaine those who came for his seruice, or to haue spared those who who in danger offered ransome. But all these things forgotten by rage of rebellion, because one madnesse cannot be without infinit vices, ye slew him cruellie, who offered himselfe manfullie, nor would not so much as spare him for ransome, who was worthie for nobleneſse to haue had honour, & hewed him bare whome ye could not hurt armed, and by slauerie slue nobilitie, in deed miserablie, in fashion cruellie, in cause diuelishlie. Oh with what cruell spite was violentlie sundred so noble a bodie from so godlie a mind? Whose death must rather be reuenged than lamented, whose death was no lacke to himselfe, but to his countrie, whose death might euerie way bene better borne, than at a rebels hand. Violence is in all things hurtfull, but in life horrible. What should I speake of others in the same case, diuerse and notable, whose death for manhod and seruice can want no worthie praise, so long as these vglie sturrers of rebellion can be had in mind. God hath himselfe ioined mans bodie and his soule togither, not to be departed asunder, afore he euer disseuer them himselfe, or cause them to be disseuered by his minister.

Lord Shefteld's woorthi end in this rebellion pithilie vrged.

The knitting of mans bodie and mind Gods worke, and to whome the dissoluing thereof belongeth.

And shall rebels and heedlesse camps, being armed against God, and in field against their king, thinke it no fault to shed bloud of true subiects, hauing neither office of God, nor appointment of ministers, nor cause of rebellion? He that stealeth anie part of a mans substance, is worthie to lose his life. What shall we thinke then of them, who spoile men of their liues, for the maintenance whereof, not onelie substance & riches be sought for, but also all common welths be deuised? Now then, your owne consciences should be made your iudges, & none other set to giue sentence against ye. Seeing ye haue bene such bloudshedders, so heinous manquellers, so horrible murderers, could ye do anie other than plainlie confesse your foule and wicked rebellion to be greeuous against God, and traitorous to the king, and hurtfull to the common-wealth? So manie greeuous faults meeting togither in one sinke, might not onelie haue discouraged, but also driuen to desperation, anie other honest or indifferent mind.

Hereby he sheweth the rebels consciences seered vp as it were with an hot iron.

But what feele they, whose hearts so deepe mischefe had hardened, and by vehemencie of affection be made vnshamefast, and stop all discourse of reason, to let at large the full scope of their vnmeasurable madnesse? Priuat mens goods seeme little to your vnsatiable desires, yee haue wared greedie now vpon cities, and haue attempted mightie spoiles, to glut vp (and yee could) your walking hunger. Oh how much haue they need of, that will neuer be contented, and what riches can suffice anie that will attempt high enterprises aboue their estate? Ye could not mainteine your camps with your priuat goods, with your neighbours portion, but yee must also attempt cities, bicause ye sought great spoiles with other mens losses, and had forgotten how yee liued at home honestlie with your owne, and thought them worthie death that would disquiet yee in your house, and plucke awaie that which yee by right of law thought to be your owne. Herein see what yee would haue done, spoiled the kings maiesties subiects, weakened the kings strength, ouerthrowne his townes, taken awaie his munition, drawne his subiects to like rebellion, yea and as it is among forren enimies in sacking of cities, no doubt thereof, yee would haue fallen to slaughter of men, rauishing of wiues, deflouring of maidens, chopping of children, fiering of houses, beating downe of streets, ouerthrowing of altogither.

The rebels couetousnesse and ambition insatiable.

A briefe caſtulation of the rebels disloiall atempts and purposes.

For what measure haue men in the increase of madnesse, when they can not at the beginning staie themselues from falling into it. And if the besetting but of one house to rob it, be iustlie deemed worthie death: what shall we thinke of them that besiege whole cities for desire of spoile? We liue vnder a king to serue him at all times when he shall need our strength: and shall ye then not onlie withdraw your selues, which ought as much to be obedient as we be, but also violentlie plucke other awaie too, fro the dutie vnto the which by Gods commandement all subiects be strictlie bound, and by all lawes euerie nation is naturallie led? The townes be not onelie the ornament of the realme, but also the seat of merchants, the place of handicrafts, that men scattered in villages, and needing diuerse things, maie in little rome know where to find the lacke. To ouerthrow them then, is nothing else but to waste your owne commodities, so that when ye would buie a necessarie thing for monie, ye could not tell where to find the same.

In argument from the lesse to the greater.

The vse and necessarie seruice of townes, & what it is to ouerthrow them.

Munition serueth the king not onelie for the defense of his owne, but also for the inuasion of his enimie. And if ye will then so strictlie deale with him, that ye will not let him so much as defend his owne, ye offer him double iniurie; both that ye let him from doing anie notable fact abrode, and also that ye suffer not him quietlie to inioie his owne at home. But herein hath notablie apeered what cities haue faithfully serued and suffred extreme danger, not onelie of goods, but also of famine & death, rather than to suffer the kings enimies to enter: and what white liuered cities haue not onlie not withstood them, but also with shame fauored them, and with mischiefe aided them. And I would I might praise herein all cities alike! which I would do, if all were like worthie. For then I might shew more faith in subiects than strength in rebelles; and testifie to men to come, what a generall faith euerie citie bare to the kings maiestie, whose age although it were not fit to rule, yet his subiects hearts were willing to obeie, thinking not onelie of the hope, which all men conceiue hereafter to be in him, but also of the iust kind of gouernment, which in his minoritie his councell doth vse among them. And here, how much and how worthilie maie Excester be commended, which being in the middest of rebels, vnuittelled, vnfurnished, vnprepared for so long a siege, did noblie hold out the continuall and dangerous assault of the rebell? For they susteined the violence of the rebell, not onlie they had plentie enough of vittels, but also eleuen or twelue daies after the extreme famine came on them, and liuing without bread, were in courage so manfull, & in dutie so constant, that they thought it yet much better to die the extreme death of hunger, shewing truth to their king, and loue to their countrie, than to giue anie place to the rebell, and fauor him with aid, although they might haue done it with their lesse danger. Whose example if Norwich had followed, & had not rather giuen place to traitor Ket, than to keepe their dutie; and had not sought more safegard than honestie, and priuat hope more than common quietnesse: they had ended their rebellion sooner, and escaped themselues better, and saued the losse of the worthie lord Shefeld, in whome was more true seruice for his life, than in them for their goods. And although this can not be spoken against a certeine honest sort that were amongst them, whose praise was the greater, bicause they were so few: yet the greater number was such, that they not onelie obeied the rebell for feare, but also followed him for loue, and did so traitorouslie order the kings band vnder my lord marquesse, that they suffered more damage out of their houses by the townsmen, than they did abrode by the rebelles. Whose fault as the kings maiestie maie pardon, so I would either the example might be forgotten, that no citie

The vse and seruice of munition.

Wherein apeereth the faithfull seruice of cities.

A good subiects wish, and the reason thereof.

Excester commended for loue & loiall seruice to the king & estate.

Norwich vpbraided with the example of Excester.

Some citizens of Norwich excusable of this rebellion, but most chargeable therwith in a high degree of disloialtie.

might

might hereafter follow the like, or the deed be so abhorred, that others hereafter would auoid the like shame, & learne to be noble by Excester, whose truth doth not onelie deserue great praises, but also great reward.

Excester noble and true.

Who then that would willinglie defend ye, can say anie thing for ye, which haue so diuerslie faulted, so traitorouslie offended, not onlie against priuat men seuerallie, but also generallie against whole townes, and that after such a sort, as outward enimies full of deadlie feud could not more cruellie inuade them? And thus the kings maiestie dishonored, his councell disobeied, the goods of the poore spoiled, the houses of the wealthie sacked, honest mens bodies imprisoned, worthie mens personages slaine, cities besieged and threatned, and all kind of things disordered, can ye without teares and repentance heare spoken of, which without honestie and godlinesse ye practised, and not find in your hearts now to returne to dutie, which by witchcraft of sedition were drowned in disorder? Haue ye not in disorder first grieuouslie offended God, next traitorouslie risen against your king, and so neither worthie euerlasting life, as long as ye so remaine, nor yet ciuill life being in such a breach of common quietnesse? If euerie one of these cannot by themselues plucke you backe from this your lewd and outragious enterprises, yet let them altogither stir ye; or at least be a fearfull example to others, to beware by your vnmeasurable follie, how they do so far prouoke God, or offend man: and find by your mistemper to be themselues better ordered, and learne still to obeie, bicause they would not repent, and so to liue with honestie, that they would neither willinglie offend Gods law, nor disobeie mans.

A collection or beadroll of certeine outrages done by the rebels.

Persuasions to obedience and loialtie.

But and ye were so much bleared, that you did thinke impossible things, and your reason gaue ye against all reason, that ye neither displeased God herein, nor offended the king, yet be ye so blind, that ye vnderstand not your owne case, nor your neighbors miserie, nor the ruine of the whole commonwealth, which doth euidentlie follow your so foule and detestable sedition? Do ye not see how for the maintenance of these vngodlie rablements, not onlie cities and villages, but also shires and countries be vtterlie destroied? Is not their corne wasted, their cattell fetcht awaie, their houses rifled, their goods spoiled, and all to feed your vprising without reason, and to mainteine this tumult of rebellion inuented of the diuell, continued by you, and to be ouerthrowen by the power of Gods mightie hand? And whie should not so hurtfull wasting and harrieng of countries be iustlie punished with great seueritie, seeing robbing of houses, and taking of purses, do by law deserue the extremitie of death? How manie suffer iniurie when one hundred of a shire is spoiled? And what iniurie thinke ye is done, when not onelie whole shires be destroied, but also euerie quarter of the realme touched? Haue ye not brought vpon vs all pouertie, weakenesse, and hatred within the realme, & discourage, shame, and damage without the realme? If ye miserablie intended not onelie to vndo other, but also to destroie your selues, and to ouerthrow the whole realme, could ye haue taken a readier waie to your owne ruine than this is?

The harts & mischiefes that befall cities, &c. by mainteining rebelles.

Rebellion is worthilie to be punished,

A further view of the inconueniences bred by rebellion.

And first if ye be anie thing reasonable, lift vp your reason, and weigh by wisdome, if not all things, yet your owne cases, and learne in the beginning of matters to foresee the end, and iudge aduisedlie yer ye enter into anie thing hastilie. See ye not this yeare the losse of haruest? And thinke ye can grow to wealth that yeere when ye lose your thrift and profit? Barns be poore mens storehouses, wherein lieth a great part of euerie mans owne liuing, his wiues and childrens liuing, wherwith men mainteine their families, paie their rents: and therefore be alwaies thought most rich when they haue best crops. And now when there is neither plentie of haie, nor sufficient of straw, nor corne inough, and that through the great disorder of your lewd rebellion, can ye thinke ye do well, when ye vndo your selues, and iudge it a common-welth when the commons is destroied, and seeke your hap by vnhappinesse, and esteeme your owne losse to be your owne forwardnes, and by this iudgement shew your selues, how little ye vnderstand other mens matters, when ye can scarselie consider the weightiest of your owne? Hath not the haie this yeare, as it rose from the ground, so rotted to the ground againe: and where it was wont by mens seasonable labor to be taken in due time, and then serue for the maintenance of horse and cattell wherwith we liue, now by your disordered mischefe hath beene by mens idlenesse and vndutifulnesse let alone vntouched, and so neither serueth the poore to make monie of, nor anie cattell to liue with. The corne was sowne with labour, and the ground tilled for it with labour, and looked to be brought home againe with labour: and for lacke of honest labourers it is lost on the ground; the owners being loiterers, and seeking other mens, haue lost their owne, and hoping for mounteins, lacked their present thrift, neither obteining that they sought, nor seeking that they ought.

Haie rotting on the ground.

Losse of corne for lacke of reaping.

And how shall men liue when the maintenance of their prouision is lacking? For labouring and their old store is wasted by wildnesse of sedition, and so neither spare the old nor saue the new. How can men be fed then or beasts liue, when as such wastfull negligence is miserablie vsed? And mispending the time of their profit, in shamefull disorder of inobedience, they care not greatlie what becommeth of their owne, bicause they intend to liue by other mens? Haie is gone, corne is wasted, straw is spoiled; what reckoning of haruest can ye make, either for the aid of others, or for the releefe of your selues? And thus haue ye brought in one kind of miserie, which if yee saw before, as ye be like to feele after, although ye had hated the common-welth, yet for loue of your selues ye would haue auoided the great enormitie thereof, into the which ye wilfullie now haue cast your selues.

The losse of one yeares harnest verie hurtfull.

An other no lesse is, that such plentie of vittels as was abundantlie in euerie quarter for the releefe of vs all, is now wastfullie and vnthriftfullie spent, in mainteining you vnlawfull rebels, and so with disorder all is consumed, which with good husbandrie might long haue indured. For, so much as would haue serued a whole yeare at home with diligence and skilfull heed of husbandrie, that is wilfullie wasted in a moneth in the campe, through the rauening spoile of vilanie. For what is vnordered plentie, but a wastfull spoile, whereof the inconuenience is so great, as ye be worthie to feele, and bringeth in more hardnes of liuing, greater dearth of all things, & occasioneth manie causes of diseases? The price of things must needs increase much, when the number of things wareth lesse, and by scarsitie be inhansed, & compelleth men to abate their liberalitie in house, both to their owne, and also to strangers. And where the rich wanteth, what can the poore find, who in a common scarsitie liueth most scarselie, and feeleth quicklieſt the sharpnesse of staruing, when euerie man for lacke is hungerbitten. Which if ye had well remembred before, as ye now maie after perceiue, ye would not I thinke so stiffe-neckedlie haue resisted and indangered your selues in the storme of famine, whereof ye most likelie must haue the greatest part, which most stubbornlie resisted, to your owne Wastfull spending of vittels by the rebels inconuenient to the whole state.

A necessitie of inhansing the price of things.

The losse of harnest. Barns be poore mens storehouses.

shame

shame and confusion.

After a great dearth commeth a great death, a reason why.

Experience teacheth vs, that after a great dearth commeth a great death; for that when men in great want of meat eat much ill meat, they fill their bodies with ill humors, and cast them from their state of health, into a subiection of sickenesse: because the good blood in the bodie is not able to kéepe his temper, for the multitude of the ill humors that corrupteth the same. And so grow great & deadlie plagues, and destroie great numbers of all sorts, sparing no kind that they light on, neither respecting the poore with mercie, nor the rich with fauour. Can ye therefore thinke herein, when ye sée decaie of vittels, the rich pinch, the poore famish, the following of diseases, the greatnesse of death, the mourning of widowes, the pitifulnesse of the fatherlesse, and all this miserie to come thorough your vnnaturall misbehauiour, that ye haue not dangerouslie hurt the commons of your countrie with a dolefull and vncurable wound? These things being once felt in the common-wealth, as they must nœds be, euerie man séeth by and by what followeth: euen a great diminishment of the strength of the realme, when the due number that the realme doth mainteine is made lesse, and thereby we be made rather a preie for our enimies, than a safetie for our selues.

A briefe rehearsall or summarie of mischiefes issuing from rebellion.

And how can there be but a great decaie of people at the length, when some be ouerthrowne in warre, some suffer for punishment, some pine for famine, some die with the campes diet, some be consumed with sickenesse? For although ye thinke your selues able to match with a few vnprepared gentlemen, and put them from their houses, that ye might gaine the spoile: do ye iudge therefore your selues strong inough, not onelie to withstand a kings power, but also to ouerthrow it? Is it possible that ye should haue so mad a frensie in your head, that ye should thinke the number ye sée so strong, that all ye sée not should not be able to preuaile to the contrarie? With what reason could ye thinke, that if ye bode the hot brunt of battell, but ye must nœds feele the smart, speciallie the kings power comming against you: which if ye feare not, belike ye know not the force thereof? And so much the greater number is lost in the realme, that both the ouercommer and the ouercommed be parties, although vnlike, of one realme: and what losse is not onelie of either side, but of both, that doth plainlie redound to the whole.

A great decaie of people.

Rebels can not preuaile against the princes power.

A necessarie consequent that rebels are seuerelie to be punished, and that such punishment is good and necessarie.

When where so great and so horrible a fault is committed, as worse can not be mentioned of from the beginning, and bringeth in withall such penurie, such weakenes, such disorder in the common-wealth, as no mischiefe besides could do the like: can anie man thinke with iust reason, that all shall escape vnpunished that shall escape the sword, and not manie for terrour and examples sake should be looked vnto, who haue bene either great doers in such a disordered vilanie, or great counsellors to such an outgrowne mischiefe; séeing the onelie remedie of redressing wilfull faults is a iust and seuere punishment of such, whose naughtie déeds good men ought to abhorre for duties sake, and ill men maie dread for like punishments sake, and a free licence to do mischiefe vnpunished is so dangerous, that the sufferance of one is the occasion of the fall of a great number, and womanish pitie to one is a deceitfull crueltie to the whole, intilling them to their owne destruction by sufferance, which would haue auoided the danger by fore punishment.

Against fond pitie forbearing and forgiuing a wilfull offendor.

And in such a barrennesse of vittels, as must nœds come after so rauening a spoile, it must nœds be, that some (though few) shall be so nipt with egernesse of famine, that they shall not recouer againe themselues out of so fretting a danger. So in a generall weakenesse, where all shall be fœbled, some must nœds die, and so diminish the number, and abate such strength as the realme defended it selfe withall before. Which occasion of neuer so few, comming of so great a cause, if ye should make iust amends for, not of recompense which ye could not, but of punishment which ye ought; how manie, how diuerse and how cruell deaths ought euerie one of ye often suffer? How manie came to the camps from long labour to sudden ease, and from meane fare to strong of vittels: and so fell in a maner vnwares to such a contrarie change, that nature hir selfe abiding neuer great and sudden changes, can not beare it without some grounds entered of diseases to come, which vncircumspect men shall sooner féele than thinke of, and then will scarselie iudge the cause, when they shall be vered with the effect?

Rebels punishable with manie deaths.

It is little maruell that idleneſse and meat of an other mans charge will some fœd vp & fat like men: but it is great maruell if idleneſse and other mens meat do not abate the same by sickenesse againe, and specially comming from the one, and going to the other: contrarie in those who violentlie séeke to turne in a moment the whole realme to the contrarie. For while their mind changeth from obedience to vnrulinesse, and turneth it selfe from honestie to wildnesse, and their bodies go from labour to idlenesse, from small fare to spoile of vittels, and from beds in the night to cabins, and from swéet houses to stinking camps, it must nœds be by changing of affections which alter the bodie, and by vsing of rest that filleth the bodie, and by glutting of meats which weakeneth the bodie, & with cold in the nights which accrazeth the bodie, and with corrupt aire which infecteth the bodie, that there follow some grieuous tempest not onelie of contagious sickenesse, but also of present death to the bodie.

Idleneſse and meat of other mens charge.

The greatest plucke of all is, that vehemencie of plague, which naturallie followeth the dint of hunger, which when it entereth once among men, what darts of pangs, what throwes of paines, what shouts of death doth it cast out? How manie fall, not astonied with the sickenesse, but fretted with the paine? How beateth it downe not onelie small townes, but also great countries? This when ye sée light first on your beasts which lacke fodder, and after fall on men whose bodies gape for it, and sée the scarsenesse of men to be by this your foule enterprise, and not onelie other men touched with plagues, but also your owne house strong with death, and the plague also raised of your rising, to fire your selues: can ye thinke you to be anie other but mankillers of other, and murtherers of your selues, and the principals of the ouerthrow of so great a number, as shall either by sword or punishment, famine, or some plague or pestilence be consumed and wasted out of the common-wealth?

The force of pestilence following famine.

The plague & pestilence occasioned by rebellion.

And séeing he that decaieth the number of cottages or plowes in a towne, séemeth to be an enimie to the common-wealth: shall we not count him, not onelie an enimie, but also a murtherer of his countrie, who by harebrained vnrulinesse causeth vtter ruine and pestilent destruction of so manie thousand men? Grant this follie then and ouersight to be such as worthilie ye maie count it, and I shall go further in declaring of other great inconueniences, which your dangerous and furious misbehauiour hath hurtfullie brought in; séeing diuerse honest and true dealing men, whose liuing is by their owne prouision, hath come so before hand by time, that they haue bene able well to liue honestlie in their houses, & paie beside the rents of their farmes truelie, and now haue by your crueltie and abhorred insurrections lost their goods, their cattell, their har-neſſ, which they had gotten before, and wherwith they intended to liue hereafter, & now be brought to this extremitie, that they be neither able to liue, as they were wont at home before; nor to paie their accuſtomeable rent at their due time. Whereby they be brought into trouble and vnquietneſſe, not onlie muſing what they haue loſt by you, but alſo curſing you by whome they haue loſt it, and alſo in danger of loſing their holds at their lords hands, except by pitie they ſhew more mercie, than the right of the law will grant by iuſtice.

Rebels enimies & murtherers of their countrie.

Further mischiefes of vncharitablenes issuing from rebellion.

The fruits of honeſt mens trauels long in gathering, quickelie ſpoiled by rebellion.

And what a griefe is it to an honeſt man, to labor trulie in youth, and to gaine painefullie by labour, wherewith to liue honeſtlie in age, and to haue this, gotten in long time, to be ſuddenlie caught awaie by the violence of ſedition, which name he ought to abhorre by it ſelfe, although no miſerie of loſſe followed to him thereby. But what greater griefe ought ſeditious rebels to haue themſelues, who if they be not ſtriken with puniſhment, yet ought to pine in conſcience, and melt awaie with the griefe of their owne faults, when they ſee innocents and men of true ſeruice hindered and burdened with the hurt of their rebellion, & who in a good commonwealth ſhould for honeſties ſake proſper, they by theſe rebels onlie meanes be caſt ſo behind the hand, as they can not recouer eaſilie againe by their owne truſh, that which they haue loſt by thoſe traitors miſchiefe? And if vniuſt men ought not ſo to be handled at anie mans hands, but onelie ſtand to the order of a law: how much more ſhould true and faithfull ſubiects, who deſerue praiſe, feele no vnquietneſſe, nor be vexed with ſedition, who be obedientlie in ſubiection, but rather ſeeke iuſt amends at falſe rebels hands, and by law obteine that they loſt by diſorder, and ſo conſtreine you to the vttermoſt, to paie the recompenſe of wrongfull loſſes, bicauſe ye were the authors of theſe wrongfull ſpoiles.

An argument from equitie & vpright dealing euen with the vniuſt.

Then would ye ſone perceiue the commonwealths hurt, not when other felt it who deſerued it not, but when you ſmarted who cauſed it, and ſtood not & loked vpon other mens loſſes which ye might pitie, but tormented with your owne which ye would lament. Now I am paſt this miſchiefe, which ye will not hereafter denie, when ye ſhall praiſe other mens foreſight, rather than your wicked doings, in bewailing the end of your furie, in whoſe beginning ye now reioiſe. What ſaie ye to the number of vagabonds and loitering beggers, which after the ouerthrow of your campe, and ſcattering of this ſeditious number, will ſwarme in euerie corner of the realme and not onelie lie loitering vnder hedges, but alſo ſtand ſturdilie in cities, and beg boldlie at euerie doore, leauing labour which they like not, and following idleneſſe which they ſhould not? For euerie man is eaſilie and naturallie brought from labour to eaſe, from the better to the worſe, from diligence to ſlothfulneſſe: and after warres it is commonlie ſeene, that a great number of thoſe which went out honeſt, returne home againe like roiſters, and as though they were burnt to the wars bottome, they haue all their life after an vnſauorie ſmacke thereof, & ſmell ſtill toward daieſleepers, purſepickers, highwaie robbers, quarrelmakers, yea and bloudſheders tw.

Vaultitudes of vagabonds and roges procured by rebellions.

To what ſhifts ſoldiers fall after diſcamping and ceaſſing from warres.

Do we not ſee commonlie in the end of warres more robbing, more begging, more murdering than before, and thoſe to ſtand in the high waie to aſke their almes, whome ye be afreaid to ſaie naie vnto honeſtlie, leaſt they take it awaie from you violentlie, and haue more cauſe to ſuſpect their ſtrength, than pitie their need? Is it not then dailie heard, how men be not onelie purſued, but vtterlie ſpoiled, & few maie ride ſafe by the kings highwaie, except they ride ſtrong, not ſo much for feare of their goods, which men eſteeme leſſe, but alſo for danger of their life, which euerie man loueth. Worke is vndone at home and loiterers linger in ſtreets, lurke in alehouſes, range in highwaies, valiant beggers plaie in townes and yet complaine of need, whoſe ſtaffe if it be once hot in their hand, or ſluggiſhneſſe bred in their boſome, they will neuer be allured to labour againe, contenting themſelues better with idle beggerie, than with honeſt and profitable labour. And what more noiſome beaſts be there in a commonwealth? Drones in hiues ſucke out the honie, a ſmall matter, but yet to be loked on by good huſbands. Caterpillers deſtroie the fruit, an hurtfull thing, and well ſhifted for by a diligent ouerſeer. Diuerſe vermine deſtroie corne, kill pulleine, engines and ſnares be made for them.

Againſt lottering lubbers that can not awaie with labour.

A loiterer deſcribed.

But what is a loiterer? A ſucker of honie, a ſpoiler of corne, a ſtroier of fruit, a waſter of monie, a ſpoiler of victels, a ſucker of bloud, a breaker of orders, a ſeeker of breaches, a queller of life, a baſiliſke of the commonwealth, which by companie and ſight doth poiſon the whole countrie, and ſtaineth honeſt minds with the infection of his veneme, and ſo draweth the commonwealth to death and deſtruction. Such is the fruits of your labour and trauell for your pretenſed commonwealth, which iuſtice would no man ſhould taſte of but your ſelues, that ye might trulie iudge of your owne miſcheefe, and traie other by example from preſuming the like. When we ſee a great number of flies in a yeare, we naturallie iudge it like to be a great plague, and hauing ſo great a ſwarming of loitering vagabonds, readie to beg and brall at euerie mans doore, which declare a greater infection, can we not loke for a greeuouſer and perilouſer danger than the plague is? Who can therefore otherwiſe deeme, but this one deadlie hurt, wherewith the commonwelth of our nation is wounded, beſide all other is ſo peſtilent, that there can be no more hurtfull thing in a well gouerned eſtate, nor more throwne into all kind of vice and vnrulineſſe: and therefore this your ſedition is not onelie moſt odious, but alſo moſt horrible, that hath ſpotted the whole countrie with ſuch a ſtaine of idleneſſe.

The ſight of manie flies in a yeare a naturall prognoſtication of a plague like to follow.

There can be none end of faults, if a man rehearſe all faults that do neceſſarilie follow this vnrulie ſturdineſſe. For not onelie vagabonds wandering and ſcattering themſelues for miſchefe, ſhall run in a mans eies, but alſo diſorder of euerie degree ſhall enter into a mans mind, and ſhall behold hereby the commonwealth miſerablie defaced by you, who ſhould as much as other haue kept your ſelues in order in it. Neither be the magiſtrats dulie obeied, nor the lawes iuſtlie feared, nor degrees of men conſidered, nor maiſters well ſerued, nor parents truelie reuerenced, nor lords remembred of their tenants, nor yet either naturall or ciuill law much regarded. And it is plainlie vnpoſſible that that countrie ſhall well ſtand in gouernement, and the people growe to wealth, where order in euerie ſtate is not fitlie obſerued: and that bodie cannot be without much greefe of inflammation, where anie leſt part is out of ioint, or not duelie ſet in his owne naturall place.

Diſorder in euerie degree cauſed by rebellion.

Magiſtrats diſobeied, and neglect of dutie in generall by rebellion.

Obſerving of order in euerie eſtate ſupporteth a commonwealth, & contrariwiſe the hurt of diſorder.

Therefore order muſt be kept in the commonwealth like health in the bodie, and all the drift of policie loketh to this end, how this temper may be ſafelie mainteined, without anie exceſſe of vnmeaſurableneſſe, either of the one ſide, or of the other. And eaſie inough it is to keepe the ſame, when it is once brought into the meane, and to hold it in the ſtate it is found in: but when it burſteth out once with a vehemencie, and hath gotten into an vnrulie diſorder, it ſpreadeth ſo faſt, and ouerfloweth all honeſt mens reſiſting ſo violentlie, that it will be hard to recouer the breach of long time againe, except with great great and wise counsell, which no doubt shall be in season vsed, there be wonderfull remedies sought therefore. And euen as a man falling, is easier holden vp by staie, than when he is fallen downe he is able to rise againe: so is the commonwealth slipping, by the foresight of wisedome better kept from ruine; than when it is once fallen into anie kind of miserie, the same may be called againe to the old and former state. Do we not euidentlie know, that a man may better keepe his arme or his leg from breaking or falling out of ioint, afore hurt come to it; than after the hurt it may safelie and quietlie be healed, and restored to the former strength and health againe? And now through your seditious means, things that were afore quiet and in good order, laws feared and obeied, subiects ruled and kept in dutie, be all now in a great disorder, and like (if it be not holpen) to grow to wildnesse, and a beastlinesse; seeing that neither common dutie can be kept, which nature prescribeth, nor common law can be regarded, which policie requireth. How can yee keepe your owne if yee keepe no order? Your wiues and children, how can they be defended from other mens violence, if yee will in other things breake all order? By what reason would yee be obeied of yours as seruants, if yee will not obeie the king as subiects? How would yee haue others deale orderlie with you, if yee will vse disorder against all others? Seeing then there is such a confusion now of things, such a turmoile of men, such a disorder of fashions; who can loke to liue quietlie a great while, who can thinke but that yee haue miserablie tossed the commonwealth, and so vered all men with disorder, that the inconuenience hereof cannot onelie nip others, but also touch you?

An argument drawne from comparison.

Atopie turme of all things by rebellion.

The necessitie of order, and therefore S. Paule said well; Let all things be done in order.

But now see how that not onelie these vnlooked for mischeefes haue beautlie growne on yee, but also those commodities, which yee thought to haue holpen your selues and others by, be not onelie hindered, but also hurt thereby. The kings maiestie by the aduise, &c: intended a iust reformation of all such things as poore men could trulie shew themselues oppressed with, thinking equalitie of iustice to be the diademe of his kingdome, and the safegard of his commons. Which was not onelie intended by wisedome, but also set on with speed, and so entered into a due considering of all states, that none should haue iust cause to grudge against the other, when as euerie thing rightfullie had, nothing could be but vnrightfullie grudged at. And this would haue beene done, not onelie with your glad and willing assent: but also beene done by this daie almost throughout the whole realme: so that quietlie it had beene obteined without inconuenience, and spedilie without delaie. And whatsoeuer had beene done by the kings maiesties authoritie, that would by right haue remained foreuer, and so taken in law, that the contrarie partie neither could by iustice, neither would by boldnesse haue enterprised the breach thereof.

Rebels are against their owne profit.

Equalitie of iustice.

But least wicked men should be wealthie, and they whose hearts be not truelie bent to obedience, should obteine at the kings hands that they deserued not in a commonwealth, yee haue maruellouslie and worthilie hurt your selues, and greeuouslie prouided (except the kings goodnesse be more vnto you than your owne deserts can claime) that yee be not so much worthie as to be benefited in anie kind, as yee be worthie to lose that yee haue on euerie side. Ye haue thought good to be your owne reformers belike, not onelie vnnaturallie misfrusting the kings iustice, but also cruellie and vnciuillie dealing with your owne neighbours. Wherein I would as yee haue hurt the whole realme, so yee had not enterprised a thing most dangerous to your selues, & most contrarie to the thing yee intended. If yee had let things alone, thought good by your selues to be redressed, and dutifullie loked for the performance of that, the kings maiestie promising reformation, they should not haue beene vndone at this time, as in a great sort of honest places they be; nor whole countries, who for their quietnesse be most worthie to be loked on, should haue beene vnprouided for at this date. But this commoditie hath happened by the waie, that it is euidentlie knowne by your mischeefe, and others dutie, who be most true to the king, and most worthie to be done for, and who be most pernicious and traitorous rebels. And it is not to be doubted, but they shall be considered with thanks, and find iust redresse without deserued miserie, & you punished like rebels, who might haue had both praise & profit like subiects.

Rebels hurt themselues.

Priuat men are not to inforce a reformation.

Rebellion hurteth the whole realme.

The benefit of rebellion in one respect.

For that as yee haue valiantlie done of your selues, thinke yee it will stand anie longer, than men feare your rage, which cannot indure long; and that yee shall not then bide the rigor of the law for your priuat iniuries, as yee vsed the furie of your braines in other mens oppressions? Will men suffer wrong at your hands, when law can redresse it, & the right of the commonwealth will mainteine it, and good order in countries will beare it? Yee amend faults as ill surgions heale sores, which when they seeme to be whole aboue, they rankle at the bottome, and so be faine continuallie to be sore, or else be mended by new breaking of the skin. Your redresse seemeth to you perfect and good, yee haue pulled downe such things as yee would, yee thinke now all is well: yee consider no further, yee seeke not the bottome, yee see not the sore, that yee haue done it by no law, yee haue redressed it by no order, what then? If it be no otherwise searched than by you, it will not tarie long so: either it will be after continuallie as it was afore your comming, or else it must be (when all is done) amended by the king.

Reformation intended by rebels, like sores cured by ill surgions.

Thus haue yee both lacked in the time, and miss in the doing, and yet besides that ye haue done, which is by your doing to no purpose. Yee haue done the things with such inconueniences, as hath beene both before rehearsed, and shall be after declared; that better it had beene for you, neuer to haue enioied the commoditie, if there be anie; than to suffer the greefs that will insue, which be verie manie. In euerie quarter some men (whom yee set by) will be lost, which euerie one of you (if ye haue loue in ye) would rather haue lacked the profit of your inclosures, than cause such destruction of them, as is like by reason & iudgement necessarilie to follow. What commonwealth is it then, to doo such abhominable enterprises after so vile a sort, that yee hinder that good yee would doo, and bring in that hurt yee would not, and so find that yee seeke not, and follow that yee lose, and destroie your selues by follie; rather than yee would be ordered by reason, and so haue not so much amended your old sores, as brought in new plagues, which yee your selues that deserue them will lament, and we which haue not deserued them may curse you for? For although the kings maiestie, &c: intended for your profits a reformation in his commonwealth: yet his pleasure was not, nor no reason gaue it, that euerie subiect should busilie intermeddle with it of their owne head, but onelie those whome his councell thought most meet men for such an honest purpose.

Greefes insuing to the rebels vpon this rebellion.

Reformation ought to be no priuat mans but the princes action

The kings maiestie, &c: hath godlie reformed an vncleane part of religion, and hath brought it to the true forme of the first church that followed Christ, thinking that to be truest, not what later mens fansies haue of themselues deuised, but what the apostles and their felowes had at Christes hand receiued, and willeth the same to be knowne and set abroad to all his people. Shall euerie man now that liketh and fansieth the same, take in hand vncalled, to be a mi-niſſer, and to ſet forth the ſame, hauing no authoritie? Naie, though the thing were verie godlie that were done, yet the perſon muſt néeds do ill that enterpriſeth it, bicauſe he doth a good thing after an ill ſort, and loketh but on a little part of dutie, conſidering the thing, and leaueth a great part vnaduiſed, not conſidering the perſon: when as in a well and iuſtlie done matter, not onelie theſe two things ought well to be weighed, but alſo good occaſion of time, and reaſonable cauſe of the doing, ought alſo much to be ſet before euerie doers eies. Now in this your déed, the manner is vngodlie, the thing vnſufferable, the cauſe wicked, the perſon ſeditious, the time traitorous: and can ye poſſiblie by anie honeſt defenſe of reaſon, or anie good conſcience religiouſlie grounded, denie that this malicious and horrible fault, ſo wickedlie ſet on, is not onelie ſinfull afore God, and traitorous to the king, but alſo deadlie and peſtilent to the whole common-wealth of our countrie, and ſo not onelie ouerfloweth vs with the miſerie, but alſo ouerwhelmeth you with the rage thereof?

What things in a well and iuſtlie done matter ought well to be weighed.

Yet further ſée and ye be not wearie with the multitude of miſeries, which ye haue maruellouſlie moued, what a yoke ye wilfullie do bring on your ſelues, in ſtirring vp this deteſtable ſedition, and ſo bring your ſelues into a further ſlauerie, if ye vſe your ſelues into a further ſlauerie, if ye vſe your ſelues often thus inobedientlie. When common order of the law can take no place in vnrulie and diſobedient ſubiects, and all men will of wilfulneſſe reſiſt with rage, and thinke their owne violence to be the beſt iuſtice; then be wiſe magiſtrats compelled by neceſſitie to ſéeke an extreame remedie, where meane waies helpe not, and bring in the martiall law where none other law ſerueth. Then muſt ye be contented to bide puniſhment without proceſſe, condemnation without witneſſe, ſuſpicion is then taken for iudgement, and diſpleaſure may be iuſt cauſe of your execution, and ſo without fauor ye find ſtrictneſſe, which without rule ſeéke violence. Ye thinke it a hard law and vnſufferable. It is ſo indéed, but yet good for a medicine.

The yoke that rebels wilfullie bring vpon themſelues.

Deſperat remedies for deſperat diſeaſes.

Deſperate ſickneſſes in phyſicke muſt haue deſperate remedies, for meane medicines will neuer helpe great griefes. So if ye caſt your ſelues into ſuch ſharpe diſeaſes, ye muſt néeds loke for ſharpe medicines againe at your phyſicians hands. And worthie ye be to ſuffer the extremitie in a common-wealth, which ſéeke to do the extremitie, and by reaſon muſt receiue the like ye offer, and ſo be contented to bide the end willinglie which ſet on the beginning wilfullie. For no greater ſhame can come to a common-welth, than that thoſe ſubiects which ſhould be obedient euen without a law, can not be contented to be ordered by the law, and by no means kept within their dutie, which ſhould euerie waie offend rather than in their dutie. It is a token that the ſubiects lacke reaſon, when they forſake law, and thinke either by their multitude to find pardon, which cannot iuſtlie ſtretch to all, or elſe by ſtrength to beare the ſtroke, which cannot proſper againſt a king.

Rebels worthie to ſuffer extremitie of puniſhment.

The greateſt ſhame that can come to a common-wealth.

They muſt néeds little conſider themſelues, who bring in this neceſſitie, rather to ſtand to the pleaſure of a mans will, than to abide the reaſon of the law; and to be indangered more when an other man liſteth, than when himſelfe offendeth. And this muſt neceſſarilie folow if your rebellion thus continue: and while ye ſéeke to throw downe the yoke, which ye fanſie your ſelues burdened withall, ye bring your ſelues in a greater bondage, leaning ſafetie and following danger, and putting your ſelues vnder the iuſtice of them whoſe fauour ye might eaſilie haue kept, if ye would willinglie and dutifullie haue ſerued. Now the gentlemen be more in truſt, bicauſe the commons be vntruſtie, and they get by ſeruice, which ye loſe by ſtubbornneſſe, and therefore muſt néeds, if ye thus continue, haue more authoritie from the king: bicauſe ye would be in leſſe ſubiection to the king, and that as ye will not do of your ſelues, ye muſt be compelled to do by others, and that ye refuſe to do willinglie, thinke ye muſt be drawne to do the ſame conſtreinedlie. Which when it commeth to paſſe, as wiſedome ſéeth in your faults that it muſt néeds, what gaine ye then, or what profit can ariſe to you by riſing, which might haue found eaſe in ſitting ſtill? And what ſhall ye be at length the better for this turmoile, which beſide diuerſe other incommodities rehearſed, ſhall be thus clogged with the vnſufferable burden of the martiall law.

Gentlemen more truſtie bicauſe the commons be vntruſtie.

Martiall law a burden vnſufferable.

Yet there is one thing behind, which me thinketh your ſelues ſhould not forget, ſéeing that ye haue giuen the cauſe, ye ſhould dulie loke for the effect. Ye haue ſpoiled, impriſoned, and threatened gentlemen to death, and that with ſuch hatred of mind, as may not well be borne. The cauſe therof I ſpeake not on, which tried, will hapilie be not ſo great: but ſée the thing, ſet murther aſide, it is the heinouſeſt fault to a priuat man. What could more ſpitefullie haue béene done againſt them, than ye haue vſed with crueltie? Can this do anie other but breed in their ſtomachs great grudge of diſpleaſure toward you, and ingender ſuch an hatred, as the weaker and the ſufferer muſt néeds beare the ſmart thereof.

Cruelties and extremities ſhewed to the gentlemen by the rebels.

The kings beſt kind of gouernment is ſo to rule his ſubiects, as a father ordereth his children, and beſt life of obedient ſubiects is one to behaue himſelfe to an other, as though they were brethren vnder the king their father. For loue is not the knot onelie of the common-wealth, whereby diuerſe parts be perfectlie ioined togither in one politike bodie, but alſo the ſtrength and might of the ſame, gathering togither into a ſmall rome with order, which ſcattered would elſe breed confuſion and debate. Diſſention we ſée in ſmall houſes, and thereby may take example to great common-wealths, how it not onelie deceaſeth them from wealth, but alſo abateth them from ſtrength. Thinke ſmall examples to take place in great matters, and the like though not ſo great to follow in them both, and there by learne to iudge of great things vnknowne, by ſmall things perceiued. When brethren agrée not in a houſe, goeth not the weakeſt to the walles; and with whome the father taketh part withall, is not he likeſt to preuaile? Is it not wiſedome for the yonger brother, after the good will of the parents, to ſéeke his eldeſt brothers fauour, who vnder them is moſt able to do for him? To ſéeke them both with honeſtie is wiſedome, to loſe them both by ſullenneſſe is madneſſe.

The kings beſt kind of gouernment.

The fruits of diſſention.

Haue there not béene dailie benefits from the gentlemen to you, in ſome more, and in ſome leſſe, but in none conſidered, which they haue more friendlie offered, than you haue gentlie requited? This muſt ye loſe, when ye will not be thankefull, and learne to gaine new good will by deſert, when ye forſake the old friendſhip vnprouoked. And ye muſt thinke that liuing in a common-wealth togither, one kind hath néed of an other: and yet a great ſort of you more néed of one gentleman, than one gentleman of a great ſort of you. And though all be parts of one common-wealth, yet all be not like worthie parts, but all being vnder obedience, ſome kind in more ſubiection one waie, and ſome kind in more ſeruice an other waie. And ſéeing ye be leſſe able by monie and liberalitie to deſerue good will than others be, and your onelie kind of deſert is to ſhew good will, which honeſt men do well accept as much worth as monie, haue ye not much hindred & hurt your ſelues

The rebels had cauſe to beare with the gentlemen and to haue loued them.

All the parts of a common-wealth be not of like worthineſſe: Ergo gentlemen more worthie than yeomen, &c.

herein,

herein, losing that one kind of humanitie which ye haue onelie left, and turning it into crueltie, which ye ought most to abhor, not onelie bicause it is wicked of it selfe, but also most noisome to you.

I can therefore for my part thinke no lesse herein, if ye follow your stiffenesse still, & must nœds iudge that ye haue wilfullie brought on your selues such plagues, as the like could not haue fallen on you, but by your selues. Seeing then thus manie waies ye haue hurt the common-welth of this whole countrie within, by destruction of shires, losing of haruest, wasting of victels, decaieng of manhod, vndoing of farmers, increasing of vagabonds, mainteining of disorders, hindring of redresses, bringing in of martiall law, and breeding continuall hatred among diuerse states: what thinke ye, I praie you? Iudge ye not that ye haue committed an odious and detestable crime against the whole common-wealth, whose furtherance ye ought to haue tendered by dutie, and not to haue sought the hurt thereof with your owne damage?

A breefe enumeration of the inconueniences flowing from this rebellion.

Besides all these inward griefes, which euerie one seuerallie must nœds feele with miserie, there happeneth so manie outward mischances among strangers to vs with disdaine; that if there were nothing ill within the realme which we should feele, yet the shame which doth touch vs from other countries, should not onelie moue, but also compell you hartilie to forethinke this your rebellious sedition. For what shall strangers thinke, when they shall heare of the great misorder which is in this realme with such confusion, that no order of law can keepe you vnder, but must be faine to be beaten downe with a kings power? Shall they not first thinke the kings maiestie, in whose mind God hath powred so much hope for a child, as we may looke for gifts in a man; either for his age to be little set by, or for lacke of qualities not to be regarded, or for default of loue to be resisted, and no notable grace of God in him considered, nor the worthinesse of his office loked vpon, nor naturall obedience due to him remembred?

Outward mischances insuing vpon rebellions to the shame of the land and estate wherin they be raised.

King contemned.

Shall they not next suppose, small estimation to be giuen to the rulers, to whom vnder the king we owe due obedience, that can not in iust and lawfull matters be heard, nor men to haue that right iudgement of their wisedome, as their iustice in rule, and foresight in counsell requireth: but rather prefer their owne fansies before others experience, and deeme their owne reason to be common-wealth, and other mens wisedome to be but dreaming? Shall they not trulie sate the subiects to be more vnfaithfull in disobedience, than other subiects worse ordered be; and licence of libertie to make wild heads without order, and that they neither haue reason that vnderstand not the mischiefe of sedition, nor dutie which follow their beastlinesse, nor loue in them which so little remember the common-wealth, nor naturall affection which will daillie seeke their owne destruction?

Rulers little esteemed.

Subiects disordered.

Thus the whole countrie lacking the good opinion of other nations, is cast into great shame by your vnrulinesse, and the proceedings of the countrie, be they neuer so godlie, shall be ill spoken of, as vnfit to be brought into vse; and good things hereby that deserue praise, shall bide the rebuke of them that list to speake ill, and ill things vntouched shall be boldlier mainteined. Nothing may with praise be redressed, where things be measured by changeable disorder, rather than by necessarie vse; and that is thought most politike, that men will be best contented to do, and not that which men should be brought vnto by dutie. And with what dutie or vertue in ye, can ye quench out of memorie this foule enterprise, or gather a good report againe to this realme, who haue so vilelie with reproch slandered the same, and diuerslie discredited it among others, and abated the good opinion which was had of the iust gouernement and ruled order vsed heretofore in this noble realme, which is now most grieuous, bicause it is now most without cause.

The whole countrie ill spoken of.

Nothing redressable by disorder chanceable.

If this outward opinion (without further inconuenience) were all, yet it might well be borne, and would with ease decaie as it grew: but it hath not onlie hurt vs with voice, but indangered vs in deed, and cast vs a great deale behind the hand, where else we might haue had a tollie foredeale. For that opportunitie of time which seldome chanceth, and is alwaies to be taken, hath beene by your froward meanes lost this yeare, and so vainlie spent at home for bringing downe of you, which should else profitablie haue beene otherwise bestowed, that it hath beene almost as great a losse to vs abrode, to lacke that we might haue obteined, as it was combrance at home, to go about the ouerthrow of you, whose sedition is to be abhorred. And we might both conuenientlie haue inuaded some, if they would not reasonablie haue growne to some kind of friendship, and also defended others which would beside promise for times sake vniustlie set vpon vs, and easilie haue made this stormie time a faire yeare vnto vs, if our men had beene so happie at home, as our likelihod abrode was fortunat.

Further outward hurt besides voice ingendered of rebellions.

He meaneth the Scots & French with whome we haue had alwaies incombrance.

But what is it (I praie you) either to let slip such an occasion by negligence, or to stop it by stubbornesse, which once past awaie, can be by no means recouered; no not though with diligence ye go about to reinforce the same againe? If ye would with wickednes haue forsaken your faith to your naturall countrie, and haue sought craftie means to haue vtterlie betrated it to our common enimies: could ye haue had anie other spædier waie than this is, both to make our strength weake, and their weakenesse strong? If ye would haue sought to haue spited your countrie, and to haue pleased your enimie, and follow their counsell for our hinderance: could ye haue had deuised of them anie thing more shamefull for vs, and ioifull to them? If they which lie like spials, and hearken after likelihods of things to come, bicause they declare opportunitie of times to the enimie, are to be iudged common enimies of the countrie; what shall we reasonablie thinke of you, who do not secretlie bewraie the counsels of other, but openlie betraie the common-wealth with your owne deeds, and haue as much as lieth in you, sought the ouerthrow of it at home: which if ye had obteined at Gods hand, as he neuer alloweth so horrible an enterprise, how could yee haue defended it from the ouerthrow of others abrode?

Note in a few words of force the dangerous qualitie of rebellion.

A reason drawne from the lesse to the greater.

For is your vnderstanding of things so small, that although ye see your selues not vnfit to get the vpper hand of a few gentlemen, that ye be able to beat downe afore the kings power: ye and by chance ye were able to do that, would ye iudge your selues by strength mightie enough, to resist the power of outward nations, that for praise sake would inuade ye? Naie, thinke trulie with your selues, that if yee do ouercome, ye be vnsure both by strength abrode, and displeasure of honest men at home, and by the punishment of God aboue. And now ye haue not yet gotten in deed, that your vaine hope loketh for by fansie: thinke how certeinlie ye haue wounded the common-wealth with a sore stroke, in procuring our enimies by our weakenesse to seeke victorie, and by our outward miserie to seeke outward glorie with inward dishonor. Which howsoeuer they get, thinke it to be long of you, who haue offered them victorie before they began warre: bicause ye would declare to men hereafter (belike) how dangerous it is to make stirres at home, when they do not onelie make our Rebellion maketh passage to forren inuasion, & breaketh our owne region.

selues weake, but also our enimies strong.

Rebellion animateth the papists, & each one beside that is offended at true religion.

Beside these, there is another sort of men desirous of aduantage, and disdainefull of our wealth, whose greefe is most our greatest hap, and be offended with religion, bicause they be drowned in superstition, men zealed toward God, but not fit to iudge, meaning better without knowledge, than they iudge by their meaning, worthier whose ignorance should be taken awaie, than their will should be followed; whome we should more rebuke for their stubbornesse, than despise for their ignorance. These seeing superstition beaten downe, and religion set vp, Gods word taking place, traditions kept in their kind, difference made betweene Gods commandements and mans learning, the truth of things sought out according to Christes institution, examples taken of the primitiue churches vse, not at the bishop of Romes ordinance, and true worship taught, and wil-worship refused, do by blindnesse rebuke that as by truth they should follow, and by affection follow that as by knowledge they should abhorre, thinking vsage to be truth, and scripture to be error, not weieng by the word, but misconstruing by custome.

Religion beareth the blame and is counted the cause of rebellion, but amisse.

And now things be changed to the better, and religion trulier appointed, they see matters go awrie, which hurteth the whole realme, and they reioise in this mischeefe as a thing worthilie happened, mistaking the cause, and slandering religion, as though there were no cause whie God might haue punished, if their vsed profession might still haue taken place. They see not that where Gods glorie is truliest set forth, there the diuell is most busie for his part, and laboureth to corrupt by lewdnesse, that as is gotten out by the truth, thinking that if it were not blemished at the first, the residue of his falsehod should after lesse preuaile. So he troubleth by bi waies, that he cannot plainlie withstand, and vseth subtiltie of sophistrie, where plaine reason faileth, and persuadeth simple men that to be a cause, which in deed can not be tried and taken for a cause. So he causeth religion which teacheth obedience, to be iudged the cause of sedition; & the doctrine of loue, the seed of dissention; mistaking the thing, but persuading mens minds, and abusing the plaine meaning of the honest to a wicked end of religions ouerthrow.

The diuels sophistrie.

Examples.

The husbandman had not so sowne throwne seed in his ground, but stepeth vp the enimie, and hee soweth cockle to, and maketh men doubt whether the good husband had done well or no, and whether he had sowne there good seed or bad. The fansifull Iewes in Egypt would not beléeue Ieremie, but thought their plague and their miserie to come by his means; and leaning of idolatrie to be the cause of penurie, therefore by wilfull aduise they intended to forsake the prophets councell, and thought to serue God most truelie by their roted & accustomed idolatrie. When the christian men were persecuted in the primitiue church, & dailie suffered martyrdome for Christs profession, such faire season of weather was for three or foure yeeres togither, that the heathen iudged thereupon God to be delighted with their crueltie, and so were persuaded that with the bloud of the martyrs they pleased God highlie. Such fansies light now in papists, and irreligious mens heads, and some things by chance happening togither, and conclude the one to be the cause of the other, and then delight in true worshippers hurt, bicause they iudge corredlie the good to be bad, and therefore reioise in the punishment of the godlie. For they being fleshlie, iudge by outward things, and perceiue not the inward, for that they lacke the spirit and so iudge amis, not vnderstanding God, what diuersitie he suffereth to blind still the wilfull, and how through all dangers he saueth his forechosen.

The Jewes ascribe their miserie to a false cause.

The heathens fond opinion of gods fauouring their crueltie against christians.

And thus haue ye giuen a large occasion to stubborne papists, both to iudge amisse, and also to reioise in this wicked chance, contented with our mischeefe, not liking our religion, and thinking God doth punish for this better change, and haue thereby an euill opinion of Gods holie truth, confirmed in them by no sure scripture, but by following of mischance, which they ought to thinke to come for the pride and stubbornesse of the people, who doth not accept Gods glorie in good part, nor giue no due praise to their Lord and maker. What should I saie more? Ye hurt euerie waie, the dangers be so great, and the perils so manie, which do dailie follow your diuelish enterprise, that the more I seeke in the mater, the more I continuallie see to saie. And what words can worthilie declare this miserable beastlines of yours, which haue intended to diuide the realme, and arme the one part for the killing of the other? For euen as concord is not onelie the health, but also the strength of the realme: so is sedition not onelie the weaknesse but also the apostume of the realme, which when it breaketh inwardlie, putteth the state in great danger of recouerie, and corrupteth the whole commonwealth with the rotten furie that it hath béene long putrified withall. For it is not in sedition as in other faults, which being mischeefous of themselues, haue some notable hurt alwaies fast adioined to them: but in this one is there a whole hell of faults, not seuerallie scattered, but clustered on a lumpe togither, and comming on so thicke, that it is vnpossible for a region armed with all kinds of wisedome, and strength thereto, to auoid the dangers that issue out thereof.

The papists by rebellion haue an euill opinion of Gods holie truth.

The hurts ensuing from rebellion out of count.

Concord and discord with their differing effects.

When sedition once breaketh out, see ye not the lawes ouerthrowne, the magistrates despised, spoiling of houses, murthering of men, wasting of countries, increase of disorder, diminishing of the realms strength, swarming of vagabonds, scarsitie of labourers, and all those mischeefes plentifoustie brought in, which God is wont to scourge seuerelie withall, warre, dearth, and pestilence? And seeing ye haue theft & murther, plague & famine, confusion and idlenesse linked togither, can ye looke for anie more mischeefe in one shamefull enterprise, than ye euidentlie see to grow herein? As for warre, although it be miserable, yet the one part getteth somewhat, and reioiseth in the spoile, and so goeth lustier awaie: and either increaseth his countrie with riches, or inhanseth himselfe with glorie: but in sedition both parts lose, the ouercommer cannot flie, the ouercommed cannot spoile; the more the winner winneth, the more he loseth; the more that escape, the more infamous men liue; all that is gained is scarselie saued; the winning is losse, the losse is destruction, both waste themselues, and the whole most wasted; the strengthening of themselues, the decaie of the countrie; the striuing for the victorie, is a preie to the enimie: and shortlie to saie, the hellish turmoile of sedition so farre passeth the common miserie of warre, as to slaie himselfe is more heinous, than to be slaine of another.

The mischiefs springing frō sedition.

Forren war farre better than sedition at home.

O noble peace, what wealth bringest thou in, how do all things flourish in field and in towne, what forwardnesse of religion, what increase of learning, what grauitie in counsell, what deuise of wit, what order of maners, what obedience of laws, what reuerence of states, what safegard of houses, what quietnesse of life, what honor of countries, what friendship of minds, what honestie of pleasure hast thou alwaies maintained, whose happinesse we knew not, while now we feele thy lacke, and shall learne by miserie to vnderstand plentie, and so to auoid mischiefe by the hurt that it bringeth, and learne to serue better, where rebellion is once knowen; and so to liue

The praise and benefits of peace.

trulie,

trulie, and kéepe the kings peace. What good state were ye in afore ye began, not pricked with pouertie, but stirred with mischiefe, to séeke your destruction, hauing wales to redresse all that was amisse? Magistrats most readie to tender all iustice, and pitifull in hearing the poore mens causes, which sought to amend matters more than you can deuise, and were readie to redresse them better than ye could imagine: and yet for a headinesse ye could not be contented; but in despite of God, who commandeth obedience, and in contempt of the king, whose lawes do séeke your wealth, and to ouerthrow the countrie, which naturallie we should loue, ye would proudlie rise, and do ye wot not what, and amend things by rebellion to your vtter vndoing. What state leaue ye vs in now, besieged with enimies, diuided at home, made poore with spoile and losse of our harnesse, vnorders and cast downe with slaughter and hatred, hindered from amendments by our owne diuelish hast, indangered with sickenesse by reason of misorder, laid open to mens pleasures for breaking of the lawes, and féebled to such faintnesse that scarselie it will be couered.

The rebels neglect the right meanes of redressing things amisse, and follow their owne fansies.

The state of a countrie or land in time of sedition and tumult.

Wherefore for Gods sake haue pittie on your selues, consider how miserablie ye haue spoiled, destroied, and wasted vs all: and if for desperatnesse ye care not for your selues, yet remember your wiues, your children, your countrie, and forsake this rebellion. With humble submission acknowledge your faults, and tarie not the extremitie of the kings sword, leaue off with repentance, and turne to your duties, aske God forgiuenesse, submit ye to your king, be contented for a common-wealth one or two to die. And ye capteins for the residue sacrifice your selues, ye shall so best atteine the kings gratious pardon, saue the assemblie, and helpe the common-wealth, & to declare your doings to proceed of no stubbornesse; but all this mischiefe to grow out of ignorance, which séeing the miserie, would redresse the fault, & to recouer best the blot of your disorder, and staie the great miseries which be like to follow. Thus if ye do not, thinke trulie with your selues, that God is angrie with you for your rebellion, the kings sword drawne to defend his countrie, the crie of the poore to God against ye, the readinesse of the honest in armor to vanquish ye, your death to be at hand, which ye cannot escape, hauing God against ye, as he promiseth in his word, the kings power to ouerthrow ye, gathered in the field, the common-welth to beate ye downe with stripes and with curses, the shame of your mischiefe to blemish ye for euer.

Reasons to withdraw the rebels from their enterprises of rebellion, and to allure them to loialtie.

A conclusion peremptorie against irrecuocable rebels.

¶ Thus far this necessarie treatise touching rebellion, penned by sir John Chéke, a gentleman euerie waie in complet sort satisfieng the report blazed abroad of him. For if there were no more testimonies extant in the world, but this onelie treatise discoursing Kets rebellion; it were enough to warrant no lesse true, than in common spéech and writing is left witnessed of him. And suerlie it appeareth, that as in this gentleman there was an extraordinarie heape of laudable gifts; so was there also in him the right vse of them all. Wherby he grew in such fauor with king Henrie the eight, that partlie for his absolute knowledge in tongs, specially the Gréeke and Latine, and also for his integritie of life and religion; he was chosen schoolemaister to yong prince Edward, to traine him vp in the right vnderstanding, both of forren languages, & the purenes of Gods seruice. Insomuch that by his industrie such effects followed (God aboue prospering his actions) that the yong prince, when he came to the kingdome was mindfull of him, and among other (I will not saie gratuities, where cause of desert maketh challenge of some recompense) tokens of beneuolence, aduanced him to the dignitie of knighthood; as hereafter in due place maie appeare. Of this worthie man, whose praise though neuer so excessiue (if meet for a man) is equiualent vnto his merits, Iohn Leland, vpon presenting vnto him a booke, taketh occasion to write this epigram, comprising in summe no lesse than is here vnder in English remembred:

Abr. Fl. ex quorundam collectaneis.

Si vis Thespiadum choro probari,
Fac vt consilio libelle nostro
Facundo studeas placere Checo,
Quem Pandioniæ colunt Athenæ,
Et quem Roma colit diserta multùm,
Quem rex maximus omnium supremúsque
Henricus reputans virum probatum,
Spectatúmque satis, reconditæque
Censorem solidum eruditionis,
Eduardum bene filium suúmque
Hæredem puerum, illi ad alta natum,
Sic concredidit, vtriusque linguæ
Flores vt legeret venustiores,
Exercens facili manum labore,
Et Christi imbiberet suaue nectar.
Fœlicem arbitror hunc diem fuisse,
Tanto discipulo dedit magistrum
Qui talem, &c.]

Ad libellum, vt Ioanni Checo Grantano placere studeat.

During the time of these commotions and stirs here within the realme, to the great danger of the state; the French king hauing knowledge thereof, ment not to omit the opportunitie offered, to recouer out of the Englishmens hands those fortresses which they held at Bullongne and in Bullongnois. Wherevpon he gaue summons to the gentlemen and men of armes, and others of his realme, to put themselues in order with all their furniture, that they might be readie to attend him in his armie in Bullongnois by a daie appointed. And about the same time, that is to saie, in the beginning of August; the French king purposing to surprise the Iles of Gerneseie and Jerseie, appointed certeine gallies and ships of warre to passe thither; but being receiued by the king of Englands nauie that laie there, and other of the Iland, they were beaten backe and repelled, with the losse of a thousand men (as some write) and so were constreined to retire without atchiuing their enterprise.

The French king purposeth to surprise Gerneseie and Jerseie, but is repelled.

John Fox.

Credible word was brought out of France to the lord protector, that into one towne in one vessell were brought at the least three score gentlemen to be buried, & also an inhibition giuen out by the French king, not to speake of the euill successe of that iournie. In the meane time, the French king being come downe vnto Abuile, departed from thence the thirtenth of August, and comming vnto Rue, lodged there that night, and the next daie came to Monstreull, where he found the conestable and monsieur Daumalle. The next daie being the eightenth of August, he came to his armie lodged foure leagues on this side Monstreull at a village called Neufcastell, neere to the forrest of Ardelo, vpon the waie that leadeth to Bullongne. The same daie were certeine pioners sent to Pont de Bricque to repare the bridge there, and to make the waies easie for the artillerie to passe. The next daie the said king with his armie passed by Bullongne berg, and camped that night on a little hill betwixt that forrest and the forrest of Suren,

The French king is ashamed that anie report should passe of his euill successe.

The French king perseuereth in his former purpose, and martiall action.

In this place he caused trenches to be cast about a plot of ground, after the maner of a fortresse, within the which he left certeine bands of men of warre to be a safegard vnto such as should passe to and fro with vittels to furnish his campe. He staied not there past a daie & a halfe, but remoued to Ardenton, a mile a mile or little more beyond Marguisen; from thence he came with his armie, and lodged on a hill, somewhat more than a mile & a halfe from Yambleteuue. The French king hauing viewed the forts, caused fiue and twentie péeces of artillerie to be planted against that fort, which was built in a place called the Almaine campe, but the Frenchmen named it Le fort de Selaque, distant from Yambleteuue about a quarter of a mile. The artillerie had not gone off little more than the space of two houres, but that Charls Sturton capteine of that péece, and George Willoughbie a gentleman associat with him, came forth to parlee with the Conestable, offering to péeld the fort into his hands, vpon condition they might depart with bag and baggage. But as they were thus in hand to make their composition, the Frenchmen thrust forward to the rampiers, and entered in plumps into the fortresse, fiue fourescore persons, & tooke the rest prisoners. There might be in all within that péece two hundred and thirtie persons, men and women. This happened the foure and twentith of August, being Bartholomew daie.

Charles Sturton, and George Willoughbie.

Les chroniques de Aquitaine.

The fort called Almaine campe woone.

This done, the king caused part of the artillerie to be planted against the castell of Yambleteuue, situated at the one end of the towne néere to the sea side. Towards night monsieur de Vandosme gaue an approch to the said castell, and they within by commandement of the lord Greie retired to the maine fort to helpe to furnish the same, wanting numbers sufficient to defend it. The next daie being the fiue and twentith of August, the king caused approches to be made vnto the great fort, and the morrow after the batterie began most furiouslie. The same daie after dinner, the king summoned them within to péeld; but the lord John Greie being generall (although he saw how weake the péece was of it selfe, & the lacke of sufficient numbers of men to resist such a puissant force, as the French king had there with him) would not yet hearken vnto anie talke, nor suffer the herald to come néere; for that he should not perceiue the weakenesse of the péece: and so he was commanded to get him thence with spéed, or else they would cause him to be packing smallie to his ease. The French king sore offended herewith, that his herald was so vncourteouslie vsed, caused the batterie to be reinforced with great diligence, which dismounting their ordinance within, and beating downe their rampiers, made such breaches, that my lord John and the capteins within perceiued they were not able by anie meanes to defend the place anie longer. Herevpon they offered to render the fort to the king vpon composition: which in the end fell out to be thus, that the souldiers should depart with their liues saued, and that their generall (for honor sake) should haue one horsse to ride on in his corslet, without sword or dagger, and likewise two other capteins with him: but as for the other souldiers, with the women and children, should depart on foot in their shirts, leauing all their goods and substance behind them. After it was agreed that the fort should be thus surrendered, there entered monsieur de Chatillon that was after admerall of France, and monsieur de Desse, latelie returned out of Scotland. The French souldiers entring by stealth into the fort by the breaches, committed foule disorders, not onelie in ransacking the houses, but also in spoiling the souldiers by force, intreating them in most rigorous maner.

The lord Greie.

The castell of Yambleteuue lost.

Yambleteuue summoned.

Yambleteuue rendered to the French king.

The French writers confesse, that it was pitie to sée the poore men and women so miserablie handled and abused as they were by the outragious soldiors that thus entred the fort, and sacked all that they could laie hands vpon. Monsieur de Desse saued a great number of women and yong maidens from the cruell hands of their aduersaries, causing them to passe forth by the breach, and presented them to the king, who appointed that they should be conueied in safetie, with all that they had about them, till they had gotten out of danger. Monsieur de Chatillon, by the kings commandement, caused all the rest within the fort to come forth, who passing three and three in a range came before the king, who stood there to behold them, with the whole armie placed so in order on either side the waie as they should come, that they might passe betwixt their ranks, as it were through a lane. They that came forth in this sort might be (as the French writers record) about seuen or eight hundred in all of men and women, whereof there were manie hurt and maimed; some with halfe a shirt on to couer them, and diuerse starke naked. The lord John Greie being mounted on a curtaile, passing by the French king, and saluting him, was courteouslie of him embraced.

The women that came forth of Yambleteuue.

The morrow after was the fort of Blackneese or Blaconneese rendered to the French king, with like conditions as they of Yambleteuue had rendered theirs. This was on the tuesdaie the seuen and twentith of August. The nine and twentith of August sir Nicholas Arnault conueieng all the artillerie, munition, vittels, and goods out of Bullongne berg, caused fire to be set on that fort, and retired with all his soldiors and other people vnto Bullongne. Wherevpon shortlie after the Frenchmen seized vpon the said place of Bullongne berg, & kept it. The French king leauing monsieur de Chatillon within Yambleteuue with the old bands of the French footmen, returned towards Bullongne, & approching within a mile and a halfe of the Old man, meant to build there a fort on the sea side: but what through such sharpe skirmishes as the Englishmen continuallie were redie to make with his men, and what through the abundance of raine which fell in that season, he was constreined to breake vp his campe, and leauing strong garrisons both of horssemen and footmen in all those places, which he had in that season woone out of the Englishmens hands, he returned himselfe with the princes of his bloud into France.

Causes that compelled the French king to breake vp his campe.

In this meane time whilest the French king was thus occupied, to vse the opportunitie of time in recouering of those fortresses in Bullongnois out of the Englishmens hands, the kings maiestie and his councell were busie still in quieting his rebellious subiects here in England: and finallie for meane of a full pacification, and to set all things in good frame and quiet rest, the king published his graces most generall and frée pardon to all rebelles, so that they would forthwith (vpon publication of the same pardon) returne euerie man to his house and countrie; which they gladlie did: and so these seditious and most dangerous troubles were brought to end and pacified.

The kings generall pardon.

¶ Also in this busie time Marie Steward quéene of Scots was conueied by sea out of Scotland into France, and there on the nineteenth daie of Aprill 1549, was married in our ladie church in Paris (with great triumph and solemnitie) to Francis the Dolphin, eldest sonne vnto king Henrie the second of that name French king. This conueieng of the yong quéene is reported by one to haue béene prettilie wrought, at such time as the councell of England were in some expectation and hope to obteine hir. Neuertheless the subtill aduise of the French, and the trecherous forwardnesse of the Scots, vtterlie disappointed the honest and honorable purpose of the English. Now when the yong quéene and hir traine, with the gard of hir person (be they whome you will) were vnder saile, the English nauie was abroade, and lieng in wait to haue intercepted hir course, course, meant not onlie to skirmish, but also to recouer the yong quæne from the French in spite of their hearts, had not the king of England and the most of his councell flatlie forbidden them to attempt anie warlike incounter, for certeine iust and weightie causes to them knowne. But the Scots smarted for this their vaine lightnesse, as in former times for like practises of their vile lewdnesse, as C.O. saith:

Abr. Fl. ex quorundam collectaneis.

The French writers report of their owne countriemens crueltie and sauagenesse.

Sic leuiora leui pluma promissa Scotorum
Infamem reddunt gentem, dant sanguine pœnas
Perfidiæ quandóq; suæ velut antè dederunt.

1. Stow 1043. In this troublesome yéere also Edmund Bonner bishop of London preached a sermon at Paules crosse, for the which he was accused vnto the councell by William Latimer parson of saint Laurence Pountneie, and John Hooper sometime a white monke, and so conuented before the archbishop of Canturburie, and other commissioners at Lambeth, on the twentith daie of that same moneth, and sent to the Marshalsea. On the first of October he was depriued of his bishoprike, for disobeieng the kings order in religion.]

The councell withdraw themselues into priuat conferences about the lord protectors displacing.

Now after that these hurlie burlies were throughlie quieted, manie of the lords of the realme, as well councellors as other, misliking the gouernment of the protector, began to withdraw themselues from the court, and resorting to London, fell to secret consultation for redresse of things, but namelie for the displacing of the lord protector. And suddenlie vpon what occasion manie maruelled, but few knew. Euerie lord and councellor went through the citie weaponed, and had their seruants likewise weaponed, attending vpon them in new liueries, to the great wondering of manie. And at the last a great assemblie of the said councellors was made at the earle of Warwikes lodging, which was then at Elie place in Holborne, whither all the confederats in this matter came priuilie armed; and finallie concluded to possesse the towre of London, which by the policie of sir William Paulet lord treasuror of England was peaceablie obteined, & who by order of the said confederats immediatlie remoued sir John Markam then lieutenant of the towre, and placed in that rome sir Leonard Chamberleine. And after that the said councell was broken vp at Elie place, the earle of Warwike remoued forthwith into the citie of London, and late in the house of one John Yorke a citizen of London, who was then chéefe maister of the mint, kept at Suffolke place in Southwarke. The lord protector hearing of the maner of the assemblie of this councell, and of the taking of the towre, which séemed to him verie strange and doubtfull, did presentlie the said night remoue frō Hampton court, taking the king with him, vnto the castell of Windsore, and there began to fortifie the same, and withall wrote a letter to that noble gentleman the lord Russell lord priuie seale remaining as yet in the west countrie, aduertising him of these troubles as followeth.

The protector remoueth in hast with the king to windsore.

A letter of the lord protectors to the lord Russell lord priuie seale, concerning troubles working against him.

John Fox in the Acts and Monuments. A letter of the lord protectors to the lord priuie seale.

After our right hartie commendations to your good lordship. Here hath of late risen such a conspiracie against the kings maiestie & vs, as neuer hath béene séene, the which they can not maintaine, with such vaine letters and false tales surmised, as was neuer ment nor intended on vs. They pretend and saie, that we haue sold Bullongne to the French, and that we do withhold wages from the soldiers, & other such tales and letters they do spread abroad (of the which if anie one thing were true, we would not wish to liue) the matter now being brought to a marueilous extremitie, such as we would neuer haue thought it could haue come vnto, especiallie of those men towards the kings maiestie and vs, of whome we haue deserued no such thing, but rather much fauour and loue. But the case being as it is, this is to require & praie you, to hasten you hither to the defense of the kings maiestie, in such force and power as you maie, to shew the part of a true gentleman, and of a verie friend: the which thing we trust God shall reward, and the kings maiestie in time to come, and we shall neuer be vnmindfull of it to. We are sure you shall haue other letters from them, but as ye tender your dutie to the kings maiestie, we require you to make no staie, but immediatlie repaire with such force as ye haue to his highnesse in his castell of Windsor, and cause the rest of such force as ye maie make to follow you. And so we bid you right hartilie farewell. From Hampton court the first of October.

Your lordships assured louing friend
Edward Somerset.

An answer to the lord protectors letter.

The effect of the lord Russels letter answering the lord protector.

To this letter of the lord protectors sent the first of October, the lord Russell returning answer againe vpon the eight of the said moneth, first lamented the heauie dissention fallen betweene the nobilitie and him, which he tooke for such a plague, as a greater could not be sent of almightie God vpon this realme being the next waie (said he) to make vs of conquerors, slaues; and like to induce vpon the whole realme an vniuersall thraldome and calamitie, vnlesse the mercifull goodnesse of the Lord do helpe, and some wise order be taken in staieng these great extremities. And as touching the dukes request in his letters, forsomuch as he had heard before of the broile of the lords, and feared least some conspiracie had béene meant against the kings person, he hasted forward with such companie as he could make, for the suertie of the king as to him apperteined. Now perceiuing by the lords letters sent vnto him the same first daie of October, these tumults to rise vpon priuat causes betweene him and them, he therefore thought it expedient, that a conuenient power should be leuied, to be in a readinesse to withstand the worst (what perils soeuer might insue) for the preseruation both of the king and state of the realme from inuasion of forren enimies, and also for the staieng of bloudshed, if anie such thing should be intended betwixt the parties in the heat of this faction. And this he thinking best for the discharge of his allegiance, humblie besought his grace to haue the same also in speciall regard and consideration; first, that the kings maiestie be put in no feare; and that if there be anie such thing, wherein he hath giuen iust cause to them thus to proceed, he would so conforme himselfe, as no such priuat quarrels do redound to the publike disturbance of the realme: certifieng moreouer the duke, that if it were true which he vnderstood by the letters of the lords, that he should send about proclamations and letters for raising vp of the commons, he liked not the same. Notwithstanding he trusted well that his wisedome would take such a waie, as no effusion of bloud should follow.

The contents of the second answer of the lord Russell to the lord protector.

And thus much being conteined in his former letters the eight of October, in his next letters againe written the eleuenth of October, the said lord Russell reioising to heare of the most reasonable offers of the lord protector made to the lords, wrote vnto him and promised to doo, what in the vttermost power of him (and likewise of sir William Herbert ioined togither with him) did lie, to worke some honorable reconciliation betweene him & them: so as his said offers being accepted and satisfied, some good conclusion might insue, according to their good hope and expectation: signifieng moreouer, that as touching the leuieng of men, they had resolued to haue the same in readinesse for the benefit of the realme, to occurre all inconueniences whatsoeuer, that either by forren inuasion or otherwise might happen: & so hauing their power at hand to draw neere, wherby they might haue the better opportunitie to be solicitors and meanes for this reformation on both parts, &c. And thus much for the answer of the lord Russell to the lord protectors letters.

and

The good lord Russell a solicitor for peace betweene the lord protector and the lords.

But now to proceed and go forward with the matter of the lords, who togither with the earle of Warwike (vpon what occasion God knoweth) were assembled at London (as ye haue heard) against the lord protector. When the king with his councell at Hampton court heard therof, first secretarie Peter with the kings message was sent vnto them, whome the lords notwithstanding deteined still with them, making as yet no answer to the message. Wherevpon the lord protector wrote as followeth.

The lords of the councell assembled against the lord protector.

A letter of the lord protectors to the councell at London.

The protectors letter to the lords.

My lords we commend vs heartilie vnto you. And wheras the kings maiestie was informed that you were assembled in such sort as you doo, and now remaine, and was aduised by vs and such other of his councell as were then here about his person, to send master secretarie Peter vnto you with such a message, as whereby might haue insued the suertie of his maiesties person, with the preseruation of his realme and subiects, and the quiet both of vs and your selues, as master secretarie can well declare to you: his maiestie and we of his councell here doo not a little marueil, that you staie still with you the said master secretarie, & haue not as it were vouchsafed to send answer to his maiestie, neither by him nor yet by anie other. And for our selues we doo much more marueil and are sorie, as both we and you haue good cause to be, to see the maner of your doings bent with force of violence, to bring the kings maiestie & vs to these extremities.

No word hitherto sent from the lords to the lord protector what they required of him to doo.

Which as we intend, if you will take no other waie but violence, to defend (as nature and allegiance doth bind vs) to extremitie of death, and to put all to Gods hand, who giueth victorie as it pleaseth him: so if that anie reasonable conditions & offers would take place (as hitherto none hath beene signified vnto vs from you, nor we doo not vnderstand, what you doo require or seeke, or what you doo meane) and that you doo seeke no hurt to the kings maiesties person, as touching all other priuat matters, to auoid the effusion of christian blood, and to preserue the kings maiesties person, his realme and subiects, you shall find vs agreeable vnto anie reasonable conditions that you will require. For we doo esteeme the kings wealth and tranquillitie of the realme more than all other worldlie things, yea than our owne life. Thus praieng you to send vs your determinate answer herein by master secretarie Peter, or if you will not let him go, by this bearer, we beseech God to giue both you and vs grace to determinate this matter, as maie be to Gods honor, the preseruation of the king, and the quiet of vs all: which maie be, if the fault be not in you. And so we bid you most hartilie farewell. From the kings maiesties castell of Windsor the seuenth of October, 1549.

Your lordships louing friend
Edward Summerset.

After the receipt of these letters, the lords séeming not greatlie to regard the offers conteined therein, persisted in their intended purpose; and continuing still in London conferred with the maior of London and his brethren, first willing them to cause a good and substantiall watch by night, and a good ward by daie to be kept for the safegard of the citie, and the ports and gates thereof: which was consented vnto, and the companies of London in their turnes warned to watch and ward accordinglie. Then the said lords and councellors demanded of the lord maior and his brethren fiue hundred men to aid them, to fetch the lord protector out of Windsor from the king. But thereto the maior answered, that he could grant no aid without the assent of the common councell of the citie: wherevpon the next daie a common councell was summoned to the Guildhall in London. But in this meane time the said lords of the councell assembled themselues at the lord maiors house in London, who was then sir Henrie Amcotes fishmonger, and John Yorke and Richard Turke shiriffes of the said citie. And there the said councell agreed and published forthwith a proclamation against the lord protector, the effect of which proclamation was as followeth.

The lords continue in their intended purpose against the lord protector.

A proclamation published against the lord protector.

1 That the lord protector, by his malicious and euill gouernement, was the occasion of all the sedition that of late hath happened within the realme.

2 The losse of the kings peeces in France.

3 That he was ambitious and sought his owne glorie, as appeared by his building of most sumptuous and costlie buildings, and speciallie in the time of the kings warres, and the kings soldiers vnpaied.

4 That he esteemed nothing the graue councell of the councellors.

5 That he sowed sedition betweene the nobles, the gentlemen, and commons.

6 That the nobles assembled themselues togither at London, for none other purpose, but to haue caused the protector to haue liued within his limits, and to haue put such order for the kings maiestie as apperteined, whatsoeuer the protectors doings were, which (as they said) were vnnaturall, ingrate, and traitorous.

7 That the protector slandered the councell to the king, and did what in him laie to cause variance betweene the king and his nobles.

8 That he was a great traitor, and therefore the lords desired the citie and commons to aid them to take him from the king. And in witnesse and testimonie of the contents of the said proclamation the lords subscribed their names and titles as followeth.

Witnesses to the contents of the said proclamation.

The lord Rich lord chancellor, the lord S. John lord great maister and president of the councell, the lord marquesse of Northampton, the earle of Warwike lord great chamberleine, the earle of Arundell lord chamberleine, the earle of Shrewesburie, the earle of Southampton Wriothesleie, sir Thomas Cheinie knight treasuror of the kings house and lord warden of the cinque ports, sir John Gage knight constable of the tower, sir William Peter knight secretarie, sir Edward North knight, sir Edward Montague cheefe iustice of the common plees, sir Rafe Sadler, sir John Baker, sir Edward Wotton, doctor Wotton deane of Canturburie, sir Richard Southwell.

After the foresaid proclamation was proclamed, the lords or the most of them continuing and lieng in London, came the next daie to the Guildhall, during

ring the time that the lord maior and his brethren sat in their court or inner chamber, and entered and communed a long while with them, and at the last the maior and his brethren came forth vnto the common councell, where was read the kings letter sent vnto the maior and citizens, commanding them to aid him with a thousand men, as hath maister Fox, and to send the same to his castell at Windsore: and to the same letter was adioined the kings hand, and the lord protectors. On the other side, by the mouth of the recorder it was requested, that the citizens would grant their aid rather vnto the lords: for that the protector had abused both the kings maiestie, and the whole realme, and without that he were taken from the king, & made to vnderstand his follie, this realme was in a great hazard: and therefore required that the citizens would willinglie assent to aid the lords with fiue hundred men: hereunto was none other answer made but silence. But the recorder (who at that time was a worthie gentleman called maister Browne) still cried vpon them for answer.

The kings letter read to the citizens.

The recorder an enimie to the lord protector.

At the last stepped vp a wise and good citizen, named (as maister Fox saith) George Stadlow, and said thus: In this case it is good for vs to thinke of things past to auoid the danger of things to come. I remember (saith he) in a storie written in Fabians chronicle, of the warre betweene the king and his barons, which was in the time of king Henrie the third, and the same time the barons (as our lords do now) commanded aid of the maior and citie of London, and that in a rightfull cause for the commonweale, which was for the execution of diuerse good lawes, where vnto the king before had giuen his consent, and after would not suffer them to take place, and the citie did aid the lords. Now it came to an open battell, wherein the lords preuailed, and toke the king and his sonne prisoners, and vpon certeine conditions the lords restored againe the king and his sonne to their liberties. And among all other conditions, this was one, that the king should not onelie grant his pardon to the lords, but also to the citizens of London, which was granted, yea and the same ratified by act of parlement. But what followed?

George Stadlow citizen of London maketh answer to the recorder of London verie wiselie and worthilie.

What it is to fall into the wrath and displeasure of the prince.

Was it forgotten? No suerlie, nor yet forgiuen during the kings life. The liberties of the citie were taken awaie, strangers appointed to be our heads and gouernours, the citizens giuen awaie bodie and goods, and from one persecution to another were most miserablie afflicted: such it is to enter into the wrath of a prince, as Salomon saith; The wrath and indignation of a prince is death. Wherefore forsomuch as this aid is required of the kings maiestie, whose voice we ought to hearken vnto (for he is our high shepheard) rather than vnto the lords: and yet I would not wish the lords to be clearlie shaken off, but that they with vs, and we with them may ioine in sute, and make our most humble petition to the kings maiestie, that it would please his highnesse, to heare such complaint against the gouernement of the lord protector as may be iustlie alledged and prooued. And I doubt not but this matter will be so pacified, that neither shall the king nor yet the lords haue cause to seeke for further aid, neither we to offend anie of them both. After this tale the commons staied, and the lord maior & his brethren for that time brake vp, and afterward communed with the lords.

The advise of George Stadlow.

Sir Philip Hobbie sent to the king by the lords.

The lords sat the next daie in councell in the Star chamber, and from thence they sent sir Philip Hobbie with their letters of credence to the kings maiestie, beseeching his highnesse to giue credit to that which the said Philip should declare vnto his maiestie in their names: & the king gaue him libertie to speake, and most gentlie heard all that he had to saie. And trulie he did so wiselie declare his message, and so grauelie told his tale in the name of the lords, yea therewithall so vehementlie and greeuoullie against the protector, who was also there present by the king, that in the end, the lord protector was commanded from the kings presence, and shortlie was committed to ward in a tower within the castell of Windsore called Beauchamps tower. And some after were staied sir Thomas Smith, sir Michaell Stanhope, and sir John Thin knights, maister Whalleie, maister Fisher, Wolfe of the priuie chamber, Graie of Reading, and diuers other gentlemen that attended vpon the lord protector. And the same daie the lords of the councell came to Windsore to the king, and the next daie they brought from thence the lord protector, and the other that were there staied, and conueied them through the citie of London, with as much wonderment as might be, vnto the tower, where they remained prisoners.

The lord protector committed to prison.

¶ Touching the manner of the dukes comming to the tower from Windsore, I find that it was on the fourteenth of October in the after noone, at which time he was brought on horsebacke through Holburne, in at Newgate, and so to the tower of London, accompanied with diuerse lords and gentlemen with three hundred horse: the lord maior, sir Rafe Warren, sir John Gresham, maister recorder, sir William Locke, and both the shiriffes, and other knights, sitting on their horses against Soper lane, with all the officers with halberds, and from Holburne bridge to the tower, certeine aldermen or their deputies on horsebacke in euerie street, with a number of householders standing with billes as he passed.] Shortlie after the lords resorted to the tower, and there charged the protector with sundrie articles, as followeth.

Abr. Fl. ex I. Stow, 1044.

The lord protectour committed to the tower.

Articles obiected against the lord protector.

IN primis, you toke vpon you the office of a protector and gouernour, vpon condition, expresselie and speciallie, that you would do nothing in the kings affaires publikelie or priuatlie, but by the assent of the late kings executors.

2 Also you, contrarie to the said condition, of your owne authoritie, did staie and let iustice, and subuerted the lawes, as well by your letters as by your commandements.

3 Also you caused diuerse persons, being arrested and imprisoned for treason, murther, manslaughter and felonie, to be discharged and set at large, against the kings lawes and statutes of this realme.

4 Also you haue made and ordeined lieutenants for the kings armies, and other weightie affaires vnder your owne writing and seale.

5 Also you haue communed with the ambassadors of other realmes, discoursing alone with them in the weightie causes of this realme.

6 Also you haue sometime rebuked, checked and tawnted, as well priuatlie as openlie, diuerse of the kings most honorable councellors, for shewing and declaring their aduises and opinions against your purposes in the kings weightie affaires, saieng sometimes to them, that you need not to open matters vnto them, and would therefore be otherwise aduised: and that you would, if they were not agreeable to your opinion, put them out, and take other at your pleasure.

7 Also you had and held against the law in your owne house, a court of requests, and thereby did inforce diuerse the kings subiects to answer for their free holds and goods, and determined the same to the subuer-subuersion of the same lawes.

8 Also you being no officer, without the aduise of the councell, or the more part of them, did dispose of the offices of the kings gift for monie, and granted leases and wards of the kings, and gaue presentations to the kings benefices and bishoprikes, hauing no authoritie so to do. And further, you did meddle with the selling of the kings lands.

9 Also you commanded multiplication and alcumistrie to be practised to abuse the kings coine.

10 Also you caused a proclamation to be made concerning inclosures, whereby the common people haue made diuerse insurrections, and leuied open war, and distreined and spoiled diuerse of the kings subiects, which proclamation went forth against the will of the whole councell.

11 Also you haue caused a commission with certeine articles thereunto annexed, to be made out concerning inclosures of commons, high waies, decaieng of cottages, and diuerse other things, giuing the commissioners authoritie to heare and determine the same causes, to the subuersion of the lawes and statutes of this realme: whereby much sedition, insurrection, and rebellion haue risen and growne among the kings subiects.

12 Also you haue suffered the rebels and traitors to assemble and to lie in campe and armor against the king, his nobles, and gentlemen, without anie spéedie subduing or repressing of them.

13 Also you did comfort and incourage diuerse of the said rebels, by giuing of them diuerse sums of your owne monie, and by promising to diuerse of them; fées, rewards, and seruices.

14 Also you in fauor of the said rebels did against the lawes cause a proclamation to be made, that none of the said rebels and traitors should be sued or vexed by anie person, for anie their offenses in the said rebellion, to the cleare subuersion of the same lawes.

15 Also you haue said in time of the rebellion, that you liked well the doings and proceedings of the said rebels and traitors, and said that the couetousnesse of the gentlemen gaue occasion to the common people to rise: saieng also, that better it is for the commons to die, than perish for lacke of liuing.

16 Also you said that the lords of the parlement were loth to incline themselues to reformation of inclosures and other things: therefore the people had good cause to reforme the things themselues.

17 Also you after the report and declaration of the defaults and lacks reported to you by such as did surueie Bullongne and the péces there, would neuer amend the same defaults.

18 Also you would not suffer the péces beyond the seas, called Newhauen and Blackneste, to be furnished with men and vittels; although you were aduertised of the defaults therein by the capteins of the same péces and others, and were thereto aduertised by the kings councell: wherby the French king being the kings open enimie, was incouraged and comforted to win the said péces, to the kings great losse, and dishonour of his realme.

19 Also you declared and published vntrulie, as well to the kings maiestie, as other the yong lords attendant vpon his graces person, that the lords of the councell at London minded to destroie the king, and you required the king neuer to forget it, but to reuenge it: and likewise you required the yong lords to put the king in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make sedition & discord betwéene the king and his lords.

20 Also where the kings maiesties priuie councell, of their loue and zeale that they did beare vnto the king and his realme, did consult at London to haue communed with you, to the intent to moue you charitablie to amend your doings and misgouernement: you hearing of the said assemblie, did cause to be declared by letters in diuerse places the said lords to be high traitors to the king, to the great disturbance of the realme.

And thus much for these troubles of the lord protector, and articles against him obiected; to the end (as was doubted) that the same should haue cost him his life. But such was the pleasure of almightie God, disposing mens hearts as séemeth to him best, that at length, to wit, the first of Februarie next, he was deliuered; and that night he supped at sir John Yorks one of the shiriffes of London, also the proclamation before set forth against him was reuoked & called in. And thus being againe restored, though not to his former office, yet vnto libertie, he continued therein for the space of two yeares and two daies, till new troubles (as after shall appeare) chanced to him, which as they were too heauie for him either to cast off, or carrie awaie; so were his loders more readie to aggrauate his burthen, than willing to ease him anie waie of the weight. So that this his exaltation & raising to dignitie, in respect of the short continuance thereof, as also for the enuie wherewith it was assailed, had béene better not to haue happened, than with such infelicitie in so short a time to haue ended. But this fall from honor & aduancement with losse of life (than the which nothing more pretious, nothing more delicious) greeued him the lesse: bicause he might perceiue (as some suspected) that rather of enuie than otherwise (reseruing the course of Gods iudgement and vengeance to the secrecie of his owne counsels) the same was deuised, prosecuted, & finallie practised:

Nam quo quisque magis pius est, studiosior æqui,
Charior & regi, & quo quisque potentior extat,
Sentiet à prauis se tanto odiosius iri
Dente Theonino rosum, quod fortè latenter
Fiet & occultè, linguæ ne sentiat ictum
Lethalem, donec stamen trux Atropos occet,
Et vi Parcarum cœnum voluatur in imum.]

¶ The seuentéenth of October, king Edward came from Hampton court to his place in Southwarke, and there dined, and after dinner he made maister Yorke one of the shiriffes knight, and then rode thorough the citie to Westminster. The lord maior of London for this yeare named sir Rowland Hill, was a man of great charitie and compassion, euident and effectuall testimonies whereof he hath left in the world; some of whose good déeds partlie in his remembrance & partlie for others example are deseruedlie recorded. This man caused to be made a causeie, commonlie called Duerlane pauement in the high waie from Stone to Nantwich, in length foure miles, for horsse and man, with diuerse lanes on both sides the same causeie. He caused likewise a causeie to be made from Dunchurch to Branssen in Warwikeshire, more than two miles of length, and gaue twentie pounds in monie towards the making of Roitton bridge, three miles from Couentrie. He made the high waie to Kilborne néere to London. He made foure bridges, two of them of stone, conteining eightéene arches in them both, the one ouer the riuer of Seuerne, called Achambridge; the other Ternebridge, for that the water of Terne runneth vnder it; the other two of timber at Stoke, and built a good part of Stoke church. He builded one notable free schole at Draiton in Shropshire, with maister and vsher, and sufficient stipends for them both, besides conuenient lodgings for the same. He also purchased a fré faire to the said towne, with a fré market wéekelie, & also a fré market for cattell euerie foure-

Abr. Fl. ex l. 1044, 1045.

K. Edward rode thorough London.

Charitable déeds of sir Rowland Hill.

Free schole at Draiton in Shropshire.

His gift to Christs hospitall.

foureteene daies. He gaue to the hospitall of Christs church in London in his life time fiue hundred pounds in readie monie, and a hundred pounds at his decease.]

But now to returne to other doings. Whilest these hurls and tumults were in hand, to the danger of the whole state, the wars against the Scots were nothing followed, according to the former purposed meaning of the councell: so that it seemed necessarie to giue ouer the keeping of Hadington, the same being in deed more chargeable (as was thought) than profitable, sith the garrison there could not be victuled but with a great power to conduct the cariages in safetie, the enimies being still readie to take their aduantage to distresse them vpon anie opportunitie offered. It was therefore resolued, that the earle of Rutland should go thither to see the fortifications raised, and to conduct from thence the men & ordinance in safetie home into England. Hereupon the said earle with the Almans, and other souldiours then remaining on the borders, marched thither, and caused the bulworks, ramplers, and trenches to be raised and filled flat with the ground, and bringing from thence all the men, artillerie and munition, bag and baggage, returned vnto Barwike without incounter, in peaceable and quiet maner.

Hadington raséd.

Parlement.

Shortlie after this, the kings maiestie called his high court of parlement, which began at Westminster, the foure and twentith daie of November in this third yeare of his reigne, and there continued the same vntill the first daie of Februarie next following, which was in the beginning of the fourth yeare of his reigne. And among other things there enacted and concluded, one statute was made for the punishment of rebels, and vnlawfull assemblies: the which law was made by occasion of the late rebellion that happened in manner throughout the realme the yeare passed, & was not thought nor meant to haue touched anie noble man, speciallie such as the duke of Summerset was, which after (as it shall appeare) it did, and by that statute he was condemned within two yeares next after.

Anact for vnlawfull assemblies.

Abr. Fl. ex I. Stow. 1045.

¶ The nintéenth of Januarie, sir John Russell lord priuie seale, was created earle of Bedford: and lord saint John Lord great maister, was created earle of Wilshire: and sir William Paget, comptroller of the kings house, was made lord Paget. On the same daie at night, were murthered by saint Pulchres church against the kings head without Newgate of London two captains, that had serued the king of Bullongne and else-where, the one was sir Peter Gambo, the other Filicirga. Which murther was committed by Charles Gauaro a Flemming, who came post from Barwike to do that act. On the morrow, he with three of his companie was taken in Smithfield by the lord Paget, and sent to Newgate, and the foure and twentith of Januarie they were all foure, Charles Gauaro, Balthasar Gauaro, Nicholas Disalueron, and Francis Denalasco, had in a cart to Smithfield. And by the waie at the place where the murther was done, Charles Gauaro had his right hand striken off on the cart wheele, and then all hanged in Smithfield; who being exhorted to reconcile himselfe to God and the world by confessing his fault, by repenting himselfe of the offense, and asking forgiuenesse, that he might with a disburthened conscience resigne his soule into the hands of God, obstinatlie and desperatlie answered, that he would neuer repent him of the déed.]

States created.

Peter Gambo and another capteine murthered.

Gauaro and other hanged.

1550 Anno Reg. 4.

About the same time, monsieur de Thermes that succéeded monsieur de Desse in gouernement as generall of the French forces in Scotland, came before Broughtierag, where he did so much by batterie & other kinds of inforcement, that giuing an assault both with his Frenchmen and certeine Scots ioined with him, the twentith of Februarie, the fort was entered by fine force, and all within it either taken or slaine. Sir John Luttrell gouernour of that pœce remained prisoner amongst the Frenchmen. Moreouer, now after the end of the parlement, the earle of Warwike, hauing then highest authoritie, and the rest of the lords of the councell, calling to remembrance how the last yeare in the time of rebellion, the French king had entered Bullongnois, and wone diuerse of the English forts there, being of great importance for defense of the towne and countrie, the default whereof was imputed to the negligent gouernment of the lord protector: and for so much as they well vnderstood that the French king vpon further practise had placed a capteine called the Reingraue, with diuerse regiments of Almaine lancequenets, and certeine ensignes also of Frenchmen, to the number of foure or fiue thousand at the towne of Morguison, being the midwaie betwéene Bullongne and Calis, to the great perill and danger as well of the countie of Bollongnois, as also of Calis, Guisnes, and all the low countrie.

Sir John Luttrell prisoner.

Erle of warwike in highest authoritie.

Morguison the midwaie betwéene Bullen and Calis.

The king therefore for the defense of the said frontiers, caused all the strangers which had serued that yeare against the rebels, being to the number of two thousand, to be transported ouer the sea to the marches of Calis. And now at Christmas last past, by order of the said earle, and of the councellors aforesaid, Francis earle of Huntington, and sir Edward Hastings his brother, sir James Croft, sir Leonard Chamberleine, and diuerse other capteins and souldiers, to the number of three thousand, were set ouer to the marches of Calis, to ioine with the said strangers, minding with as conuenient spéed as they might, to remoue the campe, and otherwise to annoie the French. But in the meane time through the diligent trauell of certeine persons, speciallie of one Guidoti an Italian, and a Florentine borne, there was a motion made for a treatie to be had by certeine commissioners, appointed betwixt the kings of England and France, for the conclusion of some peace, vpon such reasonable conditions and articles as might be thought expedient for the present time; and to stand with the honor and commoditie of both the princes.

It is agréed among the lords to infest and annoie the French.

Commissioners sent to treat of peace.

This motion tooke such effect, that about the seuenth daie of Februarie, certeine commissioners, appointed for this treatie, that is to wit, John the earle of Bedford, the lord Paget, sir William Peter the kings chéefe secretarie, and sir John Mason, arriued at Calis: by reason of whose comming, the earle of Huntington, and the armie sent ouer before for the defense of the frontiers were countermanded from anie attempt, so that little or nothing was done in that voiage, sauing certeine skirmishes at diuerse times, not much materiall to be written of. These commissioners being thus arriued, passed from Calis to Bullongne, there to méet with the commissioners appointed for the French king, where as a certeine house was newlie erected for the said treatie to be had, which was vpon the side of Bullongne hauen next to France, where after diuerse méetings & conferences of the commissioners of either partie, a finall peace was at last concluded betwixt both the realmes. But chéeflie among other things, for the restitution of Bullongne and Bullongnois to the Frenchmen, which were vpon certeine conditions following.

A péace concluded with France vpon certeine conditions.

First, that the French king should pæld and paie to the king of England a certeine summe of monie, and the same to be paid at two paiments, as it was then agréed: and for the same summe the king of England should render the towne of Bullongne, and all the forts thereto adioining, which he then inioied, with all such artillerie and munition as was there found at the taking of the same to the French king. And for the sure paiment of the said sums, the French king sent into England for hostages and pledges, the counte de Anguien, Lewes the duke of Vandosme his brother, the Vidame of Charters, and the duke de Aumale and others. And on S. Markes daie next following, being the fiue and twentith daie of Aprill, about eight of the clocke in the morning, the Englishmen did deliuer to the Frenchmen the possession of Bullongne, and the castels and forts in the countie of Bullognois, according to the agreements and articles of peace afore mentioned. And the fifteenth daie next following the French king entered into the said townes of Bullongne with trumpets blowne, & with all the roiall triumph that might be, where he offered one great image of siluer of our ladie in the church there, which was called our ladie church: the which image he had caused specially to be made in the honor of the said ladie, and caused the same to be set vp in the place where the like image before did stand, the which before was taken awaie by the Englishmen at the winning of the towne.

Bullongne giuen vp to the French.

He entereth.

¶ On Candlemasse daie, William lord S. John earle of Willshire, lord great maister, and president of the councell, was made lord treasuror. John Dudleie earle of Warwike, lord great chamberleine, was made lord great maister. William Parre marquesse of Northampton, was made lord great chamberleine. Lord Wentworth was made lord chamberleine of the household. Sir Anthonie Wingfield capteine of the gard, was made comptrollor of the kings house. And sir Thomas Darcie knight, was made vicechamberleine & capteine of the gard. And the earle of Arundell late lord chamberleine, with the earle of Southampton were put off the councell, and commanded to keepe their houses in London.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1046. New officers created of the nobilitie.

¶ On the 10 of Februarie, one Bell a Suffolke man was hanged and quartered at Tiburne, for mouing a new rebellion in Suffolke and Essex. This time, the lord maior of London and the aldermen purchased all the liberties of Southwarke, which were in the kings hands.

The liberties of Southwarke purchased.

Some after the aforesaid agreement betweene England and France was concluded, vpon the fore remembred capitulations, because of suspicion of displeasure and hatred that was thought to remaine betweene the earle of Warwike and the duke of Somerset, latelie before deliuered out of the tower, a meane was found that their frendship should be renewed through aliance, and a mariage was concluded betweene the earle of Warwikes eldest sonne, and the duke of Somersets eldest daughter: the which marriage was solemnized at Shene, the king being then present. After the solemnitie of this marriage, there appeared outwardlie to the world great loue and frendship betweene the duke and the earle, but by reason of carietales and flatterers, the loue continued not long, howbeit manie did verie earnestlie wish loue and amitie to continue betweene them. ¶ About this time was a new rebellion in Kent, but it was sone suppressed, and certeine of the chiefe were apprehended and put to death, namelie Richard Lion, Goddard Goram, and Richard Ireland. This yeare was a parlement holden at Westminster, where among other things by the authoritie of the said parlement, priests children were made legitimate, and vsurie for the loane of monie forbidden.

The duke of Somerset deliuered out of the tower.

A marriage to compose strife and establish amitie.

Rich. Grafton. Rebellion in Kent executed.

Priests children legitimate. Vsurie forbidden.

¶ On wednesdaie in Whitsunweeke, at a court of aldermen kept at the Guildhall, sir John Aliffe knight, and maister of Blackwell hall, was sworne alderman of the Bridge ward without, to haue iurisdiction of the borough of Southwarke, and thus was he the first alderman that euer was there, who made vp the number of six and twentie aldermen of London, whereas before that time had beene but fiue and twentie. Trinitie tearme was adiourned till Michaelmasse, for that the gentlemen should keepe the commons from commotion. The eleuenth of June being S. Barnables daie, was kept holidaie all London ouer: and the same daie at night, the high altar in Paules church was pulled downe, and a table set where the altar stood, with a veile drawne beneath the steps; and on the sundaie next a communion was song at the same table; and shortlie after all the altars in London were taken downe, and tables placed in their romes. This yeare was no such watch at Midsummer as had beene accustomed.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1047, 1048 Alderman of Southwarke.

Terme adiourned.

S. Barnable kept holie.

High altar in Paules pulled downe.

No watch at Midsummer.

The thirtith of Julie Thomas lord Wriothesleie erle of Southampton, knight of the garter, and one of the executors to king Henrie the eight, deceassed at Lincolne place in Holborne, and was buried in S. Andrewes church there. Sir Andrew Jude for this yeare maior of London, and skinner, erected one notable freeschole at Tunbridge in Kent, wherein he brought vp and nourished in learning great store of youth, as well bred in that shire, as brought from other countries adioining. A noble act and correspondent to those that haue beene done by like worshipfull men, and other in old time within the same citie of London. He also builded almesse houses for sir poore almesse people, nigh to the parish church of saint Helens within Bishopsgate of London, & gaue land to the companie of the skinners in the same citie, amounting to the value of threescore pounds three shillings eight pence the yeare: for the which they be bound to paie twentie pounds to the schoolemaister, and eight pounds to the vsher of his freeschole at Tunbridge yearelie for euer, and foure shillings the weeke to the sir poore almesse people at S. Helens aforesaid, eight pence the peece weekelie, and fiue and twentie shillings foure pence the yeare in coles amongst them for euer.]

Earle of Southampton deceassed.

Charitable deeds of Andrew Jude.

Freeschole at Tunbridge.

Almes houses.

1551
Anno Reg. 5.

About this time there was at Feuersham in Kent a gentleman named Arden, most cruellie murthered and slaine by the procurement of his owne wife. The which murther, for the horriblenesse thereof, although otherwise it may seeme to be but a priuate matter, and therefore as it were impertinent to this historie, I haue thought good to set it forth somewhat at large, hauing the instructions deliuered to me by them, that haue vsed some diligence to gather the true vnderstanding of the circumstances. This Arden was a man of a tall and comelie personage, and matched in marriage with a gentlewoman, yong, tall, and well fauoured of shape and countenance, who chancing to fall in familiaritie with one Mosbie a tailor by occupation, a blacke swart man, seruant to the lord North, it happened this Mosbie vpon some misliking to fall out with hir: but she being desirous to be in fauour with him againe, sent him a paire of siluer dice by one Adam Foule dwelling at the Floure de lice in Feuersham.

Arden murthered.

Arden described.

Loue and lust.

A paire of siluer dice worke much mischiefe.

After which he resorted to hir againe, and oftentimes laie in Ardens house: in somuch that within two yeares after, he obteined such fauour at hir hands, that he laie with hir, or (as they terme it) kept hir, in abusing hir bodie. And although (as it was said) Arden perceiued right well their mutuall familiaritie to be much greater than their honestie, yet because he would not offend hir, and so lose the benefit which he hoped to gaine at some of hir frends hands in bearing with hir lewdnesse, which he might haue lost if he should haue fallen out with hir: he was contented to winke at hir filthie disorder, and both permitted, and also inuited Mosbie verie often

Arden winketh at his wiues lewdnesse, & why.

to

to lodge in his house. And thus it continued a good space, before anie practise was begun by them against maister Arden. She at length inflamed in loue with Mosbie, and loathing hir husband, wished and after practised the meanes how to hasten his end.

Ardens wife attempteth means to make awaie hir husband.

There was a painter dwelling in Feuersham, who had skill of poisons, as was reported. She therefore demanded of him, whether it were true that he had such skill in that feat or not? And he denied not but that he had in deed. Yea (said she) but I would haue such a one made, as should haue most vehement and speedie operation to dispatch the eater thereof. That can I do (quoth he) and forthwith made hir such a one, and willed hir to put it into the bottome of a porrenger, & then after to powre milke on it. Which circumstance she forgetting, did cleane contrarie, putting in the milke first, and afterward the poison. Now maister Arden purposing that daie to ride to Canturburie, his wife brought him his breakefast, which was woont to be milke and butter. He hauing receiued a spoonefull or two of the milke, misliked the tast and colour thereof, and said to his wife; Mistresse Ales what milke haue you giuen me here? Wherewithall she tilted it ouer with hir hand, saieng, I weene nothing can please you. Then he tooke horsse and road towards Canturburie, and by the waie fell into extreme purging vpwards and downewards, and so escaped for that time.

Arden is poisoned by his wife but recouereth.

After this, his wife fell in acquaintance with one Greene of Feuersham, seruant to sir Anthonie Ager, from which Greene maister Arden had wrested a peece of ground on the backeside of the abbeie of Feuersham, and there had blowes and great threats passed betwixt them about that matter. Therefore she knowing that Greene hated hir husband, began to practise with him how to make him awaie; and concluded, that if he could get anie that would kill him, he should haue ten pounds for a reward. This Greene hauing doings for his master sir Anthonie Ager, had occasion to go vp to London, where his maister then laie, and hauing some charge vp with him, desired one Bradshaw a goldsmith of Feuersham that was his neighbor, to accompanie him to Grauesend, and he would content him for his paines. This Bradshaw, being a verie honest man, was content, and road with him. And when they came to Rainham downe, they chanced to see three or foure seruingmen that were comming from Leeds: and therewith Bradshaw espied comming vp the hill from Rochester, one blacke Will, a terrible cruell ruffian with a sword and a buckler, and an other with a great staffe on his necke.

She deuiseth another waie to dispatch hir husband Arden.

A notorious murthering ruffian.

Marke how the diuell will not let his organs or instruments let slip either occasion or opportunitie to commit most heinous wickednesse.

Then said Bradshaw to Greene; We are happie that here commeth some companie from Leeds, for here commeth vp against vs as murthering a knaue as anie is in England: if it were not for them we might chance hardlie to escape without losse of our monie and liues. Yea thought Greene (as he after confessed) such a one is for my purpose, and therefore asked; Which is he? Ponder is he quoth Bradshaw, the same that hath the sword and buckler: his name is blacke Will. How know you that, said Greene? Bradshaw answered, I knew him at Bullongne, where we both serued, he was a soldier, and I was sir Richard Cauendishes man, and there he committed manie robberies and heinous murthers on such as trauelled betwixt Bullongne and France.

By this time the other companie of seruingmen came to them, and they going all togither, met with blacke Will and his fellow. The seruingmen knew blacke Will, & saluting him, demanded of him whither he went? He answered; By his blood (for his vse was to sweare almost at euerie word) I know not, nor care not, but set vp my staffe, and euen as it falleth I go. If thou (quoth they) wilt go backe againe to Grauesend, we will giue thee thy supper. By his blood (said he) I care not, I am content, haue with you: and so he returned againe with them. Then blacke Will tooke acquaintance of Bradshaw, saieng; Fellow Bradshaw how dost thou? Bradshaw vnwilling to renew acquitance, or to haue ought to do with so shameles a ruffian, said; Why do ye know me? Yea that I do (quoth he) did not we serue in Bullongne togither? But ye must pardon me (quoth Bradshaw) for I haue forgotten you.

A desperat villaine.

An honest man is ashamed to renew old acquaintance with a knaue.

Then Greene talked with blacke Will, and said; When ye haue supped, come to mine hosts house at such a signe, and I will giue you the sacke and sugar. By his blood (said he) I thanke you, I will come and take it I warrant you. According to his promise he came, and there they made good cheare. Then blacke Will & Greene went and talked apart from Bradshaw, and there concluded togither, that if he would kill maister Arden, he should haue ten pounds for his labor. Then he answered, By his wounds that I will if I maie know him. Marie to morrow in Poules I will shew him thee, said Greene. Then they left their talke, & Greene bad him go home to his hosts house. Then Greene wrote a letter to mistresse Arden, & among other things put in these words: We haue got a man for our purpose, we maie thanke my brother Bradshaw. Now Bradshaw not knowing anie thing of this, tooke the letter of him, and in the morning departed home againe, and deliuered the letter to mistresse Arden, and Greene & blacke Will went vp to London at the tide.

The match made to murther Arden.

Simplicitie abused.

At the time appointed, Greene shewed blacke Will maister Arden walking in Poules. Then said blacke Will, What is he that goeth after him? Marie said Green, one of his men. By his blood (said blacke Will) I will kill them both. Naie (said Greene) do not so, for he is of counsell with vs in this matter. By his blood (said he) I care not for that, I will kill them both. Naie said Greene in anie wise do not so. Then blacke Will thought to haue killed maister Arden in Poules churchyard, but there were so manie gentlemen that accompanied him to dinner, that he missed of his purpose. Greene shewed all this talke to maister Ardens man, whose name was Michaell, which euer after stood in doubt of blacke Will, lest he should kill him. The cause that this Michaell conspired with the rest against his maister, was: for that it was determined, that he should marrie a kinswoman of Mosbies.

Blacke Will maketh no conscience of bloudshed and murther.

Why Ardens man conspired with the rest to kill his maister.

After this, maister Arden laie at a certeine parsonage which he held in London, and therefore his man Michaell and Greene agreed, that blacke Will should come in the night to the parsonage, where he should find the doores left open, that he might come in and murther maister Arden. This Michaell hauing his maister to bed, left open the doores according to the appointment. His maister then being in bed, asked him if he had shut fast the doores, and he said yea: but yet afterwards, fearing least blacke Will would kill him as well as his maister, after he was in bed himselfe, he rose againe and shut the doores, bolting them fast. So that blacke Will comming thither, and finding the doores shut, departed, being disappointed at that time. The next daie blacke Will came to Greene in a great chafe, swearing and staring bicause he was so deceiued, and with manie terrible oths threatened to kill maister Ardens man first, whersoeuer he met him. No (said Greene) do not so, I will first know the cause of shutting the doores.

One murthering mind mistrusting another, doo hinder the action whereabout they agreed.

Then Greene met and talked with Ardens man, and asked of him, why he did not leaue open the doors, according to his promise? Marie (said Michaell) I will shew you the cause. My maister yesternight did that he neuer did before: for after I was in bed, hée rose vp and shut the doores, and in the morning rated me for leauing them vnshut. And herewith Gréene & blacke Will were pacified. Arden being redie to go homewards, his maid came to Gréene & said; This night will my maister go downe. Wherupon it was agréed that blacke Will should kill him on Reinam downe. When maister Arden came to Rochester, his man still fearing that blacke Will would kill him with his maister, pricked his horsse of purpose, and made him to halt, to the end he might protract the time, and tarie behind. His maister asked him whie his horsse halted, he said, I know not. Well (quoth his maister) when ye come at the smith here before (betwéene Rochester and the hill fast ouer against Chætam) remoue his sho, and search him, and then come after me. So maister Arden rode on: and yet he came at the place where blacke Will late in wait for him, there ouertoke him diuerse gentlemen of his acquaintance, who kept him companie: so that blacke Will mist here also of his purpose.

The fourth attempt to make Arden awaie disappointed.

Blacke Will misseth his purpose.

After that maister Arden was come home, hée sent (as he vsuallie did) his man to Shepeie to sir Thomas Cheinie, then lord warden of the cinque ports, about certeine businesse, and at his comming awaie, he had a letter deliuered sent by sir Thomas Cheinie to his maister. When he came home, his mistresse toke the letter and kept it, willing hir man to tell his maister, that he had a letter deliuered him by sir Thomas Cheinie, and that he had lost it; adding that he thought it best that his maister should go the next morning to sir Thomas, because he knew not the matter: he said he would, and therefore he willed his man to be stirring betimes. In this meane while, blacke Will, and one George Shakebag his companion, were kept in a storehouse of sir Anthonie Agers at Preston, by Grænes appointment: and thither came mistresse Arden to sée him, bringing and sending him meat and drinke manie times. He therfore lurking there, and watching some opportunitie for his purpose, was willed in anie wise to be vp earlie in the morning, to lie in wait for maister Arden in a certeine broome close, betwixt Feuersham & the ferrie (which close he must néeds passe) there to do his feat. Now blacke Will stirred in the morning betimes, but mist the waie, & taried in a wrong place.

Ardens wife visiteth, succoureth, emboldneth, and directeth blacke will for how to accomplish his bloudie purpose.

Maister Arden & his man comming on their waie earlie in the morning towards Shornelan, where sir Thomas Cheinie late: as they were almost come to the broome close, his man alwaies fearing that blacke Will would kill him with his maister, feined that he had lost his purse; Why said his maister, thou foolish knaue, couldst thou not loke to thy purse but lose it? What was in it? Three pounds said he. Why then go thy waies backe againe like a knaue (said his maister) and séeke it, for being so earlie as it is, there is no man stirring, and therefore thou maist be sure to find it, and then come and ouertake me at the ferrie. But neuertheles, by reason that blacke Will lost his way, maister Arden escaped yet once againe. At that time, blacke Will yet thought hée should haue bene sure to haue met him homewards: but whether that some of the lord wardens men accompanied him backe to Feuersham, or that being in doubt, for that it was late to go through the broome close, and therfore toke another waie, blacke Will was disappointed then also.

Note here the force of feare and a troubled conscience.

Blacke Will yet againe disappointed.

But now saint Valentines faire being at hand, the conspirators thought to dispatch their diuelish intention at that time. Polsbie minded to picke some quarrell to maister Arden at the faire to fight with him; for he said he could not find in his heart to murther a gentleman in that sort as his wife wished: although she had made a solemne promise to him, and he againe to hir, to be in all points as man and wife togither, and therupon they both receiued the sacrament on a sundaie at London, openlie in a church there. But this deuise to fight with him would not serue, for maister Arden both then and at other times had bene greatlie prouoked by Polsbie to fight with him, but he would not. Now Polsbie had a sister that dwelt in a tenement of maister Ardens nére to his house in Feuersham: and on the faire éeuen, blacke Will was sent for to come thither, and Gréene bringing him thither, met there with mistresse Arden, accompanied with Michaell hir man, and one of hir maids. There were also Polsbie and George Shakebag, and there they deuised to haue killed him in maner as afterwards he was. But yet Polsbie at the first would not agrée to that cowardlie murthering of him, but in a furie flong awaie, and went vp the abbeie street toward the flower de lice, the house of the aforenamed Adam Foule, where he did often host. But before he came thither now at this time, a messenger ouertoke him, that was sent from mistres Arden, desiring him of all loues to come backe againe to helpe to accomplish the mater he knew of. Herevpon he returned to hir againe, and at his comming backe, she fell downe vpon hir knées to him, and besought him to go through with the matter, as if he loued hir he would be content to do, sith as shee had diuerse times told him, he néeded not to doubt, for there was not anie that would care for his death, nor make anie great inquirie for them that should dispatch him.

Ardens wife, blacke Will, & the knot of bulans méet and conclude vpon their former prepensed mischiefe.

O importunate & bloudie minded strumpet!

Thus she being earnest with him, at length hée was contented to agrée vnto that horrible deuise, and therevpon they conueied blacke Will into maister Ardens house, putting him into a closet at the end of his parlour. Before this, they had sent out of the house all the seruants, those excepted which were priuie to the deuised murther. Then went Polsbie to the doore, and there stood in a night gowne of silke girded about him, and this was betwixt six and seuen of the clocke at night. Maister Arden hauing bene at a neighbors house of his, named Dumpkin, & hauing cleared certeine reckonings betwixt them, came home: and finding Polsbie standing at the doore, asked him if it were supper time? I thinke not (quoth Polsbie) it is not yet readie. Then let vs go and plaie a game at the tables in the meane season, said maister Arden. And so they went streight into the parlor: and as they came by through the hall, his wife was walking there, and maister Arden said; How now mistresse Ales? But she made small answer to him. In the meane time one cheined the wicket doore of the entrie. When they came into the parlor, Polsbie sat downe on the bench, hauing his face toward the place where blacke Will stood. Then Michaell maister Ardens man stood at his masters backe, holding a candle in his hand, to shadow blacke Will, that Arden might by no meanes perceiue him comming forth. In their plaie Polsbie said thus (which séemed to be the watchword for blacke Wils comming forth) Now maie I take you sir if I will. Take me (quoth maister Arden) which waie? With that blacke Will crept forth, and cast a towell about his necke, so to stop his breath and strangle him. Then Polsbie hauing at his girdle a pressing iron of fourtéene pounds weight, stroke him on the hed with the same, so that he fell downe, and gaue a great grone, insomuch that they thought he had bene killed.

The practise to kill Arden is now set abroch.

Here the confederats ioine their practises

The watchword to the principall murtherer.

Then they bare him awaie, to laie him in the counting house, & as they were about to laie him downe, the pangs of death comming on him, he gaue a great grone, and stretched himselfe, and then blacke Will gaue him a great gash in the face, and so killed led him out of hand, laid him along, toke the monie out of his purse, and the rings from his fingers, and then comming out of the counting house, said; Now the feat is done, giue me my monie. So mistres Arden gaue him ten pounds: and he comming to Greene, had a horsse of him, and so rode his waies. After that blacke Will was gone, mistresse Arden came into the counting house, and with a knife gaue him seuen or eight picks into the brest. Then they made cleene the parlor, toke a clout, and wiped where it was bloudie, and strewed againe the rushes that were shuffled with strugling, and cast the clout with which they wiped the blood, and the knife that was bloudie, wherewith she had wounded hir husband, into a tub by the wels side; where afterwards both the same clout and knife were found. Thus this wicked woman, with hir complices, most shamefullie murdered hir owne husband, who most entirelie loued hir all his life time. Then she sent for two Londoners to supper, the one named Prune, and the other Cole, that were grosers, which before the murder was committed, were bidden to supper. When they came, she said: I maruell where maister Arden is; we will not tarie for him, come ye and sit downe, for he will not be long. Then Mosbies sister was sent for, she came and sat downe, and so they were merie.

Arden slaine outright.

A prepensed quarel against Arden by the conspirators.

Blacke Will receiueth ten pounds for his reward of Ardens wife, for murdering hir husband.

Marke what a countenance of innocencie and ignorance she bore after the murdering of hir husband.

After supper, mistres Arden caused hir daughter to plaie on the virginals, and they danced, and she with them, and so seemed to protract time as it were, till maister Arden should come, and she said, I maruell where he is so long; well, he will come anon I am sure, I praie you in the meane while let vs plaie a game at the tables. But the Londoners said, they must go to their hosts house, or else they should be shut out at doores, and so taking their leaue, departed. When they were gone, the seruants that were not priuie to the murder, were sent abroad into the towne; some to seeke their maister, and some of other errands, all sauing Michaell and a maid, Mosbies sister, and one of mistres Ardens owne daughters. Then they toke the dead bodie, and caried it out, to laie it in a field next to the church-yard, and ioining to his garden wall, through the which he went to the church. In the meane time it began to snow, and when they came to the garden gate, they remembred that they had forgotten the kaie, and one went in for it, and finding it, at length brought it, opened the gate, and caried the corps into the same field, as it were ten pases from the garden gate, and laid him downe on his backe streight in his night gowne, with his slipers on: and betweene one of his slippers and his foot, a long rush or two remained. When they had thus laid him downe, they returned the same way they came through the garden into the house.

The workers of this mischiefe carie out Arden laine into the field.

This she did to colour hir wickednesse which by no meanes was reuealeable.

They being returned thus backe againe into the house, the doores were opened, and the seruants returned home that had béene sent abroad: and being now verie late, she sent forth hir folks againe to make inquirie for him in diuerse places; namelie, among the best in the towne where he was wont to be, who made answer, that they could tell nothing of him. Then she began to make an outcrie, and said; Neuer woman had such neighbors as I haue, and herewith wept: in somuch that hir neighbors came in, and found hir making great lamentation, pretending to maruell what was become of hir husband. Whereupon, the maior and others came to make search for him. The faire was wont to be kept partlie in the towne, and partlie in the abbeie; but Arden for his owne priuat lucre & couetous gaine had this present yeare procured it to be wholie kept within the abbeie ground which he had purchased; & so reaping all the gaines to himselfe, and bereauing the townes of that portion which was wont to come to the inhabitants, got manie a bitter curse. The maior going about the faire in this search, at length came to the ground where Arden laie: and as it happened, Prune the groser getting sight of him, first said; Staie, for me thinke I see one lie here. And so they looking and beholding the bodie, found that it was maister Arden, lieng there throughlie dead, and viewing diligentlie the maner of his bodie & hurts, found the rushes sticking in his slippers, and marking further, espied certeine footsteps, by reason of the snow, betwixt the place where he laie, and the garden doore.

Arden a couetous man and a preferrer of his priuat profit before common gaine.

Ardens dead bodie is described by one of his acquaintance.

Then the maior commanded euerie man to staie, and herewith appointed some to go about, & to come in at the inner side of the house through the garden as the waie laie, to the place where maister Ardens dead bodie did lie; who all the waie as they came, perceiued footings still before them in the snow: and so it appeared plainlie that he was brought along that waie from the house through the garden, and so into the field where he laie. Then the maior and his companie that were with him went into the house, and knowing hir euill demeanor in times past, examined hir of the matter: but she defied them and said, I would you should know I am no such woman. Then they examined hir seruants, and in the examination, by reason of a peece of his heare and bloud found nere to the house in the waie, by the which they caried him forth, and likewise by the knife with which she had thrust him into the brest, and the clout wherewith they wiped the bloud awaie which they found in the tub, into the which the same were throwen; they all confessed the matter, and hir selfe beholding hir husbands bloud, said; Oh the bloud of God helpe, for this bloud haue I shed.

Footsteps all alongst from the dead bodie of Arden to his dwelling house.

A peece of Ardens heare and his bloud spilt in the house espied, as also a bloudie knife and a clout found.

Then were they all attached, and committed to prison, and the maior with others went presentlie to the flower de lice, where they found Mosbie in bed: and as they came towards him, they espied his hose and purse stained with some of maister Ardens bloud. And when he asked what they meant by their comming in such sort, they said; See, here ye may vnderstand wherefore, by these tokens, shewing him the bloud on his hose and purse. Then he confessed the deed, and so he and all the other that had conspired the murder, were apprehended and laid in prison, except Greene, blacke Will, and the painter, which painter and George Shakebag, that was also sled before, were neuer heard of. Shortlie were the sessions kept at Feuersham, where all the prisoners were arreigned and condemned. And thereupon being examined whither they had anie other complices, mistres Arden accused Bradshaw, vpon occasion of the letter sent by Greene from Graues end, (as before ye haue heard) which words had none other meaning, but onelie by Bradshaws describing of blacke Wills qualities; Greene iudged him a meete instrument for the execution of their pretended murder. Whereto notwithstanding (as Greene confessed at his death certeine yeares after) this Bradshaw was neuer made priuie; howbeit, he was vpon this accusation of mistres Arden, immediatlie sent for to the sessions, and indicted, and declaration made against him, as a procurer of blacke Will to kill maister Arden, which proceeded wholie by misvnderstanding of the words conteined in the letter which he brought from Greene.

Some of Ardens bloud vpon Mosbies purse.

The principals of this murder sled awaie.

Bradshaw as vniustlie accused, as his simplicitie was shamefullie abused.

Then he desired to talke with the persons condemned, and his request was granted. He therefore demanded of them if they knew him, or euer had anie conuersation with him, & they all said no. Then the letter being shewed and read, he declared the ve-rie truth of the matter, and vpon what occasion he told Greene of blacke Will: neuertheles, he was condemned, and suffered. These condemned persons were diuerslie executed in sundrie places, for Michaell maister Ardens man was hanged in chaines at Feuersham, and one of the maids was burnt there, pitifullie bewailing hir case, and cried out on hir mistres that had brought hir to this end, for the which she would neuer forgiue hir. Mosbie & his sister were hanged in Smithfield at London; mistres Arden was burned at Canturburie the foure and twentith of March. Greene came againe certeine yeares after, was apprehended, condemned, & hanged in chaines in the high waie betwixt Dspring & Boughton against Feuersham; blacke Will was burnt on a scaffold at Flisching in Zeland. Adam Foule that dwelt at the floure de lice in Feuersham was brought into trouble about this matter, and caried vp to London, with his legs bound vnder the horsse bellie, and committed to prison in the Marshalsie: for that Mosbie was heard to saie; Had it not béene for Adam Foule, I had not come to this trouble: meaning that the bringing of the siluer dice for a token to him from mistresse Arden, as ye haue heard, occasioned him to renew familiaritie with hir againe. But when the matter was throughlie riped vp, & that Mosbie had clered him, protesting that he was neuer of knowledge in anie behalfe to the murder, the mans innocencie preserued him.

Innocencie no barre against execution.

Note how these malefactors suffered punishment.

Blacke will burnt at Flisching.

I wonder touching the print of Ardens dead bodie two yeares after he was slaine.

This one thing séemeth verie strange and notable, touching maister Arden, that in the place where he was laid, being dead, all the proportion of his bodie might be séene two yeares after and more, so plaine as could be, for the grasse did not grow where his bodie had touched: but betwéene his legs, betwéene his armes, and about the hollownesse of his necke, and round about his bodie, and where his legs, armes, head, or anie other part of his bodie had touched, no grasse growed at all of all that time. So that manie strangers came in that meane time, beside the townesmen, to sée the print of his bodie there on the ground in that field. Which field he had (as some haue reported) most cruellie taken from a woman, that had béene a widow to one Cooke, and after maried to one Richard Read a mariner, to the great hinderance of hir and hir husband the said Read: for they had long inioied it by a lease, which they had of it for manie yeares, not then expired: neuertheless, he got it from them. For the which, the said Reads wife not onelie exclaimed against him, in sheading manie a salt téere, but also cursed him most bitterlie euen to his face, wishing manie a vengeance to light vpon him, and that all the world might wonder on him. Which was thought then to come to passe, when he was thus murdered, and laie in that field from midnight till the morning: and so all that daie, being the faire daie till night, all the which daie there were manie hundreds of people came wondering about him. And thus far touching this horrible and heinous murder of maister Arden. To returne then where we left.

God heareth the teares of the oppressed and taketh vengeance: note an example in Arden.

A parlement.

About this time the kings maiestie calling his high court of parlement, held the same at Westminster the three and twentith daie of Januarie, in this fift yeere of his reigne, and there continued it, vntill the fiftéenth daie of Aprill in the first yeare of his said reigne. In this parlement the booke of common praier, which in some part had béene corrected and amended, was newlie confirmed & established. ¶ In the end of this parlement, namelie the fiftéenth of Aprill the infectious sweating sickenesse began at Shrewesburie, which ended not in the north part of England vntill the end of September. In this space what number died, it cannot be well accounted: but certeine it is, that in London in few daies nine hundred and sirtie gaue vp the ghost. It began in London the ninth of Julie, and the twelfth of Julie it was most vehement: which was so terrible, that people being in best helth, were suddenlie taken, and dead in foure and twentie houres, and twelue, or lesse, for lacke of skill in guiding them in their sweat. And it is to be noted, that this mortalitie fell chéeflie or rather vpon men, and those also of the best age, as betwéen thirtie & fortie yeers. The spéedie riddance of life procured by this sicknes, did so terrifie people of all sorts, that such as could make shift, either with monie or frendship, changed their soile, and leauing places of concourse, betooke them (for the time) to abodes, though not altogither solitarie, yet lesse frequented: to conclude, manifold meanes were made for safetie of life. The first wéeke died in London eight hundred persons.

Iohn Caius.

Of this sweat died Henrie & Charles sons of Charles Brandon, the elder first, and the ponger after: so that they both died dukes of Suffolke.

The manner of this sweat was such, that if men did take anie cold outwardlie, it stroke the sweat in, and immediatlie killed them. If they were suffered to sléepe, commonlie they swouned in their sléepe and departed, or else died immediatlie vpon their waking. But the waie to escape danger was close kéeping moderatlie with some aire and a little drinke, and the same to be posset-ale, and so to kéepe them thirtie houres, & then was the danger past; but beware of sudden cold. Before men had learned the manner of kéeping, an infinit number perished. This disease at that time followed Englishmen & none other nation; for in Antwerpe and other countries, our Englishmen being there amongst diuerse other nations, onelie our Englishmen were sicke thereof, and none other persons. The consideration of which thing made this nation much afraid thereof, who for the time began to repent and giue almes, and to remember God from whom that plague might well séeme to be sent among vs. But as the disease in time ceased, so our deuotion in short time decaied.] At this time also the king with the aduise of his priuie councell, and hauing also great conference with merchants and others, perceiuing that by such coins and copper monies, as had béene coined in the time of the king his father, and now were commonlie current in the realme; and indéed a great number of them not worth halfe the value that they were current at, to the great dishonor of the kings maiestie & the realme, and to the deceit & no little hinderance of all the kings maiesties good subiects, did now purpose not onelie the abasing of the said copper monies, but also meant wholie to reduce them into bullion, to the intent to deliuer fine and good monies for them. And therefore in the moneth of Julie by his graces proclamation, he abased the péece of twelue pence, commonlie called a teston vnto nine pence, and the péece of foure pence vnto three pence. And in August next following, the péece of nine pence was abased to six pence, and the péece of three pence vnto two pence, and the pennie to an halfepennie.

Rich. Grafton.

Remedie against the danger of the sweating sickenesse.

The vndersing of the coine.

Two falles of monie.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1049. Sweating sickenesse.

On the eleuenth daie of October, there was a great creation of dukes and earles, as the lord marquesse Dorset was created duke of Suffolke, the earle of Warwike made duke of Northumberland, and the earle of Wilshire made marquesse of Winchester, & sir William Herbert maister of the horsse; he also made William Cicill his secretarie knight, maister John Chéke one of his schoolemaisters knight, maister Henrie Dudlie knight, & maister Henrie Neuill knight. The sixtéenth daie of the said moneth being fridaie, the duke of Summerset was againe apprehended, & his wife also, & committed to the tower; with him also were cómitted sir Michaell Stanhope, Creation of honorable estates.

I.S. pag. 1050.

The duke of Summerset againe apprehended, and committed to the tower.

Stanhope, sir Thomas Arundell, sir Rafe Vane, sir Piles Partrige & other for suspicion of treason and felonie, whereof they were all shortlie after indicted. And so standing indicted, the second daie of December next following, the said duke was brought out of the tower of London with the ax of the tower borne before him, with a great number of billes, gleaues, halberds & pollares attending vpon him, & so came into Westminster hall, where was made in the middle of the hall a new scaffold, where all the lords of the kings councell sate as his iudges: and there was he arreigned and charged with manie articles both of felonie and treason. And when after much mild speech he had answered not guiltie, he in all humble manner put himselfe to be tried by his péres: who after long consultation among themselues, gaue their verdict that he was not guiltie of the treason, but of the felonie. The people there present (which was a great number) hearing the lords sate not guiltie, which was to the treason, thinking most certeinlie that he was clérelie acquited; and chieflie for that immediatlie vpon the pronouncing of those words, he that caried the ax of the tower departed with the ax, they made such an outcrie and ioie, as the like hath not béene heard. Which was an euident declaration of their good willes and hartie fauors vnto him, whose life they greatlie desired to haue saued, for that he had deserued right well of most (though the good gentleman had some priuat enimies) and had béene as a man maie iustlie sate:

Solamen magnum patriæ, solamen amicis.

But neuertheless, he was condemned to the death, whereof shortlie after he tasted. The felonie that he was condemned of, was vpon the statute made the last yeare against rebelles, and vnlawfull assemblies, wherein amongst other things is one branch, that whosoeuer shall procure the death of anie councellor, that euerie such attempt or procurement shall be felonie. And by force of that statute, the duke of Summerset, being accompanied with certeine others, was charged that he purposed and attempted the death of the duke of Northumberland, the lord marquesse, the lord of Penbroke, and others of the priuie councell, which by statute was felonie.

After the duke was thus condemned, he was againe returned to the tower, and landed at the crane of the vinetræ, and so passed through London, where were both exclamations: the one cried for ioie that he was acquitted, the other cried out that he was condemned. But howsoeuer they cried, he was conueied to the tower of London, where he remained vntill the two and twentith daie of Januarie next following. The duke being condemned (as is afore said) the people spake diuerslie, and murmured against the duke of Northumberland, and against some other of the lords, for the condemnation of the said duke: and also (as the common fame went) the kings maiestie toke it not in good part. Wherefore as well to remoue fond talke out of mens mouths, as also to recreat and refresh the troubled spirits of the yong king; who (as saith Grafton) séemed to take the trouble of his vncle somewhat heauilie: it was deuised, that the feast of Christs natiuitie, commonlie called Christmasse then at hand, should be solemnlie kept at Grénwich with open household, and franke resort to court (which is called kéeping of the hall) what time of old ordinarie course there is alwaies one appointed to make sport in the court, called commonlie lord of misrule: whose office is not vnknowne to such as haue bene brought vp in noble mens houses, and among great house-keepers, which vse liberall feasting in that season. There was therfore by order of the councell, a wise gentleman & learned named George Ferrers, appointed to that office for this yeare; who being of better credit & estimation than cómonlie his predecessors had bene before, receiued all his commissions and warrants by the name of the maister of the kings pastimes. Which gentleman so well supplied his office, both in shew of sundrie sights and deuises of rare inuentions, and in act of diuerse interludes, and matters of pastime plated by persons, as not onelie satisfied the common sort, but also were verie well liked and allowed by the councell, and other of skill in the like pastimes: but best of all by the yong king himselfe, as appéered by his princelie liberalitie in rewarding that seruice.

¶ On mondaie the fourth of Januarie, the said lord of merie disports came by water to London, and landed at the tower wharffe, entred the tower, and then rode through tower street, where he was receiued by Mause lord of misrule to John Mainard one of the shiriffes of London, and so conducted through the citie with a great companie of yong lords & gentlemen to the house of sir George Barne lord maior, where he with the chéefe of his companie dined, and after had a great banket: and at his departure, the lord maior gaue him a standing cup with a couer of siluer and guilt of the value of ten pounds for a reward, and also set a hogshed of wine, and a barrell of bere at his gate, for his traine that followed him. The residue of his gentlemen & seruants dined at other aldermens houses, and with the shiriffes, and then departed to the tower wharffe againe, & so to the court by water, to the great commendation of the maior and aldermen, and highlie accepted of the king and councell.]

This Christmas being thus passed and spent with much mirth and pastime, wherewith the minds and eares of murmurers were méetlie well appeased, according to a former determination as the sequele shewed: it was thought now good to procéed to the execution of the iudgement giuen against the duke of Summerset, touching his conuiction & atteindor of the felonie before mentioned. Wherevpon, the two and twentith daie of Januarie, then next following being fridaie, he was brought out of the tower, and according to the manner, deliuered to the shiriffes of London; and so with a great companie of the gard & others with weapons, was brought to the scaffold where he should suffer, without changing either voice or countenance, other than he was accustomed to vse at other times.

The same morning earelie, the constables of euerie ward in London (according to a precept directed from the councell to the maior) strictlie charged euerie household of the same citie, not to depart anie of them out of their houses, before ten of the clocke of that daie: meaning thereby to restreine the great number of people that otherwise were like to haue bén at the said execution. Notwithstanding, by seauen of the clocke, the tower hill was couered with a great multitude, repairing from all parts of the citie, as well as out of the suburbs. And before eight of the clocke, the duke was brought to the scaffold, inclosed with the kings gard, the shiriffes officers, the warders of the tower, & other with halberds: where as he nothing changing neither voice or countenance, but in a maner with the same gesture which he commonlie vsed at home, kneeling downe vpon both his knees, and lifting vp his hands, commended himselfe vnto God. After he had ended a few short praiers, standing vp againe, and turning himselfe toward the east side of the scaffold, nothing at all abashed (as it séemed vnto those that stood by) neither with the sight of the ax, neither yet of the hangman, nor of present death, but with the like alacritie and chérefulnesse of mind and countenance as before times

1552

The duke arreigned both of treason and felonie.

Abr. Fl. ex I. Stow 1055.

The people supposing the duke to be clére, gaue a great showt for ioie.

The shiriffes lord of misrule.

The duke condemned to die for felonie.

The duke of Summerset condemned returneth to the tower.

The people murmur at the dukes condemnatiõ.

Meanes to restraine the multitude from the dukes execution.

Policie.

George Ferrers maister of the kings pastimes.

The execution of the duke of Summerset.

Iohn Fox. The dukes behauiour at his death.

times he was accustomed to heare the causes & supplications of other, & speciallie of the poore (towards whome as it were with a certeine fatherlie loue to his children he alwaies shewed himselfe most attentiue) he vttered these words to the people.

The words of the duke of Summerset at his death.

DEerelie beloued friends, I am brought hither to suffer death, albeit I neuer offended against the king, neither by word nor deed, and haue bene alwaies as faithfull and true vnto this realme, as anie man hath bene. But forsomuch as I am by law condemned to die, I do acknowledge my selfe as well as others, to be subiect therevnto. Wherefore to testifie mine obedience which I owe vnto the lawes, I am come hither to suffer death, wherevnto I willinglie offer my selfe with most hartie thanks vnto God, that hath giuen me this time of repentance, who might thorough sudden death haue taken awaie my life, that I neither should haue acknowledged him nor my selfe.

Moreouer (dearelie beloued friends) there is yet somewhat that I must put you in mind of, as touching christian religion, which so long as I was in authoritie, I alwaies diligentlie set forth, and furthered to my power. Neither do I repent me of my doings, but reioise therein, sith now the state of christian religion commeth most neere vnto the forme and order of the primitiue church. Which thing I esteeme as a great benefit giuen of God, both to you and me, most hartilie exhorting you all, that this which is most purelie set forth vnto you, you will with like thankefulnesse accept and embrace, and set out the same in your liuing: which thing if you do not, without doubt, greater mischiefe and calamitie will follow.

When he had spoken these words, suddenlie there was a great noise heard, whereupon the people were streight driuen into a great feare, few or none knowing the cause. Wherefore I thinke it good to write what I saw (saith Iohn Stow) concerning that matter. The people of a certeine hamlet which were warned to be there by seauen of the clocke to giue their attendance on the lieutenant, now came thorough the posterne, and perceiuing the duke to be alreadie on the scaffold, the formost began to run, crieng to their fellowes to follow fast after. Which suddennes of these men, being weaponed with bils and halberds, & this running caused the people which first saw them, to thinke some power had come to haue rescued the duke from execution, and therefore cried Awaie awaie. Whereupon the people ran, some one waie, some an other, manie fell into the tower ditch, and they which tarried, thought some pardon had bene brought: some said it thundered, some that the ground moued, but there was no such matter.

Great feare among the people assembled on the tower hill. Rich. Grafton. Iohn Stow.

¶ This amazement of the people is in other words recorded by Iohn Fox in the storie of this dukes troubles & death: which because they be effectuall I thinke good to interlace. When the duke had ended his speech (saith he) suddenlie there was a terrible noise heard: wherupon there came a great feare on all men. This noise was as it had bene the noise of a great storme or tempest, which to some seemed to be heard from aboue: like as if a great deale of gunpowder being inclosed in an armorie, and hauing caught fire, had violentlie broken out. But to some againe it seemed as though it had bene a great multitude of horsemen running togither, or comming vpon them; such a noise was then in the eares of all men, albeit they saw nothing. Whereby it happened, that all the people being amazed without any euident cause, and without anie violence or stroke striken, they ran awaie, some into the ditches and puddles, and some into the houses thereabout. Other some being affraid with the horrour and noise, fell downe groueling vnto the ground with their pollaxes & halberds, and most part of them cried out: Iesus saue vs, Iesus saue vs. Those which tarried still in their places, for feare knew not where they were. And * I my selfe which was there present among the rest, being also affraid in this hurlie burlie, stood still altogither amazed, looking when anie man would knocke me on the head. It happened here, as the euangelists write, it did to Christ, when the officers of the high priests & Pharisees comming with weapons to take him, being astonied ran backe, & fell to the ground.

A sudden noise & feare of the people at the death of the duke of Summerset.

* Meneliè Iohn Fox the writer of this report.

In the meane time, whilest these things were thus in doing, the people by chance spied one sir Anthonie Browne riding vnto the scaffold: which was the occasion of a new noise. For when they saw him comming, they coniectured that which was not true, but notwithstanding which they all wished for, that the king by that messenger had sent his vncle pardon: and therfore with great reioising and casting vp their caps, they cried out; Pardon, pardon is come: God saue the king. Thus this good duke, although he was destitute of all mans helpe, yet he saw before his departure, in how great loue and fauour he was with all men. And trulie I do not thinke, that in so great slaughter of dukes as hath bene in England within this few yeares, there was so manie weeping eies at one time: and not without cause. For all men did see in the decaie of this duke, the publike ruine of all England, except such as indeed perceiued nothing.] The duke in the meane time standing still, both in the same place and mind wherin he was before, shaking his cap which he held in his hand, made a signe vnto the people that they should keepe themselues quiet: which thing being done, & silence obteined, he spake to them the second time in this maner.

The like storie you shall read of Caius Marius in Valerius Maximus the second booke and fift chapter.

The great fauour of the people to the duke of Summerset.

The second speech of the duke of Summerset to the people.

DEerelie beloued friends, there is no such matter in hand, as you vainlie hope or beleeue. It seemeth thus good to almightie God, whose ordinance it is meet & necessarie that we be all obedient vnto. Wherfore I praie you all to be quiet, and without tumult: for I am euen now quiet, and let vs ioine in praier vnto the Lord, for the preseruation of our noble king, vnto whose maiestie I wish continuall health, with all felicitie and abundance & all maner of prosperous successe: wherevnto the people cried out, Amen. Moreouer, I wish vnto all his councellors the grace and fauour of God, whereby they may rule althings vprightlie with iustice, vnto whome I exhort you all in the Lord to shew your selues obedient, the which is also also verie necessarie for you, vnder the paine of condemnation, and also most profitable for the preseruation and safegard of the kings maiestie. And forsomuch as heretofore I haue had oftentimes affaires with diuers men, & that it is hard to please euerie man that hath bene offended or iniuried by me, I most humblie require and aske them forgiuenesse: but especiallie almightie God, whome thorough out all my life I haue most greuouslie offended. And vnto all other, whatsoeuer they be that haue offended me, I do with my whole heart forgiue them.

Abr. Fl. ex Io. Foxi martyrologio.

And once againe (dearelie beloued in the Lord) I require that you will keepe your selues quiet and still, least thorough your tumult you might cause me to haue some trouble, which in this case would nothing at all profit me, neither be anie pleasure vnto you. For albeit the spirit be willing and readie, the flesh is fraile and wauering, and thorough your quietnesse I shall be much more the quieter: but if that you fall vnto tumult, it will be great trouble & no gaine at all vnto you. Moreouer, I desire you to beare me witnesse, that I die here in the faith of Jesus Christ, desiring you to helpe me with your praiers, that I maie perseuere constant in the same vnto my liues end.

Doctor Cor the dukes ghostlie father.

Then he turning himselfe about kneeled downe vpon his knees, vnto whome doctor Cor, which was there present, to counsell and aduertise him, deliuered a certeine scroll into his hand, wherein was conteined a briefe confession to God. Which being read, he stood vp againe on his feet, without anie trouble of mind as it appeared, and first bad the shiriffes farewell, then the lieutenant of the tower, & certeine other that were on the scaffold, taking them all by the hands. Then he gaue the executioner monie, which done, he put off his gowne, and kneeling downe againe in the straw, vntied his shirt strings: and then the executioner comming to him, turned downe his collar round about his necke, and all other things which did let and hinder him. Then he couering his face with his owne handkerchiefe, lifting vp his eies vnto heauen, where his onelie hope remained, laid himselfe downe along, shewing no maner of trouble or feare; neither did his countenance change, but that before his eies were couered there began to appere a red colour in the middest of his cheeks.

Abr. Fl. out of Iohn Fox in the Acts and Monuments.

The godlie end of the duke of Summerset.

¶ Thus this most meeke and gentle duke lieng along and looking for the stroke, because his doublet couered his necke he was commanded to rise vp and put it off: ¶ then laieng himselfe downe againe vpon the blocke, and calling thrise vpon the name of Jesus, saieng: Lord Jesu saue me, as he was the third time repeating the same, euen as the name of Jesu was in vttering, in a moment he was bereft both of head and life; and slept in the Lord Jesus, being taken awaie from all the dangers and euils of this life, and resting now in the peace of God: in the preferment of whose truth and gospell he alwaies shewed himselfe an excellent instrument and member, and therefore hath receiued the reward of his labours. Thus gentle reader thou hast the true historie of this worthie and noble duke, and if anie man report it otherwise, let it be counted as a lie.]

This duke was in high fauour and estimation with king Henrie the eight, of whome he receiued sundrie high & great preferments, by reason that the the said king had married ladie Jane his sister, by whome he had issue king Edward the first. He was not onelie courteous, wise and gentle, being dailie attendant at the court; but forward and fortunate in seruice abroad, as may well appeare in his sundrie voiages, both into France and Scotland. He was of nature verie gentle and pitifull, not blemished by any thing so much, as by the death of the admerall his naturall brother, which could not haue bene brought to passe in that sort, without his consent. But of this good duke (to let passe multitude of words) maister Fox hath written no lesse trulie than commendablie, & no lesse commendablie than deseruedlie, and no lesse deseruedlie than profitablie in his historie, whereto I refer the reader for further knowledge. Neuertheless of this vertuous duke by waie of aplication I saie as sometime one said (verie aptlie as some thinke) of the gratious ladie *An Bullen,

Discite vos viui, quid dira calumnia possit,
Inuidia alterius vitæ comes arcta beatæ,
Et falsis linguæ commista venena susurris.

The duke of Summerset described.

*who as it is supposed and proued since (saith Sleidan) was vniustlie condemned.

The protectors of England collected out of the ancient and moderne chronicles, wherin is set downe the yeare of Christ, and of the king in which they executed that function.

The collectiō of Frācis Thin in the yeare 1585.

Vpon the death of this duke of Summerset protector of England, it shall not be vnfitting in this place to set downe all the protectors (whereof I can as yet haue intelligence) and who haue bene gouernors, regents, gardians, or deputies of the realme, and of the kings person during his minoritie and time of his insufficiencie of gouernement; or else of his absence being out of the realme: whereof I haue made an especiall title in my Pantographie of England, in which this my collection of the protectors, although perhaps I shall not set downe all (for Barnardus non videt omnia) yet it is better to haue halfe a loafe than no bread, knowledge of some than of none at all. Thus therefore I begin.

Guendoline.

Guendoline the daughter of Corineus duke of Cornewall (after the procurement of warre against hir husband wherein he was slaine) was by common consent (for that hir sonne Madrane which she had by Locrine was insufficient by reason of his minoritie to gouerne the kingdome) made by the Britons ruler of the Ile, in the yeare of the world 2894, and so continued the same by the space of fiftéene yeares, vntill hir sonne came to lawfull age.

Martia.

Martia (the widow of Guenteline the king) by reason that Sicilius hir sonne was not of age conuenient to weld the scepter (as one being but seuen yeares old) obteined the gouernement both of the realme and of hir sonnes person, which she most worthilie deserued, being a woman of rare vertue and iudgement.

Eldred.

Eldred, Ethelred, or Edred (for all these diuersities are found in authors) brother to Edmund king of England, while the sonnes of Edmund (Edwine and Edgar) were for their minorities insufficient to dispose the kingdome, was appointed protector to his nephues, in the yeare of Christ 940, who about sir or seuen yeares after his protectorship toke on him the kingdome at Kingstone on Easter daie, in the yeare of Christ, as hath Iohn Stow 946, as others haue nine hundred fortie seuen.

Emma.

Emma the quéene of England, the widow of king Ethelred, and of Canutus, both kings of England iointlie, with Godwine earle of Kent had the gouernement of the realme vnder Hardiknute king king of England, who began his reigne in the yeare of Christ 1041.

Harold. Harold the sonne of Godwine at the death of king Edward the Confessor (which fell in the yeare of Christ 1066, and the three and twentith yeare of the same king) was by the testament of the said king Edward appointed regent of the yong Edgar Atheling (named heire in the life of the said Edward) and of the kingdome, after the death of king Edward, during the minoritie of the said Edgar. Beside which the like commending of the kingdome to this Harold, in respect of the quænes honour, as that before of the successours right, is set downe by one that liued at that time, and wrote the life of king Edward, of erle Godwine, and of his children, in these words. Porrectâq; manu (meaning king Edward lieng on his death bed, and speaking in the behalfe of Editha the quæne, sister to this Harold) ad prædictum nutricium suum fratrem Haroldum; Hanc inquit cum omni regno tutandam tibi commendo, vt pro domina & sorore vt est fideli seruies & honores obsequio, vt quoad vixerit à me adepto non priuetur honore debito. Commendo pariter etiam eos, qui natiuam terram suam reliquerunt causa amoris mei, mihique hactenus fideliter sunt obsequuti: vt suscepta ab eis sic ita volunt fidelitate eos tuearis & retineas, aut tua defensione conductos cum omnibus quæ sub me acquisiuerunt cum salute ad propria transfretari facias, &c. But he, when king Edward was dead, vsurped the crowne to himselfe, and shortlie after lost both his life and his kingdome.

Odo bishop of Baieux, and William Fitzosborne earle of Hereford. Odo bishop of Baieux, and William Fitzosborne the first, being earle of Kent, and chiefe iustice of England, and the second being earle of Hereford, were gouernours of the realme, in the yeare of our Lord 1067, and the first yeare of William the Conquerour, when he went into Normandie after the conquest and indifferent quieting of the realme.

Lanfranke archbishop of Canturburie. Lanfranke archbishop of Canturburie, as appeareth by Matthew Parker, writing in this sort in the life of the said Lanfranke: Absente Gulielmo omnia Lanfranco mandabantur, qui summa prudentia cuncta moderatus, proceres & plebem in officio tranquillè sine vlla motu atque tumultu continebat, adeò vt si quæ defectionis suspicio nascebatur, ad eam illicò compescendam maximus & potentissimus quisque opem & adiumentum illi imperanti præstitit.

Sir Richard Lucie knight, chiefe iustice of England. Sir Richard Lucie knight, chiefe iustice of England was protector of the realme in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the second, being the yeare of our Lord 1166, in the absence of the king when he was in Normandie, and in the parts beyond the seas. Which Lucie in the thirteenth yeare of the same king, being the yeare of our redemption 1167, did valiantlie resist, and politikelie driue backe the earle of Bullongne inuading the realme. He built the abbeie of Leosnes or Westwood in the parish of Crith in Kent (and not in Southfleet as some haue written) in the yeare of Christ 1178, being about the foure and twentith yeare of king Henrie the second; and further built the castell of Angier in Essex, in the diocesse of the bishop of London. He had issue Godfreie bishop of Winchester, and three daughters, who after the death of Godfreie their brother were his heires: the eldest daughter of which sir Richard Lucie, was maried to Robert the first called Fitzwater: the second daughter Auelina, was maried to Riuers, of whome issued John de Riuers: the third daughter Rose, was maried to Richard Warraine, son to king John, as appeareth by a deed (belonging to my selfe, who had the rectorie of Leosnes) beginning thus: Rosa de Douer quondam vxor venerabilis viri Richardi filij regis de Chilham.

Hugh Pudsie bishop of Durham. Hugh Pusaz de Puteaco or Pudsie, nephue to king Stephan, being bishop of Durham, and erle of Northumberland, and William Longchampe bishop of Elie, had the gouernement of the realme for Richard the first, vpon his departure forth of the realme to take his iournie into the holie land. For in his absence he appointed this Hugh to haue the rule of the north parts, as chiefe iustice & warden of the realme from Humber to Scotland, deliuering to him also the keeping of the castell of Winchester, the other parts of the realme, with the custodie of the tower, he assigned to the gouernement of William Longchampe bishop of Elie, whome he made chiefe iustice and warden of those east, south and west parts, making him also his chancellour: who being a man of great diligence and knowledge in the administration of things, was yet verie factious and desirous of rule, honour and riches, farre aboue all measure. And with these two bishops hee linked in authoritie by commission Hugh lord Bardolph, William Marshall the great, earle of Chepstow Striguil or Penbroke, Geffreie Fitzpeter, and William Brewer, barons, men of great honor, wisdome & discretion. This the king did in the yeare of Christ 1190, and the first yeare of his reigne.

Walter de Constantijs archbishop of Roane. Walter de Constantijs sometime chancellor of England, bishop of Lincolne, and now archbishop of Roane, vpon the misdemeanor of the proud bishop of Elie William Longchampe, about the yeare 1192, had the custodie and gouernement of the realme committed vnto him, whilest king Richard the first remained still in the holie warres: who being called from that place in the yeare of Christ 1193 (with Eleanor mother to the king) to come to king Richard then imprisoned in Austria, the archbishop of Canturburie Hubert succeeded him in the yeare 1194, whome the said archbishop of Roane procured to be installed in the see of Canturburie, which Walter de Constantijs (as hath Eueresden) was made bishop of Lincolne in the yeare 1183, and the next yeare after bishop of Roane.

Hubert archbishop of Canturburie. Hubert Walter, or Walter Hubert (for such a transmutation of the name is vsed amongst historiographers) was made (vpon the discharge and going of Walter archbishop of Roane beyond the seas to king Richard) gouernor and protector of the realme, before the returne of Richard the first into England after the said kings imprisonment (by the duke of Austria and the emperour) procured by Sauaricus bishop of Glastenburie and Welles, & kinsman to the emperor, wherof our moderne printed chronicles nor our ancient writers, except one, make any mention. This Hubert died at his manor of Tenham, and was buried at Canturburie in the south wall, in the yeare of our redemption 1205, the third ides of Julie, being the seuenth yeare of king John.

Eleanor widow of Henrie the second. Eleanor widow to Henrie the second, and mother to Richard the first, was made protectresse of England, after the departure of hir son into France, when he had beene deliuered out of prison: in which office she continued during the life of hir sonne, which he ended in Poitiers in those French warres, by a hurt receiued from one that discharged a crossebow against him, on a fridaie as he besieged Chalons. Touching whose death (sith I am now in hand with the same) it shall not be amisse to set downe such seuerall verses composed by seuerall men in seuerall sorts, as I haue read, and are not yet made common to the world, which verses be these, concerning his death and place of buriall, as hereafter followeth:

Pictauus exta ducis sepelit, tellúsque Chalucis
Corpus dat claudi sub marmore fontis Ebraudi,
Neustria túg, tegis cor inexpugnabile regis,
Sic loca per trina se sparsit tanta ruina,
Nec fuit hoc funus cui sufficeret locus vnus.

Whereof also another composed these following verses somewhat eloquentlie, as saith Matthew Paris (and so in truth they were, considering that age which which mostlie vsed a riming kind of Latine verses, induced into the west part of the world by the barbarous Gothes) in his greater historie of the life of king Richard in manner and forme following:

Chalus quasi casus lucis.

Ad Chalus cecidit rex regni cardo Richardus,
His ferus, his humilis, his agnus, his leopardus,
Casus erat lucis, Chalus per secula nomen
Non intellectum fuerat, sed nominis omen
Non patuit, res clausa fuit, sed duce cadente
Prodijt in lucem, pro casu lucis adepta.

Besides which verses of two seuerall men, it pleaseth my pen to ad also the third mans dooing, aswell for that the number of three is the holie number, as for that there is nothing so sweet, but that varietie doth refresh it: yet especiallie sith it is delightfull to see the seuerall inuentions of manie wits, this third poet therefore, exclaming against the daie in which the said king Richard the first receiued his deaths wound (being on a fridaie) doth thus write:

O Veneris damnosa dies! ô sydus amarum!
Ille dies tua nox fuit, & Venus illa venenum,
Illa dedit læthum, sed pessimus ille dierum,
Primus ab vndecimo, quo vita victricus ipsum
Clausit vtraq; dies: homicida tyrannide mira
Transigitur, clausus excluſum, tectus opertum,
Prouidus incautum, miles inimicus inermem.

This queene Eleanor the protectresse died in the yere of Christ 1205, being the seuenth of king John.

Geffrey Fitzpeter earle of Esser.

Geffrey Fitzpeter lord Ludgersall, who was by Richard the first made chiefe iustice of England, after the remouing of Hubert the archbishop of Canturburie, and was in the first yeare of king John girded by him with the sword of the earldome of Esser, was also protector of the realme. Who being a man of great power and authoritie, was by nature gentle, by birth noble, in the lawes cunning, in reuenues great, and to all a good iusticer. This man was a bridle to king John, to restreine his insolencie; since he was confederat and alied in friendship & bloud with all the nobilitie of England: & for that cause was greatlie feared of the K. who said of him, as he did before of the archbishop Hubert, that he then did fullie reigne, when they two were dead. For turning to those which stood by him, when news was brought vnto him of the death of Fitz Geffreie, he sware by Gods feet, that he was then king & lord of England, and not before. Which words he would not vse, when the archbishop Hubert died; because this man was yet liuing, whome the king (as is alreadie said) greatlie feared. And therefore vpon the death of the archbishop, he did onelie saie that he began to reigne; but now vpon this mans departure out of the world, he said he was become a full lord & absolute king of England. This Geffreie Fitzpeter died in the yeare of our redemption 1212, being about the fourteenth yeare of the reigne of the said miserablie afflicted king John, who died in the yeare of Christ 1216: whose death I haue beene the willinger here to mention; because I would set downe his epitaph (not else before set downe in our English chronicles) as I find the same of ancient report:

Hoc in sarcophago sepelitur regis imago,
Qui moriens multum sedauit in orbe tumultum,
Et cui connexa dum vixit probra manebant,
Hunc mala post mortem tumor est ne fata sequantur.
Qui legis hæc metuens dum cernis te moriturum,
Disci to quid rerum pariat tibi meta dierum.

This Geffreie Fitzpeter maried Beatrice, daughter and heire of William lord Saie, by whom he had issue, Geffreie Mandeuile earle of Esser, & Mawd maried to Humfreie de Bohune, by whome the Bohunes became earles of Esser.

William Marshall

William Marshall surnamed the great, being erle of Penbroke, was made protector of the realme, & person of the king, after that the king (being nine yeares of age) was crowned in the yeare of our Lord 1216. Which office this William (being also marshall of England) vsed so honorablie, that he recouered a great part of the nobilitie (which toke part with Lewes son of the French king against king John father to this Henrie) to assist the yong king Henrie against the said Lewes: who in the time of the said John had obteined a great part of the kingdome of England. By which meanes the said Lewes was expelled, and the kingdome wholie reconered to the vse of the said yong king Henrie the third. earle of Penbroke.

This William Marshall maried Isabell daughter and heire to Richard Strangbow earle of Penbroke, who made him a happie father in the multitude of his children. For by hir he had fiue sonnes; all which were in succession marshals of England, and earles of Penbroke; and fiue daughters. The sonnes were William, Richard, Gilbert, Walter, and Anselme; who all dieng without issue, the inheritance was deuolued to the fiue sisters; which were, Mawd the eldest, maried to Hugh Bigod, in hir right earle marshall; Ione the second, maried to Waraine Monchensie, in hir right also earle of Penbroke, as hath Nicholas Triuet; Isabell the third, maried to Gilbert de Clare earle of Glocester; Sibill the fourth, maried to William Ferrers erle of Darbie; & Eue the fift daughter, maried to William de Berehuse, or de Braose. This William the great died in the yeare of our redemption 1219, being the third (as hath Nicholas Triuet) or the fourth (as hath Matthew Westminster) yeare of the reigne of the said king Henrie the third, and was buried at the new temple, on Ascension daie, being the seuenteenth calends of Aprill: of whome was made this epitaph by Geruasius Melckeleie, taking vpon him the person of the earle marshall:

Sum quem Saturnum sibi sentit Hibernia, Solem
Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.

Which signifieth that he was a sharpe corrector and ruler of the Irish, an honor & glorie to the English, a councellor and dispatcher of the affaires of Normandie, a warlike knight and inuincible capteine against the Frenchmen.

Peter de la Roches.

Petrus de rupibus, or Peter of the Roch, being bishop of Winchester, was after the death of William Marshall earle of Penbroke aduanced to the protectorship of the king; because that the yong king was almost destitute of anie of his owne kindred that might worthilie haue the rule of his person. For his mother queene Isabell was newlie maried to Hugh Brune earle of March in France. This bishop of Winchester (who was both a wise and a stout prelat) being now in possession of the king, and misrusking that he had entred into a more weightie office than he might well discharge, if all things were not done according to the fansie of the nobilitie, procured diuerse graue and honorable men to be preferred to the kings councell, and to be associats to him in the administration of the weale publike; and so entred into the administration of his new atchiued honor. Which yet he did not long inioie.

But as the bishop was at the first carefull to plant such of the nobilitie about the king, for the support of the realme; so yet himselfe being a Gascoine, did after in the riper yeares of the king prefer to offices about the king such Gascoins as both were of his owne bloud and kindred; and by their extraordinarie dealing procured the nobilitie with an hard and vndutifull course to oppose themselues against the king. This Peter was aduanced to the seat of Winchester, in the yeare of our redemption 1204, being about the first yeare of king John. After which he he went to Rome, and being a prelat more fit to fight than to preach, for Mars than for the muses; did returne from Rome in the yeare of Christ 1205, being about the seuenth yeare of king John. He remained bishop about two and thirtie yeares, and died at his manour house of Fernham, on the fift ides of June, in the yeare of our Lord (as haue Matthew Paris and Matthew Westminster) 1238, being the two & twentith yeare of Henrie the third. Who somewhat before his death, about the one and thirtith yeare of his bishoprike, went into the holie land with the bishop of Excester. He builded, and indued with possessions manie religious houses: amongst which he founded Titchfield in Hampshire; of which Peter de la Roches, or of the rocks, Matthew Paris maketh a more large discourse.

Hubert de Burow earle of Kent.

Hubert de Burow, constable of Douer castle, earle of Kent, and chiefe iustice of England, being of great account in the realme for his probitie and godnesse, was made protector of the king and kingdome, in the yeare of our redemption 1221, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the third. This man in the yeare of Christ 1221 (being the same yeare in the which he was made protector) maried at Yorke, Margaret, sister to Alexander king of Scots. And here I thinke it not amisse to saie somewhat touching the issue of this Hubert of Burow, who in a certeine nameless booke (caried about in the hands of all men) treating of the nobilitie (created since the inuasion of William Conqueror) is said to die without issue: which cannot possiblie be so, if that be true which I haue seene: which I am led by manie reasons to beléeue to be most true.

For I haue read of two children which this Hubert had, whereof the one being a sonne, was called Richard de Burow, who was knighted by Henrie the third (as it séemeth to me) after the death of his father: if this Richard be not the same John, of whome Matthew Paris writeth, that in the yeare of Christ 1229, Rex Anglorum Henricus, in die Pentecostes Iohannem filium Huberti Angliæ iusticiary cingulo militari donauit tertio nonas Iunij. The other child was a daughter called Margaret, maried to Richard heire to the earldome of Glocester, as noteth Iohn Beuer in these words: Richardus hæres comitis Glouerniæ Margaretam filiam Huberti de Burgo comitis Cantiæ in vxorem accepit. This Hubert of Burow was a verie old man, who after manie persecutions by the king, and after so manie chances of both fortunes, departed this world on the fourth ides of Maie, in the yeare of our redemption 1243, being the seuen and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third at his manour of Banstud, or Bansted. Whose bodie was honorablie caried to London, and there buried in the church of the frier preachers, to whom in his life he had giuen great gifts; and amongst other things, his goodlie place which stood not far from the palace of earle Richard of Cornewall (as I with some probable reasons conjecture) nére vnto Westminster, which afterward the archbishop of Yorke did procure. His wife the countesse of Kent, being likewise verie old, a woman that kept verie great hospitalitie, and that was well beloued, died in the yeare of Christ 1259, being the three and fortith yeare of Henrie the third, about sixtéene yeares after the death of the earle hir husband.

walter Greie archbishop of Yorke.

Walter Greie archbishop of Yorke was made protector of the realme in this sort. The French king hauing vniustlie giuen the earldome of Poitiers to his brother Adulphus; Hugh Brune earle of March (the greatest of the nobilitie in that prouince) would not doo homage vnto Adulphus, but wrote his letters to his son in law king Henrie the third (whose mother Eleanor he had married) that if he would come into those parts, he should haue both aid of men, and furniture of war for the perfect restoring of those dominions to the crowne of England. For which cause Henrie the third assembling his power, did with his brother Richard (then latelie returned frō Jerusalem) depart the realme in the yéere of our redemption 1242, being the six & twentith yeare of his gouernment into Poitiers, & left the administration of the kingdome to Walter Greie archbishop of Yorke, whilest he should remaine in those parts. Which office the said archbishop held also in the yéere of Christ 1243, being the seauen and twentith yéere of king Henrie the third. Of this man is more mention made in my collection of the chancellors of England; in this place onelie further setting downe, that this Walter died in the yeare of Christ 1255, being about the nine and thirtith yeare of this Henrie the third, as hath Anonymus M. S.

Eleanor wife to king Henrie.

Eleanor daughter to Reimond earle of Prouince, wife to king Henrie the third and quéene of England, with Richard earle of Cornewall the kings brother (to whose custodie was committed Edward Longshanks, being after king of England by the name of Edward the first, son to the said king Henrie) were (in the yéere of our redemption 1253, being the seuen and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third) appointed gouernors and protectors of the realme in the kings absence, whilest he went into Gascoine, whither he went to pacifie the nobilitie, and to kéepe the same in safetie from the French. And because my pen hath here fallen vpon Richard earle of Cornwall, I determine to say somewhat of him in this place, not hauing other occasion offered to me therefore. This Richard the son of king John was borne in the yeare of Christ 1208, being the tenth yeare of the reigne king John. He was made (and so called) earle of Poitiers by Henrie the third, about the ninth yéere of his reigne, in the yéere of Christ 1225, who also that yéere with his vncle William earle of Sarisburie went into Poitiers, where he was ioifullie receiued: he putteth the earle of March to flight, he recouereth that which was lost in Gascoine, he went into the holie land, refuseth the kingdome of Apulia offered vnto him, he is chosen emperor, and receiueth that honor at Colen, being there crowned king of the Romans: he subdued Alfonsus competitor with him for the empire, he after returneth into England: he is an enimie to Simon Montfort and the barons rebelling against his brother king Henrie the third; he is taken prisoner by the barons, and is afterward deliuered: he was created knight and earle of Cornwall in the yeare of our redemption 1225, as hath Matthew Westminster, but as saith William Packington, he was created earle of Cornwall in the yeare of Christ 1227. He married foure wiues, if that Elisabeth his first wife and Isabell the widow of Gilbert de Clare were not all one woman. But leauing that to further knowledge, I doo for this time make them but one person; for so in truth it must be, whatsoeuer otherwise shall be shewed in misstaking their names. Elizabeth that was his first wife, as noteth Leland, was buried in the quére of Belland, being that woman which is called Isabell, and was the daughter of William Marshall earle of Penbroke surnamed the great: and the widow of Gilbert de Clare earle of Glocester was maried to this erle of Cornwall, in the yeare of our Lord 1231 being the fiftéenth yeare of king Henrie the third.

This Isabell died in the yeare of our redemption 1240, being the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, after this manner. For she being great with child, and nére to the time of hir deliuerance, fell into Morbum ictericum, or the picket,

hicket, and deliuering a child into the world, which had life, and was baptised by the name of Nicholas, they both presentlie died thereupon. Which thing when the earle vnderstood being then on his iournie into Cornwall, he burst out in teares, and greatlie lamented that losse. Wherefore hastilie returning, and leauing his former iourneie, he honorablie buried his wife at * Welland or Beauleu, an house of religion builded by king John from the foundation, and replenished with Charterhouse monks.

*Bellam locum a religious house in Hampshire, as is by some supposed.

His second wife was Sinthia or Sanctia, daughter to Reimond earle of Prouince, and sister to the queene of England, wife to king Henrie the third, brother to the said Richard earle of Cornwall, who maried the said Sinthia in the yeare of our redemption 1243, being the seuen and twentith yeere of the reigne of king Henrie the third. Leland also appointeth to him the third wife, which was Beatrix de Famastais, whom he calleth queene of Almaine, & wife to king Richard, brother to Henrie the third. Which ladie died in the yere of our redemption 1277, being the first yeare of Edward the first, and was buried at the friers minors in Oxford. This noble Richard erle of Cornwall died in Februarie at Berkhamsted, in the yeare of Christ 1271, in the fiue and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, as saie Matthew Paris and Matthew Westminster: but Nicholas Triuet referreth his death to the yeare 1270, being the foure and fiftith yeere of Henrie the third: and the chronicle belonging to Euesham to the yeare 1272, being the six and fiftith yeare of Henrie the third. After whose death his hart was buried in the friers minors of Oxford, and his bodie committed to the earth in the monasterie of Hales (being Charterhouse monks) which he had builded at his charge of 10000 marks, which at this daie at fiue shillings the ounce of siluer amounteth to the summe of twentie thousand pounds. He had two sonnes, the one called Henrie by his first wife Isabell; the other called Edmund de Almania by his second wife Sinthia. Henrie was slaine by Simon and Guie of Montfort sonnes of the last Simon Montfort earle of Leicester, in the life of his father Richard in Italie at Viterbo, in the yere of our redemption 1270. Which fact being done in saint Sylusters church as he was at masse, occasioned the townesmen to paint the maner of his death on the wall of the church: and that picture being beheld by a certeine versifier, he was vrged thereupon to compose these following verses:

Regis Theutonici Richardi clara propago,
Sternitur Henricus, velut hæc designat imago,
Dum redit à Tripoli, regum fultus comitiua,
In crucis obsequio patitur sub gente nociua,
Irruit in templum, post missam, stirps Guenelonis
Perfodit gladius hunc Simonis atque Guidonis,
Disposuit Deus vt per eos vir tantus obiret,
Ne reuocatis his, gens Anglica tota periret,
Anno milleno Domini cum septuageno,
Atque ducено, Carolo sub rege sereno,
Vrbe Viterbina fit in eius carne ruina,
Cœli regina precor vt sit ei medicina.

His bones were brought into England, and buried in the monasterie of Hales, where his father was after also buried: but his hart was bestowed in a guilt cup, and placed beside the chaine of saint Edward the Confessor in Westminster abbeie. The other sonne to this Richard earle of Cornwall was Edmund of Almaine, who after the death of his father was inuested with the honor of the earledome of Cornwall, being borne at Berkhamsted in the yeere of our redemption 1250, being the foure and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, to whome his vncle Bonifacius bishop of Canturburie was godfather, and called him Edmund in the honor of saint Edmund archbishop of Canturburie and Confessor. This Edmund earle of Cornwall married the daughter of Richard earle of Clare, of whome shall be more spoken when we come to treat of him as protector of England.

Boniface archbishop of Canturburie.

Boniface the archbishop of Canturburie, with others which follow, were protectors of the realme after this maner, as I haue gathered. It was ordeined in the parlement at Oxford called Parlementum insanum, that the king should chose forth twelue persons of the realme, and the communaltie of the land other twelue, the which hauing regall authoritie in their hands, might as gardians of the kingdome take in charge vpon them the gouernment of the realme, & should from yeare to yeare prouide for the due election of iustices, chancellors, treasurors, and other officers, and further prouide to see to the safe keeping of the castels belonging to the crowne.

These foure and twentie persons appointed to that function, began to order all things at their owne pleasure: in the meane time not forgetting to vse things chieflie to their owne aduantage, as well in prouiding eycheats and wards for their children and kinsfolks, as also in bestowing of patronages of churches belonging to the kings gift, vnto their owne liking. So that these prouiders which should haue made carefull and beneficiall prouisions for the realme, made speedie and plentifull prouision for them and theirs, insomuch that neither king nor Christ could get anie thing from these protectors. There be that write, how that there were but twelue or thirteene chosen to be gouernors at this time (which for this present I deeme to be the truer opinion) whose names are as follow: Boniface archbishop of Canturburie, the bishop of Worcester, Roger Bigod earle of Norffolke and marshall of England, Simon de Montfort earle of Leicester, Richard de Clare earle of Glocester, Humfreie Bohune earle of Hereford, Richard Fitzalane earle of Arundell, sir John Mansell chiefe iustice of England, sir Roger lord Mortimer, sir Hugh Bigod, sir Peter de Sauoie, sir James Audleie, & sir Peter de Montfort. To these (as some saie) was authoritie onlie giuen to punish all such as trespassed in the breach of anie of the constitutions of the parlement of Oxford. Others say that they were made rulers & protectors of the realme, and to dispose thereof, because the king was much misseled in the gouernment of the kingdome by the peruerse councell of his flatterers. Which twelue gouernors I suppose did not long continue: for being euerie one priuatlie for himselfe, and so not iointlie for the common-wealth, they grew diuided, and what the one labored to set vp, the other sought to pull downe.

Boniface archbishop of Canturburie the second time.

Boniface archbishop of Canturburie, & the bishop of Worcester, with sir Philip Basset, or rather sir Hugh Bigod made chiefe iustice of England by the barons, were appointed in the yeere of our redemption 1260, being the fortie and fourth of king Henrie the third, to haue the gouernment of the realme in the absence of the king, whilest he remained in France at Paris about the affaires of Normandie: at what time a peace was made betweene the kings of England and France.

Gilbert de Clare.

Gilbert de Clare the second of that name that was earle of Glocester and Hertford, was the sonne of Richard de Clare erle of Glocester and Hertford, which died in the yeere of our redemption 1262, being the fortie & first yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, and was buried at Tewkesburie, with a great image of siluer and gilt vpon his tome, and the same sword and spurres which he did weare in his life time. Of which Richard these verses were composed for his probitie and rarenesse of vertuous maners and conditions, and set vpon his tome:

Hic pudor Hyppoliti, Paridis gena, sensus Vlyssis, Aeneæ pietas, Hectoris ira iacet.

This Gilbert (I saie) the sonne of the said Richard was after the death of Henrie the third (which happened in the yeare of our Lord 1277, & in the seuen & fiftith yeare of the reigne of the said king Henrie) in the absence of king Edward the first in the holie warres made gouernour of the realme, vntill the returne of the said king Edward into England, to which function he was appointed by king Henrie the third, lieng on his death-bed: who caused the said Gilbert to sweare to kéepe the peace of the land to the behoofe of Edward his sonne. Which he did moost faithfullie, vntill the second date of August, in the second yeare of the said king, in which the said king Edward landed in England, being in the yeare of our redemption 1274, at what time the king was honorablie interteined of the said Gilbert, and John earle of Warraine (a supporter to him in the charge of the kingdome) at the castell of Tunbridge in Kent, and Rigate in Surrie, which Gilbert with the other péers of the land, immediatlie after the death of king Henrie the third, assembling at the new temple brake the old seale of king Henrie, made a new seale in the name of king Edward, and appointed faithfull officers for the sure kéeping and obseruing of the treasure, the riches, the peace, and the lawes of the kingdoms.

This Gilbert had two wiues, his first wife was Alice the daughter of Hugh le Brune erle of March, by whom he had issue a daughter, that was countesse of Fife in Scotland: his second wife was Jone the daughter of king Edward the first, called Jone of Acres, by whome he had one sonne, called Gilbert the third, earle of Gloucester and Hertford, who married Mawd the daughter of Richard earle of Ulster in the yeare of Christ 1308 at Waltham, by whome he had issue a sonne, John borne in the yeare of Christ 1312, being in the first yeare of Edward the second, that died without issue; after the death of which Gilbert the third, his lands and earldomes of Gloucester and Hertford came to the sister of the said Gilbert the third, who was slaine in the battell of Striueling against the Scots in the seuenth (or as others haue the eight) yeare of king Edward the second, whome the Scots would gladlie haue kept for ransome if they had knowne him: but he had forgotten to put on his cote of armes to shew what he was, after which he was brought into England and was buried at Tewkesburie, vpon whose death the two earledomes of Gloucester and Hertford were so dispersed, that there was neuer anie to this daie, that iointlie succéeded or possessed them both. Thus hauing digressed from Gilbert the second, in treating of his sonne Gilbert the third, let vs againe returne to him. He besides his sonne Gilbert the third, had by his wife Jone three daughters; Elenor, first married to Hugh Spenser, second sonne to Hugh Spenser earle of Gloucester, and after his death to William Zouch; Margaret married to Piers de Gaueston earle of Cornewall, and after to Hugh Audeleie; and Elizabeth or Isabell married in the yeare of our Lord 1308, being the first yeare of Edward the second, to John the sonne of Richard earle of Ulster. This Gilbert the second, before the marriage of his second wife, was on the sixtéenth kalends of August diuorsed from Alice his first wife, in the yeare of our redemption 1271, being the six and fiftith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third; and after in Westminster church the last of Aprill married his second wife, about the eightéenth yeare of Edward the first being the yeare of Christ 1290, which Gilbert the second, being taken awaie by vntimelie death, departed this world in the yeare of our redemption 1195 (being the three and twentith of the reigne of the said Edward the first) who was in word & déed, in commandement and authoritie the greatest person of the kingdome, next to king Edward the first: for which cause he well deserued to haue his sepulture among his worthie ancestors.

Edmund erle of Cornewall.

Edmund earle of Cornewall, of whome there is somewhat spoken before, being the sonne of Richard king of Almaine, and earle of Cornewall brother to Henrie the third, married Margaret the daughter of Richard de Clare erle of Gloucester, he was made protector of the Realme by Edward the first in the fourtéenth yeare (as some saie) or in the fiftéenth, as others saie (for there is so much disagréement amongst authors for the accounts of yeares, as it passeth anie one man to reconcile them in all points) when the said king went into Aragon to reconcile the two kings of Arragon & Naples. He continued in this office in the yeare of Christ 1287, or 1228, as hath Treuet, being the sixteenth yeare of Edward the first, in which he subdued Rise ap Merdach the Welsh prince, rebelling against Edward the first, and ouerthrew the castell of Dryssillane (as hath the said Nicholas Treuet) he was lord of Wallingford, did much cost there vpon, and died without issue, as hath Matthew Westminster, in the yeare of Christ 1300: but as hath Thomas Walsingham 1301, leauing the king of England his heire. Yet are there some pedegrées and other authors, and those not the meanest, which saie that he had a daughter, Isabell married to Norice Fitz Harding lord Berkleie: so that these authors, which saie that he died without issue, are to be vnderstood of the issue male, & not of the heire generall: for they account him to die without issue, which leaueth no posteritie to continue his title of honor. The which their meaning they make more plaine, in that they saie that after his issuelesse death, the earledome came to the crowne. And here bicause there is mention made of Wallingford, I will set downe what Leland hath written touching the same, bicause I desire to make common, and to preserue all whatsoeuer monuments of Leland that come vnto my hands: thus therefore he writeth of Wallingford in his commentaries of England, written in the yeare of our redemption 1542, being the foure and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight in these words.

The towne of Wallingford hath béene a verie notable thing and well walled. The dich of the towne, and the crest whereupon the wals stand, be yet manifestlie perceiued, and begin from the castell, going in compasse a good mile and more, and so continueth to Wallingford bridge, a large thing of stone ouer the Thames. There remaine yet the names of these stréets amongst others. Thamesstréet, Fishstréet, Woodstréet, Goldsmiths row. And by the patents and donation of Edmund earle of Cornewall and lord of the honour of Wallingford, it appeareth that there were fourtéene parish churches in Wallingford: and there be men yet aliue that can shew the places and churchyards where they stood, at this time there are but three parish churches. The towne and the castell was sore defaced by the Danes warres, yet they mettlie florished in the time of Richard king of the Romans earle of Cornewall, and brother to Henrie the third, he did much cost vpon the castell which ioineth to the north gate of the towne, and hath three diches (as vpon the cressts of the same may appéare) large and déepe, about each of the two first diches (on the cressts of the ground cast out) runneth an embatteled wall now sore in ruine, and for the most part defaced. All the goodlie buildings, with the tower and dungeon, be within the third dich. There is also a collegiat chapell amongest the buildings within the third dich. Edmund earle of Cornewall son to Richard king of Romans was the first founder and indower of this college. Prince Edward the blacke (as one told me) augmented this college. There is a deane, foure priests, six clerkes, and foure choristers. The late deane before doctor London that now is, builded a faire steeple of stone at the west end of the collegiat chapell, to the making whereof he defaced (as it is said without licence) a peece of the kings lodging on the east end of the chapell. The deane hath a faire lodging of timber within the castell, and to it is ioined a place for the ministers of the chapell. Thus much Leland for Wallingford, & thus much I for Edmund earle of Cornewall and lord of Wallingford.

is

Edward prince of wales.

Edward of Carnaruan prince of Wales, sonne to Edward the first, was in the yeare of our redemption 1295, being the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the first, protector of England, in the absence of his father in Flanders, who because he was of tender yeares, had as tutors and gouernours appointed vnto him Richard bishop of Durham (Eulogium hath the bishop of London) William Pontacute, with diuerse other knights, as Reignold Greie, John Giffard, & Alane Plunket, being wise, discreet and expert soldiers.

Piers de Gauestone erle of Cornewall.

Piers or Peter de Gauestone a Gascoine borne, whome king Edward the second so tenderlie loued as that he preferred him before all men, was appointed gardian of the realme in the first yeare of the said king Edward the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1308, when the king went into France and there aboad to marrie Isabell daughter to Philip king of France, before that the said Edward was crowned king of England, as hath Radulphus Higden. Of this Piers I will here saie litle, because I haue spoken more largelie of him in my pantographie of England.

John de Drokensford.

John de Drokensford bishop of Bath and Wels, was in the yeare of our redemption 1313, being the first yeare of king Edward the second, made protector of the realme in the absence of the said king Edward the second, and his wife quéene Isabell, who went into France to solemnize the coronation of Philip (sonne to Philip king of France) who was at that instant created king of Nauarre. This Drokensford was the fourtéenth bishop of Bath & Wels. Great contention was there betwéene him and the deane and priests of that church. He succéeded in the bishoprike Walter Houelshaw. This Drokensford held the bishoprike about ninetéene yeares, he beautified the same with manie godlie buildings, procured manie priuileges vnto it, and greatlie exalted his kindred. He was buried at Welles before the high altar of saint John Baptist.

Henrie Lacie earle of Lincolne.

Henrie Lascie or Lacie earle of Lincolne, and of Salisburie, baron of Halton and of Pontfrait, corruptlie called Pomefret, and constable of Chester, was made protector of the realme in the fift yeare of Edward the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1310, whilest the king remained in the warres of Scotland. Which Henrie died shortlie after in the same yeare, and was buried in the new worke of Paules, who carried for his armes the purple lion cõtrarie to the cote his ancestors had borne before. This man had done great seruice in the warres in the time of Edward the first, he married Margaret the daughter and heire of William Longespée earle of Salisburie, and had by hir a daughter named Alice, married to Thomas Plantagenet earle of Lancaster, Leicester, and Darbie. This Henrie (as I haue learned of other and read in Leland) had issue a bastard sonne, and hauing amongst manie other lordships the manour of Granteester besides Cambridge, he gaue the same with other lands vnto that bastard, and commanded that the same Lacie so set vp in Granteester, should for himselfe and his successors euer name their sonnes and heires by the names of Henrie, which hitherto hath beene religiouslie obserued amongst them. And this was the originall of the houses of the Lacies in Granteester, as Leland learned of him which was then heire of those lands.

Gilbert de Clare earle of Glocester.

Gilbert de Clare the third earle of Glocester of that name, after the death of Henrie Lacie, was chosen gouernour of the realme (the king being still in Scotland) during the time that the king should make his abode in that countrie. Of this man se before in the discourse of his father Gilbert the second earle of Glocester and Hertford, and protector of the realme.

Edward prince of Wales.

Edward prince of Wales and duke of Aquitane, comming out of France with Isabell in the second yeare of Edward the second, his father was after his landing in England and the taking of his father made gardian of England vnder his father, which office he did not long continue: for deposing his father from the kingdome in the yeare of Christ 1326 he assumed the crowne himselfe in his fathers life.

Walter Reinolds archbishop of Canturburie.

Walter Reinolds archbishop of Canturburie was with others appointed gardian of England on this sort. Edward the third as before attaining to the crowne in the yeare of our redemption 1327, or as some others more truelie saie 1326, being fourtéene years of age did then begin his reigne. But because he was so yong (not being of power or policie to weld so great a charge) it was decréed in this first yeare of his reigne, that twelue gouernors of the greatest lords within the realme should possesse the gouernement, vntill he came to riper yeares, whose names were as insueth: Walter archbishop of Canturburie, the archbishop of Yorke, the bishop of Winchester, the bishop of Hereford, Henrie earle of Lancaster, Thomas Brotherton earle marshall, Edmund of Woodstocke earle of Kent, John earle of Warren, the lord Thomas Wake, the lord Henrie Persie, the lord Oliuer de Ingham, and the lord John Rosse, who were sworne of the kings councell and charged with the gouernement of the kingdome as they would answere for the same. But this ordinance continued not long, for in the second yeare of this king, Isabell the kings mother and the lord Roger Mortimer tooke the whole rule into their hands, in such sort that the king and his councellors were in all affaires of state, and otherwise, onelie gouerned by their direction. Of this Walter Reinolds the archbishop, because he was sometime chancellor, and sometime treasuror, is more mention made in the large volume of the liues of the chancellors.

John of Eltham earle of Cornewall.

John of Eltham earle of Cornewall sonne to Edward the second, had (in the fourth yeare of king Edward the third being the yeare of our redemption 1330) the gouernement of the realme committed vnto him, whilest king Edward the third had passed the seas onelie fiftéene horsses in his companie, apparelled in clokes like vnto merchants, which office the said John of Eltham executed vntill the returne of the said king, and before that also when the said Edward the third, in the second yeare of his reigne, did before this time go into France to do his homage. He was made earle of Cornewall in the second yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of Christ 1328, and died at Barwike, others saie at S. Johns towne in Scotland, in the moneth of October 1336, being the tenth yeare of Edward the third, and was honorablie buried at Westminster, for the solemnization of whose buriall the king came out of Scotland about the feast of the Epiphanie.

Edward the Blacke prince.

Edward the Blacke prince, eldest sonne to Edward the third, being about the age of nine yeares, was in the twelfe yeere of his father, being the yeare of our redemption 1338, or as saith Matthew Parker 1337, made gardian of England in the absence of his father being as then sailed into Flanders to procure the Flemmings to aid him against the French king. Under which prince as some write (or rather as I for the time take it) equall in commission to him it seemeth that John archbishop of Canturburie had the chefest rule of the land, because that king Edward after his returne into England, which was about the fouretéenth or the fifteenth of his reigne, charged the said bishop with certeine negligences which he vsed in collections of monie, whilest he had the chiefe rule of the land, when he was in the wars of France. Wherefore the words of Matthew Parker in the life of the said John Stratford (saieng that the king held a parlement, in which Omnem regni curam & gubernationem archiepiscopo comisit) must néeds be intended that he had that charge vnder or equallie with the said Blacke prince, as chiefest councellor to support the tender yeares of his sonne.

John Stratford.

After which also in the yeare of our redemption, as hath the same Matthew Parker 1342, being about the sixteenth of the said Edward the third, the king committed the care & gouernement of the kingdome to the said archbishop, whilest the king was beyond the seas in the warres: for thus writeth the said Parker, fol. 257. Ac paulo post nulla purgatione indicta (speaking of the said bishop vniustlie accused to the king) aut recepta, omnibus pene parlamenti ordinibus pro archiepiscopo deprecantibus, rex eum sua sponte legitime purgatum & excusatum pronuntiauit, eumque multo magis charum quàm ante habuit, omnibúsque gerendis in Anglia rebus se in militia absente præfecit. Of which archbishop being sometime chancellor and treasurer of England shall be set downe a more large discourse in my large booke of the liues of the chancellors.

Lionell duke of Clarence.

Lionell third sonne to Edward the third, was in the ninth yere of the reigne of the said king Edward the third, being the yeare in which the word became flesh 1345, made gardian of England, in the absence of his father, who as then was sailed into the parts (beyond the seas) of Flanders. Of this man there is more spoken in my following treatise of the dukes of England.

Henrie lord Persie.

Henrie lord Persie, & Rafe lord Neuill, when Edward the third was sailed into Normandie, were in the twentith yere of the reigne of the said Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1346, appointed to be gardians of the realme in his absence with the archbishop of Yorke, the bishop of Lincolne, and Thomas Hatfield bishop of Durham.

Thomas of Woodstocke.

Thomas of Woodstocke being verie yong was made custos or gardian of England, in the yere that God tooke on him the forme of a seruant 1359, being the three & thirtith of the reigne of the said king Edward the third, when he sailed into France with a 1100 ships. Of this man is more spoken in my discourse of the dukes of England, set downe in the time of quéene Elizabeth: and in my treatise of the constables of England, set downe in the time of Henrie the eight pag. 867.

John of Gant duke of Lancaster.

John of Gant duke of Lancaster, fourth sonne of Edward the third, because the king his father was féeble and sicklie (being now about three score & fiue yeares of age, though Bodinus in his Methodo historiæ saie that he died in his climacticall yeare of three score and three: for the truth is, that the said Edward the third was fourtéene yeares old when he began to reigne, and he reigned about one and fiftie yeares, which make of his age three score and fiue yeares) but especiallie for the sorrow which the king inwardlie conceiued for the death of that worthie prince his son, commonlie surnamed the Blacke prince. This John of Gaunt (after the death of the said Blacke prince, which died in the yeare of Christ 1376, being the fiftith yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, whose death was déemed to be hastned by the said John of Gaunt aspiring to the crowne, the plat whereof though it toke not effect in the life of the said John, yet it was performed in his sonne Henrie of Bullingbroke. who deposed Richard the second) was appointed by his father Edward the third to haue the rule of the realme vnder him, the which he continued during his fathers life, which was not a full yeare after that he had made the said John of Gaunt gouernour of England. After which death of king Edward the third, when Richard the second, a child of eleuen yeares of age began his reigne, in the yeare of our redemption 1377, in the first yeare of the said Richard the second, after his coronation, the said John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, & Edmund of Langlete earle of Cambridge brother to the said John of Gaunt, were appointed to haue the gouernement of the kings person, and the administration of the common-wealth. But shortlie after, in the same yere of the king, in the yeare of our redemption 1378, the said John of Gaunt gaue vp the same office. Of this man is more said in my treatise of the dukes of England.

William Courtneie bishop of London.

William Courtneie bishop of London (but shortlie after his protectorship aduanced vnto the sée of Canturburie, in the yeare of Christ 1381, about the ninth of Januarie, being about the fourth of Richard the second, was made gouernor of the realme in this maner. After (as is before said) that the duke of Lancaster had wiselie weied the fickle estate of the realme, and considered that by the euill gouernment of the nobilitie, and inconstant mind of the yong king, there must néeds fall a change of the estate, & doubting that if any thing succéeded otherwise than the nobles liked, the cause and negligence might be imputed to him, as one who chéeflie had the gouernment in his hands (and thanks howsoeuer the state was ruled he loked for none) did in the end after a few months authoritie (wholie misliking the maners of the court, which commonlie are not of the best in the minoritie of princes) surrender his protectorship, and obteined licence of the king to depart, and so got him quietlie to his castell of Kenelworth, permitting others to haue the whole swaie of the kingdome.

Notwithstanding all which, in the second yeare of Richard the second, about the yeare of Christ 1379 being not altogither careleste of the kings well doing; this duke before his departing to Kenelworth, caused certeine graue persons with his full consent, to be ordeined, which should haue the gouernement of the kings person, and administration of the common-wealth. The names of whome were, William Courtnete before mentioned, Edmund Mortimer earle of March, Rafe Ergume bishop of Salisburie, and William lord Latimer, with others, of whome for the most part the people had conceiued a good opinion: yet because the said bishop of Salisburie, and the lord Latimer were associat to the rest, and of equall authoritie with them, the commons murmured greatlie against them. The cause for which they so misliked the lord Latimer, was for that he had sometimes bin too much fauouring to dame Alice Piers, concubine to king Edward the third, to whome the said lord Latimer was chiefe chamberleine, & therefore was of him best beloued, which two persons, the lord Latimer, and dame Alice, were by parlement in the fiftith yeare of Edward the third remoued from the king, for that they miscounselled him, but especiallie sith much mischiefe grew in the realme by the same Alice Piers. For she being now exalted in pride by ouermuch loue of K. Edward the third, would beyond the modestie and maner of women, sit in iudgement with the kings iustices, be with the doctors in the consistorie, turne sentences to what side she would, and require manie things dishonest in themselues, and dishonourable to the king. Of which woman, an old written chronicle belonging to the house of Euesham, hath deliuered to me these words: Alicia Piers regis concubina supra modum mulierum nimis & supergressa, sui etiam sexus & fragilitatis fœmineæ immemor, nunc iuxta iusticiarios regios nunc in foro ecclesiastico iuxta doctores sedendo, & pro defensione causarum suadere, & etiam contra iura postulare minimè verebatur, vnde propter scandalum petierunt ab illo (which was the king) penitùs amoueri in parlemento tento anno Domini 1376 & 50 Ed. 3. Thus that author.

in

And here before I go anie further with my protectors, bicause some curious heads that find not all these matters in the records of the tower, which they dailie turne with a churlish hand, or else thinke that nothing maie be knowne out of the walles of their office, will seeme to seeke a knot in a rush, and saie that I in compasse of some few lines haue written a contrarietie, in saieng that John of Gaunt thirsted after the kingdome, and for that cause hastened the death of his elder brother prince Edward the blacke as Richard the third did the death of his brother George duke of Clarence, which intent could not possiblie be in John of Gaunt, as appeareth by my owne following words: where I saie that he gaue ouer the protectorship of his nephue, bicause he would auoid all suspicion of euill gouernement: which hee would neuer haue done if he had so ment, that place being so apt for the execution of his purpose, and might giue occasion to him that neuer ment anie such matter before, to attempt it being in that place, as Richard duke of Yorke did attempt, but not performe it, in the time of Henrie the first; and as Richard duke of Glocester, being in the same office of protectorship, did not onelie attempt it, but brought to perfection. Whereunto I answer, that all this is no contrarietie, but onelie a manifest shew and confirmation, the one part of my words to the other. For sith he could not in the life of his father Edward the third before the crowning of king Richard the second (as Richard the third did) atteine the crowne, he would not now attempt it (the king being once crowned, and in full possession of the kingdome) so rashlie and vnaduisedlie (as did Richard duke of Yorke against Henrie, for which he was in the end slaine) least that thereby his part might seeme to carie the face of a rebellion, as in truth it should haue done. For whatsoeuer either for colour of God, benefit to their countrie, or for whatsoeuer cause, lift vp the sword against a crowned king, sitting at the sterne of gouernement, being one of the gods of the earth, the same must needs tend vnto a rebellion, which John of Gaunt would not seeme to execute, & for that cause leauing off his purpose at that time, he did in the end also leaue the whole matter to his son to performe, especiallie sith he afterward perceiued Richard the second so much to fauor and further him with monie, munition, and men, to recouer the kingdome of Castile & Arragon in Spaine, in the right of the wife of the said John of Gaunt. To whom and to his wife (as hath Henrie Knighton) king Richard the second gaue a seuerall crowne of gold to honour them withall, & to shew how intierlie he loued them when they both went into Spaine. And for these causes the said John of Gaunt refused the opportunitie of time & place in the king his nephues minoritie to execute it. But did he cease it so? No. For that sparke although it were a litle cooled, was not vtterlie quenched, bicause he hastened the same in his son, whom he not onelie persuaded, but furthered (after the banishment of his said sonne Henrie of Bullingbroke by Richard the second in the life of the said John of Gaunt) to returne into England, and after his death to chalenge by sword the earldome of Lancaster his right inheritance, and vnder the same to reuenge the death of the duke of Glocester and others: and by that means, when Richard the second was out of the realme of England in Ireland, the said Henrie Bullingbroke sonne of John of Gaunt entered the realme, put downe the king, and got the crowne which his father sought. Thus this much digressing from the protectors, and to returne to that course which I haue in hand, I will leaue the discourse of policies to obteine kingdoms, bicause they be no balles for me to bandie, and follow on my former intent as meeter for my simplicitie.

Thomas Beauchampe earle of Warwike was in the third yeare of Richard the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1380, made protector in this sort. In the parlement holden the same yeare, at the speciall suite of the lords, and of the commons, the bishops and barons chosen (as you haue heard) before by John of Gaunt to be protectors of the realme, were remoued, and the earle of Warwike especiallie elected to that function, to remaine continuallie with the king as cheefe gouernor of his roiall person; & one that should giue answer to all forreners repairing thither, vpon what cause soeuer their comming were; hauing further as ample gouernment of the kingdome giuen vnto him, as the other remoued gouernors had. Being placed in that office by the duke of Lancaster, he died the first ides of Aprill, in the yeare of Christ 1401, being the third yeare of Henrie the fourth. He maried Margaret, the daughter of William lord Ferrers of Grobie; by whome he had issue, Richard earle of Warwike.

Thomas Beauchamps earle of Warwike.

Thomas Fitzalane otherwise called Arundell bishop of Elie, the two and twentith that inioied that seat, being two and twentie yeares of age, and the son of Richard Fitzalane earle of Arundell & Warren, was with others made protector of England in this sort. At a parlement holden at London in the tenth yeare of Richard the second, being the yeare of Christ 1386, were certeine gouernors of the kingdome elected, because the treasure of the realme had beene imbesiled & lewdlie wasted, nothing to the profit of the king and kingdome, by the couetous and euill gouernment of the deposed officers, which were Michaell de la Pole earle of Suffolke lord chancellor, John Fordham bishop of Durham lord treasurer, & diuerse other persons that ruled about the king.

Thomas Arundell bishop of Elie.

Now the gouernors elected by this parlement were in number thirteene; and by name Thomas Arundell bishop of Elie, then made lord chancellor; John Gilbert bishop of Hereford made lord treasurer; and Nicholas abbat of Waltham at that time made keeper of the priuie seale; William Courtneie archbishop of Canturburie, Alexander Neuill archbishop of Yorke, Edmund Langleie duke of Yorke, Thomas of Woodstocke duke of Glocester, William bishop of Winchester, Thomas bishop of Ercester, Richard Fitzalane erle of Arundell, John lord Deuereux, and Reinold lord Cobham of Starborow. These were thus by parlement chosen to haue vnder the king the whole ouersight and gouernment of the realme, as by their commission in the statutes of the tenth yeare of the said Richard the second it doth in the printed booke appeare.

Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke.

Edmund Langleie duke of Yorke, vncle vnto Richard the second, was in the eightenth yeare of the said Richard, being about the yeare of our redemption 1395, ordeined lord gardian of England, in the kings absence in the realme of Ireland. This protector caused a parlement to be assembled at Westminster: where he dealt so effectuallie, notwithstanding the vntowardnesse of the burgesses, that a tenth was granted by the cleargie, and a fiftéenth by the temporaltie; but not without protestation, that those paiments were granted of a méere fréewill, for the loue they bare to the king, and to haue the affaires in Ireland to succéed the better. After this, about foure yeares; king Richard the second in the two and twentith yeare of his reigne, in the yeare of Christ 1399, making another viage into Ireland (being the last and most vnhappie that euer was to him, for before his returne he had in effect lost his realme, which after his comming he lost in déed) did againe in his absence substitute this Edmund duke of Yorke as chéefe gouernor of England. Who in the absence of the king, assembled a power of men against Henrie of Bullingbroke, now entered into the land to challenge the dukedome of Lancaster after the death of his father John of Gaunt, and vnder that colour to vsurpe the crowne. Which Edmund passing into Wales in the three and twentith yeare of Richard the second, was receiued into the castell of Barkleie, & there remained vntill the comming of Henrie of Bullingbroke. Whom when he perceiued (for the power which the said duke of Lancaster had assembled from all parts of the realme) that he was not of sufficiencie to resist; he came forth into the church that stood without the castell, and there fell to parlée with the duke of Lancaster; after which he did neuer forsake the duke of Lancaster, vntill he came to the crowne. Who, if he had faithfullie stood vnto his nephue, might perhaps haue saued vnto him both his crowne and life. Of this man is more said in my treatise of the dukes of England.

Ione de Namures widow to Henrie the fourth.

Ione de Namures sometime dutches of Britaine, (widow to Philip Pontfort, as saith Hypodigma; but Walsingham in his historie calleth him John duke of Britaine; being also the widow of king Henrie the fourth) was substitute gouernor of the realme by hir son in law king Henrie the fift, king of England, in the third yeare of his reigne, being the yeare from the birth of the Messias 1415, when the said Henrie the fift toke his iournie into France to conquer the same. This woman in the seuenth yeare of Henrie the fift, which was in the yeare of Christ 1419, being suspected (as saith Iohn Stow) to practise witchcraft against the king, was committed to the custodie of John Wellam, or rather John Pelham, who appointed nine seruants to attend vpon hir, and brought hir to Peuenseie castell to be gouerned vnder his prouidence. But shortlie after cléering hir selfe, she was deliuered. This ladie died at Hauering at the bowre in Esser the ninth of Julie in the seuentéenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie and seuen, and was buried at Canturburie with hir husband king Henrie the fourth.

John de Plantagenet duke of Bedford.

John duke of Bedford son to Henrie the fourth, & brother to K. Henrie the fift, was in the fourth yeare of the reigne of the said Henrie, being the yeare of our redemption 1416, by parlement appointed regent of the realme, to inioie the same office so long as the king was imploied in the French wars. Which place he possessed accordinglie; and in the ninth yeare of the victorious prince, king Henrie the fift, being gardian of England, he, with Henrie Beauford bishop of Winchester vncle to Henrie the fift, and Jaqueline duches of Holland remaining then in England, were godfathers, and godmother to Henrie, after king by the name of Henrie the first, the son of Henrie the fift; Henrie Chichleie archbishop of Canturburie baptising the child. In the tenth and last yeare of Henrie the fift, this John with a strong power conueied quéene Katharine wife to Henrie the fift, from Southampton into France. This man being duke of Bedford, earle of Richmond and of Kendall, constable of England, and warden of the marches of Scotland, died the fourtéenth date of September at Rone in Normandie, who (hauing also béene regent of France, a most valiant gentleman, and one that kept the parts beyond the seas in great obedience to the crowne of England) had for his yearelie pension 20000 crownes at the least. After whose death all things went backeward, and the English lost all that they had beyond the seas, Calis, & those dominions onlie excepted.

This man (I saie) died in the yeare of our redemption 1435, being the thirtéenth yeare of the vnfortunat gouernment of the deposed king Henrie the first, and was honorablie buried at Rone in our ladie church there. Touching whome it shall not gréeue me to set downe the answer of a French king latelie in our age made to one of his nobilitie; saieng vnto the king (then being in the said ladie church of Rone, and beholding the towme of this John of Bedford) that it were conuenient that the same towme were defaced and pulled downe; since he was the onelie man that wrought the greatest damage that euer happened vnto France. To whom the king said; Hold thy peace fole, God forbid that euer we should doo such reproch to him being dead; whome the proudest of our nation durst not looke in the face when he was liuing. This duke John maried the second yeare of Henrie the first, in the yeare of Christ 1423, Anne the daughter of John duke of Burgognie, who died in the tenth yeare of Henrie the first, in the yeare of Christ 1433, after which he maried Jaques daughter to Peter earle of S. Paule in the same yeare, and yet died without issue. Of this man is mention made in my former discourse of the constables of England; pag. 868.

Humfreie duke of Glocester.

Humfreie duke of Glocester brother to Henrie the fift, and vncle to Henrie the first, was in the tenth and last yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our Lord 1422, made regent of England, vpon the remouing and departure of John duke of Bedford with quéene Katharine, wife to Henrie the fift into France. In which yeare (happening the lamentable death of that worthie prince king Henrie the fift) the said Henrie vpon his death-bed appointed this Humfreie to be protector of the realme; which he did exercise in the time of the minoritie of Henrie the first, from the time of his first enterance into the kingdome. Who at that time taking vpon him that function, called vnto him graue and wise councellors; with whose support he might with better honor to the realme, and benefit to the subiects, rule the ship of this kingdome, sailing in the dangerous waues of the kings infancie. By which meanes holding the sterne thereof, directed by the course of iustice, he did most honorablie during his life discharge the dutie of so weightie an office. Who in the fourtéenth yeare of Henrie the first, being the yeare of our Lord 1439, did with fiue hundred saile land at Calis, and for eleuen daies spoiled the low countries and so by Calis returned againe into England. This man in the fiue & twentith yeare of king Henrie first, being the yeare of Christ 1447, was in his castell of Ales in Wilshire, & comming from thence to the parlement was lodged in the hospitall, and arrested by John lord Beaumont high constable of England. But on the foure and twentith daie of Februarie he died for sorrow as some said, and as Iohn Stow hath noted, bicause he might not come to his answer. Other write that he was murdered in the night by the quéens procurement, to the great griefe of the commons, and in time following to the vtter destruction of the king and the quéene. He was duke of Gloucester, and also in the right of his wife duke of Holland and Zeland, earle of Penbroke, lord chamberleine of England, and protector of the realme, being highlie estéemed of learned men, himselfe also not meanlie furnished with knowledge, hauing rare skill in astrologie, wherof beside manie other things he compiled a singular treatise, obteining the name of Tabula directionum, touching whose death I haue read these verses following in Iohn Whethamsted:

to

Aemula sors variis signanter honoribus altis
Causauit miserè mala multos flere ruinæ,
Læsus erat Iulius, vndis mersus Ptolomeus,
Pulsus Tarquinius, exul factúsque Tydeus,
Dux nimis properè iam dictus tempora vitæ
Compleuit tristis, heu indignatio regis
Causa fuit magna, maior detractio falsa,
Plebis & iunctæ fallacis & insidiosæ,
Nam regis patruus, quamuis & proximus hæres,
Tunc fueratque suus consultor in ordine primus,
Vir prudénsque pius, vir doctus & ingeniosus,
Non tamen erubuit, nec pertimuit, ve pepercit
Hunc accusare falsè de proditione,
Discere quódque suam clàm vellet tollere vitam
Et sibi surripere violenter iura coronæ.
Diuitis argentum, proprium qui captat in vsum,
Desiderat medium quo vindicet aptius ipsum,
Sic regem plures comitantes collaterales
Sectantur prædam, mediat fraus, dat dolus ipsam,
Fidior in regno regi duce non fuit isto,
Plusque fide stabilis aut maior amator honoris,
Et tamen vt prædo voto potiretur iniquo,
Fraudem consuluit, cum fraude dolum sociauit,
Sicque ducem falsi maculans cum proditione
Obtinuit votum, prædator erátque bonorum
Illius, & tristis obyt dux criminis expers.

Which duke Humfrie was buried at saint Albons, dieng without issue, after he had married two wiues; whereof the first wife was Jacoba or Jaqueline (daughter and sole heire of William of Bauier) being then the lawfull wife to John duke of Brabant then liuing, which wife this Humfrie married in England in the yeere of our redemption 1424 being the third yeere of king Henrie the first, vpon which grew great warres, and Humfrie duke of Gloucester challenged the combat of the duke of Burgognie, taking part with his cousine John duke of Brabant. But in the end the duke of Gloucester left his wife at Mons & returned into England, and she vnto Gaunt, and so into Holland, & the combat staid by means of the duke of Bedford brother to the duke of Gloucester. But after (as it seemeth) the duke of Gloucester was diuorsed from this dutchesse, and then married Eleanor Cobham (whome he had tenderlie loued as his paramour before that) in the yeere of our redemption 1428, being the first yeere of the reigne of king Henrie the first. This woman in the nineteenth yeere of the said Henrie the first (vpon the taking of Henrie Bullingbrook for practising necromancie, thereby to consume the king) fled in the night to Westminster for sanctuarie, which caused hir to be suspected of treason. Whereupon Bullingbrook confessing that he wrought the same at the procurement of the said Eleanor, desirous to know to what estate she should come vnto, the said dame Eleanor did oftentimes for the same cast appeare before the bishop, and in the end was conuicted. After which in the twentith of Henrie the first she did grieuous penance therefore, and so escaped with hir life. And here because I haue said somewhat of Jaqueline dutchesse of Holland, I thinke it not amisse to adde a little more of hir, being a woman of great beautie, and desire of change in performing the plesures of the flesh: wherefore I will set downe what I haue seene written vnder the pictures of hir and hir husband Francis in this sort.

The subscription vnder the pictures of the ladie Iaqueline, and of Francis hir husband.

Iacoba Dei gratia comitissa Hannoniæ, Hollandiæ, & Zelandiæ, domina Frisiæ, Zutbeuerlandiæ, terræ Brilensis, Vorensis, &c: Gulielmi Bauarien sis ducis filia & hæres vnica, quæ primò desponsata fuit Philippo Burgundiorum duci: postea Delphino Francorum regis filio: tertiò Iohanni duci Brabantiæ Antony filio: deinde Humfrido Glocestriæ duci Henrici quarti Angliæ regis filio: & postremò Franconi Bursalien si comiti Osteruandiæ matrimonio copulatur. Quæ obyt absque liberis 8 Idus Octobris, anno Domini 1463 sepulta apud Hagam comitis in Hollandia.

Beside which was this written in Dutch:
Vrowen Iacoba van Byeren Grauenne van Hollant starse Anno Domini 1463.

The subscription vnder the picture *of hir husband Francone or Fran*cis was in this sort.

Franciscus Dei gratia comes de Osteruant (erfginocht) in comitatibus Hollandiæ, Hannoniæ, Zelandiæ, & Frisiæ landiæ, dominus de Boursalia de Vyorne, Zuylen, Hochstraten, Kortkene, de la Veer, Flisshing, Zandenburge, terræ Brilensis, Sentmartinsdike, quo loco fundauit cœnobium canonicorum, &c: & regi Edwardo quarto fideliter assistebat, necnon equestris ordinis diui Antonij.

Beside which also was this written in the Dutch tong. Here vranck van Boselen graue van Osteruant starse Anno Domini 1470.

Thomas Beaufort duke of Exceter.

Thomas Beaufort duke of Exceter (appointed to that office by Henrie the fift on his death-bed) was with Henrie Beaufort bishop of Wincester great vncle to king Henrie the first in the yeere of our redemption 1422, being the first yeere of the reigne of king Henrie the first (then but nine months old) made protector and gardian of the person of the yong king, to see him tenderlie and carefullie brought vp and instructed in all such parts as were to be required in the person of a monarch. Which office he left about the fourth yeere of king Henrie the first, and died on Newyeeres daie at his manor of Grenwich in the said fift yeere of Henrie the first, being the yeere of our redemption 1446: he married Margaret the daughter of Thomas Neuill of Horneshie.

Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike.

Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike son of the former Thomas Beauchampe, being beyond the seas, and there deputie for John duke of Bedford (being regent of France) did (whilest the said regent was come ouer into England) obteine manie castels in his deputieship; who being thus imploied in the forren warres, was in his absence out of his countrie (for his singular wisdome and valor) ordeined by the three estates of the realme of England in open parlement, to be gouernor of the person of the yong king Henrie the first, in the place of Thomas Beaufort duke of Exceter latelie deceased: which Richard did not yet forthwith hasten his returne into England, but remained in France for a season, inlarging inlarging the fame of his martiall exploits. This his election to the protectorship of the kings person, was in the fift yére of Henrie the first, being the yére of our redemption 1426. He died in the yere of our Lord 1439, being the seuentéenth yére of the deposed king Henrie the first, at Rone in Normandie the last daie of Maie, as hath Iohn Stow; and the fourth of October next following his corps was honorablie conueied, as well by land as by water from Rone to Warwike, and there honorablie buried in the college of our ladie church founded by his noble ancestors. He maried two wiues, the first Elisabeth daughter and heire of Thomas lord Barkleie, by whome he had three daughters, Margaret maried to John lord Talbot earle of Shrewesburie, Eleanor maried to Thomas lord Rosse, and Elisabeth maried to George Neuill lord Latimer. His second wife was Isabell the daughter and heire of Richard lord Spenser, by whome he had issue Henrie duke of Warwike, and Anne married to Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke, sonne to Richard earle of Cambrige, and father to Edward the fourth king of England, notwithstanding that he made challenge to the crowne against Henrie the first, then in possession thereof, as heire to the house of Yorke, and was to be preferred before the house of Lancaster; and notwithstanding that he was by parlement appointed to weare the crowne after the death of Henrie the first: yet after all this, in the three and thirtith yere of the same king, being the yere of our redemption 1455 (such was the imperfection of the king to gouerne) he was appointed protector of the realme, ruling the same at his owne disposition. Which office he did not long inioie, and that most worthilie: for the next yére after being the foure and thirtith of king Henrie the first, and the yere of our redemption 1456, he was depriued from the same, and quéene Margaret wife to Henrie the first toke againe the absolute regiment into hir hands: which duke after in the nine and thirtith of king Henrie the first, being the yére of our redemption 1460, the thirtith daie of December, being lord of Wakefield, was there with his sonne the earle of Rutland slaine at the battell commonlie called the battell of Wakefield; of which I haue read these verses in Whethamsted once abbat of saint Albons:

This was done 1461, counting the yeare to begin at Christmas as some doo, or at Januarie as others doo.

Anno milleno centum quater quoque seno,
Terdenóque die, duodeno mense Decembre,
Infra Eboracensem iuxta Wakefield comitatum
Dux dominus villæ fertur pugnans habuisse
Conflictum grandem contra gentem borealem,
Ac proceres plures præerant quæ gentibus ipsis,
Quod docuit, quia sors quod res fortuna secundas,
Vitat habere moras, cecidit dux natus & eius,
Ac comes insignis sors belli, sors fuit ipsis
Obuia, sicque fatis regni fuerat breuis hæres
Omen & id lætum tulerat mutamine mœstum
Deflendum multis, ius regni, ius fuit eius.

He maried Cicilie daughter to Rafe Neuill first earle of Westmerland, by whome he had issue Edward duke of Yorke, earle of March, and after king of England by the name of Edward the fourth: George Plantagenet duke of Clarence, Richard Plantagenet duke of Glocester, after king of England by the name of Richard the third: three daughters, Anne maried to Henrie Holland duke of Excester, Elisabeth married to John de la Pole duke of Suffolke, and Margaret maried to Charles duke of Burgognie.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence, and constable of England, sonne of the foresaid duke of Yorke, and brother to king Edward the fourth, with Richard Neuill earle of Warwike (who set vp and pulled downe kings at his pleasure) were after the flight of Edward the fourth out of England into Burgognie to his brother in law (in the tenth yeare of the reigne of the said king Edward, being the yeare of our redemption 1470, when Henrie the first had by their means readepted the kingdome) made gouernors of the land, which office they inioied not long. For the said Edward the fourth returning into England, in the eleuenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1471, reconciled to him the duke of Clarence, did againe put downe king Henrie the first, and slue the said earle of Warwike (flieng awaie) at Barnet field (on Easter day) by one of the men of his campe. After this, on the fiftéenth daie of Januarie began a parlement, in the eightéenth yere of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1478, where this duke of Clarence was atteinted of treason, and the eleuenth of March following he ended his life in a but of malmesele, and was buried at Tewkesburie beside his wife, who being with child died by poison a little before him. Of this man sée more in my discourse of the constables of England pag. 869.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Glocester.

Richard Plantagenet third sonne to Richard duke of Yorke, was constable of England and gouernour of the person of the king, of whome is more spoken in my discourse of the constables of England pag. 869. But here mentioning the constables of England, I thinke it better now than not at all, to mention also some imperfection and default in my former discourse of the said constables, set downe by me before in pag. 865. Which default of mine in that place grew by reason of ouermuch hast, which I vsed in sudden séeking for the same, whereby (according to the old prouerbe) I brought forth a blind whelpe. For in the former description I haue omitted diuerse the which were constables of England, the names of which were Henrie the first in the life of his father, Nigellus, and Robert de Oilie, with others of that line in descent, which Nigellus I can not as yet learne to be anie other but Nigellus de Oilie, brother to Robert de Oilie that came in with the Conqueror, who gaue Oxfordshire vnto the said Robert.

A digression concerning the constables of England not mentioned before in pag. 865.

Nigellus de Oilie constable of England.

Besides which, if it shall séeme to anie that I haue in my former treatise rashlie written I know not what, & that here I make Henrie the first constable in his father the Conquerors time, & by contrarietie thereunto did before make Walter constable also in the Conquerors and William Rufus his time: let them know that there is no contrarietie herein. For Walter might first be constable, & then Henrie the first, and both they in the Conquerors time, this office being taken from the first, and given to the latter by the Conqueror. After whose death William Rufus might take it from his brother Henrie, bicause he would not make him too great in England, for doubt least he might thereby put the crowne in hazard, being fauoured of the people as one borne in England, and for that cause might restore that office to Walter. Againe it maie be, that some men reading that I haue before set downe, that Mawd the empresse gaue the constablership to Milo the son of Walter in the first of king Stephan, and that king Stephan toke that office from Milo in the first yere of his reigne, and gaue it to Walter Beauchampe, will condemne me therefore of like vnaduised writing: bicause it seemeth thereby that Stephan toke it from Milo before that Milo had it. Which is not so, for I can proue with some reason and authoritie, that Milo had it a little before the death of king Henrie the first, and also after his death in part of the first yeare of king Stephan, being witnesse to a deed by king Stephan, made and dated the first of his reigne, to which he subscribed his name Milo Constabularius, After which, king Stephan might in that yeare take that office from him, and so he did. Which Mawd the empresse vnderstanding, and finding Milo (now fallen from king Stephan) one which assisted hir, she the better to confront Stephan, gaue the constableship to Milo (accounting hir selfe as quéene) in the first of Stephan.

to

This being thus spoken in defense of that which before I haue written pag. 866. let vs go to our other matter concerning the constables not mentioned before in the said discourse, wherein I find my selfe in a maruellous laberinth (out of which I doubt that the best antiquaries cannot lose themselues, no not he which thinketh and saith that he can controll all men, for I suppose he will be lame in this matter) how all these could be constables, vnlesse that in the time of Henrie the first, and of king Stephan, as it is most likelie, there was chopping & changing, putting in and taking out, setting vp and pulling downe one man in diuerse yeares of one and the selfe same king: for king Stephan was sometime a king, and sometime as no king, and then againe a king. And so likewise was it with Mawd the empresse at the same time, bearing hir selfe sometime as quéene, and then deiected as no quéene. But be it as it will be, I will here set downe what I find in ancient charters and pedegrées touching the constables of England not before mentioned, leauing the same to others (either to order for succession of time, or to amend for truth of matter) who peraduenture reading these things, which I haue séene and will here set downe, can bestow them in better order than I can, which I earnestlie praie them to do, whereby truth maie be brought to light and perfection; which as yet touching these constables set downe in this place, séemeth to be obscured and confused vntill the time that Roger Fitz Miles had that office: for from his time the same is without all controuersie sufficientlie knowne. Wherefore, here before I enter into the descent of the de Dilies, who were constables of England, I will set downe a strange note of three persons witnesses to a déed, dated Primo Stephani, anno Dom. 1136, who do all subscribe their names as constables. Which charter being the same wherein king Stephan gaue the manor of Sudton or Sutton to the house of Winchester, the same was amongst other witnesses thus signed, Robertus de Veer constabularius, Milo constabularius, Brientius filius comitis constabularius: all who could not be constables of England at one time. Wherfore sauing correction I suppose that it is out of all controuersie, that neither the first nor the last of these three were constables of England but of some other places, as of Douer or other castels. And so to that which I haue further to saie of the kings constables in one descent and succession of the de Dilies, being tearmed the kings constables, both in ancient charters and pedegrées, whereof Nigellus before mentioned séemeth to be one.

This Nigellus was constable of England in the yeare of our redemption one thousand one hundred and one, being the first yéere of king Henrie the first, as may apeare by a déed of confirmation made by Henrie the first touching the cathedrall church of Norwich, whereof I thinke good to saie somewhat to bring in the proofe that this Nigellus was constable.

The foundation of the cathedrall church of Norwich.

This church was built for the most part in the time of William Rufus, by Herebert de Losinga the first bishop of Norwich, who translated the see from Thetford vnto Norwich, in the yeare of Christ 1094, which church being finished and consecrated to the holie trinitie, was afterward confirmed by Henrie the first, and Mawd his wife, in the first yeare of the said Henrie, being the yeare of our redemption 1101, to the charter whereof signed by king Henrie & Mawd his wife, were manie bishops, noblemen and abbats witnesses, amongst whome are these two set downe; Nigellus Constabularius, and Rogerus Cancellarius, of which Nigellus thus writeth Leland in his commentaries on the song of the swan in the word Isidis insula: Erat Roberto frater Nigellus nomine, de quo fama non admodum multa refert, which I suppose is this Nigellus de Oilie the constable, as I before said.

Robert de Oilie constable of England.

Robert de Oilie, sonne of the said Nigellus, did succéed his father, and was as may appeare by some authors (who tearme him accordinglie) great constable of England. This man together with his wife Edith were the founders of the religious house of Osneie, touching whome I shall not grœue to set downe what I haue gathered out of Leland and others. This Edith obteined of hir husband to build a church in the Ile of Osneie in Oxfordshire, to our sauiour Christ, about the yeare of our redemption 1129, being about the nine and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, which church did after grow to be of great renowme and building, the occasion of building whereof is set downe by others in this sort. Edith being in great estimation with Henrie, first married the said Robert de Oilie by the kings procurement, which Robert began the priorie of the blacke chanons of Osneie by Oxford, amongst the Iles made by the riuer of Isis or Owse. This Edith vsed oftentimes to walke out of Oxford castell with hir gentlewomen for to solace and recreate hir selfe. At what time at a certeine place, as often as she came by the same, certeine pies assembled themselues in a tree, where they chattered and as it were spake vnto hir. This ladie much maruelling at the matter, happening so continuallie at one time in one place after one order, and with one maner of foules, was manie times astonished and feared therewith, estéeming it a verie strange wonder. Wherupon she sent for one Radulph or Rafe a chanon of saint Frideswide in Oxford, a man of vertuous life & hir confessor, asking his counsell vpon the same. To whom he answered (after that he had séene the order of those pies onelie chattering at hir comming thither) that she should build some church or monasterie in that place. Wherevpon she intreated hir husband to build a priorie, and so he did, making that Radulph the first prior of that house. All which matter, that is the comming of Edith to Osneie, Radulph waiting on hir, and the tree with the pies were all extant (at the generall dissolution of the abbeies in the time of Henrie the eight) to be séene painted on the north side of the high altar, in the arch of the wall ouer Ediths tome in Osneie priorie, vpon which tome there laie a stone image of Edith in the habit of a nonnesse holding a hart in hir right hand. This Robert de Oilie was buried in Osneie in the verie middle of the presbiterie, vnder a flat marble stone; wherevpon was a flowred crosse portraid, which Robert had issue Henrie de Oilie, baron of Hochnorton, & the kings constable, which maried Margerie the daughter of Humfrete de Bohune, by whome that Henrie had issue Henrie de Oilie baron of Hochnorton, and the kings constable which died without issue. Thus this much by waie of digression, touching the constables of England, left out in my former discourse of those officers. And so againe to the protectors.

The foundation of the abbeie of Osneie or Owsneie in the yeare of Christ 1129, being about the thirtith yeare of Henrie the first, as some write.

Katharine quéene of England.

Katharine the daughter of Ferdinando king of Spaine, and wife to king Henrie the eight, was (in the absence of the said king beyond the seas in the the warres of Turwine and Turneie) made regent of the realme, in the yeare of Christ 1513, and the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, she had béene the widow of Arthur prince of Wales, eldest sonne vnto king Henrie the seauenth, and eldest brother to king Henrie

Henrie the eight, who after the death of that Arthur was by dispensation of the pope married to Henrie after king, by the name of Henrie the eight, being yonger brother of the said Arthur, from which king Henrie she was afterward not onelie diuorsed, in the one and twentith of his reigne, being the yeare of Christ 1529, but after by parlement also in the foure and twentith of the kings reigne, in the yeare of Christ 1532, disgraded from the name of quéene, and from thenseforth appointed onlie to be called the princesse dowager of prince Arthur, about fiue yeers after which she died on the eight of Januarie, being the yeare of our redemption 1535, which was the seauen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight, and was honourablie buried in the abbeie of Peterborow, for which cause afterward in the generall dissolution of the abbeies, when all those houses were spoiled, this abbeie was not onelie for hir buriall there spared and not defaced, but also further honored with a greater title, and turned into a bishoprike, by the said king Henrie the eight.

Katharine Par, the daughter of sir Thomas Par, lord of Kirkbie Kendall, and wife to king Henrie the eight, was by patent made protectresse of the realme of England, when king Henrie the eight went in person to the wars of Bullongne, on the thirtéenth of Julie in the yeare of our redemption 1544, being the six & thirtith yeare of the triumphant reigne of the said king. This ladie Katharine being the lord Latimers widow, was maried to the king at Hampton court, one the twelfe of Julie being the fiue and thirtith yeare of his reigne, and the yeare of Christ 1543, who hauing no issue by the king, was after the kings death married to Thomas Seimer knight, lord Seimer of Sudleie and high admerall of England.

Edward Seimer knight, vicount Beauchampe earle of Hertford, & after duke of Summerset, was protector of the kings person, and of the kingdome, in the first yeare of king Edward the first, his nephue which was in the yeare of our redemption 1546, the king being then but nine yeares old. Of this man is more spoken in my following discourse of all the dukes of England by creation or descent since the conquest, with which duke of Summerset, the last in office of protectorship, Francis Thin knitteth vp this simple discourse of the protectors of England of the kings person.

Abr. Fl. ex I. S. 1051. Curteis, alderman of London committed to ward for vnreuerend words and signes to the lord chancellor.

Anno Reg. 6. Sir Rafe Vane & other executed. House blowne vp with gunpowder.

¶ On the 17 of Februarie, on which daie were receiued the bookes of the relefe of all the wards of London, towards the new hospitals, by the kings commissioners, the councell dined at maister Cowpers the shirifke, and after dinner maister Thomas Curteis alderman came thither to speake with the lord chancellor for a matter he had depending afore him in the chancerie, but for his misdemeanour in words and signes to the lord chancellor at that time, the said maister Curteis was committed to ward in the Fléet.] The six and twentith of Februarie, sir Rafe Vane and sir Miles Patridge were hanged on the tower hill; & sir Michaell Stanhope with sir Thomas Arundell were beheaded there. The last of Aprill, through negligence of the gunpowder makers, a certeine house nére the tower of London, with three last of powder was blowne vp and burnt, the gunpowder makers being fiftéene in number, were all slaine.

Muster of horssemen before the king in Grénwich parke.

The sixtenth of Maie was a goodlie muster of horssemen made before the king, in the parke at Grénwich, vnder the kings banner his band of pensioners, in number a hundred and fiftie, euerie pensioner two great horsses and a gelding, the lord Wate their lieutenant. The duke of Northumberland, great maister of the kings houshold vnder the white lion & the ragged staffe fiftie. The duke of Suffolke vnder the vnicorne in the starre a hundred and ten. The lord marquesse of Winchester, high treasuror, vnder his banner the falcon, one hundred men. The marquesse of Northampton high chamberleine vnder the maidenhead a hundred. The earle of Bedford lord priuie seale vnder the gote a hundred. The erle of Warwike maister of the kings horsses vnder the white lion fiftie. The erle of Huntington vnder his banner fiftie. The earle of Rutland vnder the peacocke fiftie. The earle of Penbroke vnder the greene dragon fiftie. The lord Darcie vnder the maidens bodie fiftie. The lord Cobham vnder the Saracens head, fiftie. The lord Clinton lord admerall vnder the anchor, fiftie. The lord warden of the fiue ports, vnder the rose in the sunne beames, one hundred.

Dukes. Marquesses. Earles. Lords.

Not long after the death of the said duke of Summerset and his complices, it chanced the reuerend father in God maister doctor Ridleie then bishop of London, to preach before the kings maiestie at Westminster. In the which sermon he made a fruitfull and godlie exhortation to the rich, to be mercifull vnto the poore, and also to moue such as were in authoritie, to trauell by some charitable waie & meane, to comfort and releéue them. Wherevpon the kings maiestie being a prince of such towardnesse and vertue for his yeares, as England before neuer brought forth, and the same also being so well reteined and brought vp in all godlie knowledge, as well by his déere vncle the late protector, as also by his vertuous and learned scholemaisters, was so carefull of the good gouernement of the realme, and chieflie to do and prefer such things as most specíallie touched the honor of almightie God. And vnderstanding that a great number of poore people did swarme in this realme, and chieflie in the citie of London, and that no good order was taken for them, did suddenlie and of himselfe send to the said bishop as soone as his sermon was ended, willing him not to depart, vntill that he had spoken with him (and this that I now write was the verie report of the said bishop Ridleie) who according to the kings commandement gaue his attendance. And so soone as the kings maiestie was at leasure, he called for him, and made him to come vnto him in a great gallerie at Westminster, where (to his knowledge) and the king also told him so, there was present no mo persons than they two, and therefore made him sit downe in one chaire, and he himselfe in another, which (as it séemed) were before the comming of the bishop there purposelie set, & caused the bishop (maugre his téeth) to be couered, and then entered communication with him in this sort.

Rich. Grafton Doctor Ridleie preached before the king, mercie and charitie.

The verie report of bishop Ridleie, wherin we may se what fruits followed vpon his sermon: Ergo the hearing of the word preached is profitable.

First giuing him most hartie thanks for his sermon and good exhortation, he therein rehearsed such speciall things as he had noted, and that so manie, that the bishop said; Trulie, trulie (for that was commonlie his oth) I could neuer haue thought that excellencie to haue béene in his grace, that I beheld and saw in him. At the last, the kings maiestie much commended him for his exhortation for the releefe of the poore. But my lord (saith he) ye willed such as are in authoritie to be carefull therof, and to deuise some good order for their releefe, wherein I thinke you meane me, for I am in highest place, and therefore am the first that must make answere vnto God for my negligence, if I should not be carefull therein, knowing it to be the expresse commandement of almightie God, to haue compassion of his poore and néedie members, for whome we must make an accompt vnto him. And trulie my lord, I am before all things most willing to trauell that waie, and I doubt

" " " " " " " " " "

A most noble and vertuous saieng of king Edward to bishop Ridleie.

" doubt nothing of your long and approued wisedome
" and learning, who hauing such good zeale as wisheth
" helpe vnto them, but that also you haue had some
" conference with others, what waies are best to be ta" ken therein, the which I am desirous to vnderstand,
" and therefore I praie you saie your mind.

The bishop thinking least of that matter, and being amazed to heare the wisdome and earnest zeale of the king, was (as he said himselfe) so astonied, that he could not well tell what to saie: but after some pause, said that as he thought at this present for some entrance to be had, it were good to practise with the citie of London, because the number of the poore there are verie great, & the citizens are manie & also wise; and he doubted not but they were also both pitifull & mercifull, as the maior & his brethren, & other the worshipfull of the said citie. And that if it would please the kings maiestie to direct his gratious letter vnto the maior of London, willing him to call vnto him such assistants as he should thinke meet, to consult of this matter, for some order to be taken therein, he doubted not but good should follow thereof. And he himselfe promised the king to be one himselfe that should earnestlie trauell therein.

The citizens of London moued to be assistants in this charitable action.

The king forthwith not onelie granted his letter, but made the bishop tarie vntill the same was written, and his hand and signet set thereunto, and commanded the bishop not onelie to deliuer the said letter himselfe, but also to signifie vnto the maior, that it was the kings speciall request and expresse commandement, that the maior should therein trauell, and as soone as he might conuenientlie giue him knowledge how farre he had proceeded therein. The bishop was so iolous of the hauing of this letter, and that he had now an occasion to trauell in that good matter, wherein he was maruellous zealous, that nothing could more haue pleased and delighted him: wherefore the same night he came to the maior of London, who then was sir Richard Dobs knight, and deliuered the kings letter, and shewed his message with effect.

The readines of the lord maior to prefer this good deed.

The maior not onelie iolouslie receiued this letter, but with all speed agreed to set forward this matter, for he also fauoured it verie much. And the next daie being mondaie, he desired the bishop of London to dine with him: and against that time, the maior promised that he would send for such men, as he thought meetest to talke of this matter, and so he did. And sent first for two aldermen and six commoners, and afterward were appointed more, to the number of foure and twentie. And in the end after sundrie meetings (for by meane of the good diligence of the bishop it was well followed) they agreed vpon a booke that they had deuised, wherein first they considered of nine speciall kinds and sorts of poore people, and those same they brought in these three degrees:

Degrées of poore.

Three degrées of poore.
- The poore by impotencie.
- Poore by casualtie.
- Thriftlesse poore.

1 The poore by impotencie are also diuided into three kinds, that is to saie:
- 1 The fatherlesse poore mans child.
- 2 The aged, blind, and lame.
- 3 The diseased person, by leprosie, dropsie, &c.

2 The poore by casualtie are of three kinds, that is to saie:
- 4 The wounded souldier.
- 5 The decaied housholder.
- 6 The visited with greeuous disease.

3 The thriftles poore are three kinds in likewise, that is to saie:
- 7 The riotor that consumeth all.
- 8 The vagabond that will abide in no place.
- 9 The idle person, as the strumpet and others.

For these sorts of poore were prouided three seuerall houses. First for the innocent and fatherlesse, which is the beggers child, and is in deed the seed and breeder of beggerie, they prouided the house that was late Graie friers in London, and now is called Christes hospitall, where the poore children are trained in the knowledge of God, and some vertuous exercise to the ouerthrowe of beggerie. For the second degree is prouided the hospitall of saint Thomas in Southworke, & saint Bartholomew in west Smithfield, where are continuallie at least two hundred diseased persons, which are not onelie there lodged and cured, but also fed and nourished. For the third degree they prouided Bridewell, where the vagabond and idle strumpet is chastised and compelled to labour, to the ouerthrow of the vicious life of idlenes. They prouided also for the honest decaied housholder, that he should be relieued at home at his house, and in the parish where he dwelled by a weekelie reliefe and pension. And in like manner they prouided for the lazer to keepe him out of the citie from clapping of dishes, and ringing of bels, to the great trouble of the citizens, and also to the dangerous infection of manie, that they should be relieued at home at their houses with seuerall pensions.

Christes hospitall.

S. Thomas hospitall.

Bridewell.

Reliefe for the decaied housholder and lazer.

Now after this good order taken, and the citizens by such meanes as were deuised, willing to further the same, the report therof was made vnto the kings maiestie: and his grace for the aduancement hereof, was not onelie willing to grant such as should be the ouerseers and gouernors of the said houses a corporation and authoritie for the gouernement thereof: but also required that he might be accounted as the chiefe founder and patrone thereof. And for the furtherance of the said worke, and continuall maintenance of the same, he of his meere mercie and goodnesse granted, that where before certeine lands were giuen to the maintenance of the house of the Sauoie, founded by king Henrie the seuenth, for the lodging of pilgrims and strangers, and that the same was now made but a lodging of loiterers, vagabonds, and strumpets that laie all daie in the fields, and at night were harboured there, the which was rather the maintenance of beggerie, than the relefe of the poore, gaue the same lands, being first surrendred into his hands by the maister and fellowes there (which lands were of the yearelie value of six hundred pounds) vnto the citie of London, for the maintenance of the foundation aforesaid.

K. Edward the sixt founder of the hospitals in London.

And for a further relefe, a petition being made to the kings maiestie for a licence to take in mortmaine, or otherwise without licence, lands to a certeine yearelie value, and a space left in the patent for his grace to put in what summe it would please him; he loking on the void place, called for pen and inke, and with his owne hand wrote this summe, in these words (foure thousand marks by yeare) and then said in the hearing of his councell: Lord God I yeld thee most hartie thanks, that thou hast giuen mee life thus long, to finish this worke to the glorie of thy name. After which foundation established, he liued not aboue two daies, whose life would haue beene wished equall to the patriarchs, if it might haue pleased God so to haue protracted the same. But he was too good a prince for so bad a people, and therefore God remoued him, and translated him to his owne kingdome, foreseeing the euent of something which in his secret counsell he had purposed, against a nation that knew not the benefit of the acceptable time of grace: wherein God by this peereles princes means ment all good to this land, as might be gathered by the reformation of religion, wherin the kings care was exceeding great, as his desire to establish Gods glorie was zealous: according to that notable

A blessed king.

allusion

allusion of Iohn Leland recorded in praise of this most excellent prince, as followeth in this epigram:

Alluſio ad etymon nominis Eaduerdi.

Quiſquis Eaduerdum Romano expreſſerat ore,
Cuſtodem fidei dixerit eſſe ſacræ.
Hoc ego crediderim puero feliciter orto
A ſuperis nomen cælitus eſſe datum.
Eſt pater antiquæ fidei defenſor amicus,
Degener & nullo tempore natus erit.

But to returne where we left. By example of the charitable act of this vertuous yong king, ſir William Chester knight and alderman of London, and Iohn Calthrop citizen and draper of the ſaid citie, at their owne proper coſts and charges made the bricke walles and way on the backeſide that leadeth from the ſaid new hoſpitall, vnto the hoſpitall of ſaint Bartholomewes, and alſo couered and vaulted the towne dich from Alderſgate to Newgate, which before was verie noiſome and contagious to the ſaid hoſpitall.

Sir William Chester. Iohn Calthrop draper.

This hoſpitall being thus erected and put in good order, there was one Richard Caſtell alias Caſteller, ſhomaker, dwelling in Weſtminſter, a man of great trauell and labor in his facultie with his owne hands, and ſuch a one as was named the cocke of Weſtminſter, for that both winter and ſummer he was at his worke before foure of the clocke in the morning. This man thus trulie and painfullie labouring for his liuing, God bleſſed and increaſed his labours ſo abundantlie, that he purchaſed lands and tenements in Weſtminſter, to the yearelie value of fortie and foure pounds. And hauing no child, with the conſent of his wife (who ſuruiued him, & was a vertuous & good woman) gaue the ſame lands wholie to Chriſts hoſpitall aforeſaid, to the releife of the innocent and fatherleſſe children, and for the ſuccor of the miſerable, ſore and ſicke, harbored in the other hoſpitals about London, whoſe example God grant manie to follow.

Richard Caſtel ſhomaker.

¶The third of Auguſt, at Midlenton eleuen miles from Oxford, a woman brought forth a child which had two perfect bodies from the nauill vpward, and were ſo ioined togither at the nauill, that when they were laid in length, the one head & bodie was eaſtward, and the other weſt: the legs for both the bodies grew out at the midſt where the bodies ioined, and had but one iſſue for the excrements of both bodies: they liued eightéene daies, and were women children. The eight of Auguſt were taken at Quinborow three great fiſhes called dolphins: & the weeke following at Blackewall were ſir more taken, and brought to London, the leaſt of them was more than anie horſſe.]

I. Stow. 1053. A monſter.

Great fiſhes,

Much about this ſeaſon there were three notable ſhips ſet forth and furniſhed for the great aduenture of the vnknowne voiage into the eaſt by the north ſeas. The great doer and incourager of which voiage was Sebaſtian Gabato an Engliſhman, borne at Briſtow, but was the ſonne of a Genowaie. Theſe ſhips at the laſt arriued in the countrie of Moſcouia, not without great loſſe and danger, and namelie of their capteine, who was a worthie and aduenturous gentleman, called ſir Hugh Willoughbie knight, who being toſſed and driuen by tempeſt, was at the laſt found in his ſhip frozen to death and all his people. But now the ſaid voiage and trade is greatlie aduanced, and the merchants aduenturing that waie, are newlie by act of parlement incorporated and indued with ſundrie priuileges and liberties.

Sebaſtian Gabato.

About the beginning of the moneth of Maie next following, there were three notable mariages concluded, & ſhortlie after ſolemnized at Durham place. The firſt was betweene the lord Gilford Dudleie, the fourth ſonne of the duke of Northumberland, and the ladie Jane, eldeſt daughter to Henrie duke of Suffolke, & the ladie Francis his wife, was the daughter of Marie ſecond ſiſter to king Henrie the eight, firſt maried to Lewes the French king, and after to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke. The ſecond mariage was betweene the lord Herbert, ſon and heire to William earle of Penbroke, and the ladie Katharine, ſecond daughter of the ſaid ladie Francis, by the ſaid Henrie duke of Suffolke. And the third was betweene Henrie lord Haſtings, ſonne and heire to Francis earle of Huntington, and ladie Katharine yongeſt daughter to the forenamed duke of Northumberland.

Three mariages betweene great eſtates.

Theſe mariages were compaſſed & concluded chiefly vpon purpoſe to change & alter the order of ſucceſſion to the crowne, made in the time of king Henrie the eight, from the ſaid kings daughters, Marie and Elizabeth, and to conueie the ſame immediatlie after the death of king Edward to the houſe of Suffolke, in the right of the ſaid ladie Francis: wherein the ſaid yong king was an earneſt traueller in the time of his ſickeneſſe, & all for feare that if his ſiſter Marie, being next heire to the crowne, ſhould ſucceed, that ſhe would ſubuert all his lawes and ſtatutes made concerning religion, whereof he was moſt carefull: for the continuance whereof he ſought to eſtabliſh a meet order of ſucceſſion, by the aliance of great houſes by waie of marriage, which neuertheleſſe were of no force to ſerue his purpoſe. For tending to the diſheriting of the rightfull heirs, they proued nothing proſperous to the parties: for two of them were ſone after made fruſtrate, the one by death, the other by diuorſe.

The end and whereto the knitting of theſe couples in mariage tended.

The kings feare fell out to be true.

In the meane while, the king became euerie date more ſicke than other of a conſumption in his lungs, ſo as there was no hope of his recouerie. Whereupon thoſe that then bare chiefe authoritie in councell, with other prelats and nobles of the realme, called to them diuerſe notable perſons, learned as well in diuinitie as in the lawes of the land, namelie biſhops, iudges, & other, who fell to conſultation vpon this ſo weightie cauſe, and laſtlie concluded vpon the deuiſe of king Edwards will, to declare the ſaid ladie Jane, eldeſt neece to king Henrie the eight, and wife to the ſaid lord Gilford, to be rightfull heire in ſucceſſion to the crowne of England, without reſpect had to the ſtatute made in the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight: the true meaning of which ſtatute they did impugne and ouerthrow by diuerſe ſubtill ſiniſter conſtructions of the ſame, to diſherit the ſaid kings daughters, to whome the ſucceſſion of the crowne of England of right appertened, as well by the common lawes of this realme, as alſo by the ſaid ſtatute made in the ſaid fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie, as aforeſaid. To which new order of ſucceſſion, all the ſaid kings councell, with manie biſhops, lords, doctors and iudges of the realme ſubſcribed their names, without refuſall of anie, except ſir James Hales knight, one of the iuſtices of the common plées, who being called to this councell, would in no wiſe giue his aſſent, either by word or writing, as ye ſhall heare more in the hiſtorie of quéene Marie.

The kings ſickeneſſe increaſeth.

An euill minded conſultation of counſellors.

Sir James Hales the odd man.

Now when theſe matters were thus concluded, and after confirmed by a number of hands, as aforeſaid, then the noble prince king Edward the firſt, by long lingering ſickeneſſe and conſumption of his lungs aforeſaid, approched to his death, and departed out of this life the firſt daie of Julie, in the ſeuenth yeare of his reigne, and ſeuenteenth of his age, after he had reigned and noblie gouerned this realme ſir yeares, fiue moneths, and eight daies. And a little before his departing, lifting vp his eies to God, hee praied as followeth.

The death of king Edward the firſt.

The

The praier of king Edward the sixt at his death.

LOrd God, deliuer me out of this miserable and wretched life, take me among thy chosen: howbeit not my will, but thy will be done. Lord I commit my spirit to thee, oh Lord thou knowest how happie it were for mee to be with thee: yet for thy chosens sake if it be thy will, send me life and helth, that I maie trulie serue thee. Oh my Lord bless thy people, and saue thine inheritance. Oh Lord God, saue thy chosen people of England. Oh my Lord God defend this realme from papistrie, and maintein thy true religion, that I and my people maie praise thy holie name. And therewithall he said, I am faint, Lord haue mercie vpon me, and take my spirit.

Thus did this godlie king yeld vp to God his ghost the sixt daie of Julie (as before is mentioned) whome if it had pleased God to haue spared with longer life, not vnlike it was, but he should haue so gouerned this English common-wealth, that he might haue beene comparable with any of his noble progenitors: so that the losse of so towardlie a young king, greatlie discomforted the whole English nation, that looked for such a reformation in the state of the common-wealth at his hands, as was to be wished for of all good subiects: which bred such a liking in them toward him, that euen among verie traitorous rebels his name yet was had in reuerence, although otherwise they neuer so much forgat their dutie both towards him and other, appointed to gouerne vnder him, through a malicious and most wilfull error; as if his tender yeares had not sufficientlie warranted his roiall authoritie, but that the same had beene vsurped by others against his will and pleasure.

The commendation of king Edward.

And as he was intierlie beloued of his subiects, so with the like affection of kindnes he loued them againe; of nature and disposition meeke, much inclined to clemencie, euer hauing a regard to the sparing of life. There wanted in him no promptnes of wit, grauitie of sentence, ripenesse of iudgement, as his age might beare, fauour and loue of religion was in him from his childhood, his skill and knowledge in sciences, besides his other excellent vertues, were such, that to them he seemed rather borne than brought vp. It maie seeme verie strange, that in his young years (as maister Fox reporteth of him) he could tell and recite all the ports, hauens, and creekes, not within his owne realme onelie, but also in Scotland, and likewise in France, what comming in there was, how the tide serued in euerie of them; moreouer, what burthen, and what wind serued for the comming into each hauen: also of all his iustices, magistrates, & gentlemen that bare any authoritie within his realme, he knew their names, their housekeeping, their religion and conuersation what it was. He had a singular respect to iustice, a vertue most commendable in a prince, and chiefflie to the dispatch of poore mens suites. He perfectlie vnderstood the Latine tong, the French, the Greeke, Italian, and Spanish, neither was he ignorant (saith Cardanus) in Logike, in the principles of naturall philosophie, or in musicke.

He] Iohn Fox in the Acts & Monuments vnder the title of Edward the sixt.

The noble memorie of king Edward and his rare wit.

To conclude, his towardlinesse was such in all heroicall vertues, noble gifts, and markable qualities conuenient for his princelie estate, that so much was hoped for in his roiall person (if he had liued till triall might haue beene had of the proofe) as was to be looked for in anie one prince that euer had rule ouer this noble realme. ¶ The eight of Julie, the lord maior of London was sent for to the court, then at Grenwich, and to bring with him sir aldermen, as manie merchants of the Staple, and as manie merchant aduenturers, vnto whom by the councell was secretlie declared the death of king Edward, & also whom he had ordeined to the succession of the crowne by his leters patents, to the which they were sworne, and charged to keepe it secret. But now to proceed with the doings that followed. Immediatlie after the death of this so worthie a prince king Edward, the aforesaid ladie Jane was proclamed queene of this realme by the sound of trumpet, that is to saie, the ninth daie of Julie, at which proclamation were present the lords of the councell, the maior of London, with others.

I. Stow. 1038. K. Edwards death opened.

Ladie Jane proclamed queene.

¶ The eleuenth of Julie, Gilbert Pot, prentice to Pinion Sanders vintener, dwelling at S. Johns head within Ludgate, who was accused by the said Sanders his maister, was set vpon the pillorie in Cheape, with both his eares nailed, and cleane cut off, for words speaking at time of the proclamation of ladie Jane. At the which execution was a trumpet blowne, and a herald read his offense, in presence of one of the shiriffes, &c. About fiue of the clocke the same daie in the afternoone, Pinion Sanders, maister to the said Gilbert Pot, and John Owen a gunner, comming from the tower of London, by water in a wherrie, and shooting London bridge, towards the blacke friers, were drowned at saint Marie Locke, and the whirriemen saued by their ores.

I. Stow. 1039. Gilbert Pot punished in Cheape.

Men drowned at London bridge.

The ladie Marie, a little before lieng at Honesdon in Hartfordshire, hauing intelligence of the state of the king hir brother, and of the secret practise against hir: by the aduise of hir freends, with all speed toke hir iorneie toward hir house of Kenningall in Norfolke, intending there to remaine, vntill she could make hir selfe more strong of hir freends and alies, and withall wrote vnto the lords of the councell in forme as followeth.

A letter of the ladie Marie sent to the lords of the councell, wherein she claimeth the crowne now after the decease of hir brother king Edward.

MY lords we greet you well, and haue receiued sure aduertisement, that our dearest brother the king our late souereigne lord is departed to Gods mercie: which newes, how they be wofull to our heart, he onelie knoweth, to whose will and pleasure we must and do humblie submit vs, and all our wils. But in this so lamentable a case, that is to wit, now after his maiesties departure and death, concerning the crowne & gouernance of this realme of England, with the title of France, and all things thereto belonging that hath beene prouided by act of parlement, and the testament and last will of our dearest father, besides other circumstances aduancing our right: you know, the realme, and the whole world knoweth, the rolles and records appeare by the authoritie of the king our said father, and the king our said brother, and the subiects of this relme, so that we verelie trust that there is no true subiect that is, can, or would pretend to be ignorant thereof: and of our part we haue our selues caused, and as God shall aid and strength vs, shall cause our right and title in this behalfe to be published and proclamed accordinglie. And albeit this so weightie a matter seemeth strange, that the dieng of our said brother vpon thursdaie at night last past, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof: yet we consider your wisedomes and prudence to be such, that hauing essaies amongst you debated, pondered, and well weighed this present case with our estate, with your owne estate, the common wealth, and all our honors, we shall and may conceiue great hope and trust, with much assurance in your lotaltie and seruice, and therfore for the time interpret and take things not to the worst, and that ye yet will like noblemen worke the best. Neuerthelesse, we are not ignorant of your consultations to vndo the prouisions made for our preferment, nor of the great bands and prouisions forcible, whereunto ye be assembled and prepared, by whome, and to what end, God and you know, and nature can feare some euill. But be it that some consideration politike, or whatsoeuer thing else hath moued you thereto, yet doubt you not my lords, but we can take all these your doings in gratious part, being also right readie to remit and fullie pardon the [illegible] bloodshed & vengeance against [illegible] that can or will intend the same, trusting also assuredlie you will take and accept this grace and vertue in good part, as apperteineth, and that we shall not be inforced to vse this seruice of other our true subiects and frends, which in this our iust and rightfull case, God (in whome our whole affiance is) shall send vs. Wherefore my lords, we require you, and charge you, and euerie of you, that euerie of you of your allegiance which you owe to God and vs, and to none other, for our honour, and the suertie of our realme, onelie imploie your selues and forthwith vpon receit hereof cause our right and title to the crowne and gouernment of this realme, to be proclamed in our citie of London, and such other places as to your wisedoms shall seeme good, and as to this case apperteineth, not failing hereof, as our verie trust is in you: and thus our letter signed with our owne hand shall be your sufficient warrant in this behalfe. Yeuen vnder our signet at our manor of Keningall the ninth of Julie 1553.

The ladie Maries challenge to the crowne by right of succession.

She certifieth the lords that she knoweth what is intended against hir.

She chargeth the lords vpon their lotalties to cause hir right to the regument to be proclamed.

To this letter of the ladie Marie, the lords of the councell answered againe . as followeth.

MAdam, we haue receiued your letters the ninth of this instant, declaring your supposed title, which you iudge your selfe to haue to the imperiall crowne of this realme, and all the dominions thereto belonging. For answer wherof, this is to aduertise you, that forsomuch as our souereigne ladie quéene Jane is, after the death of our souereigne lord Edward the first, a prince of most noble memorie, inuested and possessed with the iust and right title of the imperiall crowne of this realme, not onelie by good order of old ancient good lawes of this realme; but also by our late souereigne lords letters patents, signed with his owne hand, and sealed with the great seale of England, in presence of the most part of the nobles, councellors, iudges, with diuers other graue and sage personages, assenting and subscribing to the same: we must therefore, as of most bound dutie and allegiance, assent vnto hir said grace, and to none other, except we should (which faithfull subiects cannot) fall into grieuous and vnspeakeable enormities. Wherefore we can no lesse do, but for the quiet both of the realme and you also, to aduertise you, that forsomuch as the diuorse made betweéne the king of famous memorie king Henrie the eight, and the ladie Katharine your mother, was necessarie to be had, both by the euerlasting lawes of God, and also by the ecclesiasticall lawes, and by the most part of the noble and learned vniuersities of christendome, and confirmed also by the sundrie acts of parlements, remaining yet in their force, and thereby you iustlie made illegitimate, and vnheritable to the crowne imperiall of this realme: and the rules, dominions, and possessions of the same: you will vpon iust consideration hereof, and of diuers other causes lawfull to be alledged for the same, and for the iust inheritance of the right line, and godlie orders taken by the late king Edward the first, and greatest personages aforesaid, surcease, by anie pretense to ver and molest anie of our souereigne ladie quéene Jane hir subiects, from the true faith and allegiance due vnto hir grace: assuring you, that if you will for respect shew your selfe quiet and obedient (as you ought) you shall find vs all, and seuerall, readie to do you anie seruice that we with dutie may, and to be glad of your quietnesse, to preserue the common state of this realme, wherein you may be otherwise grieuous vnto vs, to your selfe, and to them. And thus we bid you most hartilie well to fare. From the tower of London this ninth of Julie.

The lords aduertise the ladie Marie that the ladie Jane is quéene.

A subtill shift to proue the ladie Marie illegitimate.

Your ladiships freends shewing your selfe an obedient subiect,

Thomas Canturburie, the marquesse of Winchester, John Bedford, William Northampton, Thomas Elie chancellor, John Northumberland, Henrie Suffolke, Henrie Arundell, Francis Shrewesburie, William Penbroke, Cobham, R. Rich, Huntington, Darcie, Cheineie, R. Cotton, John Gates, William Peter, William Cecill, John Cheke, John Mason, Edward North, Robert Bowes.

All these aforesaid, except onelie the duke of Northumberland, and sir John Gates, were either by speciall fauour, or speciall or generall pardon, discharged for this offense against hir committed, after hir comming to be quéene. But now vpon the receit of this answer, vnderstanding by hir frends that she could not lie in suertie at Keningall, being a place open & easie to be approched, she remoued from thence vnto hir castell of Fremingham, standing in a wood countrie, & not so easie to be inuaded by hir enimies. So soone as the councell heard of hir sudden departure, and considering that all came not to passe as they supposed; they caused spedilie a power of men to be gathered togither. And first they agréed that the duke of Suffolke father to the new made quéene, should haue the conduct and leading of the armie.

Ladie Marie remoueth frō Keningall to Fremingham castell.

¶ But afterward it was deuised and decréed vpon further considerations, and by the speciall means of the ladie Jane his daughter, who taking the matter heauilie, with weeping teares, made request to the whole councell, that hir father might tarrie at home in hir companie. Where vpon the councell persuaded with the duke of Northumberland, to take that voiage vpon him, saieng, that no man was so fit therefore: bicause that he had atchiued the victorie in Norfolke once alreadie, and was therefore so feared, that none durst once lift vp their weapon against him: besides that, he was the best man of warre in the realme, as well for the ordering of his campes and souldiers, both in battell and in their tents, as also by experience, knowlege and wisdome; he could both animate his armie with wittie persuasions, and also pacifie and allaie his enimies pride with his stout courage, or else to dissuade them (if néed were) from their enterprise. Finallie, said they, this is the short and the long, the quéene will in no wise grant, that hir father shall take it vpon him: wherefore (quoth they) we thinke it good, if it may please your grace, it lieth in you to remedie the matter. With these & the like persuasions the duke was allured to put himselfe desperatlie vpon hazzard:

Abr. Fl. ex l. S 1059.

The councell persuade the duke to vndertake this enterprise.

Non morte horrenda non vllis territus armis.

Insomuch that he reioined vpon their talke, and said: Well then, sith yee thinke it good, I and mine will go, not doubting of your fidelitie to the quéenes maiestie, maiestie, which now I leaue in your custodie. So that night he sent for both lords, knights, and other that should go with him, and caused all things to be prepared accordinglie. Then went the councell in to the ladie Jane, and told hir of their conclusion, who humblie thanked the duke for reseruing hir father at home, and besæched him to vse his diligence: whereto he answered, that he would do what in him laie. The morrow following, great preparation was made, the duke earlie in the morning called for his owne harneslle, and saw it made readie at Durham place, where he appointed all his retinue to mæt. The same daie carts were laden with munition and artillerie, and field pæces were set forward.

Carts laden with munitiõ.

The same forenoone the duke moued excsones the councell to send their powers after him, as it was before determined, the same to mæt with him at Newmarket, and they promised they would. He said further to some of them: My lords, I and these other noble personages, with the whole armie that now go forth, as well for the behalfe of you & yours, as for the establishing of the quænes highnesse, shall not onelie aduenture our bodies and liues amongst the bloudie strokes and cruell assaults of our aduersaries in the open fields: but also we do leaue the conseruation of our selues, children, and families at home here with you, as altogither committed to your truth and fidelities: whome, if we thought ye would through malice, conspiracie, or dissention leaue vs your frænds in the briers, and betraie vs; we could as well sundrie waies forsee and prouide for our owne safegards, as anie of you by betraieng vs can do for yours. But now vpon the onelie trust and faithfulnesse of your honors, whereof we thinke our selues most assured, we do hazzard our liues. Which trust and promise if yæ shall violate, hoping thereby of life and promotion: yet shall not God count you innocent of our bloods, neither acquite you of the sacred and holie oth of allegiance, made frælie by you to this vertuous ladie the quænes highnesse, who by your and our intitlement is rather of force placed therein, than by hir owne seking and request. Consider also, that Gods cause, which is the preferment of his word, & feare of papists entrance, hath bæne (as ye haue here before alwaies laid) the originall ground whereupon ye euen at the first motion granted your goodwils and consents thereunto, as by your handwritings appeareth; and thinke not the contrarie, but if ye meane dereit, though not forthwith, yet hereafter God will reuenge the same.

The duke's words to the lords of the councell.

Ye meaneth the new quæn after deprined and executed.

I can saie no more, but in this troublesome time wish you to vse constant hearts, abandoning all malice, enuie, and priuat affections. And therewithall the first course for the lords came vp, wherefore the duke shut vp his talke with these words. I haue not spoken to you in this sort vpon anie mistrust I haue of your truths, of which alwaies I haue euer hitherto conceiued a trustie confidence, but I haue put you in remembrance thereof, what chance of variance so euer might grow amongst you in mine absence: and this I praie you, with me not worse good spæd in this iorneie, than yæ would haue to your selues. My lord, saith one of them, if yæ mistrust anie of vs in this matter, your grace is farre deceiued, for which of vs can wash his hands cleane thereof? And if we should shrinke from you as from one that were culpable, which of vs can excuse himselfe to be giltlesse? Therefore herein your doubt is too farre cast. I praie God it be (quoth the duke) let vs go to dinner: and so they sat downe. After dinner the duke went in to the quæne, where his commission was by that time sealed, for his lieutenantship of the armie, and then toke his leaue of hir, and so did certeine other lords also.

The conclusion of the duke's talke with the lords.

Then as the duke came through the councell chamber, he toke his leaue of the earle of Arundell, who praied God be with his grace, saieng he was sorie it was not his chance to go with him and beare him companie, in whose presence he could find in his heart to spend his blood euen at his fæt. Then the earle of Arundell toke Thomas Louell the dukes boie by the hand, and said; Farewell gentle Thomas with all my heart. Then the duke, with the lord marquesse of Northampton, the lord Greie, and diuerse other toke their barge, and went to Durham place, and to White hall, where that night they mustered their men: and the next daie in the morning the duke departed with the number of six hundred men, or thereabouts. And as they rode through Shordich, said the duke to the lord Greie; The people praise to sæ vs, but not one saith God spæd vs. The same daie sir John Gates and other went out after the duke.]

The earle of Arundell professeth himselfe sorie that he goeth not with the duke of Northumberland.

Now as the duke went forward on his waie (with his commission from the whole councell, and his warrant vnder the broad seale of England, without mistrust of that which after fortuned to his owne destruction, as in the history of quæne Marie shall appeare, accompanied with no small number of lords and gentlemen, hauing notwithstanding his times prescribed, and his iourneies appointed by the councell, to the intent he would not sæme to do anie thing but vpon warrant) what a do there was, what stirring on euerie side, what sending, what riding and posting, what letters, messages, & instructions went to and fro, what talking among the souldiers, what hartburning among the people, what faire pretenses outwardlie, inwardlie what priuie practises there were, what speeding and sending forth ordinance out of the tower, yea euen the same daie that quæne Marie at euen was proclaimed quæne, what rumors, and comming downe of souldiers as there was from all quarters, a world it was to sæ, and a processe to declare, enough to make (as saith master Fox) a whole volume, euen as big as an Ilias.

Much a do on all sides during this stir broched betwæne the duke and the ladie Marie.

The greatest helpe that made for the ladie Marie, was the short iourneies of the duke, which by commission were assigned vnto him before, as aboue is mentioned: and happilie not without the politike forecast of some in fauour of the ladie Marie: for the longer the duke lingered in his votage, the ladie marie the more increased in puissance, the hearts of the people being mightilie bent vnto hir. Wherupon she in the meane time remaining at Fremingham, and hearing of this preparation against hir, gathered together such power of the noblemen & other hir frænds in that countrie, as she could get. And first of all, the noblemen that came vnto hir aid, were the earles of Sussex, Bath, and Oxford, the lord Wentworth, sir Thomas Cornewallis, sir Henrie Jerningham, sir William Walgraue, with diuerse other gentlemen and commons of the counties of Norfolke and Suffolke. Here (as master Fox noteth) the Suffolke men being the first that resorted to hir, promised hir their aid and helpe to the vttermost of their powers, so that she would not go about to alter the religion which hir brother had established, and was now vsed and exercised through the realme. To this condition she agræd, with such promise, as no man would haue doubted that anie innouation of matters in religion should haue followed, by hir sufferance or procurement during hir reigne: but how sone she forgat that promise, it shall shortlie after plainelie appeare.

The old prouerbe verified Delaie brædeth danger.

Suffolke men the first that resorted to the ladie Marie.

In this meane season, the lord Windsor, sir Edmund Peckham, sir Robert Drurie, and sir Edward Hastings, raised the commoners of the shire of Buckingham; vnto whome sir John Williams, which afterward was lord Williams of Thame, Assistants to the ladie Marie.

and sir Leonard Chamberleine, with the chefe power of Oxfordshire. And out of Northamptonshire came sir Thomas Tresham, and a great number of gentlemen out of diuerse parts, whose names were too long to rehearse. These capteins with their companies being thus assembled in warlike manner, marched forward towards Norffolke to the aid of the ladie Marie, and the further they went, the more their power increased.

Abr. Fl. ex L.S. pag. 1062.

¶ About this time sir ships well manned, that were appointed to lie before Yarmouth, and to haue taken the ladie Marie if she had fled that waie, were by force of weather driuen into the hauen, where one maister Jerningham was raising power on the ladie Maries behalfe, who hearing therof, came thither. Wherupon the capteins toke a bote and went to the ships, but the sailers and souldiers asked maister Jerningham what he would haue, and whether he would haue their capteins or no, and he said yea. Marrie said they, ye shall haue them or we will throw them into the bottome of the sea. But the capteins said forthwith, that they would serue quéne Marie willinglie, and so brought forth their men, and conueied with them their great ordinance. Of the comming of these ships the ladie Marie was wonderfull ioious, & afterward doubted little the dukes puissance: but when newes thereof was brought to the tower, each man there began to draw backward: and ouer that, word of a greater mischefe was brought to the tower: that is to saie, that the noblemens tenants refused to serue their lords against quéne Marie.

Aid by wind and wether for quéne Marie that was bent against hir.

The duke of Northumberland writeth for more succours.

The duke thought long for his succors, and wrote somewhat sharpelie to the councell at the tower in that behalfe, as well for lacke of men as munition, but a slender answer had he againe. And from that time forward, certeine of the councell, to wit, the erle of Penbroke, and sir Thomas Cheineie lord warden, and other, sought to get out of the tower to consult in London, but could not. On the sirtenth of Julie, being sundaie, doctor Ridleie bishop of London, by commandement of the councell, preached at Paules crosse, where he vehementlie persuaded the people in the title of the ladie Jane, late proclamed quéene, and inueied earnestlie against the title of ladie Marie, &c. The same sirtenth of Julie, the lord treasuror was gone out of the tower to his house in London at night, and forthwith about seauen of the clocke the gates of the tower vpon a sudden were shut vp, and the keies borne vp to the ladie Jane, which was for feare of some packing in the lord treasuror: but he was fetched againe to the tower about twelue of the clocke in the night.]

Doctor Ridleie persuadeth the people in the title of quéne Jane, &c.

The lords of the councell, being in this meane while at London, after they vnderstood how the better part of the realme were inclined, and hearing euerie daie newes of great assemblies, began to suspect the sequell of this enterprise. So that prouiding for their owne suertie, without respect of the duke (who now was at Burie) they fell to a new councell, and lastlie by assent made proclamation at London in the name of the ladie Marie, by the name of Marie quéne of England, France, & Ireland, defender of the faith, & of the churches of England & Ireland supreme head. Of which proclamation, after the duke of Northumberland, being then at Burie, was aduertised by letters of discomfort from the councell, he incontinentlie, according to the new order receiued from them, returned with his power againe to Cambridge. Now so sudden change of minds forthwith apeared in his armie, that they which before séemed most forward in that quarrell, began first to flie from him, & so euerie man shifting for himselfe, he that late before was furnished of such multitude of souldiers, was suddenlie forsaken of all sauing a few, whose perils were ioined with his.

The lords of the councell suspecting that all would go against them, proclamed the ladie Marie quéen.

But now before I proceed anie further in the historie of quéne Marie, who was now receiued and proclamed quéne, as then to succeed hir brother, I will speake somewhat of the learned men that wrote & published anie pamphlets or treatises in his daies, as in deed there were manie: but for that the more part of them died in quéne Maries time, or in the quénes maiesties time that now is, or else are yet liuing, I do omit those here, meaning to speake of them hereafter, if God shall permit, as occasion maie serue. For the residue that ended their liues in this kings daies, these I find: Dauid Clapham a lawyer and well séene in the Latine tong, wrote sundrie treatises; Robert Talbot a prebendarie of Norwich, verie skilfull in antiquities; Edward Hall a counsellor in the common law, but excellentlie séene in histories, wrote a notable chronicle of the vnion of the two houses of Yorke & Lancaster.

Learned men that wrote in the reigne of king Edward.

Furthermore Richard Tracie of Todington in Glocestershire, an esquier, and verie well learned, sonne to William Tracie; doctor Joseph an excellent preacher; George Joie a Bedfordshire man, that wrote diuerse treatises concerning diuinitie, and died either in the last yeare of king Edward, or in the beginning of quéne Maries reigne, as apeareth by maister Bale; Alexander Barklei a Scot, a notable poet, and a good rhetorician, departed this life in the yeare one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and two; William Hugh a Yorkeshireman, wrote, besides other things, a notable treatise called the troubled mans medicine, he deceassed by the bursting of a veine, in the yeare one thousand fiue hundred fortie and nine; Thomas Sternehold borne in Southhampton, turned into English méeter seuen & thirtie psalmes chosen forth of Dauids psalter. Of strangers that liued and died here in this kings daies, excellentlie learned, and renowmed for such treatises as they published to the world, Martine Bucer and Paulus Fagius are most famous. To end now with this part of the booke concerning king Edward, I haue thought good to set downe Ierom Cardans verses, written as an epitaph of him (and recorded by maister Fox in his historie) as here followeth:

Flete nefas magnum, sed toto flebilis orbe
Mortales, vester corruit omnis honor.
Nam regum decus, & iuuenum flos, spésque bonorum,
Delicia secli, & gloria gentis erat.
Dignus Apollineis lachrymis, doctaque Minerua:
Flosculus heu misere concidit ante diem.
Te cumulo dabimus musa, supremáque flentes
Munera, Melpomene tristia fata canet.

Carmen epitaphicum Cardani in obitum regis Edwardi.

Thus farre the good and vertuous yoong prince Edward the sixt, successor to Henrie the eight of most famous memorie.

Marie

Marie the eldest daughter of king Henrie the eight successor to Edward the sixt.

MArie eldest daughter of K. Henrie the eight, by the ladie Katharine of Spaine, his first wife, and sister vnto king Edward the sixt, by the fathers side, began hir reigne the sixt daie of Julie, which daie the king hir brother died, and she was proclamed at London (as is before remembred in the end of the historie of king Edward the sixt) the nine- 30
1553 teenth daie of the same moneth, in the yeare of our Lord 1553: after the creation of the world 5520, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of Charles the fift, emperor of Almaine, in the seuenth yére of Henrie the second of that name K. of France, & in the eleuenth of Marie quéene of Scotland. The twentith of Julie the duke of Northumberland being come backe to Cambridge, heard that the proclamation of quéene Marie was come thither, whereof he being aduertised, called for a trumpetter and an herald; but none 40
Quéene Marie proclamed. could be found. Wherevpon he riding into the market place with the maior, and the lord marques of Northampton, made the proclamation himselfe, and threw vp his cap in token of ioy. ¶ Within an
Abr. Fl. ex L.S. pag. 1064. houre after he had letters from the councell (as he said) that he should forthwith dismisse his armie, and not come within ten miles of London: for if he did, they would fight with him, the rumor whereof was no sooner abroad, but euerie man departed. And shortlie after, the duke was arrested in the kings 50 college by one maister Sleg sargeant at arms.

At the last, letters were brought from the councell at London, that all men should go each his waie. Wherevpon the duke said to them that kept him; Ye do me wrong to withdraw my libertie, sée you not the councels letters without exception, that all men should go whither they would? At which words
The duke submitteth himselfe, and is arrested by the earle of Arundell. they that kept him and the other noblemen, set them at libertie, and so continued they for that night: in- 60 somuch that the earle of Warwike was readie in the morning to haue rode awaie. But then came the erle of Arundell from the quéene to the duke into his chamber, who went out to méet him. Now as soone as he saw the earle of Arundell, he fell on his knées, and desired him to be good to him for the loue of God: Consider (saith he) I haue done nothing but by the consents of you and all the whole councell. My lord (quoth the earle of Arundell) I am sent hither by the quéens maiestie, and in hir name I do arrest you. And I obeie it my lord (quoth he) I beséech you my lord of Arundell (quoth the duke) vse mercie towards me, knowing the case as it is. My lord (quoth the earle) ye should haue sought for mercie sooner, I must do according to commandement: herwith he committed the charge of him and the others to the gard and gentlemen that stood by.] The lord marques after this went to quéene Marie. On the fiue & twentith daie of the said moneth, the duke of Northumberland, with Francis earle of Huntington, John earle of Warwike son and heire to the said duke, and two other of his yonger sons, the lord Ambrose and the lord Henrie Dudleie, sir Andrew Dudleie, Sir John Gates capteine of the gard to king Edward the sixt, sir Henrie Gates brethren, sir Thomas Palmer knights, and doctor Sands were brought to the tower by the earle of Arundell. But as they entered within the tower gate, the earle of Arundell discharged the lord Hastings, taking him out of the tower with him. On the six & twentith of Julie, the lord marques of Northampton, the bishop of London, the lord Robert Dudleie, and sir Robert Corbet were brought from the quénes campe vnto the tower. The eight and twentith of Julie, the duke of Suffolke was committed to the tower, but the one and twentith of the same moneth he was set at libertie by the diligent suit of the ladie Francis grace his wife.

The lord Hastings discharged out of the tower.

Duke of Suffolke committed to the tower.

After that quéene Marie was thus with full consent of the nobles and commons of the realme proclamed quéene, she being then in Northfolke, at hir castell of Framingham, repaired with all speed to the citie of London: and the third daie of the said moneth of August she came to the said citie, and so to the tower, where the ladie Jane of Suffolke (late afore proclamed quéene) with hir husband the lord Gilford, a little before hir comming, were committed to ward, & there remained almost after fiue moneths. And by the waie, as the quéene thus passed, she was wonderfullie saluted of all the people, without anie misliking; sauing that it was much feared of manie, that she would alter the religion set forth by king Edward hir brother, whereof then were giuen iust occasions: because (notwithstanding diuerse lawes made to the contrarie) she had dailie masse and Latine seruice said before hir in the tower. Yea it was doubted in like sort, that she would both annull and innouat certeine lawes and decrées established by the yong prince hir predecessor: which she did in deed, as one hath left testified in a memorall of hir succession (but little vnto hir commendation) saieng:

Quéene Marie commeth to London.

At Maria Eduardi regni succedit habenis,
Confirmans iterùm regno papalia iura,
Concilióque nouas léges sancire vocato
Molitur, latas à fratre perosa priores.

Prisoners discharged.

At hir entrie into the tower there were presented to hir certeine prisoners; namelie, Thomas duke of Norfolke, who in the last yeare of king Henrie the eight (as you haue heard) was supposed to be attainted of treason: but in the parlement of this first yeare of quéene Marie, the said supposed attaindour was by the authoritie and act of parlement, for good and apparant causes alleged in the said act, declared to be vtterlie frustrat and void. Also Edward Courtneie son and heire to Henrie marques of Excester, cosine germane to king Henrie the eight, and Cutbert Tunstall bishop of Durham, with other persons of great calling; but speciallie Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester, whom she not onlie released out of imprisonment, but also immediatlie aduanced and preferred to be lord chancellor of England, restoring him also to his former estate and bishoprike, and remoued from the same one doctor Poinet, who a little before was placed therein by the gift of king Edward the first.

Stephan Gardiner made lord chancellor.

Edward Courtneie created earle of Deuonshire.

And touching Edward Courtneie, she not onelie aduanced him to the earldome of Deuonshire, but also to so much of his fathers possessions as there remained in hir hands; whereby it was then thought of manie, that she bare affection to him by the waie of marriage: but it came not so to passe (for what cause I am not able to giue anie reason) but surelie the subiects of England were most desirous thereof.

Bishops restored, and others deprived.

Upon the receiuing of this new quæne, all the bishops which had bëene deprined in the time of king Edward the first hir brother, for the cause of religion, were now againe restored to their bishoprikes; and such other as were placed in king Edward his time, remoued from their sées, and others of contrarie religion placed. Amongest whom, Edmund Bonner doctor of the lawes, late afore deprined from the sée of London, and committed prisoner to the Marshalsea by order of king Edwards councell, was with all fauour restored to his libertie and bishoprike. Maister Nicholas Ridleie doctor in diuinitie, late before aduanced to the same sée by the said king, was hastilie displaced, and committed prisoner to the tower of London. The cause why such extremitie was vsed towards the said bishop Ridleie, more than to the rest, was for that in the time of ladie Jane, he preached a sermon at Pauls crosse by the commandement of king Edwards councell, wherein he dissuaded the people, for sundrie causes, from receiuing the ladie Marie as quæne. ¶ On the ninth of August in the afternoone, the quæne held an obsequie in the tower for king Edward, the dirge being song in Latine, and on the morow a masse of Requiem, whereat the quæne with hir ladies offered. The same daie the corps of king Edward was buried at Westminster, the lord treasuror, the earle of Penbroke, and the earle of Shrewesburie being chéefe mourners, with diuerse other noble men and others. Doctor Daie bishop of Chichester preached at the said buriall, and all the seruice with a communion was in English. Thus was finished the solemne funerall of that good prince, at whose birth there were not so manie reioising hearts, but at his death there were by infinit ods manie more weeping eies, & sad spirits: whose tender bodie, though pined with sickneesse, & consumed with rottennesse, maie perhaps leaue for succéeding ages no relike to gaze vpon; yet the memorie of his name shall be euer grëene. For he was, as one truelie saith of him:

Ille erat Europæ Phœnix, quem funere acerbo
(Vt flos vere nouo viridanti carpitur horto)
Sustulit ante diem mors immatura Britannis,
Inuidet hæc terris pietatem & iura colentes.]

Why Ridleie was more rigorouslie handled than the rest.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1067.

The buriall of king Edward.

The thirteenth of August doctor Bonner restored now to his bishoprike againe, appointed one late a chapleine of his called doctor Bourne to preach at Paules crosse, who was then promoted to the quæns seruice, & not long after was made bishop of Bath. The said doctor taking occasion of the gospell of that daie, spake somewhat largelie in the iustifieng of bishop Bonner, being present at the sermon, which bishop (as the said preacher then openlie said) for a sermon made vpon the same text, and in the same place the same daie foure yéeres afore passed, was most vniustlie cast into the vile dungeon of the Marshalsea among thæues, and there kept during the time of king Edwards reigne. This matter being set forth with great vehemencie, so much offended the eares of part of the audience, that they brake silence, and began to murmur and throng togither, in such sort as the maior and aldermen with other of the wiser sort then present feared much an vprore. During which muttering, one more feruent than his fellowes threw a dagger at the preacher: but who it was, came not to knowlege. By reason of which outrage the preacher withdrew himselfe from the pulpit, and one maister Bradford at the request of the preachers brother and others standing there, toke the place, and spake so mildlie to the people, that with few words he appeased their furie: and after the said maister Bradford and maister Rogers, although men of contrarie religion, conueied the said preacher into Paules schoole, and there left him safelie.

A dagger throwne at the preacher.

Doctor Bourne a chapleine of bishop Bonner.

The next sundaie following, for feare of a like tumult or worse, order was taken that the quæns gard should be present in place to defend the preacher with weapons. Whereupon the wiser men perceiuing such a number of weapons, and that great perill was not vnlike to insue, by such apparance of late not accustomed, would not be present at the sermon, by reason whereof there was left a small auditorie. Therefore afterward there was a commandement giuen by the lord maior, that the ancients of the companies should be present at the next sermon in their liueries, and so they were, whereby all became quiet. The eightéenth of August next following, the duke of Northumberland, the lord marquesse of Northampton, and the earle of Warwike, son and heire to the said duke, were brought into Westminster hall, and there arreigned of high treason before Thomas duke of Norfolke high Steward of England.

The preacher at Paules crosse defended by the gard.

The duke of Northumberland arreigned.

The duke of Northumberland at his comming to the barre, vsed great reuerence towards the iudges: and protesting his faith and allegiance to the quéens maiestie, whome he confessed gréeuouslie to haue offended, he said that he meant not to speake anie thing in defense of his fact, but would first vnderstand th'opinion of the court in two points. First whether a man doing anie act by authoritie of the princes councell, & by warrant of the great seale of England, & doing nothing without the same, maie be charged with treason for any thing which he might do by warrant thereof? Secondlie, whether anie such persons as were equally culpable in that crime, and those by whose letters and commandements he was directed in all his doings might be his iudges, or passe vpon his triall as his péeres? Whereunto was answered, that as concerning the first, the great seale which he laid for his warrant, was not the seale of the lawfull quéene of the realme, nor passed by authoritie: but the seale of an vsurper, and therefore could be no warrant to him. And to the second it was alledged, that if anie were as deeplie to be touched in that case as himselfe, yet so long as no atteindor were of record against them, they were neuertheless persons able in law to passe vpon anie triall, and not to be chalenged therefore, but at the princes pleasure. After which answer the duke vsing few words, declared his earnest repentance in the case (for he saw that to stand vpon uttering anie reasonable matter, as might séeme, would little preuaile) and he moued the duke of Norfolke to be a meane vnto the quéene for mercie, and without further

The dukes request to vnderstand the opinion of the court in two points.

ther

ther answer confessed the indictment, by whose example the other prisoners arreigned with him, did likewise confesse the indictments produced against them, and there vpon had iudgement.

Abr. Fl. ex I.S. pag. 1069. The duke of Northumberlands foure requests after his iudgment.

¶ Now when iudgement was giuen, the duke said; I beseech you my lords all to be humble suters to the quéenes maiestie, and to grant me foure requests, which are these: first, that I maie haue that death which noble men haue had in times past, and not the other: secondarilie, that hir maiestie will be gratious to my children which maie hereafter doo good seruice, considering that they went by my commandement who am their father, and not of their owne frée willes: thirdlie, that I may haue appointed to me some learned man for the instruction and quieting of my conscience: and fourthlie, that she will send two of the councell to commune with me, to whome I will declare such matters as shall be expedient for hir and the common-weale: and thus I beseech you all to praie for me.

The nineteenth of August, sir Andrew Dudleie, sir John Gates, and sir Henrie Gates brethren, and sir Thomas Palmer knights, were arreigned at Westminster; and confessing their indictments, had iudgement, which was pronounced by the marquesse of Winchester high treasuror of England that sate that daie as chiefe iustice. On the twentith of August doctor Watson chapleine to the bishop of Winchester preached at Pauls crosse, by the quéenes appointment, & for feare of the like tumult as had béene not long before, certeine lords of the councell repaired to the sermon, as the lord treasuror, the lord priuie seale, the earle of Bedford, the earle of Penbroke, the lord Wentworth, the lord Rich, and sir Henrie Gerningam capteine of the gard with two hundred of the gard, which stood about the preacher with halberts. Also the maior had warned the companies of the citie to be present in their liueries, which was well accepted of the quænes councell: and the sermon was quietlie ended.

Preacher at Paules crosse garded.

On the two and twentith of August John duke of Northumberland was beheaded on the tower hill, whose bodie with the head was buried in the tower, by the bodie of Edward late duke of Sumerset. So that there lieth before the high altar two dukes betwéene two quéenes, to wit, the duke of Summerset & the duke of Northumberland betwæne quéene Anne and quéene Katharine, all foure beheaded. At the same time and place also was likewise beheaded sir John Gates, and sir Thomas Palmer, which sir John Gates in that place vsed few words, but laid downe his head without anie kercher, and had the same striken off at three blowes. Sir Thomas Palmer, as soone as he came to the scaffold, tooke euerie man by the hand, and desired them to praie for him: then putting off his gowne, he leaned vpon the east raile, and said these words in effect.

Sir John Gates and sir Thomas Palmer beheaded.

The effect of such words as sir Thomas Palmer vttered on the scaffold at his death.

My maisters (quoth he) God saue you all. It is not vnknowne vnto you wherefore I come hither, which I haue worthilie well deserued at Gods hands: for I know it to be his diuine ordinance, by this meanes to call me to his mercie, and to teach me to know my selfe, what I am, and wherevnto we are all subiect: I thanke his mercifull goodnesse, for hæ hath caused me to learne more in one little darke corner in yonder tower, than euer I learned by anie trauell in so manie places as I haue bæne. For there (I saie) I haue sæne God, what he is, & how vnsearchable his wonderous works are, & how infinit his mercies be: I haue sæne there my selfe throughlie, and what I am, nothing but a lumpe of sin, earth, dust, and of all vilenesse most vilest: I haue sæne there and know what the world is, how vaine, deceitfull, transitorie, and short it is; how wicked and lothsome the works thereof are in the sight of Gods maiestie; how he neither regardeth the manaces of the proud men and mightie ones, neither despiseth the humblenesse of the poore & lowlie which are in the same world: finallie, I haue sæne there what death is, how nie hanging ouer all mens heds, and yet how vncerteine the time, and how vnknowne to all men, and how little it is to be feared. And should I feare death or be sad therefore? Haue I not sæne two die before mine eies? Yea and within the hearing of mine eares? No, neither the sprinkling of the bloud, nor the sheading thereof, nor the bloudie ax it selfe shall make me afraid. And now taking my leaue of the same, I praie you all to praie for me. Come on good fellow (quoth he) art thou he that must doo the deed? I forgiue thæ with all my hart; & then knæling downe, & laieng his hed on the blocke, he said; I will sæ how mæt the blocke is for my necke, I praie thæ strike not yet, for I haue a few praiers to saie; and that done, strike on Gods name, good leaue haue thou.

His praiers ended, and desiring ech man to praie for him, he laid downe his head againe, and so the executioner forthwith toke it from him at one stroke. On the three and twentith of August the quéene deliuered the great seale to doctor Gardiner bishop of Winchester, and made him lord chancellor. The seauen and twentith of August, the seruice began in Latine to be song in Pauls church in London. The six and twentith of August in the euening the notablest ship in England called the great Harrie was burnt at Woolwich by negligence of the mariners, she was of burthen a thousand tuns. The first of September the quéene demanded a prest of the citie of London of twentie thousand pounds, to be repaied againe within foure tæne daies after Michaelmasse nert following, which sum was leuied of the aldermen and one hundred & twentie commoners. The fourth of September was proclamed certeine new coins of gold and siluer, a souereigne of gold of thirtie shillings, the halfe souereigne fiftæne shillings, an angell at ten shillings, the halfe angell fiue shillings. Of siluer, the grote, halfe grote and pennie: all base coines to be currant as before. Also the same daie by proclamation was pardoned the subsidie of foure shillings the pound of lands, and two shillings eight pence the pound of mouable goods, granted in the last parlement of king Edward the first.] Soone after this Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie, and late before of king Edwards priuie councell, was committed to the tower of London, being charged of treason, not onelie for giuing aduise to the disheriting of quéene Marie, but also for aiding the duke of Northumberland with certeine horsse and men against the quæne, in the quarrell of the ladie Jane of Suffolke: wherein (if he were culpable) he lacked

New lord chancellor.

Latine seruice.

Great Harrie a ship burne.

Prest to the quéene.

New coines.

Subsidie pardoned.

The archbishop of Canturburie committed to the tower.

lacked the prouidence and foresight of after-claps, which *doctor Parker in the insurrection of Ket vsing saued both his life and estimation.

*See before pag. 1030, 1031

Abr. Fl. ex I. Stow 1067.

¶ On the seuen and twentith of September quéene Marie came to the tower by water, accompanied with the ladie Elizabeth hir sister, and other ladies, before whose arriuall there was shot a great peale of guns. The last of September quéene Marie rode through the citie of London towards Westminster, sitting in a chariot of cloth of tissue, drawne with six horsses all trapped with the like cloth of tissue. She sate in a gowne of purple veluet, furred with powdered ermins, hauing on hir head a kall of cloth of tinsell, béeset with pearle and stone, and aboue the same vpon hir head a round circlet of gold, béeset so richlie with pretious stones, that the value thereof was inestimable, the same kall and circle being so massie and ponderous, that she was faine to beare vp hir head with hir hand, and the canopie was borne ouer hir chariot. Before hir rode a number of gentlemen & knights, then iudges, then doctors, then bishops, then lords, then the councell, after whome followed the knights of the Bath in their robes, the bishop of Winchester lord chancellor, and the marques of Winchester lord high treasuror, next came the duke of Norffolke, and after him the earle of Oxford, who bare the sword before hir, the maior of London in a gown of crimsin veluet bare the scepter of gold, &c. After the quénes chariot sir Edward Hastings led hir horsse in his hand: then came another chariot hauing a couering of cloth of siluer all white, and six horsses traped with the like: therein sate the ladie Elizabeth, and the ladie Anne of Cleue: then ladies and gentlewomen riding on horsses traped with red veluet, and their gownes and kirtles likewise of red veluet; after them followed two other chariots couered with red sattin, and the horsses betrapped with the same, and certeine gentlewomen betwéene euerie of the said chariots riding in crimsin sattin, their horsses betraped with the same; the number of the gentlewomen so riding were six and fortie, besides them in the chariots.

Coronation of quéene Marie, hir pompe and traine.

Who rode before and after hir.

The ladie Elizabeth and the ladie Anne of Cleue.

At Fanchurch was a costlie pageant made by the Genowaies: at Gracechurch corner there was an other pageant made by the Easterlings. At the vpper end of Gracesstréet there was an other pageant made by the Florentins verie high, on the top whereof there stood foure pictures, and in the middest of them and most highest, there stood an angell all in gréene, with a trumpet in his hand: and when the trumpetter (who stood secretlie in the pageant) did sound his trumpet, the angell did put his trumpet to his mouth, as though it had béene the same that had sounded, to the great marueiling of manie ignorant persons: this pageant was made with three thorough saires or gates, &c. The conduit in Cornehill ran wine, and beneath the conduit a pageant made at the charges of the citie, and an other at the great conduit in Cheape, and a fountcine by it running wine. The standard in Cheape new painted, with the waits of the citie aloft theron plaieng. The crosse in Cheape new washed and burnished.

A pageant made by strangers.

The conduit in Cornewall ran wine.

An other pageant at the little conduit in Cheape next to Paules was made by the citie, where the aldermen stood, & when the quéene came against them, the recorder made a short proposition to hir, and then the chamberleine presented to hir in the name of the maior and the citie, a purse of cloth of gold, and a thousand marks of gold in it: then she rode forth, and in Paules church-yard against the schole, one master Heiwod sat in a pageant vnder a vine, and made to hir an oration in Latine & English. Then was there one Peter a Dutchman that stood on the weathercocke of Paules steeple, holding a streamer in his hand of fiue yards long, and wauing thereof, stood sometimes on the one foot, and shooke the other, and then knéeled on his knees, to the great maruell of all people. He had made two scaffolds vnder him, one aboue the crosse, hauing torches and streamers set on it, and an other ouer the ball of the crosse likewise set with streamers & torches, which could not burne, the wind was so great: the said Peter had sixtéene pounds thirtéene shillings foure pense giuen him by the citie for his costs and paines, and for all his stuffe.

The recorder of London maketh a short speech to the quéene passing by.

A Dutchman on the weathercocke of Paules.

Then was there a pageant made against the deane of Paules gate, where the quéristers of Paules plaied on vials and song. Ludgate was newlie repared, painted, and richlie hanged, with minstrels plaieng and singing there. Then was there an other pageant at the conduit in Fleetstréet, and the temple barre was newlie painted and hanged. And thus she passed to Whitehall at Westminster, where she toke hir leaue of the lord maior, giuing him great thanks for his paines, and the citie for their cost. On the morrow, which was the first daie of October, the quéene went by water to the old palace, and there remained till about eleuen of the clocke, and then went on foot vpon blew cloth, being railed on either side, vnto saint Peters church, where she was solemnlie crowned and annointed by Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester (for the archbishops of Canturburie and Yorke were then prisoners in the tower) which coronation and other ceremonies and solemnities then vsed according to the old custome, was not fullie ended till it was nigh foure of the clocke at night that she returned from the church, before whom was then borne three swords sheathed, & one naked. The great seruice that daie done in Westminster hall at dinner by diuerse noblemen, would aske long time to write. The lord maior of London & twelue cittizens kept the high cupbord of plate as butlers: and the quéene gaue to the maior for his fée a cupbord of gold with a couer weieng seuentéene ounces.]

A pageant wherein the quéristers of Paules plaid on vials.

Quéene Marie crowned quéene by Stephan Gardiner.

At the time of this quénes coronation, there was published a generall pardon in hir name, being interlaced with so manie exceptions, as they that néeded the same most, toke smallest benefit thereby. In which were excepted by name no small number, not onelie of bishops and other of the clergie, namelie the archbishops of Canturburie and Yorke, the bishop of London, but also manie lords, knights, and gentlemen of the laitie, beside the two chiefe iustices of England called sir Edward Montacute, and sir Roger Cholmeleie, with some other learned men in the law, for counselling, or at the least consenting to the depriuation of quéene Marie, and aiding of the foresaid duke of Northumberland, in the pretensed right of the before named ladie Jane, the names of which persons so being excepted, I haue omitted for shortnesse sake.

A pardon with exceptions.

As soone as this pardon was published, and the solemnitie of the feast of the coronation ended, there were certeine commissioners assigned to take order with all such persons as were excepted out of the pardon, and others, to compound with the quéene for their seuerall offenses. Which commissioners sat at the deane of Paules his house, at the west end of Paules church, and there called before them the said persons apart, and from some they toke their fees and offices granted before by king Edward the first, and yet neuertheless putting them to their fines: and some they committed to ward, depriuing them of their states and liuings: so that for the time, to those that tasted thereof, it seemed verie grieuous. God deliuer vs from incurring the like danger of law againe. The fift daie of October next following, the quéene held hir hie court of parlement at Westminster, Commissioners.

A parlement.

minſter, which continued vntill the one and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth.

In the firſt ſeſſion of which parlement, there paſſed no moꝛe acts but one, and that was, to declare queene Marie lawfull heire in deſcent to the crowne of England by the common lawes, next after hir bꝛother king Edward; and to repeale certeine cauſes of treaſon, fellonie, and pꝛemunire, conteined in diuers foꝛmer ſtatutes: the which act of repeale was, foꝛ that cardinall Pole was eſpeciallie loked foꝛ (as after ye ſhall heare) foꝛ the reducing of the church of England to the popes obedience: and to the end that the ſaid cardinall now called into England from Rome, might hold his courts legantine without the danger of the ſtatutes of the pꝛemunire, made in that caſe, whereinto cardinall Wolſeie (when he was legat) had incurred to his no ſmall loſſe, and to the charge of all the clergie of England, foꝛ exerciſing the like power: the which act being once paſſed, foꝛthwith the queene repaiꝛed to the parlement houſe, and gaue thereunto hir roiall aſſent, and then pꝛoꝛoged the parlement vnto the foure and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth. In which ſecond ſeſſion were confirmed and made diuerſe and ſundꝛie ſtatutes concerning religion, wherof ſome were reſtoꝛed, and other repealed.

Treaſon. Felonie. Pꝛemunire.

The parlement pꝛoꝛoged.

¶ Sir Thomas White foꝛ this yeere maiꝛ and merchant tailoꝛ, a woꝛthie patrone and pꝛotectoꝛ of poꝛe ſcholers & lerning, renewed oꝛ rather erected a college in Oxenfoꝛd, now called ſaint Johns college, beſoꝛe Bernard college. He alſo erected ſcholes at Briſtow and Reading. Moꝛeouer, this woꝛſhipfull citizen in his life time gaue to the citie of Briſtow two thouſand pounds of readie monie to purchaſe lands, to the yearlie value of one hundꝛed & twentie pounds, foꝛ the which it is decreed, that the maiꝛ, burgeſſes and communaltie of Briſtow, in the yeare of our Lord 1567, and ſo yearelie during the tearme of ten yeares then next inſuing, ſhould cauſe to be paid at Briſtow, one hundꝛed pounds of lawfull monie. The firſt eight hundꝛed pounds to be lent to ſixteene poꝛe yongmen clothiers, & fꝛeemen of the ſame towne, foꝛ the ſpace of ten yeares, fiftie pounds the peece of them, putting ſufficient ſuerties foꝛ the ſame, and at the end of ten yeares, to be lent to other ſixteene, at the diſcretion of the maiꝛ, aldermen, and foure of the common councell of the ſaid citie.

Abr. Fl. ex. l. S. pag. 1075. Charitable deeds of ſir Thomas White.

A pꝛeſident of monie well emploied after death.

The other two hundꝛed pounds to be imploied in the pꝛouiſion of coꝛne, foꝛ the releefe of the poꝛe of the ſame citie, foꝛ their readie monie, without gaine to be taken. And after the end of ten yeares on the feaſt daie of ſaint Bartholomew, which ſhall be in the yeare of our Lord 1577, at the merchant tailoꝛs hall in London, vnto the maiꝛ and communaltie of the citie of Yoꝛke, oꝛ to their atturnie authoꝛiſed, an hundꝛed & foure pounds, to be lent vnto foure yongmen of the ſaid citie of Yoꝛke, fꝛeemen and inhabitants (clothiers alwaie to be pꝛeferred) that is, to euerie of them fiue and twentie pounds, to haue and occupie the ſame foꝛ the tearme of ten yeares, without paieng anie thing foꝛ the loane, the foure pounds ouerplus of the hundꝛed and foure pounds, at the pleaſure of the maiꝛ and communaltie foꝛ their paines to be taken about the receipts and paiments of the ſaid hundꝛed pounds.

Pꝛouiſion of coꝛne foꝛ the poꝛe.

The like oꝛder in all points is taken foꝛ the deliuerie of an hundꝛed and foure pounds in the yeare 1578, to the citie of Canturburie. In the yeare 1579 to Reading, 1580 to the companie of the merchant tailoꝛs, 1581 to Gloceſter, 1582 to Woꝛceſter, 1583 to Exceſter, 1584 to Saliſburie, 1585 to Weſtcheſter, 1586 to Noꝛwich, 1587 to Southhampton, 1588 to Lincolne, 1589 to Wincheſter, 1590 to Oxenfoꝛd, 1591 to Herefoꝛd eaſt, 1592 to Cambꝛidge, 1593 to Shꝛewſburie, 1594 to Lin, 1595 to Bath, 1596 to Derbie, 1597 to Ipſwich, 1598 to Colcheſter, 1599 to Newcaſtell. And then to begin againe at Briſtow an hundꝛed and foure pounds, the nexꝛt yeare to the citie of Yoꝛke, and ſo foꝛth to euerie of the ſaid cities and townes, in the like oꝛder as beſoꝛe: and thus to continue foꝛ euer, as in the indentures tripartite moꝛe plainelie maie appeare.]

A perpetuall oꝛder of an hundꝛed and foure pounds lent yearelie by courſe.

At this time manie were in trouble foꝛ religion, and among others, ſir James Hales knight, one of the iuſtices of the common plées, which iuſtice being called among other by the councell of king Edward to ſubſcribe to a deuiſe made foꝛ the diſheriting of queene Marie, and the ladie Elizabeth hir ſiſter, would in no wiſe aſſent to the ſame, though moſt of the other did: yet that notwithſtanding, foꝛ that he at a quarter ſeſſions holden in Kent, gaue charge vpon the ſtatutes of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the firſt, in deꝛogation of the pꝛimaſie of the church of Rome, aboliſhed by king Henrie the eight, he was firſt committed pꝛiſoner to the Kings bench, then to the Counter, & laſt to the Fleet, where, whether it were thoꝛough extreame feare, oꝛ elſe by reaſon of ſuch talke as the warden of the Fleet vſed vnto him, of moꝛe trouble like to inſue, if he perſiſted in his opinion (oꝛ foꝛ what other cauſe, God knoweth) he was ſo moued, troubled, and vexed, that he ſought to rid himſelfe out of this life, which thing he firſt attempted in the Fleet, by wounding himſelfe with a penknife, well neere to death. Neuertheleſſe afterward being recouered of that hurt, he ſeemed to be verie confoꝛmable to all the queenes pꝛoceedings, and was thereupon deliuered of his impꝛiſonment, and bꝛought to the queenes pꝛeſence, who gaue him woꝛds of great comfoꝛt: neuertheleſſe his mind was not quiet (as afterward well appeared) foꝛ in the end he dꝛowned himſelfe in a riuer not halfe a mile from his dwelling houſe in Kent, the riuer being ſo ſhalow, that he was faine to lie groueling beſoꝛe he could diſpatch himſelfe, whoſe death was much lamented. Foꝛ beſide that he was a man wiſe, vertuous, and learned in the lawes of the realme, he was alſo a good and true miniſter of iuſtice, whereby he gat him great fauour and eſtimation among all degrees.

Sir James Hales in trouble foꝛ religion.

See beſoꝛe pag. 1083.

Soꝛe temptations in afflictions, againſt which we are to pꝛaie foꝛ patience.

He dꝛowneth himſelfe.

During the afoꝛeſaid parlement, about the eighteenth daie of October, there was kept at Paules church in London a publike diſputation, appointed by the queenes commandement, about the pꝛeſence of Chꝛiſt in the ſacrament of the altar, which diſputation continued ſix daies, doctoꝛ Weſton then being pꝛolocutoꝛ of the conuocation, who vſed manie vnſeemelie checks & tawnts againſt the one part, to the pꝛeiudice of their cauſe. By reaſon whereof the diſputers neuer reſolued vpon the article pꝛoponed, but grew dailie moꝛe and moꝛe into contention, without anie fruit of their long conference, and ſo ended this diſputation, with theſe woꝛds ſpoken by doctoꝛ Weſton pꝛolocutoꝛ: It is not the queens pleaſure that we ſhould herein ſpend anie longer time, and yeare well inough, foꝛ you haue the woꝛd, and we haue the ſwoꝛd. But of this matter ye maie read moꝛe in the booke of the monuments of the church. At this time was cardinall Pole ſent foꝛ to Rome by the queene, who was verie deſirous of his comming, as well foꝛ the cauſes beſoꝛe declared, as alſo foꝛ the great affection that ſhe had to him, being hir neere kinſman, and conſenting with hir in religion.

A publike diſputation about the reall pꝛeſence in the ſacrament.

" "

Iohn Fox.

Cardinall Pole ſent foꝛ home.

This meſſage was moſt thankefullie receiued at Rome, and oꝛder taken to ſend the ſaid cardinall hither with great expedition: but beſoꝛe his comming, queene Marie had married Philip pꝛince of Spaine, as after shall appeare. But here to touch somewhat the comming of the said cardinall. When he was arriued at Calis, there was conference had amongest the councellors of the quéene for the maner of his receiuing: some would haue had him verie honourablie met and interteined, as he was in all places where he had before passed, not onelie for that he was a cardinall, and a legat from the pope; but also for that he was the quéenes néere kinsman, of the house of Clarence. Neuertheleſſe, after much debating, it was thought méetest, first, for that by the lawes of the realme (which yet were not repealed) he stood attainted by parlement, and also for that it was doubtfull how he being sent from Rome, should be accepted of the people, who in fiue and twentie yeares before, had not béene much acquainted with the pope or his cardinals, that therefore (vntill all things might be put in order for that purpose) he should come without anie great solemnitie vnto Lambeth, where (in the archbishops house) his lodging was prepared.

As

The councell diuided about the receiuing of the cardinall.

The third of Nouember next following, Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie (notwithstanding that he had once refused plainelie to subscribe to king Edwards will, in the disheriting of his sister Marie, and alledging manie reasons and arguments for the legitimation of both the kings sisters) was in the Guildhall in London arreigned and attainted of treason, namelie for aiding the duke of Northumberland with horsse and men against the quæne, as aforesaid. At the same time also, the ladie Jane of Suffolke (who for a while was called quæne Jane) and the lord Gilford hir husband, the lord Ambrose and lord Henrie Dudleie sonnes to the duke of Northumberland, were likewise arreigned and attainted, and therevpon led backe againe to the tower. In the beginning of Januarie next following, Charles the fift emperor sent into England an honorable ambassage, amongest whome was the Conte de Aigmemont admerall of the low countries, with Charles Conte de la Laing, John de Montmorancie lord of Curriers, and the chancellor Nigre, with full commission to conclude a mariage betweene Philip prince of Spaine his sonne & heire, and quæne Marie (as you haue heard) which ambassage toke such place, that shortlie after all things were finished accordinglie.

Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie arreigned of treason.

Ambassadors from the emperour.

¶ On the fouretéenth of Januarie, doctor Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester lord chancellour of England, in the chamber of presence at Westminster, made to the lords, nobilitie, and gentlemen, an oration verie eloquent, wherein he declared that the quænes maiestie, partlie for amitie, and other weightie considerations had, after much sute on the emperours and prince of Spaines behalfe made, determined by the consent of the councell and nobilitie, to match hir selfe with the said prince in most godlie and lawfull matrimonie; and declared further, that she should haue for hir iointer thirtie thousand ducats by the yeare, with all the low countrie of Flanders, and that the issue (if there happened anie) betweene them two lawfullie begotten, should be heire as well to the kingdome of Spaine, as also to the said low countrie. He said therefore that they were all bound to thanke God, that so noble, worthie, and famous a prince would vouchsafe so to humble himselfe, as in this marriage to take vpon him rather as a subiect, than otherwise. For the quéene & hir councell should rule all things as she did before, and that there should be of the councell no stranger, neither to haue custodie of anie forts or castels, &c: nor to beare anie rule or office in the quéenes house, or elsewhere in all England, with diuerse other articles there by him rehearsed. Wherefore he said the quænes pleasure and request was, that like good subiects for hir sake, they would most louinglie receiue him with reuerence, loue, and honour. On the next daie, the lord maior of London with his bretheren the aldermen, were sent for to the court, and to bring with them fortie of the head commoners of the citie, vnto whome before the councell, the lord chancellor made the like oration, desiring them to behaue themselues like good subiects with all humblenesse and reuerence.

Ab. Fl. ex I. S. pag. 1077.

Stephan Gardiner maketh an oration to the lords of the councell &c: touching the quénes marriage.

Gardiner cõmendeth the king of Spaine.

But this marriage was not well thought of by the commons, nor much better liked of manie of the nobilitie, who for this, and for the cause of religion, conspired to raise war, rather than to see such change of the state. Of the which conspiracie though there were manie confederats; yet the first that shewed force therein, was one sir Thomas Wiat a knight in Kent, who in verie déed was driuen to preuent the time of the purposed enterprise by this hap. Diuerse of the partakers in this conspiracie, being withdrawne from London (where they had deuised their drift) home into their countries (amongst whome the said sir Thomas Wiat was one) it fell out, that whilest he was returned into Kent, where his lands and liuings chiefflie laie, a gentleman of that shire, one to the said sir Thomas Wiat most déere, was by the councell for other matters committed to the Fléet. Wherevpon he verelie suspecting his secrets were bewraied, had no other shift (as he toke it) but to put on armour, and to begin the attempt, before the time appointed with his complices. And herevpon ginning intelligence of his determination to his associats, as well at London, as else-where, on the thursdaie next following, being the fiue and twentith of Januarie at Maidstone, being accompanied with maister Thomas Isleie and others, published a proclamation against the quénes marriage, desiring all his neighbors, frends, and Englishmen to ioine with him and others, to defend the realme in danger to be brought in thraldome vnto strangers: and herewith he gat him to Rochester, and met with sir George Harper by the waie, that was one appointed afore to ioine with him in that quarrell. They brake vp the bridge at Rochester, and fortified the east part of the towne, & staid there abiding the comming of more strength, and in the meane while suffered all passengers to passe quietlie thorough the towne to London, or to the sea, taking nothing from them, but onelie their weapons.

Wiat publisheth a proclamation at Maidstone.

He commeth to Rochester.

Sir George Harper.

In the meane while, sir Henrie Isleie, Anthonie Kneuet esquier, and his brother William Kneuet were buske in west Kent to raise the people there; and likewise in east Kent there were other that were of the same confederacie, which set forth the like proclamations at Milton, Ashford, and other towns there in that part of the shire: and thus in each part of Kent in a maner was great stur. But yet such was the diligence and warie circumspection of John Twine at that present maior of Canturburie, for that he mistiked their disordered attempts, that there was not any of that citie knowne to stur, or go forth to ioine themselues with the said sir Thomas Wiat, or with anie other of his confederats: and yet verelie the more part of the people in all other parts of that shire were maruellouslie affected to the said sir Thomas Wiats quarrell, doubting that which might follow of the quéenes matching hir selfe thus with a stranger. At Milton when a gentleman of those parts named Christopher Roper, went about to resist them that set forth this proclamation, he was taken and conueied to Rochester vnto maister Wiat. Likewise maister Tucke and maister Dorrell iustices of peace, were fetched out of their owne houses, & likewise brought to Rochester, where they with the said Roper were kept as prisoners.

Christopher Roper taken.

Maister Dorrell & maister Tucke taken.

Sir

Sir Thomas Wiat writeth to sir Robert Southwell.

Sir Thomas Wiat had written vnto sir Robert Southwell shiriffe of Kent, to moue him in (respect of the preseruation of the common-wealth now in danger to be ouerrun of strangers, through the pretensed marriage, if it should go forward) to ioine with him and others, in so necessarie a cause for the disappointing of the same marriage, and to worke so with the lord of Aburgauennie, with whom he might do much, that it might please him also to ioine with them. But as well the said sir Robert Southwell, as the said lord of Aburgauennie, and one George Clerke assembled themselues with such power as they might make against the said sir Thomas Wiat and his adherents; and comming to Malling on the saturdaie, being the market daie & seuen and twentith of Januarie, the said sir Robert Southwell hauing penned an exhortation to dissuade the people, and to bring them from hauing anie liking to Wiats enterprise, did read the same openlie vnto all the people there assembled, in confuting, reproouing, and refelling the proclamations set forth by sir Thomas Wiat and his adherents.

The shiriffe of Kent and the lord of Aburgauennie assemble a power against Wiat.

On the other part, sir Henrie Isleie, Anthonie Kneuet, and his brother William Kneuet being at Tunbridge, proclamed the shiriffe, the lord of Aburgauennie, & George Clerke gentleman, traitors to God, the crowne, and the common-welth, for raising the quéenes subiects, to defend the most wicked & diuelish enterprise of certeine of the wicked & peruerse councellors. And this they pronounced in their owne names & in the names of sir Thomas Wiat, sir George Harper, and of all the faithfull gentlemen of Kent, & trustie commoners of the same. This done, they marched to Seuennocke, meaning from thence to passe to Rochester. But in the meane time the foresaid 27 of Januarie, there came from the quéene an herald & a trumpetter to sir Thomas Wiat, but he was not suffered to passe the bridge, and so did his message at the bridge end, in the hearing of sir Thomas Wiat and diuerse others. The effect of his message was, to offer pardon to so manie as within foure and twentie houres would depart to their houses, and become quiet subiects.

An herald sent to Wiat.

Sir Thomas Cheineie lord warden sent also vnto Wiat, with words of contempt and defiance, desirous in deed to haue béene doing with him, if hee had not mistrusted his owne people, which he should haue brought against him, as those that fauoured so greatlie Wiats cause, that they would haue bene loth to haue seene him take anie foile. And that sir Thomas Wiat knew well inough, and therefore desired nothing more than to haue him come forth, vnderstanding that he wanted no friends, as well about him, as all other that would take in hand to represse him with force gathered in that shire. The lord of Aburgauennie, the shiriffe Warram Sentleger, and diuerse other gentlemen that were assembled at Malling, late there within foure miles of Rochester on saturdaie at night, & hauing aduertisement that sir Henrie Isleie, the two Kneuets, and certeine other, with fiue hundred Weldishmen, being at Seuennocke, meant earlie in the morning to march towards Rochester for the aid of Wiat against the duke of Norffolke, that was come to Graues end with fiue hundred white cotes Londoners, and certeine of the gard: and further that the said sir Henrie Isleie and the Kneuets meant in their waie to burne and spoile the house of George Clerke gentleman: they departing with fiue hundred gentlemen & likewise yeomen, verie earlie that sundaie in the morning, marched out in order till they came to Wrotham heath, where they might easilie heare the sound of their aduersaries drums, and thereupon followed after them with all speed, till they came to a place called Barrow greene, through which laie the right readie waie from Seuennocke towards maister Clerks house. Here the lord of Aburgauennie staied for the comming of his enimies, and vnderstanding they were at hand, placed his men in order, thinking to giue or take the ouerthrow. But they vpon their approch, misliking (as it should seeme) the match, shranke aside as secretlie as they could, by a bywaie, and were so farre gone before the lord of Aburgauennie vnderstood thereof by his espials, as for doubt of ouertaking them afore their comming to Rochester, he was driuen to make such hast for the ouertaking of them, as diuerse of his footmen were farre behind at the onset giuing.

Barrow greene.

The first sight that the lord of Aburgauennie could haue of them, after they forsoke their purposed waie, was as they ascended Wrotham hill, directlie vnder Pallam maister Pechams house, where they thinking to haue great aduantage by the winning of the hill, displaied their enlignes, thinking they had béene out of danger. But the Lord of Aburgauennie made such hast after them, that ouertaking them at a field in the parish of Wrotham, a mile distant from the verie top of the hill, called Blacke soll field, after some resistance with shot and arrowes, and proffer of onset made by their horssemen, they were put to flight, and chased for the space of foure miles, euen to Hartleie wood. Threescore of them were taken prisoners, and some on both sides were wounded, as commonlie commeth to passe in an ordinarie and priuat fraie: how then is it possible, that a skirmish should be vnseasoned with slaughter and bloudshed, specially in a sedition or insurrection, which is the plague of all common-wealths, as the poet saith:

Wrotham hill.
Pallam.
Blacke soll field.
The skirmish.

——regnorum pessima pestis Seditio.

Sir Henrie Isleie fled into Hampshire, Anthonie Kneuet made such shift, that he got that night vnto Rochester; and the same time sir George Harper departing from sir Thomas Wiat, and comming to the duke of Norffolke, submitted himselfe vnto his grace, & the duke receiued him. Which duke (as before ye haue partlie heard) being sent with fiue hundred Londoners, and certeine of the gard for his better defense, to go against the Kentishmen thus assembled with sir Thomas Wiat, was come downe to Graues end, set forth from thence on mondaie the nine and twentith daie of Januarie, about ten of the clocke in the forenoone, marching towards Stroud on this side of Rochester, & about foure of the clocke in the after noone of the same daie, he arriued at Stroud neare vnto Rochester, hauing with him sir Henrie Jerningham capteine of the gard, sir Edward Waie, sir John Fog, knights, John Couert, Roger Apleton, esquiers, Maurice Griffith the bishop of Rochester, Thomas Swan gentleman, with certeine of the gard, and others, to the number of two hundred or thereabout, besides Wiet and other fiue capteins, who with their bands taried behind at spittle hill nére vnto Stroud, whilest the duke went to Stroud to see the placing of the ordinance, which being readie charged & bent vnto the towne of Rochester, and perceiuing by sir Thomas Wiat and his men by hanging out their enlignes, little to regard him, the duke commanded one of the péces to be fired and shot off into Rochester, and as the gunner was firing the pece, sir Edward Waies eldest son came in all hast to the duke, and told him how the Londoners would betraie him.

The duke of Norffolke arriueth at Stroud.

Herewith turning backe, he might behold how Wiet, and the other capteins of the white cotes with their bands being vpon the hill, and at his backe, made great and lowd shouts sundrie times, crieng; We are all Englishmen, we are all Englishmen: fashioning themselues in araie, readie bent with their

The reuolting of the Londoners.

Weldishmen, that is, such as dwell in the weld of Kent.

Wrotha heath.

their weapons to set vpon the duke, if he had made anie resistance: whereupon the duke willed the pées that were bent against Rochester, to be turned vpon Bret and his fellowes. But vpon further consideration the shot was spared, and the dukes grace, with the capteine of the gard, considering with wofull hearts their chiefe strength thus turned against them; and being thus inuironed both behind and before with enimies, shifted themselues awaie, as did also their companie. Sir Thomas Wiat accompanied with two or three, and not manie mo, came forth halfe a mile from Rochester, to méet Bret and the other capteins, amongst whom was sir George Harper, notwithstanding his former submission to the duke. Their méeting verelie séemed right ioifull both in gesture and countenance, & therewith hauing saluted each other, they entered all togither into Rochester. The lord of Aburgauennie & the shiriffe were greatlie abashed when they vnderstood of this mishap, for they doubted that such as were euill disposed before, would not be greatlie amended thereby. The shiriffe being then at Maidstone, hasted to come to Malling, where the lord of Aburgauennie laie, and vpon his comming thither, he toke aduise to ride in post to the councell, to know their minds how they would direct them. Sir Thomas Wiat and his associats were greatlie recomforted with this new supplie added to their strength, by the reuolting thus of the Londoners: and verelie it bred no small hope in all their hearts that wished well to his enterprise, that he should the better atteine vnto the hopes end of his purpose. But it pleased God otherwise, who neuer prospereth anie that attempt such exploits without publike and lawfull authoritie.

The duke with the capteine of the gard, &c: put to their shifts.

The shiriffe of Kent rideth to the councell.

In this meane while, the duke of Suffolke being persuaded to ioine with other in this quarell, as he that doubted (as no small number of true Englishmen then did) least the pretended mariage with the Spanish king should bring the whole nobilitie and people of this realme into bondage and thraldome of strangers, after he was once aduertised that sir Thomas Wiat had preuented the time of their purposed enterprise, he secretlie one euening departed from Shene, and rode with all spéed into Leicestershire, where in the towne of Leicester and other places, hée caused proclamation to be made in semblable wise, as sir Thomas Wiat had done, against the quénes match which she meant to make with the said king of Spaine: but few there were that would willinglie hearken thereto. But now ye must vnderstand, that before his comming downe, he was persuaded that the citie of Couentrie would be opened vnto him, the more part of the citizens being throughlie bent in his fauour, in so necessarie a quarell, for defense of the realme against strangers, as they were then persuaded.

The duke of Suffolke goeth downe into Leicestershire.

The citie of Couentrie.

But howsoeuer it chanced, this proued not altogither true: for whether through the misliking which the citizens had of the matter, or through negligence of some that were sent to sollicit them in the cause, or chieflie (as should séeme to be most true) for that God would haue it so, when the duke came with six or seuen score horsemen well appointed for the purpose, presenting himselfe before the citie in hope to bée receiued, hée was kept out. For the citizens through comfort of the erle of Huntington that was then come downe, sent by the quéene to staie the countries from falling to the duke, and to raise a power to apprehend him, had put themselues in armor, and made all the prouision they could to defend the citie against the said duke. Whereupon perceiuing himselfe destitute of all such aid as he looked for among his friends in the two shires of Leicester and Warwike, he got him to his manour of Astleie, distant from Couentrie fiue miles, there appointing his companie to disperse themselues, and to make the best shift each one for his owne safegard that he might, and distributing to euerie of them a portion of monie, according to their qualities, and his store at that present, he and the lord John Greie his brother bestowed themselues in secret places there within Astleie parke; but through the vntrustinesse of them, to whose trust they did commit themselues (as hath béene crediblie reported) they were bewraied to the earle of Huntington, that then was come to Couentrie, and so apprehended they were by the said earle, and afterwards brought vp to London.

The duke of Suffolke apprehended.

The duke of Suffolke kept out of Conentrie.

The duke had meant at first to haue rid awaie (as I haue crediblie heard) if promise had béene kept by one of his seruants, appointed to come to him to be his guide; but when he either feining himselfe sicke, or being sicke in déed, came not, the duke was constreined to remaine in the parke there at Astleie, hoping yet to get awaie after that the search had béene passed ouer, and the countrie once in quiet. Howsoeuer it was, there he was taken, as is said, togither with his brother the lord John Greie; but his brother the lord Thomas got awaie in deed at that time, meaning to haue fled into Wales, & there to haue got to the sea side, so to transport himselfe ouer into France, or into some other forren part. But in the borders of Wales he was likewise apprehended through his great mishap, and follie of his man that had forgot his capcase with monie behind him in his chamber one morning at his inne; and comming for it againe, vpon examination what he should be, it was mistrusted that his maister should be some such man, as he was in déed, and so was staied, taken, and brought vp to London, where he suffered, as after shall appeare.

The lord John Greie taken.

The lord Thomas Greie taken.

But now to returne vnto sir Thomas Wiat. After that the Londoners were reuolted to him, as before ye haue heard; the next daie being tuesdaie the thirtith of Januarie, he marched forth with his bands, and six péeces of ordinance (which they had gotten of the quénes) besides their owne. And first they came to Cowling castell, an hold of the lord Cobhams, foure miles distant from Rochester, and not much out of the waie towards London, whither they were now fullie determined to go, in hope of friends which they trusted to find within and about the citie. At their comming to Cowling, knowing that the lord Cobham was within the castell, they bent their ordinance against the gate, breaking it with sundrie shots, and burning it vp with fier, made a waie through it. The said lord Cobham defended the place as stoutlie as he might, hauing but a few against so great a number, and so little store of munition for his defense: he himselfe yet discharged his gun at such as approched the gate right hardilie, and in that assault two of his men were slaine. After this assault, and talke had with the lord Cobham, sir Thomas Wiat marched to Grauesend, where he rested that night.

Cowling castell.

The lord Cobham.

The next daie he came to Dartford with his bands, and laie there that night, whither came to him sir Edward Hastings maister of the quénes horsse, and sir Thomas Cornwallis knights, both being of the quénes priuie councell, and now sent from hir vnto sir Thomas Wiat, to vnderstand the cause of his commotion. When he vnderstood they were come, he toke with him certeine of his band to the west end of the towne, where he had lodged his ordinance. And at the lighting downe of sir Edward Hastings and his associat, sir Thomas Wiat hauing a partisan in his hand, aduancing himselfe somewhat afore such gentlemen as were with him, traced neere them:

to

to whome the maister of the horsse spake in substance as followeth. The quéenes maiestie requireth to vnderstand the verie cause wherefore you haue thus gathered togither in armes hir liege people, which is the part of a traitor, and yet in your proclamations and persuasions, you call your selfe a true subiect, which can not stand togither I am no traitor quoth Wiat, and the cause wherefore I haue gathered the people, is to defend the realme from danger of being ouerrun with strangers, which must follow, this mariage taking place.

Why, quoth the quéenes agents, there be no strangers yet come, who either for power or number ye néed to suspect. But if this be your onelie quarrell, because ye mislike the mariage; will ye come to communication touching that cause, and the quæne of hir gratious goodnesse is content ye shall be heard. I yéld thereto, quoth sir Thomas Wiat: but for my suertie I will rather be trusted than trust, and therefore demanded, as some haue written, the custodie of the tower, and hir grace within it; also the displacing of some councellors about hir, and to haue other placed in their romes. There was long & stout conference betwéene them, in so much that the maister of the horsse said: Wiat, before thou shalt haue thy traitorous demand granted, thou shalt die, and twentie thousand with thée. And so the said maister of the horsse, and sir Thomas Cornewallis, perceiuing they could not bring him to that point they wished, returned to the court, aduertising the quéene what they had heard of him. The same daie being the first of Februarie, proclamation was made in London by an herald, to signifie that the duke of Suffolkes companie of horssemen were scattered, and that he himselfe and his brethren were fled. Also that sir Peter Carew, and sir Gawen Carew knights, and William Gibs esquire, which being parties to the conspiracie of the said duke, with sir Thomas Wiat & others, were likewise fled. True it was that sir Peter Carew, perceiuing himselfe in danger to be apprehended, about the thrée and twentith of Januarie last past fled out of the realme, and escaped into France: but the other taried behind and were taken.

Moreouer, on this first daie of Februarie being Candlemas euen, the emperors ambassadors, of whome ye haue heard before, hearing of Wiats hastie approching thus towards London, sped themselues awaie by water, and that with all hast. The quæne then lieng at hir palace of White hall beside Westminster, and hearing of hir enimies so néere, was counselled for hir safegard to take the tower of London, whereunto she would by no meanes be persuaded. Neuertheless, to make hir selfe more stronger of friends in the citie, so soone as the said ambassadors were departed, she came to the Guildhall in London: against which time, order was taken by the lord maior, that the chiefe citizens in their liueries should be there present. After that the quæne had taken hir place in the said hall, and silence made, she with verie good countenance vttered in effect this oration following.

Wiats requests.

Proclamation that the duke of Suffolke and others were fled.

The emperors ambassadors flée from Wiat.

Queene Maries oration in Guildhall in a solemne assemblie.

Queéne Maries oration to the Londoners.

I Am (quoth shee) come vnto you in mine owne person, to tell you that which alreadie you doo sée and know, that is, how traitorouslie & seditiouslie a number of Kentish rebels haue assembled themselues togither against both vs and you. Their pretense (as they said at the first) was onelie to resist a mariage determined betwéene vs and the prince of Spaine. To the which pretended quarrell, and to all the rest of their euill contriued articles ye haue béene made priuie. Since which time, we haue caused diuerse of our priuie councell to resort ekssones to the said rebels, and to demand of them the cause of their continuance in their seditious enterprise. By whose answers made againe to our said councell, it appeared that the mariage is found to be the least of their quarrell. For they now swarming from their former articles, haue bewraied the inward treason of their hearts, as most arrogantlie demanding the possession of our person, the kéeping of our tower, and not onelie the placing & displacing of our counsellors; but also to vse them & vs at their pleasures.

Demands are pretended to be sent from M. Wiat and his companie to quéene Marie.

Now louing subiects, what I am, you right well know. I am your quéene, to whome at my coronation when I was wedded to the realme, and to the lawes of the same (the spousall ring whereof I haue on my finger, which neuer hitherto was, nor hereafter shall be left off) ye promised your allegiance and obedience vnto me. And that I am the right and true inheritor to the crowne of this realme of England; I not onelie take all christendome to witnesse, but also your acts of parlement confirming the same. My father (as ye all know) possessed the regall estate by right of inheritance, which now by the same right descended vnto me. And to him alwaies ye shewed your selues most faithfull and loning subiects, and him obeied and serued as your liege lord & king: and therefore I doubt not but you will shew your selues likewise to me his daughter. Which if you doo, then maie you not suffer anie rebell to vsurpe the gouernance of our person, or to occupie our estate, especiallie being so presumptuous a traitor as this Wiat hath shewed himselfe to be; who must certeinlie, as he hath abused my ignorant subiects to be adherents to his traitorous quarrell: so doth he intend by colour of the same, to subdue the lawes to his will, and to giue scope to the rascall and forlorne persons, to make generall hauocke and spoile of your goods. And this further I say vnto you in the word of a prince, I cannot tell how naturallie a mother loueth hir children, for I was neuer the mother of anie; but certeinlie a prince and gouernor may as naturallie and as earnestlie loue subiects, as the mother doth hir child. Then assure your selues, that I being your souereigne ladie & quéene, doo as earnestlie and as tenderlie loue and fauour you. And I thus louing you, cannot but thinke that ye as hartilie and faithfullie loue me againe: and so louing togither in this knot of loue and concord, I doubt not, but we togither shall be able to giue these rebels a short and spéedie ouerthrow.

How he pretended the spoile of their goods it appeareth in that he comming to Southworke, did hurt neither man, woman, nor child, neither in bodie nor in a pennie of their goods.

And as concerning the case of my intended marriage, against which they pretend their quarrell, ye shall vnderstand that I entred not into the treatie thereof without aduise of all our priuie councell; yea, and by assent of those to whome the king my father committed his trust, who so considered & weighed the great commodities that might insue thereof, that they not onlie thought it very honorable, but expedient, both for the wealth of our realme, and also of all our louing subiects. And as touching my selfe (I assure you) I am not so desirous of wedding, neither so precise or wedded to my will, that either for mine owne pleasure I will chose where I lust, or else so amorous as néeds I must haue one. For God I thanke him (to whome be the praise thereof) I haue hitherto liued a virgine, and doubting nothing but with Gods grace shall as well be able so to liue still. But if as my progenitors haue done before, it might please God that I might leaue some fruit of my bodie behind me to be your gouernour, I trust you would not onelie reioise thereat, but also I know it would be to your great comfort. And certeinlie if I either did know or thinke, that this marriage should either turne to the danger or losse of anie of you my louing subiects, or to the detriment or impairing of anie part or parcell of the rotall estate of this realme of England, I would neuer consent thereunto, neither would I euer marrie while I liued. And in the word of a quéene I promise and assure you, that if it shall not probablie appéere before the nobilitie and commons in the high court of parlement, that this marriage shall be for the singular benefit and commoditie of all the whole realme; that then I will abstéine, not onelie from this marriage, but also from anie other, whereof perill maie insue to this most noble realme. Wherefore now as good & faithfull subiects plucke vp your harts, and like true men stand fast with your lawfull prince against these rebelles, both our enimies and yours, and feare them not: for assure you that I feare them nothing at all, & I will leaue with you my lord Howard, and my lord treasuror to be your assistants, with my lord maior, for the defense and safegard of this citie from spoile and saccage, which is onelie the scope of this rebellious companie.

Quéene Marie excuseth hir mariage.

The promise of quéene Marie touching hir marriage.

After this oration ended, the citizens séeming well satisfied therewith, the quéene with the lords of the councell returned to White hall from whence she came: and forthwith the lord William Howard was associate with the lord maior of London, whose name was sir Thomas White for the protection and defense of the citie. And for more suertie, as well of hir owne person, as also of hir councellors and other subiects, she prepared a great armie to méet with the said rebelles in the field, of which armie William Herbert earle of Penbroke was made generall, which earle with all spéed requisite in such a case, prepared all things necessarie to such a seruice belonging. The same daie sir Thomas Wiat hauing with him fouretéene ensignes, conteining about foure thousand men, although they were accounted to be a farre greater number, marched to Detford strand, eight miles from Detford, and within foure miles of London; where vpon such aduertisement as he receiued by spiall, of the quéens being in the Guildhall, & the order of the people to hir wards, he remained that night & the nert whole daie; diuerse of his owne companie doubting by his longer tarrieng there than in other places, and vpon other presumptions which they gathered, that he would haue passed the water into Esser.

Wiat marched to Detford strand.

His prisoners Christopher Roper, George Dorrell, and John Tucke esquiers, who were kept somewhat strict, for that they séemed sicklie, and finding within the towne no conuenient harborough or attendance, were licenced by sir Thomas Wiat, vpon promise of their worships to be true prisoners, to prouide for themselues out from the towne, where they best might. But they breaking promise with him, sought waies to escape and come no more at him. On saturdaie following verie earlie Wiat marched to Southworke, where approching the gate at London bridge foot, he called to them within to haue it opened: which he found not so readie as he loked for. After he had béene a little while in Southworke, and began to trench at the bridge foot, and set two péeces of ordinance against the gate, diuerse of his soldiors went to Winchester place, where one of them (being a gentleman) began to fall to rifling of things found in the house. Wherewith sir Thomas Wiat séemed so much offended, that he threatned sore to hang him euen presentlie there vpon the wharfe, and so as he made others to beléeue he meant to haue done, if capteine Bret and others had not intreated for him.

Wiat suffereth his prisoners to go abrode vpon their word.

Wiat cōmeth into Southworke.

The lord William Howard lord admerall of England, being appointed by the quéens commission capteine generall, with the lord maior sir Thomas White, watched at the bridge that night with three hundred men, caused the draw bridge to be hewen downe into the Thames, made rampiers and fortifications there, fensing the same with great ordinance. Wiat yet aduentured the breaking downe of a wall out of an house ioining to the gate at the bridge foot, whereby he might enter into the leads ouer the gate, & came downe into the lodge about eleuen of the clocke in the night, where he found the porter in a slumber, and his wife with other waking, and watching ouer a cole; but beholding Wiat, they began suddenlie to start as greatlie amazed. Whilt quoth Wiat, as you loue your liues sit still, you shall haue no hurt. Glad were they of that warrant, and so were quiet, and made no noise. Wiat and a few with him went forth as farre as the draw bridge: on the other side whereof he saw the lord admerall, the lord maior, sir Andrew Jud, and one or two others in consultation for ordering of the bridge, whereunto he gaue diligent hed and eare a good while, and was not séene.

Sir Thomas Wiats desperat attempt.

This done, he returned and said to some of his companie; This place sirs is too hot for vs. And herevpon falling in counsell what was best to do: some gaue aduise that it should be good to returne to Grénewich, and so to passe the water into Esser, whereby their companie (as they thought) should increase, and then assaie to enter into London by Aldgate: and some were of opinion, that it were better to go to Kingston vpon Thames, and so further west. Other there were, among which sir Thomas Wiat himselfe was chiefe, would haue returned into Kent to méet with the lord of Aburgauenie, the lord Warden, the shiriffe, sir Thomas Poile, sir Thomas Kempe, sir Thomas Finch, and others that were at Rochester, comming on Wiats backe, with a great companie well appointed, persuading himselfe (whether truelie or not I know not) that he should find among them more friends than enimies. But whether his desire to returne into Kent grew vpon hope he had to find aid there, or rather to shift himselfe awaie, it was doubted of his owne companie; and some of them that knew him well (except they were much deceiued) reported not long before their execution, that his desire to returne into Kent, was onelie to shift himselfe ouer the sea.

Wiat and his complices fall into consultation.

The lord Warden being at Rochester (as yée haue heard) well furnished both with horsse and men, perfectlie appointed to no small number, was willing to haue followed after Wiat, and to haue shewed his good will against him in the quéens quarrell: but yet vpon deliberation had, & aduise taken with others that were there with him, he thought good first to vnderstand the quéenes pleasure how to proceed in his dealings; and herevpon he rode post to the quéene himselfe, leauing the lord of Aburgauennie and the rest of the gentlemen with his and their bands behind till his returne. On sundaie the fourth of Februarie, the lord admerall caused a strong ward of three hundred men to be kept on the bridge till eight of the clocke at night, and then (for their releefe) entred the watch of other three hundred: so that the bridge was thus garded both daie and night with three hundred men in armor. It troubled Wiat and all his companie verie sore, to sée that London did so stiffelie stand and hold out against them: for in the assistance which they loked to haue had of that citie, all their hope of prosperous spéd consisted. But now that they saw themselues greatlie disappointed therein, therein, they meant yet to set all on a hazard. And so the first of Februarie being Shrouetuesdaie, afore six of the clocke in the morning, they departed out of Southwarke, marching directlie towards Kingstone ten miles distant from London, standing vpon the Thames, where they arrived about foure of the clocke in the after noone: and finding thirtie fot or thereabout of the bridge taken awaie, saving the posts that were left standing; Wiat practised with two mariners to swim ouer, and to conuaie a barge to him, which the mariners through great promises of preferment accordinglie did, wherein Wiat and certeine with him were conueied ouer: who in the meane time that the number of soldiors baited in the towne, caused the bridge to be repaired with ladders, planks and beames, the same being tied togither with ropes and boords, so as by ten of the clocke in the night it was in such plight, that both his ordinance and companies of men might passe ouer without perill. And so about eleuen of the clocke in the same night, Wiat with his armie passing ouer the bridge without either resistance or perill, & before it could be once knowne at the court, marched toward London, meaning (as some haue written) to haue bin at the court gate before daie that morning. Neuertheles, before he came within six miles of the citie staieng for a peece of his great artillerie which was dismounted by the waie, his comming was discouered before daie: wherby the erle of Penbroke generall of the quéenes armie was with his men in good order of battell in S. James field beside Westminster, two or three houres yer Wiat could reach thither.

The lord Warden of the cinque ports verie willing to followe after Wiat.

Wiat at his wits end.

The earle hauing vnderstanding by his espials, what waie Wiat would march, placed his armie in this order. First, in a field on the west side of saint James were all his men of armes, and demilances; ouer against whome in the lane next to the parke, were placed all the light horssemen. All which bands of horssemen were vnder the charge of the lord Clinton, being marshall of the field. The great artillerie was planted in the middest and highest place of the causeie next to the house of saint James, with certeine field peeces lieng on the flanke of ech battell. After that both the armies were in sight, and that the great artillerie began to thunder from either side without harme (as it happened to either of both) Wiat perceiuing that he could not come vp the fore right waie without great disaduantage, when he was come to the parke corner, he leauing the causeie, swarued, and toke the nether waie towards saint James. Which being perceiued by the quéenes horssemen, who laie on either side of him, they gaue a sudden charge, and diuided his battell asunder hard behind Wiats ensignes, whereby so manie as were not passed before with Wiat, were forced to flie backe towards Brainford: and certeine of his companie which escaped the charge, passed by the backe side of saint James towards Westminster, and from thense to the court: and finding the gates shut against them, staid there a while, and shot off manie arrowes into the windowes, and ouer into the garden, neuertheless without anie hurt there that was knowne. Whereupon the said rebels, ouer whom one Kneuet was capteine, perceiuing themselues to be too few to do anie great feat there, departed from thense to follow Wiat, who was gone before toward London: and being on their waie at Charingcrosse, were there incountered by sir Henrie Jerningham capteine of the quænes gard, sir Edward Braie maister of the ordinance, and sir Philip Paris knights, which were sent by the order of the earle of Penbroke with a band of archers, and certeine field peeces for the rescue of the court, who incountered the said rebels at Charingcrosse aforesaid, after they had discharged their field peeces vpon them, ioined with those rebels, halfe armed, and halfe vnarmed, at the push of the pike, & verie soone dispersed their power; whereof some fled into the lane toward saint Giles, & some on the other side by a brewhouse towards the Thames. In this conflict, which was the chiefe triall of that daie, there was not found slaine to the number of twentie of those rebels. Which happened by reason that vpon their ioining with the quæns soldiors, the one part could not be discerned from the other, but onelie by the mire and dirt taken by the waie, which stacke vpon their garments comming in the night: wherefore the crie on the quéenes part that daie was; Downe with the daggle tailes.

But now to returne to Wiat, of whome ye heard before, who being come to the parke corner, and perceiuing the perill apparant, if he should haue marched straight vpon the earls battels, which were raised on either side of the causeie, did therefore politikelie turne from the great causeie, marching along the wall of the house of saint James towards London: which could not haue béene without his no little losse of manie of his traine, if those that had the charge on that side the field, had béene as forward in seruice as the earle with his battell, and the horssemen before shewed themselues to be. Neuertheless Wiat following his purposed enterprise, which was to haue entered into London, where he hoped of great aid, marched on with the small companie that was left him, as far as a common inne called the Bell sauage, néere to Ludgate, beléeuing to haue found some readie there to haue receiued him; wherin his hope was much deceiued, finding the said gate fast shut, and stronglie garded with a number as well of most honest cittizens, as also of other bands of the quénes assured friends. Whereupon Wiat, who comming towards the citie, made himselfe sure of his enterprise, now desperat of the same, was faine to turne his face, retiring backe againe to Temple-barre, where he with the rest of his retinue determined (as it séemed) to trie their last fortune.

The earle of Penbroke (who all this while kept his force togither in the field) hearing of Wiats approch to London, sent to him an herald called Clarenceaur, with great communication to desist from his rebellious enterprise. Which herald did his message accordinglie, albeit that some said he promised the said Wiat his pardon: which should not séeme to be true, as well for that the herald had no such commission, as also that it was not like, that the said Wiat being then disarmed of all his forces, would haue refused mercie in such a case. For true it is, that he with a verie few of his forlorne fellowship, not manie aboue the number of one hundred persons, stood still as men amazed at the gate of the Temple-barre, till such time as sir Maurice Barkleie knight, by chance riding towards London vpon his horsse, with footcloth, without anie armour, finding the said Wiat there, persuaded him to repaire to the court, and to yéeld himselfe to the quéene. Whose aduise he followed, and incontinent mounted vp on the said sir Maurice horsse behind him, and so road to the court voluntarilie to yéeld himselfe prisoner.

This comming of Wiat to the court being so little looked for, was great cause of reioising to such as of late before stood in great feare of him. But more than maruell it was to sée that daie, the inuincible heart and constancie of the quéene hir selfe, who being by nature a woman, and therefore commonlie more fearefull than men be, shewed hir selfe in that case more stout than is credible. For she, notwithstanding all the fearefull newes that were brought to hir that daie, neuer abashed. Insomuch that when one or two noblemen being hir captéins, Wiat marcheth to Kingstone.

Wiat repareth the bridge at Kingstone.

Hol. Grafton.

The earle of Penbroke setteth the armie in order.

Wiat cometh to the parke corner, &c.

A skirmish at Charingcrosse betweén Wiats powers and the quénes forces.

Wiat marcheth alongst the wall of saint James towards London.

An herald sent to Wiat willing him to desist from his enterprise.

Sir Thomas Wiat submitteth himselfe to the quéene.

The stout courage of quéene Marie.

came in all hast to tell hir (though vntrulie) that hir battels were yéelded to Wiat. She nothing moued thereat, said it was their fond opinion that durst not come nére to sée the triall, saieng further, that she hir selfe would enter the field to trie the truth of hir quarrell, and to die with them that would serue hir, rather than to yéeld one iot vnto such a traitor as Wiat was, and prepared hir selfe accordinglie.

But by the apprehension of Wiat that votage toke none effect: for after his comming to the court he was immediatlie committed to the Tower. As sone as the taking of Wiat was knowns, the armie (whereof mention is made before that laie in saint James field) was discharged, and euerie man licenced to depart to his home. And forthwith proclamation was made, as well in the citie of London as in the suburbs of the same, that none vpon paine of death should kéepe in his or their houses anie of Wiats faction; but should bring them forth immediatlie before the lord maior, and other the quéenes iustices. By reason of which proclamation a great multitude of their said poore caitifs were brought forth, being so manie in number, that all the prisons in London sufficed not to receiue them: so that for lacke of place they were faine to bestow them in diuerse churches of the said citie. And shortlie after were set vp in London for a terrour to the common sort (bicause the white cotes being sent out of the citie, as before ye haue heard, reuolted from the quéens part to the aid of Wiat) twentie paire of gallowes, on the which were hanged in seuerall places to the number of fiftie persons, which gallowes remained standing there a great part of the summer following to the great griefe of good citizens, and for example to the commotioners.

Proclamation that none should kéepe in his house anie of Wiats faction.

Abr.Fl. ex I.S. pag.1087,1088 1089.

¶As for the principals of this faction, namelie Thomas Wiat, William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, two brethren named Mantels, and Alexander Bret were brought by sir Henrie Jerningam by water to the tower prisoners, where sir Philip Denie receiued them at the bulwarke, & as Wiat passed by he said; Go traitor, there was neuer such a traitor in England. To whom sir Thomas Wiat turned, and said, I am no traitor, I would thou shouldst well know thou art more traitor than I, it is not the point of an honest man to call me so, and so went forth. When he came to the tower gate, sir Thomas Brydges lieutenant toke in through the wicket, first Mantell, and said: Ah thou traitor, what hast thou and thy companie wrought? But he holding downe his head said nothing. Then came Thomas Kneuet, whom maister chamberleine gentleman porter of the tower toke in. Then came Alexander Bret, whome sir Thomas Pope toke by the bosome, saieng: Oh traitor, how couldest thou find in thy heart to worke such a villanie, as to take wages, and being trusted ouer a band of men, to fall to hir enimies, returning against hir in battell. Bret answered Yea; I haue offended in that case. Then came Thomas Cobham, whome sir Thomas Poines toke in, and said, Alas maister Cobham, what wind headed you to worke such treason? And he answered, Oh sir I was seduced. Then came in sir Thomas Wiat, whom sir John Brydges toke by the collar and said, Oh thou villen & vnhappie traitor, how couldest thou find in thy hart to worke such detestable treason to the quéenes maiestie, who gaue thée thy life and liuing once alreadie, although thou diddest before this time beare armes in the field against hir, and now to yéeld hir battell, &c. If it were not (saith he) but that the law must passe vpon thee, I would sticke thée through with my dagger. To the which Wiat holding his arms vnder his side, and loking grieuouslie with a grim loke vpon the lieutenant, said; It is no maisterie now: and so passed on. Thomas Wiat had on a shirt of maile, with slæues verie faire, theron a veluet sallocke, and a yellow lace, with the windlace of his dag hanging thereon, and a paire of boots on his legs, and on his head a faire hat of veluet, with a broad bone-worke lace about it. William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, and Bret, were the like apparelled.

Wiat sent to the tower.

Sir Thomas Brydges lieutenant of the tower.

The zeale of the lieutenant sheweth it self by his hot language.

On the morrow and the nert daie following were brought into the tower prisoners, George Cobham, sir William Cobham, Anthonie Kneuet, Hugh Woth, Thomas Vane, Robert Rudstone, sir George Harper, Edward Wiat, Edward Fog, George Moore, and Cutbert Vaughan. The tenth of Februarie, the earle of Huntington and other gentlemen, and to the number of three hundred horsemen, brought to the tower as prisoners the duke of Suffolke, and the lord John Greie his brother from Couentrie, where the duke had remained three daies after his taking in the house and custodie of Christopher Warren alderman there. The eleuenth daie sir Henrie Isleie who had fled, was brought into the tower in an old freese cote, an old paire of hosen, all his apparell not worth foure shillings. The same daie came in two of the Culpepers, one Cromar, & Thomas Rampton the duke of Suffolks secretarie.

The duke of Suffolke and the lord Grei brought to the tower.

Sir Henrie Isleie.

The twelfe of Februarie being mondaie, about ten of the clocke, there went out of the tower to the scaffold on the tower hill, the lord Gilford Dudleie, sonne to the duke of Northumberland, husband to the ladie Jane Greie daughter to the duke of Suffolke; and without the bulworke gate, maister Thomas Offleie one of the shiriffes of London receiued him and brought him to the scaffold, where after a small declaration he kneeled downe and said his praiers. Then holding vp his eies & hands to heauen with teares, at the last he desired the people to praie for him, & after he was beheaded. His bodie being laid in a cart, and his head in a cloth, was brought into the chappell within the tower, where the ladie Jane, whose lodging was in maister Patridges house, did see his dead carcasse taken out of the cart, as well as she did see him before aliue going to his death: a sight (as might be supposed) to hir worse than death. By this time was there a scaffold made vpon the greene ouer against the white tower, for the ladie Jane to die vpon, who being nothing at all abashed neither with feare of hir owne death, which then approched, neither with the sight of the dead carcasse of hir husband when he was brought into the chapell, came forth, the lieutenant leading hir, with countenance nothing abashed, neither hir eies anie thing moistened with teares, with a booke in hir hand, wherein she praied vntill she came to the said scaffold. Whereon when she was mounted, this noble yong ladie as she was indued with singular gifts both of learning and knowledge, so was she as patient and mild as anie lambe at hir execution: and a little before hir death vttered these words.]

The lord Gilford Dudleie executed on the tower.

The behauior of the ladie Jane lead to execution.

The words of the ladie Iane at hir death, on a scaffold vpon the greene ouer against the white tower.

GOod people I am come hither to die, and by a law I am condemned to the same. My offense against the quænes highnes was onelie in consent to the deuice of other, which now is deemed treason; but it was neuer of my seeking, but by counsell of those who should seeme to haue further vnderstanding of things than I, which knew little of the law, and much lesse of the titles to the crowne. But touching the procurement and desire therof by me, or on my behalfe, I dow wash my hands in innocencie thereof before God, and the face of all you (good christian people) this daie. And therwith she wrong hir hands wherin she had hir booke. Then (said she) I praie you all good christian people, to beare me witnesse that I die a true christian woman, & that I looke to be saued by none other meanes, but onelie by the mercie of God, in the bloud of his onelie sonne Jesus Christ; & I confesse that when I did know the word of God, I neglected the same, & loued my selfe and the world, and therefore this plague and punishment is iustlie & worthilie happened vnto me for my sins, & yet I thanke God of his goodnesse, that he hath giuen me a time and respit to repent. And now good people while I am aliue, I praie you assist me with your praiers.

to

Then kneeling downe, she said the psalme of Miserere mei Deus, in English, and then stood vp and gaue hir maid (called mistresse Ellin) hir gloues and handkercher, and hir booke she also gaue to maister Bridges then lieutenant of the tower, and so vntied hir gowne; and the executioner prested to helpe hir off with it, but she desired him to let hir alone, and turned hir toward hir two gentlewomen, who helped hir off therewith, and with hir other attires, and they gaue hir a faire handkercher to put about hir eies. Then the executioner kneeled downe and asked hir forgiuenesse, whom she forgaue most willinglie. Then he willed hir to stand vpon the straw, which done, she saw the blocke, & then she said; I praie you dispatch me quicklie. Then she kneeled downe, saieng; Will you take it off before I laie me downe? Wherunto the executioner answered, No madame. Then tied she the handkercher about hir eies, and feeling for the blocke, she said; Where is it, where is it? One of the standers by guided hir thereunto, and she laid downe hir head vpon the blocke, and then stretched forth hir bodie, and said; Lord into thy hands I commend my spirit, and so finished hir life. ¶ This was the end of the lord Gilford and the ladie Jane, whose deaths were the more hastened for feare of further troubles and stirs for hir title, like as hir father had attempted.]

The executioner asked the ladie Jane forgiuenesse.

I. Stow.

Iohn Fox.

Thus (as saith maister Fox) were beheaded two innocents, in comparison of them that sat vpon them: for they did but ignorantlie accept that which the others had willinglie deuised, and by open proclamation consented to take from others, and giue to them. And verelie how vnwilling she was to take it vpon hir, there are yet liuing that can testifie.

Iudge Morgan fell mad.

Iudge Morgan now that gaue the sentence against hir, shortlie after fell mad, and in his raging cried continuallie to haue the ladie Jane taken awaie from him, and so ended his life. ¶ Touching this ladie Jane in the high commendation of hir godlie mind, Abr. Fl. ex I. F. Mart.

I find this report in maister Foxes appendix to his Acts and Monuments, namelie that being on a time when she was verie yong at Newhall in Essex at the ladie Maries, was by one ladie Anne Wharton desired to walke, and they passing by the chapell, the ladie Wharton made low curtsie to the popish sacrament hanging on the altar. Which when the ladie Jane saw marueled why she did so, and asked hir whether the ladie Marie were there or not? Vnto whome the ladie Wharton answered no, but she said that she made hir curtsie to him that made vs all. Why quoth the ladie Jane, how can he be there that made vs all, and the baker made him? This hir answer comming to the ladie Maries eare, she did neuer loue hir after, as is crediblie reported, but esteemed hir as the rest of that christian profession. In further witnesse of which good ladies disposition (both to God and the world) besides the verses of certeine learned men extant to hir praise, these following were found written by hir owne hand with a pin:

Non aliena putes homini, quæ obtingere possunt,
Sors hodierna mihi, cras erit illa tibi.

Iane Dudley.

Deo iuuante, nil nocet liuor malus,
Et non iuuante, nil iuuat labor grauis.
Post tenebras spero videre lucem.

Upon saturdaie being the seuentéenth of Februarie the duke of Suffolke was arreigned at Westminster, and there condemned to die by his péres, the earle of Arundell being that daie chiefe iudge. Where some haue written that he should at his last going downe into the countrie make proclamation in his daughters name, that is not so: for whereas he stood by in Leicester, when at his commandement the proclamation was there made against the quænes mariage with the prince of Spaine, &c: maister Damport then maior of that towne said to him: My lord I trust your grace meaneth no hurt to the quænes maiestie. No saith he maister maior (laieng his hand on his sword) he that would hir anie hurt, I would this sword were through his hart, for she is the mercifullest prince, as I haue trulie found hir, that euer reigned, in whose defense I am & will be readie to die at hir fot. ¶ On mondaie the nintéenth of Februarie, the lord Cobhams three sonnes, and foure other men were brought to Westminster, the yongest of the Cobhams, to wit maister Thomas Cobham was condemned with the other foure men, but the other two Cobhams came not to the barre. ¶ On the wednesdaie the one and twentith of Februarie the lord Thomas Greie that had bene taken (as before ye haue heard) in Wales, was brought togither with sir James Croft through London to the tower, by a number of horsemen.

The duke of Suffolke.

Iohn Fox.

Upon the fridaie the three and twentith of Februarie, about nine of the clocke, the duke of Suffolke was brought forth of the tower vnto the scaffold on the tower hill. And in his comming thither, there accompanied him doctor Weston, as his ghostlie father: notwithstanding (as it should seeme) against the will of the said duke. For when the duke went vp the scaffold, the said Weston being on his left hand, prested to go vp with him. The duke with his hand put him downe againe off the staires, and Weston taking hold of the duke forced him downe likewise. And as they ascended the second time, the duke againe put him downe. Then Weston said, that it was the quænes pleasure he should so do: wherewith the duke calling his hands abrode, ascended vp the scaffold, and pansed a prettie while after, and then he said.

The duke of Suffolke beheaded.

Doctor Weston.

The duke of Suffolks words to the people at the time of his death.

MAisters, I haue offended the quæne and hir lawes, and thereby am iustlie condemned to die, and am willing to die, desiring all men to be obedient; and I praie God that this my death maie be an example to all men: beseeching you all to beare mee witnesse that I die in the faith of Christ, trusting to be saued by his bloud onelie (and by none other trumperie) the which died for me, and for all them that doo truelie repent, & stedfastlie trust in him. And I doo repent, desiring you all to pray to God for me, that when ye see my breath depart from me, you will praie to God that he maie receiue my soule. And then hee desired all men to forgiue him, saieng that the quæne had forgiuen him.

Then maister Weston declared with a lowd voice that the quænes maiestie had forgiuen him. Then diuers of the standers by said with audible voice; Such forgiuenes God send thee, meaning doctor Weston. Then the duke knæled vpon his knees, and said the psalme Miserere mei Deus, vnto the end, holding vp his hands, and loking vp to heauen. And when he had ended the psalme, he said; In manus tuas Domine commendo spiritum meum. Then he arose and stood vp, and deliuered his cap and scarffe to the executioner, and therewith the executioner knæled downe: and asked the duke forgiuenesse, and the duke said, God forgiue thee, and I doo: and when thou dost thine office, I praie thee doo it quicklie, and God haue mercie to thee. Then stood there a man and said, My lord, how shall I doo for the monie that you doo owe me? And the duke said, Alas good fellow, I praie thee trouble me not now, but go thy waie to my officers. Then he knit a kercher about his face, and knæled downe and said, Our father which art in heauen, &c. vnto the end: and then he said, Christ haue mercie vpon mie, and laid downe his head on the blocke: and the executioner toke the axe, and at the first chop stroke off his head, and held it vp to the people, according to the common custome of execution.

The duke of Suffolke described.

Such was the end of this duke of Suffolke, a man of high nobilitie by birth, and of nature to his friend gentle and courteous, more easie in deed to be led than was thought expedient, of stomach neuertheless stout and hardie, hastie and soone kindled, but pacified streight againe, and sorie if in his heat ought had passed him otherwise than reason might seeme to beare, vpright and plaine in his priuat dealings, no dissembler, nor well able to beare iniuries, but yet forgiuing & forgetting the same, if the partie would seeme but to acknowlege his fault, and seeke reconcilement. Bountifull he was and verie liberall, somwhat learned himselfe, and a great fauourer of those that were learned, so that to manie he shewed himselfe a verie Mecænas: as free from couetousnesse, as void of pride and disdainefull hautinesse of mind, more regarding plaine meaning men, than clawbacke flatterers. And this vertue he had, he could patientlie heare his faults told him, by those whome he had in credit for their wisdome and faithfull meaning toward him, although sometime he had the hap to reforme himselfe thereafter. Concerning his last offense for the which he died, it is to be supposed, he rather toke in hand that vnlawfull enterprise through others persuasions, than of his owne motion for any malicious ambition in himselfe.

Great pitie that so manie good gifts concurring should suffer disgrace.

But now to let this duke rest with God, we will proceed with the storie. The same daie (or as some haue noted the day before) a number of prisoners had their pardon, and came through the citie with their halters about their necks. They were in * number aboue two hundred. Vpon the saturdaie, the eight and twentith of Februarie, sir William Sentlow was committed as prisoner to the maister of the horsse to be kept. This sir William was at this time one of the ladie Elizabeths gentlemen. Upon the sundaie being the fiue and twentith of Februarie, sir John Rogers was committed to the tower. Upon the tuesdaie in the same weeke being the seuen & twentith of Februarie, certeine gentlemen of Kent were sent into Kent to be executed there. Their names were these: the two Mantels, two Kneuets, and Bret: with these maister Rudston also, and certeine other were condemned, and should haue beene executed, but they had their pardon.

* The number of them that thus had their pardon were 240.

Gentlemen sent into Kent to be executed.

Sir Henrie Isleie knight, Thomas Isleie his brother, and Walter Mantell, suffered at Maidston, where Wiat first displated his banner. Anthonie Kneuet and his brother William Kneuet, with an other of the Mantels, were executed at Seuenocke: Bret at Rochester was hanged in chains. On saturdaie the third of March, sir Gawen Carew, and maister Gibs were brought thorough London to the tower, with a companie of horssemen. The fiftæenth daie of March next following, the ladie Elizabeth the quænes sister, and next heire to the crowne, was apprehended at hir manour of Ashridge, for suspicion of Wiats conspiracie. And from thence (being that time verie sicke) with great rigour brought prisoner to London. On the sundaie after being the seuentæenth of March, she was commited to the tower, where also the lord Courtneie earle of Deuonshire (of whome before is made mention) was for the like suspicion committed prisoner.

Execution.

Ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie prisoners in the tower.

¶ Touching the imprisonment of the foresaid ladie Elizabeth, & the lord Courtneie, thou shalt note here for thy learning (good reader) a politike point of practise in Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester, not vnworthie to be considered. This Gardiner being alwaies a capitall enimie to ladie Elizabeth, & thinking now by the occasion of maister Wiat to picke out some matter against the lord Courtneie, and so in the end to intangle the ladie Elizabeth, deuised a pestilent practise of conueiance, as in the storie here following maie apeare. The storie is this. The same daie that sir Thomas died, he desired the lieutenant to bring him to the presence of the lord Courtneie, who there before the lieutenant and the shirifes, knæling downe vpon his knees, besought the lord Courtneie to forgiue him, for that he had falselie accused both the ladie Elizabeth and him: and so being brought from thence vnto the scaffold to suffer, there openlie in the hearing of all the people cleared the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, to be free and innocent from all suspicion of that commotion. At which confession, doctor Weston there standing by, cried to the people, saieng: Beleeue him not (good people) for he confessed otherwise before vnto the councell.

Abr. Fl. ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio.

A point of practise of Stephã Gardiner against the ladie Elizabeth.

Doctor Westõ against the ladie Elizabeth.

After the execution done of sir Thomas Wiat, which was the eleuenth daie of Aprill, word was brought immediatlie to the lord maior sir Thomas White a little before dinner, how maister Wiat had cleared the ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie, and the words also which doctor Weston spake vnto the people. Whereunto the lord maior answering; Is this true quoth he? Said Weston so? In soth I neuer toke him otherwise but for a knaue. Upon this the lord maior sitting downe to dinner (who dined the same daie at the Bridgehouse) commeth in sir Martine Bowes with the recorder, newlie come from the parlement house, who hearing of the maior and shirifes this report of Wiats confession, both vpon the scaffold and also in the tower, maruelled thereat, declaring how there was another tale contrarie to this, told the same daie in the parlement house, which was, that sir Thomas Wiat should desire the lord Courtneie to confesse the truth, so as he had done before.

The lord maiors iudgment of D. Weston.

Upon this it followed not long after, that a certeine prentise dwelling in saint Laurence lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denham a plaisterer being one of quæne Maries seruants, amongst other talke, made mention how sir Thomas Wiat

Wiat had cleared the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, to be no consenters to his rising. Which words being brought to Gardiner (by what means I know not) incontinent vpon the same, sir Andrew Jud was sent by the said bishop to the lord maior, commanding him to bring the said prentise to the Starchamber, which was accused of these words, that he should saie that Wiat was constreined by the councell to accuse the ladie Elizabeth, & the lord Courtneie. Which fellow when he was come to the Starchamber, the aforesaid Gardiner letting passe other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole multitude, how miraculouslie almightie God had brought the quéens maiestie to the crowne, the whole realme in a maner being against hir, and that he had brought this to passe for this singular intent & purpose, that this realme being ouerwhelmed with heresies, she might reduce the same againe to the true catholike faith. And where she tooke the ladie Elizabeth into hir fauour, and loued hir so tenderlie, and also the lord Courtneie, who of long time had béene deteined in prison, and by hir was set at libertie, and receiued great benefits at hir hands; and notwithstanding all this, they had conspired most vnnaturallie and traitorouslie against hir with that heinous traitor Wiat, as by the confession of Wiat (said he) and the letters sent to and fro maie plainlie appeare: yet there was some in the citie of London, which reported that Wiat was constreined by the councell to accuse the ladie Elizabeth, and the lord Courtneie, & yet you my lord maior (quoth he) haue not séene the same punished.

Cut prentise in London brought before Stephan Gardiner.

Stephã Gardiners tale in the Starchamber against the ladie Elizabeth.

The partie is here, said the lord maior. Take him with you (said Gardiner) and punish him according to his desert, and said further: My lord, take héed to your charge, the citie of London is a whirlepoole and a sinke of all euill rumors, there they be bred, and from thence spred into all parts of this realme. There stood by the same time the lord Shandois, who being then lieutenant of the tower, and now hearing the bishop thus speake, to soth his tale, came in with these words as followeth: My lords (quoth he) this is a truth that I shall tell you, I being lieutenant of the tower when Wiat suffered, he desired me to bring him to the lord Courtneie; which when I had done, he fell downe vpon his knées before him in my presence, and desired him to confesse the truth of himselfe, as he had done before, and to submit himselfe vnto the quénes mercie. And thus much of this matter I thought to declare, to the intent that the reader perceiuing the procédings of the bishop in the premisses, & comparing the same with the true testimonie of Wiat himselfe, and with the testimonie of the shiriffes, the which were present the same time when sir Thomas Wiat asked the lord Courtneie forgiuenesse, maie the better iudge of the whole case and matter for the which the ladie Elizabeth and the lord Courtneie were so long in trouble.]

The Lord Shandois false report in the Starchamber, against the ladie Elizabeth and lord Courtneie.

On saturdaie next following being Easter euen, and the foure and twentith of March, the lord marques of Northampton, the lord Cobham, and sir William Cobham his sonne and heire, were deliuered out of the tower, where they had remained for a time, being committed thither vpon some suspicion about Wiats rebellion: as diuerse others were, whereof manie were put to death, as C.O. reporteth:

Nunc istos læsæ nunc illos quæstio torquet
Maiestatis, habet multos custodia clausos
Firma viros, atro pars plurima deditur Orco.

Not long after, quéene Marie partlie offended with the Londoners, as fauorers of Wiats conspiracie, and partlie perceiuing the more part of them nothing inclined towards hir procédings in religion, which turned manie of them to losse, summoned a parlement to be holden at Oxford, as it were to gratifie that citie, which with the vniuersitie, towne, and countrie, had shewed themselues verie forward in hir seruice; but speciallie in restoring of the religion called catholike: for which appointed parlement there to be holden, great prouision was made, as well by the quéens officers, as by the townesmen & inhabitants of the countrie round about. But the quéens mind in short space changed, and the same parlement was holden at Westminster in Aprill next following, wherein the quéene proponed two speciall matters, the one for the mariage to be had betweene hir and the prince Philip of Spaine: the other, for the restoring againe of the popes power and iurisdiction in England. As touching hir mariage, it was with no great difficultie agréed vpon; but the other request could not be easilie obteined.

A parlement summoned at Oxford but not holden.

Howbeit, it was to be wished, euen to the disappointing of that mariage (if God in counsell had so prouided) that the whole bodie of the parlement had béene semblablie affected, as it is said, that all the nations of the world were, when the sunne would néeds be maried. Against which purpose of the sun the people of all regions assembling, humblie besought Jupiter to call in a blocke and impediment against that wedding. But Jupiter demanding of them why they would not haue the sun maried; one stepping vp made answer for the rest, and said: Thou knowest well enough Jupiter that there is but one sun, and yet he burneth vs all: who, if he be maried & haue children, as the number of suns must néeds increase; so must their heat and feruentnesse be multiplied, whereby a generall destruction of all things in their kind will insue. Herevpon that match was ouerthrowne. But God aboue ruling by prouidence all things here beneath, had purposed this conjunction; so that it was not in the power of man to withstand or interrupt it: howbeit it was his pleasure (to what end himselfe best knoweth) to curse it with barrennesse, as he did the quéene hir selfe with a short and vnpeaceable reigne (full of sedition and bloudshed) as our English poet noteth:

All nations in the world against the mariage of the sun, and why.

Quæ post Eduardi mortem conuersio rerum,
Transtulit in varias alieno pectore partes
Brutigenas, fauet hic externis, ille perosus
Mystarum rabiem, tantis obstacula quærit
Opportuna malis: cùm iam proh dedecus ingens,
Seditio exoritur, regnorum pessima pestis.

¶ On the eight of Aprill, then being sundaie, a cat with hir head shorne, and the likenesse of a vestiment cast ouer hir, with hir fore fét tied togither, and a round pæce of paper like a singing cake betwixt them, was hanged on a gallows in Cheape, néere to the crosse, in the parish of saint Matthew: which cat being taken downe, was caried to the bishop of London, and he caused the same to be shewed at Pauls crosse by the preacher doctor Pendleton.]

John Stow. A cat hanged in cheape.

On the tenth daie of Aprill following, Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie, Nicholas Ridleie bishop of London, and Hugh Latimer once bishop of Worcester, who had béene long prisoners in the tower, were now conueied from thence, and caried to Windsore, and afterward to the vniuersitie of Oxford, there to dispute with the diuines and learned men of the contrarie opinion. Two daies after their comming to Oxford, which was the twelfe daie of the said moneth, diuerse learned men of both the vniuersities were sent in commission from the conuocation (which during this parlement was kept in Pauls church in London) to dispute with those prisoners in certeine articles of religion. The names of them that were in commission were these following. Of Oxford, doctor Weston prolocutor, Cole, Chadseie, Pie, Harpesfield, Smith. Of Cambridge,

The bishops Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridleie sent to Oxford.

Commissioners.

Cambridge, Pwng, Seton, Watson, Atkinson, Pheknam, Sedgewike. The thirteenth daie of Aprill these disputers assembled themselues in saint Maries church, to conuent the three persons aboue named vpon certeine articles of religion, who being brought out of prison before them, were seuerallie one after another examined of their opinions, vpon the articles proponed vnto them, whereof ye maie read in the booke of monuments of the church more at large, and there find the whole proceeding in that matter.

Io. Fox in acts and monuments.

Sir Thomas Wiat arreigned.

Sir Thomas Cornwallis, with others being his iudges. The effect of whose indictment among other things speciallie was; that he the fourteenth daie of Februarie last before, with force of armed multitude and ensignes displaied, had at Brainford raised open warres against our souereigne ladie the quéene, trattorouslie pretending and practising to depriue hir of hir crowne and dignitie; and the question was demanded of him, whether he was guiltie or no? Whereat he staied, and besought the iudges that he might first aske a question, before he answered directlie to the point, and he was licenced so to do. The question was, that if he should confesse himselfe guiltie, whether the same should not be preiudiciall vnto him, so as he by that confession should be barred from vttering such things as he had more to say? Wherevnto it was answered by the court; Maister Wiat (said they) ye shall haue both leaue and leasure to saie what you can.

The effect of Wiats indictment.

Wiat answereth not directlie to the question guiltie or vnguiltie.

Then my lords (quoth he) I must confesse my selfe guiltie, and in the end the truth of my case must inforce me. I must acknowledge this to be a iust plague for my sins, which most grieuouslie I therefore haue committed against God, who suffered me thus brutishlie & beastlie to fall into this horrible offense of the law. Wherefore all you lords & gentlemen, with other here present, note well my words, lo here & see in me the same end which all other commonlie had, which haue attempted the like enterprise from the beginning. For peruse the chronicles through, & you shall see that neuer rebellion attempted by subiects against their prince and countrie, from the beginning did euer prosper, or had euer better successe, except the case of king Henrie the fourth: who although he became a prince, yet in his act was but a rebell, for so must I call him: & though he preuailed for a time, yet was it not long but that his heires were depriued, and those that had right againe restored to the kingdome and crowne, and the vsurpation so sharplie reuenged afterward in his blood, as it well appeared, that the long delaie of Gods vengeance was supplied with more grieuous plagues in the third and fourth generation. For the loue of God all you gentlemen that be here present, remember and be taught as well by examples past, as also by this my present infelicitie and most wretched case. Oh most miserable, mischieuous, brutish & beastlie furious imaginations of mine! I was persuaded that by the mariage of the prince of Spaine, the second person of this realme, and next heire to the crowne, should haue béene in danger; and that I being a frée borne man, should with my countrie haue bæne brought into the bondage and seruitude of aliens and strangers. Which brutish beastlie opinion then seemed to me reason, and wrought in me such effects, that it led me headlong into the practise of this detestable crime of treason.

A rebels report touching rebellion.

Wiats exhortation to loialtie by his owne example.

But now being better persuaded, and vnderstanding the great commoditie & honor which the realme should receiue by this marriage: I stand firme and fast in this opinion, that if it should please the quæne to be mercifull vnto me, there is no subiect in this land that should more trulie and faithfullie serue hir highnes than I shall; nor no soner die at hir graces feet in defense of hir quarrell. I serued hir highnesse against the duke of Northumberland, as my lord of Arundell can witnesse. My grandfather serued most truelie hir graces grandfather, and for his sake was set vpon the racke in the tower. My father also serued king Henrie the eight to his good contentation, and I also serued him, and king Edward his son. And in witnesse of my bloud spent in his seruice, I carrie a name. I alledge not all this to set forth my seruice by waie of merit, which I confesse but dutie; but to declare to the whole world, that by abusing my wits, in pursuing my misaduised opinion, I haue not onelie ouerthrowne my house, and defaced all the well doings of me and my ancestors (if euer there were anie) but also haue béene the cause of mine owne death and destruction. Neither do I alledge this to iustifie my selfe in anie point, neither for an excuse of mine offense: but most humblie submit my selfe to the quænes maiesties mercie and pitie, desiring you my lord of Sussex, and you maister Hastings, with all the rest of this honorable bench, to be meanes to the quénes highnesse for hir mercie, which is the greatest treasure that maie be giuen to anie prince from God, such a vertue as God hath appropriate to himselfe. Which if hir highnesse vouchsafe to extend vnto me, she shall bestow it on him, who shall be most glad to serue truelie, and not refuse to die in hir quarrell. For I protest before the iudge of all iudges, I neuer meant hurt against hir highnesse person.

Wiat altereth his mind touching the quénes marriage.

The fruits of rebellion by Wiats confession.

Then said the quénes attorneie; Maister Wiat you haue great cause to be sorie, and repent for your fault, whereby you haue not onelie vndone your selfe and your house, but also a number of other gentlemen, who being true men might haue serued their prince and countrie: yet if you had gone no further, it might haue bæne borne withall the better. But being not so contented to staie your selfe, you haue so procured the duke of Suffolke (a man sone trained to your purpose) and his two brethren also: by meanes whereof without the quénes greater mercie, you haue ouerthrowne that noble house. And yet not so staied, your attempt hath reached as far as in you laie to the second person of the realme, in whom next to the quénes highnesse resteth all our hope and comfort, wherby hir honor is brought in question, and what danger will folow, and to what end it will come God knoweth: of all this you are the author. Wiat answered; As I will not in anie thing iustifie my selfe, so I beseech you, I being in this wretched estate, not to ouercharge me, nor to make me séeme to be that I am not. I am loth to touch anie person by name; but that I haue written I haue written.

The quénes attorneie speaketh to Wiat.

Wiats answer to the quénes attorneie.

Then said the iudge; Maister Wiat, maister attornie hath well moued you to repent your offenses, and we for our parts with you the same.

The iudge speaketh.

Then said sir Edward Hastings maister of the quéens horse; Maister Wiat, do ye remember when I and maister Cornwallis were sent vnto you from the quænes highnesse to demand the cause of your enterprise, and what you required? Were not these your demands, that the quænes grace should go to the tower, and there remaine; and you to haue the rule of the tower and hir person, with the treasure in kéeping, and such of hir councell as you would require to be deliuered into your hands, saieng that you would be trusted and not trust? Which words when Wiat had confessed, then said the quénes solicitor; Your presumption was ouer great, & your attempt Sir Edward Hastings speech to Wiat.

Maister Cordall late maister of the rolles speaketh.

tempt in this case hath purchased you perpetuall infamie, and shall be called Wiats rebellion, as Wat Tilers was called Wat Tilers rebellion. Then said the attorneie; Maister Wiat, were you not priuie to a deuise whereby the queene should haue beene murthered in a place where she should walke? I do not burthen you to confesse this, for thus much I must saie on your behalfe, that you misliked that deuise? That deuise (said Wiat) was the deuise of William Thomas, whome euer after I abhorred for that cause.

William Thomas meant to murther quéene Marie.

Then was a letter shewed, which Wiat being in Southwarke had written to the duke of Suffolke, that he should meet him at Kingstone bridge, and from thense to accompanie him to London, although he came with the fewer number. Wiat at the first did not seeme to remember anie such letter; but when it was shewed him, he confessed his hand. Then was it demanded of him among other things, whie he refused the queenes pardon when it was offered him. My lords (quoth he) I confesse my fault and offense to be most vile and heinous, for the which first I aske God mercie, without the which I cannot challenge anie thing, such is my offense alreadie committed. And therefore I beseech you to trouble me with no more questions, for I haue deliuered all things vnto hir grace in writing. And finallie here I must confesse, that of all the voiages wherein I haue serued, this was the most desperat and painfull iorneie that euer I made. And where you asked whie I receiued not the queenes pardon when it was offered vnto me; Oh vnhappie man! What shall I saie? When I was entred into this diuellish & desperat aduenture, there was no waie but wade through with that I had taken in hand: for I had thought that other had beene as farre forward as my selfe, which I found farre otherwise. So that being bent to keepe promise with all my confederats, none kept promise with me; for I like a moile went through thicke and thin with this determination, that if I should come to anie treatie, I should seeme to bewraie all my friends.

Wiats confession.

Wiat is sorie that he refused the queens pardon when it was offred.

But whereto should I spend anie more words? I yeeld my selfe wholie vnto the quenes mercie, knowing well that it is onelie in hir power to make me (as I haue deserued) an open example to the world with Wat Tiler; or else to make me participant of that pitie which she hath extended in as great crimes as mine; most humblie beseeching you all to be means for me to hir highnesse for mercie, which is my last and onelie refuge. The will of God be done on me. Upon this confession without further triall, he receiued the iudgement accustomed in cases of treason, which was to be hanged, drawne and quartered. And the eleuenth of Aprill next following he was brought to the Tower hill, and there was pardoned of his drawing and hanging, but had his head stricken off, and his bodie cut in foure quarters, and set vp in diuerse places about the citie, but his head was set vpon the gallowes at Haie hill beside Hide parke.

The execution of sir Thomas Wiat.

Now here by the waie is to be noted, that he being on the scaffold readie to suffer, declared that the ladie Elizabeth and sir Edward Courtneie earle of Deuonshire, whome he had accused before (as it seemed) were neuer priuie to his doings, as farre as he knew, or was able to charge them. And when doctor Weston, being then his confessor told him that he had confessed the contrarie vnto the councell, he answered thus; That I said then, I said, but that which I saie now is true. This was the end of Wiat and his conspiracie; as also the like hath beene of others attempting anie rebellion. For as their enterprise being, according to the proper qualitie thereof, considered, is flat against Gods ordinance, who hath ordeined magistracie to be reuerenced of inferiors: so it is vnlikelie to bring other than infortunatnesse, and shamefull ouerthrowes vnto the attempters; in whome although will want not to compasse anie worke; yet force failing, they misse the marke, & all bicause rashnesse giueth them a false aime. Wherefore to conclude this tragicall discourse of Wiat, it were to be wished that the sage and safe counsell of Cato were put in common practise of all men, which is, to vndertake & do nothing aboue their strength:

Quod potes, id tentes, opera ne pondere pressus,
Succumbat labor, & frustra tentata relinquas.

17 Sir Nicholas Throckmorton arreigned of high treason cléereth himselfe.

The seuenteenth daie of Aprill next following, sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight was brought from the tower to Guildhall in London, and there arreigned of high treason, as adherent and principall counsellor to the said Wiat and the duke of Suffolke, and the rest in the fore remembred conspiracie against the quéene. But he so stoutlie, and therwithall so cunninglie answered for himselfe, as well in clearing of his cause, as also in defending & auoiding such points of the lawes of the realme, as were there alleaged against him, that the quest which passed vpon his life & death found him not guiltie. With which verdict the iudges and councellors there present were so much offended, that they bound the iurie in the summe of fiue hundred pounds a peece, to appeare before the councell in the Starchamber, at a daie appointed. And according to their bond, they appeared there before the said councell vpon Wednesdaie, being the one and twentith of Aprill, and saint Parks daie; from whense after certeine questioning, they were committed to prison, Emanuell Lucar and maister Whetston to the tower, and the other to the Fléet.

But now forsomuch as a copie of the order of sir Nicholas Throckmortons arreignement hath come to my hands, and that the same maie giue some light to the historie of that dangerous rebellion, I haue thought it not impertinent to insert the same: not wishing that it should be offensiue to anie, sith it is in euerie mans libertie to weie his words vttered in his owne defense, and likewise the doings of the quest in acquitting him, as maie séeme good to their discretions, sith I haue deliuered the same as I haue found it, without préiudicing anie mans opinion, to thinke thereof otherwise than as the cause maie moue him.

The order of the arreignement of sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, in the Guildhall of London the seuenteenth daie of Aprill 1554, expressed in a dialog for the better vnderstanding of euerie mans part.

The names of the commissioners.

SIr Thomas White knight lord maior of London, the earle of Shrewesburie, the earle of Derbie, sir Thomas Bromleie knight lord chiefe iustice of England, sir Nicholas Hare knight maister of the rolles, sir Francis Englefield knight maister of the court of wards and liberties, sir Richard Southwell knight one of the priuie councell, sir Edward Walgraue knight one of the priuie councell, sir Roger Cholmeleie knight, sir William Portman knight one of the iustices of the kings bench, sir Edward Sanders knight one of the iustices of the common pleas; maister Stanford & maister Dier sergeants, maister Edward Griffin attournie generall, maister Sendall and Peter Tichbourne clearks of the crowne.

The quénes learned counsell gaue euidence against the prisoner.

First, after proclamation made, and the commission read, the lieutenant of the tower, maister Thomas Bridges, brought the prisoner to the barre: then silence was commanded, and Sendall said to the prisoner ner as followeth.

Sendall. Nicholas Throckmorton knight hold vp thy hand, thou art before this time indicted of high treason, &c: that thou then and there didst falselie and traitorouslie, &c: conspire and imagine the death of the quænes maiestie, &c: and falselie and traitorouslie diddest leuie warre against the quæne within hir realme, &c: and also thou wast adherent to the quænes enimies within hir realme, giuing to them aid and comfort, &c: and also falselie and traitorouslie diddest conspire and intend to depose and depriue the quæne of hir roiall estate, and so finallie destroie hir, &c: and also thou diddest falselie and traitorouslie deuise and conclude to take violentlie the tower of London, &c. Of all which treasons and euerie of them in maner & forme, &c: art thou giltie or not giltie?

Throckmorton. Maie it please you my lords and maisters, which be authorised by the quænes commission to be iudges this daie, to giue me leaue to speake a few words, which doth both concerne you and me, before I answer to the indictement, and not altogither impertinent to the matter, and then plead to the indictment.

Bromleie. No, the order is not so, you must first plead whether you be giltie or no.

Throckmorton. If that be your order and law, iudge accordinglie to it.

Hare. You must first answer to the matter wherewith you are charged, and then you maie talke at your pleasure.

Throckmorton. But things spoken out of place, were as good not spoken.

Bromleie. These be but delaies to spend time, therefore answer as the law willeth you.

Throckmorton. My lords I praie you make not too much hast with me, neither thinke not long for your dinner, for my case requireth leasure, and you haue well dined when you haue done iustice truelie. Christ said, Blessed are they that hunger and thirst for righteousnesse.

Bromleie. I can forbeare my dinner as well as you, and care as little as you peraduenture.

Shrewesburie. Come you hither to checke vs Throckmorton? We will not be so vsed, no no, I for mine owne part haue forborne my breakefast, dinner, and supper to serue the quæne.

Throckmorton. Yea my good lord I know it right well, I meant not to touch your lordship, for your seruice and paines is euidentlie knowne to all men.

Southwell. Maister Throckmorton, this talke néedeth not, we know what we haue to do, and you would teach vs our duties, you hurt your matter: go to, go to.

Throckmorton. Maister Southwell, you mistake me, I meant not to teach you, nor none of you, but to remember you of that I trust you all be well instructed in; and so I satisfie my selfe, sith I shall not speake, thinking you all know what you haue to do, or ought to know: so I will answer to the indictement, and do plead not giltie to the whole, and to euerie part thereof.

Sendall. How wilt thou be tried?

Throckmorton. Shall I be tried as I would, or as I should?

Bromleie. You shall be tried as the law will, and therefore you must saie by God and by the countrie.

Throckmorton. Is that your law for me? It is not as I would, but sith you will haue it so, I am pleased with it, and do desire to be tried by faithfull iust men, which more feare God than the world.

Then the iurie was called.

The names of the iurors.

Lucar.	Low.
Yong.	Whetton.
Martin.	Painter.
Beswike.	Banks.
Barscarfeld.	Calthrop.
Rightleie.	Cater.

What time the atturnie went forth with to maister Cholmeleie, and shewed him the thirties returne, who being acquainted with the citizens, knowing the corruptions and derterities of them in such cases, noted certeine to be challenged for the quæne (a rare case) and the same men being knowne to be sufficient and indifferent, that no exceptions were to be taken to them, but onelie for their vpright honestes: notwithstanding, the atturnie prompting sergeant Dier, the said sergeant challenged one Bacon, and an other citizen peremptorilie for the quæne. Then the prisoner demanded the cause of the chalenge. The sergeant answered, We need not to shew you the cause of the chalenge for the quæne. When the inquest was furnished with other honest men, that is to saie, Whetston & Lucar, so the prisoner vsed these words.

Throckmorton. I trust you haue not prouided for me this daie, as in times past I knew an other gentleman occupieng this wofull place was prouided for. It chanced one of the iustices vpon gelousie of the prisoners acquittall, for the goodnesse of his cause, said to an other of his companions a iustice, when the iurie did appeare: I like not this iurie for our purpose, they séeme to be too pitifull and too charitable to condemne the prisoner. No no, said the other iudge (to wit Cholmeleie) I warrant you, they be picked fellowes for the nonce, he shall drinke of the same cup his fellowes haue done. I was then a looker on of the pageant as others be now here: but now woo is me, I am a plaier in that wofull tragedie. Well, for these and such other like the blacke ore hath of late troden on some of their feet: but my trust is, I shall not be so vsed. Whilest this talke was, Cholmeleie consulted with the atturnie about the iurie, which the prisoner espied, and then said as here insueth; Ah ah maister Cholmeleie, will this foule packing neuer be left?

Cholmeleie. Whie what do I, I praie you M. Throckmorton? I did nothing I am sure, you do picke quarrels to me.

Throckmorton. Well maister Cholmeleie if you do well, it is better for you, God helpe you.

[The iurie then was sworne, and proclamation made, that whosoeuer would giue euidence against sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, should come in and be heard, for the prisoner stood vpon his deliuerance, whereupon sergeant Stanford presented himselfe to speake.]

Throckmorton. And it may please you maister sergeant and the others my maisters of the quænes learned councell, like as I was minded to haue said a few words to the commissioners, if I might haue had leaue for their better remembrance of their duties in this place of iustice, and concerning direct indifferencie to be vsed towards me this daie: so by your patience I do thinke good to saie somewhat to you, and to the rest of the quænes learned councell, appointed to giue euidence against me. And albeit you and the rest by order be appointed to giue euidence against me, and interteined to set forth the depositions and matter against me; yet I praie you remember I am not alienate from you, but that I am your christian brother; neither you so charged, but you ought to consider equitie; nor yet so priuileged, but that you haue a dutie of God appointed you how you shall do your office; which if you exceed, will be greeuouslie required at your hands. It is lawfull for you to vse your gifts which I know God hath largelie giuen you, as your learning, art, and eloquence, so as thereby you do not seduce the minds of the simple and vnlearned iurie, to credit matters otherwise than they be. For maister sergeant, I know how by persuasions, inforcements, presumptions, aplieng, implieng, inferring, coniecturing, deducing of arguments, wresting and exceeding

ercéding the law, the circumstances, the depositions and confessions that vnlearned men may be inchanted to thinke and iudge those that be things indifferent, or at the worst but ouersights to be great treasons; such power orators haue, & such ignorance the vnlearned haue. Almightie God by the mouth of his prophet doth conclude such aduocates be cursed, speaking these words: Cursed be he that doth his office craftilie, corruptlie, and maliciouslie. And consider also, that my bloud shall be required at your hands, and punished in you and yours, to the third and fourth generation. Notwithstanding, you and the iustices excuse alwaies such erroneous doings, when they be after called in question by the verdict of the twelue men: but I assure you, the purgation serueth you as it did Pilat, and you wash your hands of the bloudshed, as Pilat did of Christs. And now to your matter.

Stanford. And it please you my lords, I doubt not to prooue euidentlie and manifestlie, that Throckmorton is worthilie and rightlie indicted and arreigned of these treasons, and that he was a principall deuiser, procurer, and contriuer of the late rebellion; and that Wiat was but his minister. How saie you Throckmorton, did not you send Winter to Wiat into Kent, and did deuise that the tower of London should be taken, with other instructions concerning Wiats sturre and rebellion?

Throckmorton. Maie it please you that I shall answer particularlie to the matters obiected against me, in almuch as my memorie is not good, and the same much decaied since my greeuous imprisonment, with want of sleepe, and other disquietnesse: I confesse I did saie to Winter that Wiat was desirous to speake with him, as I vnderstood.

Stanford. Yea sir, and you deuised togither of the taking of the tower of London, and of the other great treasons.

Throckmorton. No, I did not so, proue it.

Stanford. Yes sir, you met with Winter sundrie times as shall appeare, and in sundrie places.

Throckmorton. That granted, proueth no such matter as is supposed in the indictment.

Winters confession read by Stanford. Stanford read Winters confession, which was of this effect, that Throckmorton met with Winter one daie in tower street, and told him, that sir Thomas Wiat was desirous to speake with him, and Winter demanded where Wiat was, Throckmorton answered at his house in Kent, not farre from Gillingham, as I heard saie, where the ships lie. Then they parted at that time, and shortlie after, Throckmorton met with Winter, vnto whome Winter said; Maister Wiat doth much mislike the comming of the Spaniards into this realme, and feareth their short arriuall heere, in as much as dailie he heareth thereof, doth see dailie diuerse of them arriue here, scattered like souldiors; and therefore he thinketh good the tower of London should be taken by a sleight, before the prince came, least that peece be deliuered to the Spaniards. How saie you Throckmorton to it? Throckmorton answered; I mislike it for diuerse respects. Euen so do I said Winter. At another time Throckmorton met me the said Winter in Paules, when he had sent one to my house, to seeke me before, and he said to me; You are admerall of the fleet that now goeth into Spaine. I answered Yea. Throckmorton said, When will your ships be redie? I said within ten daies. Throckmorton said, I vnderstand you are appointed to conduct and carrie the lord priuie seale into Spaine, and considering the danger of the Frenchmen, which you saie arme them to the sea apace, me thinke it well done, you put my said lord and his traine on land in the west countrie to auoid all dangers. Throckmorton said also, that Wiat changed his purpose for taking the tower of London. I said I was glad of it, & as for the Frenchmen, I care not much for them, I will so handle the matter, that the quéenes ships shall be (I warrant you) in safegard. Another time I met with maister Throckmorton, when I came from the emperours ambassadors, vnto whome I declared, that the emperour had sent me a faire chaine, and shewed it vnto Throckmorton, who said; For this chaine you haue sold your countrie. I said it is neither French king nor emperour that can make me sell my countrie, but I will be a true Englishman. Then they parted. This is the summe of the talke betwixt Throckmorton and Winter.

Stanford. Now my masters of the iurie, you haue heard my sayings confirmed with Winters confession. How saie you Throckmorton, can you denie this, if you will, you shall haue Winter iustifie it to your face.

Throckmorton. Bromleie. Throckmorton. My lords, shall it please you that I shall answer.

Yea, saie your mind.

I may trulie denie some part of this confession, but bicause there is nothing materiall greatlie, I suppose the whole be true, and what is herein deposed, sufficient to bring me within the compasse of the indictment?

Stanford. It appeareth that you were of counsell with Wiat, in as much as you sent Winter downe to him, who vttered vnto him diuerse traitorous deuises.

Throckmorton. This is but coniecturall, yet sith you will construe it so maliciouslie, I will recompt how I sent Winter to Wiat, and then I praie you of the iurie iudge better than maister sergeant doth. I met by chance a seruant of maister Wiats, who demanded of me for Winter, and shewed me, that his master would gladlie speake with him: and so without anie further declaration, desired me if I met Winter to tell him maister Wiats mind, and where he was. Thus much for the sending downe of Winter.

Attournets. Yea sir, but how saie you to the taking of the tower of London, which is treason?

Throckmorton. I answer, though Wiat thought meet to attempt so dangerous an enterprise, and that Winter informed me of it, you cannot extend Wiats deuises to be mine, and to bring me within the compasse of treason. For what maner of reasoning or proofe is this, Wiat would haue taken the tower, Ergo Throckmorton is a traitor? Winter doth make my purgation in his owne confession, euen now red as it was by maister sergeant, though I saie nothing: for Winter doth auow there, that I did much mislike it. And bicause you shall the better vnderstand that I did alwaies not alow these maister Wiats deuises, I had these words to Winter, when he informed me of it; I thinke maister Wiat would no Englishman hurt and this enterprise cannot be done without the hurt and slaughter of both parties. For I know him that hath the charge of the peace, & his brother, both men of good seruice, the one had in charge a peece of great importance, Bullongne I meane, which was stoutlie assailed, & notwithstanding he made a good accompt of it for his time: the like I am sure he will do by this his charge. Moreouer, to accompt the taking of the tower, is verie dangerous by the law. These were my words to Winter. And besides, it is verie vnlike that I of all men would confederate in such a matter against the lieutenant of the tower, whose daughter my brother hath married, and his house and mine alied togither by marlage sundrie times within these few yeares.

Hare. But how saie you to this, that Wiat and you had conference togither sundrie times at Warners house, and in other places?

Throckmorton. This is a verie generall charge to haue conference, but whie was it not as lawfull for me to confer with Wiat Wiat as with you, or anie other man? I then knew no more by Wiat, than by anie other. And to proue to talke with Wiat was lawfull and indifferent, the last daie that I did talke with Wiat, I saw my lord of Arundell, with other noble men and gentlemen, talke with him familiarlie in the chamber of presence.

Hare. But they did not conspire nor talke of anie sturre against the Spaniards as you did pretend, & meant it against the quéne, for you, Crofts, Rogers, and Warner did oftentimes deuise in Warners house about your traitorous purposes, or else what did you so often there?

Throckmor-ton. I confesse I did mislike the quénes marriage with Spaine, and also the comming of the Spaniards hither, and then me thought I had reason to doo so: for I did learne the reasons of my misliking of you master Hare, master Southwell, and others in the parlement house, there I did sée the whole consent of the realme against it; and I a hearer, but no speaker, did learne my misliking of those matters, confirmed by manie sundrie reasons amongst you: but as concerning anie sturre or vprore against the Spaniards, I neuer made anie, neither procured anie to be made; and for my much resort to master Warners house, it was not to conferre with master Wiat, but to shew my friendship to my verie good lord the marquesse of Northampton, who was lodged there when he was inlarged.

Stanford. Did not you Throckmorton tell Winter that Wiat had changed his mind for the taking of the tower, wherby it appeared euidentlie that you knew of his doings?

Throckmor-ton. Truelie I did not tell him so, but I care not greatlie to giue you that wepon to plaie you withall, now let vs sée what you can make of it.

Stanford. Yea sir, that proueth that you were priuie to Wiats mind in all his deuises and treasons, & that there was sending betwixt you and Wiat from time to time.

Throckmor-ton. What master sergeant? Doth this proue against me, that I knew Wiat did repent him of an euill deuised enterprise? Is it to know Wiats repentance sinne? No, it is but a venitall sinne, if it be anie it is not deadlie. But where is the messenger or message that Wiat sent to me touching his alteration, and yet it was lawfull inough for me to heare from Wiat at that time, as from anie other man, for anie act that I knew he had done.

Dier. And it may please you my lords, and you my masters of the iurie, to proue that Throckmorton is a principall doer in this rebellion, there is yet manie other things to be declared: among other, there is Crofts confession, who saith, that he and you, and your complices, did manie times deuise about the whole matters, and he made you priuie to all his determinations, and you shewed him that you would go into the west countrie with the earle of Deuon, to sir Peter Caroe, accompanied with others.

Throckmor-ton. Master Crofts is yet liuing, and is heere this daie, how happeneth it he is not brought face to face to iustifie this matter, neither hath béene of all this time? Will you know the truth? Either he said not so, or he will not abide by it, but honestlie hath reformed himselfe. And as for knowing his deuises, I was so well acquainted with them, that I can name none of them, nor you neither as matter knowne to me.

Attourneie. But whie did you aduise Winter to land my lord priuie seale in the west countrie?

Throckmor-ton. He that told you that my mind was to land him there, doth partlie tell you a reason whie I said so, if you would remember as well the one as the other: but bicause you are so forgetfull, I will recite wherefore. In communication betwixt Winter and me, as he declared to me that the Spaniards prouided to bring their prince hither, so the Frenchmen prepared to interrupt his arriuall: for they began to arme to the sea, and had alreadie certeine ships on the west coast (as he hard.) Unto whom I said, that peraduenture not onelie the quénes ships vnder his charge might be in ieopardie, but also my lord priuie seale, and all his traine; the Frenchmen being well prepared to méet with them, and therefore for all euents it were good you should put my said lord in the west countrie in case you espie anie ieopardie. But what doth this proue to the treasons, if I were not able to giue conuenient reasons to my talke?

Stanford. Marie sir now commeth the proofes of your treasons, you shall heare what Cutbert Vaughan saith against you.

Vaughans confession was read by Stanford. Then sergeant Stanford did read Vaughans confession, tending to this effect. That Vaughan comming out of Kent, met with Throckmorton at master Warners house, who after he had done commendations from Wiat to him, desired to know where Crofts was. Throckmorton answered, either at Arundell house where he lodgeth, or in Paules. Then Vaughan desired to know how things went at London, saieng; Master Wiat & we of Kent doo much mislike the marriage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spaniards for diuerse respects: howbeit, if other countries mislike them as Kent doth, they shall be but hardlie welcome, and so they parted. Shortlie after Throckmorton met with Vaughan in Paules, vnto whome Throckmorton declared with sundrie circumstances, that the Westerne men were in a readinesse to come forwards, and that sir Peter Caroe had sent vnto him euen now, and that he had in order a good band of horsemen, and an other of footmen. Then Vaughan demanded what the earle of Deuonshire would doo? Throckmorton answered he will mar all, for he will not go hence, and yet sir Peter Caroe would méet him with a band, both of horsemen and footmen, by the waie at Andeuer for his safegard, and also he should haue béene well accompanied from hence with other gentlemen, yet all this will not moue him to depart hence. Moreouer, the said erle hath (as is said) discouered all the whole matter to the chancellor, or else it is come out by his tailor, about the trimming of a shirt of male, and the making of a cloke. At another time, Vaughan saith, Throckmorton shewed him that he had sent a post to sir Peter Caroe, to come forward with as much spéed as might be, and to bring his force with him. And also Throckmorton aduised Vaughan to will master Wiat to come forward with his power: for now was the time, in as much as the Londoners would take his part if the matter were presented to them. Vaughan said also, that Throckmorton & Warner should haue ridden with the said earle westward. Moreouer the said Vaughan deposed, that Throckmorton shewed him in talke of the earle of Penbroke, that the said earle would not fight against them, though he would not take their parts. Also Vaughan said, that Throckmorton shewed him that he would ride downe into Barkeshire to sir Francis Englefields house, there to méet his eldest brother, to moue him to take his part. And this was the sum of Cutbert Vaughans confession.

Stanford. How saie you? Doth not here appeare euident matter to proue you a principall, who not onelie gaue order to sir Peter Caroe and his adherents, for their rebellious acts in the west countrie, but also procured Wiat to make his rebellion, appointing him and the others also, when they should attempt their enterprise, and how they should order their doings ings from time to time. Besides all this euident matter, you were specially appointed to go awaie with the earle of Deuon as one that would direct all things, and giue order to all men. And therefore Throckmorton sith this matter is so manifest, and the euidence so apparant, I would aduise you to confesse your fault, & submit your selfe to the quéenes mercie.

Bromleie. How saie you, will you confesse the matter, and it will be best for you?

Throckmorton. No, I will neuer accuse my selfe vniustlie, but in as much as I am come hither to be tried, I praie ye let me haue the law fauourablie.

Attourneie. It is apparant that you laie at London as a factor, to giue intelligence as well to them in the west, as to Wiat in Kent.

Throckmorton. How proue you that, or who doth accuse me but this condemned man?

Attourneie. Why will you denie this matter? You shall haue Vaughan iustifie his whole confession here before your face.

Throckmorton. It shall not néed, I know his vnshamfastnesse, he hath aduowed some of this vntrue talke before this time to my face, and it is not otherwise like, considering the price, but he will do the same againe.

Attourneie. My lord and masters, you shall haue Vaughan to iustifie this héere before you all, and confirme it with a booke oth.

Throckmorton. He that hath said and lied, will not being in this case sticke to sweare and lie.

¶Then was Cuthert Vaughan brought into the open court.]

Hendall. How saie you Cuthert Vaughan, is this your owne confession, and will you abide by all that is here written?

Vaughan. Let me sée it and I will tell you.

¶When his confession was shewed him.]

Attourneie. Because you of the iurie the better may credit him, I praie you my lords let Vaughan be sworne.

¶Then was Vaughan sworne on a booke to saie nothing but the truth.]

Vaughan. It may please you my lords and masters, I could haue béene well content to haue chose seauen yeares imprisonment, though I had béene a free man in the law, rather than I would this daie haue giuen euidence against sir Nicholas Throckmorton; against whome I beare no displeasure: but sith I must nœds confesse my knowledge, I must confesse all that is there written is true. How saie you master Throckmorton, was there anie displeasure betwéene you and me, to moue me to saie aught against you?

Throckmorton. None that I know. How saie you Vaughan, what acquaintance was there betwéene you and me, and what leters of credit or token did you bring me from Wiat, or anie other, to moue me to trust you?

Vaughan. As for acquaintance, I knew you as I did other gentlemen: and as for letters, I brought you none other but commendations from master Wiat, as I did to diuerse other of his acquaintance at London.

Throckmorton. You might as well forge the commendations as the rest: but if you haue done with Vaughan my lords, I praie you giue me leaue to answer.

Bromleie. Speake and be short.

Throckmorton. I speake generallie to all that be here present, but speciallie to you of my iurie, touching the credit of Vaughans depositions against me, a condemned man, and after to the matter: and note I praie you the circumstances, as somewhat materiall to induce the better. First I praie you remember the small familiaritie betwixt Vaughan and me, as he hath aduowed before you, and moreouer, to procure credit at my hand, brought neither letter nor token from Wiat, nor from anie other to me, which he also hath confessed here: and I will suppose Vaughan to be in as good condition as anie other man here, that is to saie, an vncondemned man: yet I referre it to your good iudgement, whether it were like that I, knowing onelie Vaughans person from an other man, and hauing none other acquaintance with him, would so frankelie discouer my mind to him in so dangerous a matter. How like (I saie) is this, when diuerse of these gentlemen now in captiuitie, being my verie familiars, could not depose ante such matter against me, and neuertheless vpon their examinations haue said what they could? And though I be no wise man, I am not so rash as to vtter to an vnknowne man (for so I may call him in comparison) a matter so dangerous for me to speake, and him to heare. But because my truth and his falshood shall the better appeare vnto you, I will declare his inconstancie in vttering this his euidence. And for my better credit, it may please you master Southwell, I take you to witnesse, when Vaughan first iustified this his vniust accusation against me before the lord Paget, the lord Chamberleine, you master Southwell, and others, he referred the confirmation of this his surmised matter, to a letter sent from him to sir Thomas Wiat, which letter doth neither appeare, nor anie testimonie of the said master Wiat against me touching the matter: for I doubt not sir Thomas Wiat hath béen examined of me, and hath said what he could directlie or indirectlie. Also Vaughan saith, that yong Edward Wiat could confirme this matter, as one that knew this pretended discourse betwixt Vaughan and me, and therevpon I made sute that Edward Wiat might either be brought face to face to me, or otherwise be examined.

Southwell. Master Throckmorton you mistake your matter, for Vaughan said, that Edward Wiat did know some part of the matter, and also was priuie of the letter that Vaughan sent sir Thomas Wiat.

Throckmorton. Yea sir, that was Vaughans last shift, when I charged him before the master of the horsse and you, with his former allegations touching his witnesse, whome when he espied would not do so lewdlie as he thought, then he vsed this alteration. But where be Edward Wiats depositions of anie thing against me? Now it appeareth neither his first nor his last tale to be true. For you know master Bridges, and so doth my lord your brother, that I desired twice or thrice Edward Wiat should be examined, and I am sure, and most assured he hath béene willed to saie what he could, and here is nothing deposed by him against me, either touching anie letter or other conference. Or where is Vaughans letter sent by sir Thomas Wiat concerning my talke?

But now I will speake of Vaughans present estate in that he is a condemned man, whose testimonie is nothing worth by anie law. And because false witnesse is mentioned in the gospell, treating of accusation, hearke I praie you what S. Jerome saith, expounding that place. It is demanded why Christs accusers be called false witnesses, which did report Christs words not as he spake them. They be false witnesses saith S. Jerome, which do ad, alter, wrest, double, or do speake for hope to auoid death, or for malice to procure another mans death: for all men maie easilie gather he cannot speake truelie of me, or in the case of another mans life, where he hath hope of his owne by accusation. Thus much speaketh S. Jerome of false witnesse. By the ciuill law there be manie exceptions to be taken against such testimonies: but because we be not gouerned by that law, neither haue I my triall by it, it shall be superfluous to trouble you therewith, & therefore you shall heare what your owne law doth saie. There was a statute made in my late souereigne lord & master his time, touching accusation, and these be the words.

Be it enacted, that no person nor persons, &c: shalbe indicted, arreigned, condemned, or conuicted for anie offense of treason, petit treason, misprision of treson, for which the same offendor shall suffer anie pains of death, imprisonment, losse or forfeiture of his goods, lands, &c: vnlesse the same offendor be accused by two sufficient & lawfull witnesses, or shall willinglie without violence confesse the same. And also in the first yeare of his reigne, it is thus ratified as insueth.

That no person nor persons shall be indicted, arreigned, condemned, conuicted or attainted of the treasons or offenses aforesaid, or for anie other treasons that now be, or hereafter shall be; vnlesse the same offendor or offendors be therof accused by two lawfull and sufficient accusers, which at the time of the arreignement of the parties so accused (if they be then liuing) shall be brought in person before the said partie accused, and auow and maintaine that they haue to saie against the said partie, to prooue him giltie of the treasons or offense conteined in the bill of indictment laid against the partie arreigned, vnlesse the said partie arreigned shall be willing without violence to confesse the same. Here note (I praie you) that our law doth require two lawfull and sufficient accusers to be brought face to face, and Vaughan is but one, and the same most vnlawfull and insufficient. For who can be more vnlawfull and insufficient, than a condemned man, and such one as knoweth to accuse me is the meane to saue his owne life? Remember (I praie you) how long & how manie times Vaughans execution hath béene respited, and how often he hath béene coniured to accuse (which by Gods grace he withstood vntill the last houre) what time perceiuing there was no waie to liue, but to speake against me or some other (his former grace being taken awaie) did redéeme his life most vnlustlie and shamefullie, as you sée.

Hare. Why should he accuse you more than anie other, séeing there was no displeasure betwixt you, if the matter had not béene true?

Throckmorton. Bicause he must either speake of some man, or suffer death, and then he did rather chose to hurt him whom he least knew, & so loued least, than anie other well knowen to him, whome he loued most. But to you of my iurie I speake speciallie, and therefore I praie you note what I saie. In a matter of lesse weight than triall of life and land, a man maie by the law take exceptions to such as be impaneled, to trie the controuersies betwixt the parties: as for example. A man maie chalenge that the shiriffe is his enimie, and therfore hath made a partiall returne; or bicause one of the iurie is the shiriffe my aduersaries seruant: and also in case my aduersaries villen or bondman be impaneled, I may lawfullie chalenge him, bicause the aduersarie part hath power ouer his villens lands and goods, and hath the vse of his bodie for seruile office: much more I may of right take exception to Vaughans testimonie, my life and all that I haue depending therupon, and the same Vaughan being more bound to the quénes highnesse my aduersarie (that wo is me therefore) but so the law doth here so terme hir maiestie, than anie villen is to his lord: for hir highnesse hath not onlie power ouer his bodie, lands, and goods, but ouer his life also.

Stanford. Yea, the exception are to be taken against the iurie in that case, but not against the witnesse or accuser, & therefore your argument serueth litle for you.

Throckmorton. That is not so, for the vse of the iurie, and the witnesse and the effect of their doings doth serue me to my purpose, as the law shall discusse. And thus I make my comparison. By the ciuill law the iudge doth giue sentence vpon the depositions of the witnesse, & by your law the iudge doth giue iudgement vpon the verdict of the iurie; so as the effect is both one to finish the matter, triall in law, as well by the depositions of the witnesse, as by the iuries verdict, though they varie in forme and circumstance: and so Vaughans testimonie being credited, may be the materiall cause of my condemnation, as the iurie to be induced by his depositions to speake their verdict, and so finallie therupon the iudge to giue sentence. Therefore I may vse the same exceptions against the iurie, or anie of them, as the principall meane that shall occasion my condemnation.

Bromleie. Why do you denie, that euerie part of Vaughans tale is vntrue?

Attournie. You may sée he will denie all, and saie there was no such communication betwixt them.

Throckmorton. I confesse some part of Vaughans confession to be true, as the name, the places, the time, and some part of the matter.

Attournie. So you of the iurie may perceiue the prisoner doth confesse some thing to be true.

Throckmorton. As touching my sending to sir Peter Caroe, or his sending to me, or concerning my aduise to maister Wiat to stur or to repaire hither, or touching the earle of Deuonshire parting hence, and my going with him, and also concerning the matter of the erle of Penbroke, I do auow and saie that Vaughan hath said vntrulie.

Southwell. As for my lord of Penbroke, you néed not excuse the matter, for he hath shewed himselfe cléere in these matters like a noble man, and that we all know.

Hare. Why what was the talke betwixt Vaughan and you so long in Paules, if these were not so, and what meant your oft métings?

Throckmorton. As for our often métings, they were of no set purpose, but by chance, & yet no oftener than twise. But sithence you would know what communication passed betwixt vs in Paules church, I will declare. We talked of the incommodities of the marriage of the queene with the prince of Spaine, and how grieuous the Spaniards would be to vs here. Vaughan said, that it should be verie dangerous for anie man, that trulie professed the gospell to liue here, such was the Spaniards crueltie, and especiallie against christian men. Whereunto I answered it was the plague of God iustlie come vpon vs; and now almightie God dealt with vs as he did with the Israelites, taking from them for their vnthankefulnesse their godlie kings, & did send tyrants to reigne ouer them. Euen so he handled vs Englishmen, which had a most godlie & vertuous prince to reigne ouer vs, my late souereigne lord and maister king Edward, vnder whome we might both safelie and lawfullie professe Gods word, which with our lewd doings, demeanor, and liuing, we handled so irreuerentlie, that to whip vs for our faults he would send vs strangers, yea such verie tyrants to exercise great tyrannie ouer vs, and did take awaie the vertuous and faithfull king from amongst vs: for euerie man of euerie estate did colour his naughtie affections with a pretense of religion, and made the gospell a stalking horse to bring their euill desires to effect. This was the summe of our talke in Paules somewhat more dilated.

Stanford. That it may appéere yet more euidentlie how Throckmorton was a principall doer and counsellor in this matter, you shall heare his owne confession of his owne hand writing. ¶ The clearke began to read, Throckmorton desired maister Stanford to read it, and the iurie well to marke it. Then maister Stanford did read the prisoners owne confession to this effect: that Throckmorton had conference with Wiat, Caroe, Crofts, Rogers, and Warner, as well of the quénes marriage with the prince of Spaine, as also of religion, and did particularlie conferwith euerie the forenamed, of the matters aforesaid. Moreouer, with sir Thomas Wiat the prisoner ner talked of the bʒute that the Westerne men shuld much mislike the comming of the Spaniards into this realme, being repoʒted also that they intended to interrupt their arrivall here. And also that it was said, that they were in consultation about the same at Excester. Wiat also did saie, that sir Peter Caroe could not bʒing the same matter to good effect, noʒ that there was any man so meet to bʒing it to good effect, as the erle of Deuonshire, & specially in the west parts, insomuch as they dʒew not all by one line.

Then Thʒockmoʒton asked how the Kentishmen were affected to the Spaniards? Wiat said; The people like them euill inough, and that appeered now at the comming of the countie of Egmount, foʒ they were readie to stur against him and his traine, supposing it had bin the pʒince. But said Wiat, sir Robert Southwell, maister Baker, and maister Bolle, and their affinitie, which be in good credit in some places of the shire, will foʒ other malicious respects hinder the libertie of their countrie. Then Thʒockmoʒton should saie; Though I know there hath beene an vnkindnesse betwixt maister Southwell and you foʒ a monie matter, wherein I trauelled to make you frends, I doubt not, but in so honest a matter as this is, he will foʒ the safegard of his countrie ioine with you, and so you may be sure of the lord Aburgauennie & his force. Then Wiat said, It is foʒ another matter than foʒ monie that we disagree, wherein he hath handled me and others verie doublie & vnneighbʒlie; howbeit, he can do no other, neither to me, noʒ to anie other man, & therefoʒe I foʒgiue him. Item, with sir Peter Caroe, Thʒockmoʒton had conference touching the impeachment of the landing of the said pʒince, and touching pʒouision of armour and munition as insueth, that is to saie, that sir Peter Caroe told Thʒockmoʒton that he trusted his countriemen would be true Englishmen, and would not agree to let the Spaniards to gouerne them. Item, the said sir Peter Caroe said, the matter impoʒting the French king, as it did, he thoght the French king would woʒke to hinder the Spaniards comming hither, with whome the said sir Peter did thinke good to pʒactise foʒ armour, munition, and monie.

Then Thʒockmoʒton did aduise him to beware that he bʒought anie Frenchmen into the realme foʒceablie, inasmuch as he could as euill abide the Frenchmen after that soʒt as the Spaniards. And also Thʒockmoʒton thought the French king vnable to giue aid to vs, by meanes of the great consumption in their owne warres. Maister Caroe said; As touching the bʒinging in of the Frenchmen, he meant it not, foʒ he loued neither partie, but to serue his owne countrie, and to helpe his countrie from bondage: declaring further to Thʒockmoʒton, that he had a small barke of his owne to woʒke his pʒactise by, & so he said, that shoʒtlie he intended to depart to his owne countrie, to vnderstand the deuotion of his countrimen. Item Thʒockmoʒton did saie, he would foʒ his part hinder the cõming in of the Spaniards as much as he could by persuasion. Item to sir Edward Warner, he had and did bʒemone his owne estate, and the tyʒannie of the time extended vpon diuerse honest persons foʒ religion, and wished it were lawfull foʒ all of ech religion to liue safelie acoʒding to their conscience; foʒ the law (Ex officio) will be intollerable, & the clergies discipline now maie rather be resembled to the Turks tyʒannie, than to the teaching of chʒistian religion. ¶ This was the summe of the matter which was read in the foʒesaid confession, as maters most gʒeuous against the pʒisoner.] Then Thʒockmoʒton said; Sithence maister sergeant you haue read and gathered the place (as you thinke) that maketh most against me, I pʒaie you take the pains, and read further, that hereafter whatsoeuer become of me, my woʒds be not peruerted and abused to the hurt of some others, and especiallie against the great personages, of whom I haue bʒene sundʒie times (as appeareth by my answers) examined, foʒ I perceiue the net was not cast onelie foʒ little fishes, but foʒ the great ones, Iuxta adagium.

It shall be but losse of time, and we haue other things to charge you withall, and this that you desire doth make nothing foʒ you. Stanlo.

And foʒ the better confirmation of all the treasons obiected against the pʒisoner, and therein to pʒoue him guiltie, you of the iurie shall heare the duke of Suffolks depositions against him, who was a pʒincipall, and hath suffered accoʒdinglie. ¶ Then the said sergeant read the dukes confession touching the pʒisoner, amounting to this effect, that the loʒd Thomas Greie did infoʒme the said duke, that sir Nicholas Thʒockmoʒton was pʒiuie to the whole deuises against the Spaniards, & was one that should go into the west countrie with the earle of Deuonshire.] Dier.

But what doth the pʒincipall authour of this matter saie against me, I meane the loʒd Thomas Greie who is yet liuing? Why he not his depositions bʒought against me, foʒ so it ought to bs, if he can saie anie thing? Will you know the truth? Neither the loʒd Thomas Greie hath said, can saie, oʒ will saie anie thing against me, notwithstanding the duke his bʒothers confession and accusation, who hath affirmed manie other things besides the truth. I speake not without certeine knowledge: foʒ the loʒd Thomas Greie being my pʒison-felow foʒ a small time, infoʒmed me, that the duke his bʒother had misrepoʒted him in manie things, amongst others in matters touching me, which he had declared to you maister Southwell, and other the examinoʒs not long ago. I am sure if the loʒd Thomas could, oʒ would haue said anie thing, it should haue bʒene here now. And as to the dukes confession, it is not materiall: foʒ he doth referre the matter to the loʒd Thomas repoʒt, who hath made my purgation. Thʒockmoʒton.

And it please you my loʒds, and you my maisters of the iurie, besides these matters touching Wiats rebellion, sir Peter Caroes treasons and confederating with the duke of Suffolke, and besides the pʒisoners conspiracie with the earle of Deuonshire, with Crofts, Rogers, Warner, and sundʒie others in sundʒie places, it shall manifestlie apeare vnto you, that Thʒockmoʒton did conspire the quenes maiesties death, with William Thomas, sir Nicholas Arnold, and other traitoʒs intending the same, which is the greatest matter of all others, and most to be abhoʒred. And foʒ pʒoofe hereof, you shall heare what Arnold saith. ¶ Then was sir Nicholas Arnolds confession read, saieng that Thʒockmoʒton shewed to him, riding betwixt Hinam and Crosse laund in Glocestershire, that John Fitz Williams was verie much displeased with William Thomas. The atturnie.

William Thomas deuised, that John Fitzwilliams should kill the quene, and Thʒockmoʒton knew of it, as apeareth by Arnolds confession. Attourneie.

First I denie that I said anie such thing to maister Arnold, and though he be an honest man, he may either foʒget himselfe, oʒ deuise meanes how to vnburthen himselfe of so weightie a matter as this is; foʒ he is charged with the mater as pʒincipall. Which I did perceiue when he charged me with his tale, and therefoʒe I doo blame him the lesse, that he seeketh how to discharge himselfe, vsing me as a witnesse, if he could so transferre the deuise to William Thomas. But trulie I neuer spake anie such woʒds vnto him. And foʒ my better declaration, I did see John Fitzwilliams here euen now, who can testifie, that he neuer shewed me of any displesure betwixt them, Thʒockmoʒton.

and as I know nothing of the displeasure betwixt them, so I know nothing of the cause: I pray you my lords let him be called to depose in this matter what he can. Then John Fitzwilliams drew to the barre, and presented himselfe to depose his knowledge in the matter in open court.

The atturnie. I praie you my lords suffer him not to be sworne, neither to speake, we haue nothing to do with him.

Throckmorton. Why should he not be suffered to tell truth? And why be ye not so well contented to heare truth for me as vntruth against me?

Hare. Who called you hither Fitzwilliams, or commanded you to speake? You are a verie busie officer.

Throckmorton. I called him, and do humblie desire that he maie speake, and be heard as well as Vaughan; or else I am not indifferentlie vsed, especiallie seeing maister attourneie doth so presse this matter against me.

Southwell. Go your waies Fitzwilliams, the court hath nothing to do with you: peraduenture you would not be so readie in a good cause. Then John Fitzwilliams departed the court, and was not suffered to speake.

Throckmorton. Sithence this gentlemans declaration may not be admitted, I trust you of the iurie can perceiue, it was not for anie thing he had to saie against me, but contrariwise that it was feared he would speake for me. And now to maister Arnolds depositions against me, I saie I did not tell him anie such words, so as if it were materiall, there is but his yea and my naie. But because the words be not soze strained against me, I praie you maister atturnie why might not I haue told maister Arnold, that John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas, and yet know no cause of the anger? It might be vnderstand, to disagree oftentimes. Who doth confesse that I know anie thing of William Thomas deuise touching the queenes death? I will answer, No man. For maister Arnold doth mention no word of that matter, but of the displeasures betwixt them. And to speake that, doth neither proue treason, nor knowledge of treason. Is here all the euidence against me that you haue to bring me within the compasse of the indictment?

Stanlord. We thinke the matters confessed by others against you, togither with your owne confession, will weie shrewdlie. But how saie you to the rising in Kent, and to Wiats attempt against the queens roiall person at hir palace?

Bromleie. Why do you not read Wiats accusation to him, which doth make him partener to his treasons?

Southwell. Wiat hath greeuouslie accused you, and in manie things that others haue confirmed.

Throckmorton. What soeuer Wiat hath said of me in hope of his life, he vnsaid it at his death. For since I came into this hall, I heard one saie (but I know him not) that Wiat vpon the scaffold did not onelie purge my ladie Elizabeth hir grace, and the erle of Deuonshire, but also all the gentlemen in the tower, saieng they were all ignorant of the sturre and commotion. In which number I take my selfe.

Hare. Notwithstanding he said, all that he had written and confessed to the councell, was true.

Throckmorton. Naie sir, by your patience, maister Wiat said not so, that was maister doctors addition.

Southwell. It appeareth you haue had good intelligence.

Throckmorton. Almightie God prouided that reuelation for me this daie since I came hither: for I haue bin in close prison these eight and fiftie daies, where I heard nothing but what the birds told me, which did flie ouer my head. And now to you of my iurie I speake specially, whome I desire to marke attentiuelie what shall be said. I haue beene indicted, as it appeareth, and now am arreigned of compassing the queenes maiesties death, of leuieng war against the queene, of taking the tower of London, of deposing and depriuing the queene of hir roiall estate, and finallie to destroie hir, and of adherence to the queenes enimies. Of all which treasons, to proue me guiltie, the queens learned councell hath giuen in euidence these points materiall; that is to saie: for the compassing or imagining the queenes death, and the destruction of hir roiall person, sir Nicholas Arnolds depositions, which is, that I should saie to the said sir Nicholas in Glocestershire, that maister John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas.

Wherevnto I haue answered, as you haue heard, both denieng the matter: and for the proofe on my side, do take exceptions, because there is no witnesse but one. And neuertheless, though it were granted, the depositions proue nothing concerning the queenes death. For leuieng of warre against the queene, there is alleged my conference with sir Thomas Wiat, sir James Crofts, sir Edward Rogers, sir Edward Warner. Against the mariage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spaniards hither, which talke I do not denie in sort as I spake it, and ment it: and notwithstanding the malicious gathering this date of my conference, proueth yet no leuieng of warre. There is also alleged for proofe of the same article, sir James Crofts confession, which (as you remember) implieth no such thing, but generall talke against the mariage with Spaine. And of my departing westward with the earle of Deuon, which the said James doth not auow, & therefore I praie you consider it as not spoken. There is also for proofe of the said article, the duke of Suffolks confession, with whome I neuer had conference; and therefore he auouched the tale of his brothers mouth, who hath made my purgation in those matters; and yet if the matter were proued, they be not greatlie materiall in law. There is also alleged for the further proofe of the same article, and for deposing and depriuing the queene of hir roiall estate, and for my adhering to the queenes enimies, Cuthbert Vaughans confession, whose testimonie I haue sufficientlie disproued by sundrie authorities and circumstances, and principallie by your owne law, which doth require two lawfull and sufficient witnesses to be brought face to face. Also for the taking of the tower of London, there is alleged Winters depositions, which vttereth my misliking, when he vttered vnto me sir Thomas Wiats resolution and deuise for attempting of the said peece. And last of all, to inforce these matters, mine owne confession is ingreeued against me, wherein there doth appeare neither treason, neither concelement of treason, neither whispering of treason, nor procurement of treason.

And forsomuch as I am come hither to be tried by the law, though my innocencie of all these points materiall obiected, be apparant to acquit me, whereto I do principallie cleaue: yet I will for your better credit and satisfactions, shew you euidentlie, that if you would beleeue all the depositions laid against me, which I trust you will not do, I ought not to be attainted of the treason comprised within my indictment, considering the statute of repeale the last parlement, of all treasons, other than such as be declared in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Edward the third, both which statutes, I pray you my lords, maie be read here to the inquest.

Bromleie. No sir, there shall be no bookes brought at your desire, we do all know the law sufficientlie without booke.

Throckmorton. Do you bring me hither to trie me by the law, & will not shew me the law? What is your knowlege of the law to these mens satisfactions, which haue my triall in hand? I praie you my lords, and my lords all, all, let the statutes be read, as well for the quæne, as for me.

Stanford. My lord chiefe iustice can shew the law, and will, if the iurie do doubt of anie point.

Throckmorton. You know it were indifferent that I should know and heare the law whereby I am adiudged, and for asmuch as the statute is in English, men of meaner learning than the iustices can vnderstand it, or else how should we know when we offend?

Hare. You know not what belongeth to your case, and therefore we must teach you: it apperteineth not to vs to prouide bookes for you, neither sit we here to be taught of you, you should haue taken better hèed to the law before you had come hither.

Throckmorton. Because I am ignorant, I would learne, and therefore I haue more nèd to sée the law, and partlie as well for the instructions of the iurie, as for my own satisfaction, which mee thinke were for the honor of this presence. And now if it please you my lord chiefe iustice, I do direct my spèech speciallie to you. What time it pleased the quènes maiestie, to call you to this honorable office, I did learne of a great personage of hir highnesse priuie councell, that amongst other good instructions, hir maiestie charged and inioined you to minister the law and iustice indifferentlie without respect of persons. And notwithstanding the old error amongst you, which did not admit anie witnesse to speake, or anie other matter to be heard in the fauor of the aduersarie, hir maiestie being partie; hir highnesse pleasure was, that whatsoeuer could be brought in the fauor of the subiect, should be admitted to be heard. And moreouer, that you speciallie, & likewise all other iustices, should not persuade themselues to sit in iudgement otherwise for hir highnesse, than for hir subiect. Therefore this maner of indifferent proceeding being principallie inioined by Gods commandement, which I had thought partlie to haue remembred you & others here in commission, in the beginning, if I might haue had leaue; and the same also being commanded you by the quèens owne mouth: me thinke you ought of right to suffer me to haue the statutes read openlie, and also to reiect nothing that could be spoken in my defense; and in thus doing, you shall shew your selues worthie ministers, and fit for so worthie a mistresse.

Bromleie. You mistake the matter, the quæne spake those words to maister Morgan chiefe iustice of the common plées: but you haue no cause to complaine, for you haue bène suffered to talke at your pleasure.

Hare. What would you do with the statute booke? The iurie doth not require it, they haue heard the euidence, and they must vpon their conscience trie whether you be guiltie or no, so as the booke nèedeth not; if they will not credit the euidence so apparant, then they know not what they haue to do.

Cholmleie. You ought not to haue anie books read here at your appointment, for where doth arise anie doubt in the law, the iudges sit here to informe the court, and now you do but spend time.

The atturnie. I pray you my lord chiefe iustice repeat the euidence for the quæne, and giue the iurie their charge, for the prisoner will kèepe you here all daie.

Bromleie. How saie you? Haue you anie more to saie for your selfe?

Throckmorton. You seeme to giue and offer me the law, but in verie dèd I haue onelie the forme and image of the law; neuertheless, sith I cannot be suffered to haue the statutes red openlie in the booke, I will by your pattence gesse at them as I maie, and I praie you to helpe me if I mistake, for it is long since I did sée them. The statute of repeale made the last parlement, hath these words: Be it enacted by the quæne, that from henceforth none act, dèd, or offense, being by act of parlement or statute made treason, petit treason, or misprision of treason, by words, writing, printing, ciphering, dèeds, or otherwise whatsoeuer, shall be taken, had, dèemed, or adiudged treason, petit treason: but onelie such as be declared or expressed to be treason, in or by an act of parlement made in the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third, touching and concerning treasons, and the declaration of treasons, and none other. Here may you sée, this statute doth referre all the offenses aforesaid, to the statute of the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third, which statute hath these words touching and concerning the treasons that I am indicted and arreigned of, that is to saie: Whosoeuer doth compasse or imagine the death of the king, or leuie warre against the king in his realme, or being adherent to the kings enimies within this realme, or elsewhere, and be thereof probablie attainted by open dèd by people of their condition; shall be adiudged a traitor. Now I praie you of my iurie which haue my life in triall, note well what things at this daie be treasons, and how these treasons must be tried and decerned; that is to say, by open dèd, which the lawes doth at some time terme (Ouert act.) And now I aske notwithstanding my indictment, which is but matter alleged, where doth appeare the open dèd of anie compassing or imagining the quænes death? Or where doth appeare anie open dèd of being adherent to the quèns enimies, giuing to them aid and comfort? Or where doth appeare anie open dèd of taking the tower of London?

Why do not you of the quènes learned councell answer him? Me thinke, Throckmorton, you nèd not haue the statutes, for you haue them mètlie perfectlie. Bromleie.

You are deceiued to conclude all treasons in the statute of the fiue and twentith yeare of Edward the third; for that statute is but a declaration of certeine treasons, which were treasons before at the common law. Euen so there doth remaine diuerse other treasons at this daie at the common law, which be expressed by that statute, as the iudges can declare. Neuertheless, there is matter sufficient alleged and proued against you, to bring you within the compasse of the same statute. Stanford.

I praie you expresse those matters that bring me within the compasse of the statute of Edward the third. For the words be these: And be thereof attainted by open dèd: By people of like condition. Throckmorton.

Throckmorton you deceiue your selfe, and mistake these words; By people of their condition. For thereby the law doth vnderstand the discouering of your treasons. As for example: Wiat and the other rebels, attainted for their great treasons, alreadie declare you to be his and their adherent, in as much as diuerse & sundrie times you had conference with him and them about the treason, so as Wiat is now one of your condition, who (as all the world knoweth) hath committed an open traitorous fact. Bromleie.

By your leaue my lord, this is a verie strange and singular vnderstanding. For I suppose the meaning of the law-makers did vnderstand these words: By people of their condition; of the state and condition of those persons which should be on the inquest to trie the partie arreigned, guiltie or not guiltie, and nothing to the bewraieng of the offense by another mans act, as you saie. For what haue I to do with Wiats acts, that was not nigh him by one hundred miles? Throckmorton.

Will you take vpon you to skill better of the law than the iudges? I doubt not but you of the iurie will credit as it becommeth you. The atturnie.

Concerning the true vnderstanding of these Cholmleie.

words: By people of their condition, my lord chiefe iustice here hath declared the truth, for What was one of your condition, that is to saie, of your conspiracie.

Hare. You do not denie, Throckmorton, but that there hath bene conference and sending betweene What and you: and he and Winter doth confesse the same, with others, so as it is plaine; What may be called one of your condition.

Throckmorton. Well, seeing you my iudges rule the vnderstanding of these words in the statute, by people of your condition, thus strangelie against me: I will not stand longer vpon them. But where doth appeare in me an open deed wherevnto the treason is specially referred?

Bromleie. If three or foure do talke, deuise, and conspire together of a traitorous act to be done, and afterwards one of them doth commit treason, as What did, then the law doth repute them, and euerie of them as their acts, so as Whats acts do implie and argue of your open deed: and so the law doth terme it and take it.

Throckmorton. These be maruellous expositions and wonderfull implications, that another mans act whereof I was not priuie, should be accounted mine: for What did purge me that I knew nothing of his stirre.

Hare. Yea sir, but you were a principall procurer and contriuer of Whats rebellion, though you were not with him when he made the stirre. And as my lord here hath said, the law alwaies doth adiudge him a traitor, which was priuie, and doth procure treason, or anie other man to commit treason, or a traitorous act, as you did What and others: for so the Ouert act of those which did it by your procurement, shall in this case be accounted your open deed. We haue a common case in the law, if one by procurement should disseize you of your land, the law holdeth vs both wrong doers, & giueth remedie as well against the one as the other.

Throckmorton. For Gods sake aplie not such constructions against me, and though my present estate doth not moue you, yet it were well you should consider your office, and thinke what measure you giue to others, you your selues I saie shall assuredlie receiue the same againe. The state of mortall life is such, that men know full little what hangeth ouer them. I put on within these vij. moneths such a mind, that I most wofull wight was as vnlike to stand here, as some of you that sit there. As to your case last recited, wherby you would conclude; I haue remembred and learned of you maister Hare, and you maister Stanford in the parlement house, where you did sit to make lawes, to expound and explane the ambiguities and doubts of law sincerelie, and that without affections. There I saie I learned of you, and others my maisters of the law, this difference betwixt such cases as you remembred one euen now, and the statute whereby I am to be tried. There is a maxime or principle in the law, which ought not to be violated, that no penall statute maie, ought, or should be construed, expounded, extended, or wrested, otherwise than the simple words and rude letter of the same statute doth warrant and signifie. And amongest diuerse good and notable reasons by you there in the parlement house debated (maister sergeant Stanford) I noted this one, whie the said maxime ought to be inuiolable. You said, considering the priuate affections manie times both of princes and ministers within this realme, for that they were men, and would and could erre, it should be no securitie, but verie dangerous to the subiect, to refer the construction and extending of penall statutes to anie iudges equitie (as you termed it) which might either by feare of the higher powers be seduced, or by ignorance and follie abused: and that is an answer by procurement.

Notwithstanding the principall (as you alledge it) and the precisenesse of your sticking to the bare words of the statute, it doth appere and remaine of record in our learning, that diuerse cases haue bene adiudged treason, without the expresse words of the statute, as the quenes learned councell there can declare. Bromleie.

It doth appere the prisoner did not onelie intise or procure What, Caro, Rogers, and others, to commit their traitorous act, and there doth his open facts appere, which Vaughans confession doth witnesse, but also he did mind shortlie after to associat himselfe with those traitors; for he minded to haue departed with the earle of Deuonshire westward. The attornie

My innocencie concerning these matters I trust sufficientlie appereth by my former answers, notwithstanding the condemned mans vniust accusation. But because the true vnderstanding of the statute is in question, I saie procurement, and specallie by words onelie, is without the compasse of it, and that I do learne and prowe by the principle which I learned of maister Stanford. Throckmorton.

Maister Throckmorton, You and I maie not agree this daie in the vnderstanding of the law, for I am for the queene, and you are for your selfe; the iudges must determine the matter. Stanford.

He that doth procure another man to commit a felonie or a murther, I am sure you know well enough the law doth adiudge the procurer there a felon or a murtherer; and in case of treason it hath bene alwaies so taken and reputed. Bromleie.

I do and must cleane to my innocencie, for I procured no man to commit treson: but yet for my learning I desire to heare some case so ruled when the law was as it is now. I do confesse it, that at such time there were statutes prouided for the procurer, counsellor, aider, abetter, and such like, as there were in king Henrie the eights time; you might lawfullie make this cruell construction, and bring the procurer within the compasse of the law. But these statutes being repealed, you ought not now so to do: and as to the principall procurer in felonie and murther, it is not like as in treason; for the principall and accessaries in felonie and murther be triable and punishable by the common law: and so in those cases the iudges maie vse their equitie, extending the determination of the fault as they thinke good: but in treson it is otherwise, the same being limited by statute, which I saie and auow is restreined from anie iudges construction, by the maxime that I recited. Throckmorton. Happie for Throckmorton that those statutes stood then repealed

Your lordships do know a case in Richard the thirds time, where the procurer, to counterfeit false monie, was iudged a traitor, and the law was as it is now. Stanford.

Maister sergeant doth remember you Throckmorton of an experience before our time, that the law hath bene so taken: and yet the procurer was not expressed in the statute, but the law hath bene alwaies so taken. Hare.

I neuer studied the law, whereof I do much repent me: yet I remember, whilest penall statutes were talked of in the parlement house, you the learned men of the house remembred some cases contrarie to this last spoken of. And if I misreport them, I praie you helpe me. In the like case you speake of concerning the procurer to counterfeit false monie; at one time the procurer was iudged a felon, and at another time neither felon nor traitor: so as some of your predecessors adiudged the procurer no traitor in the same case, but leaned to their principall, though some other extend their constructions too large. And here is two cases with me, for one against me. Throckmorton.

Because

Bromleie. Because you replie vpon the principall, I will remember where one taking the great seale of England from one writing, and putting it to another, was adiudged a traitor in Henrie the fourths time, and yet his act was not within the expresse words of the statute of Edward the third. There be diuerse other such like cases that maie be alledged and need were.

Throckmorton. I praie you my lord chiefe iustice call to your good remembrance, that in the selfe same case of the seale, iustice Spilman, a graue & well learned man, since that time, would not condemne the offendor, but did reproue that former iudgement by you last remembred, as erronious.

Stanford. If I had thought you had béene so well furnished in booke cases, I would haue béene better prouided for you.

Throckmorton. I haue nothing but I learned of you speciallie maister sergeant, and of others my maisters of the law in the parlement house, & therefore I maie saie with the prophet (Salutem ex inimicis nostris.)

Southwell. You haue a verie good memorie.

The attornie. If the prisoner maie auoid his treasons after this maner, the quénes suretie shall be in great ieopardie. For Jacke Cade the blacke smith, and diuerse other traitors, sometime alledging the law for them, sometime they meant no harme to the king, but against his councell, as Wiat, the duke of Suffolke, and these did against the Spaniards, when there was no Spaniards within the realme. The duke and his brethren did mistake the law, as you do: yet at length did confesse their ignorance, and submitted themselues: and so were you best to do.

Throckmorton. As to Cade and the blacke smith, I am not so well acquainted with their treasons as you be: but I haue read in the chronicle, they were in the field with a force against the prince, whereby a manifest act did appére. As to the duke of Suffolkes doings, they apperteine not to me. And though you would compare my spéech and talke against the Spaniards to the dukes acts, who assembled a force in armes, it is euident they differ much. I am sorie to ingréue anie other mans doings, but it serueth me for a péece of my defense, and therefore I wish that no man should gather euill of it; God forbid that words and acts be thus confounded.

The attornie. Sir William Stanleie vsed this shift that the prisoner vseth now; he said he did not leuie warre against king Henrie the seauenth, but said to the duke of Buckingham, that in a good quarrell he would aid him with fiue hundred men; and neuertheless Stanleie was for those words atteinted, who (as all the world knoweth) had before that time serued the king verie faithfullie and trulie.

Throckmorton. I praie you maister attorneie do not conclude against me by blind contraries. Whether you allege Stanlies case trulie or no, I know not. But admit it be as you saie, what doth this proue against me? I promised no aid to maister Wiat nor to anie other. The duke of Buckingham leuied warre against the king, with whome Stanleie was confederat so to do as you saie.

The attornie. I praie you my lords that be the quæns commissioners, sutfer not the prisoner to vse the quénes learned councell thus, I was neuer interrupted thus in my life, nor I neuer knew anie thus suffered to talke, as this prisoner is suffered; some of vs will come no more at the barre & we be thus handled.

Bromleie. Throckmorton you must suffer the quénes learned councell to speake, or else we must take order with you, you haue had leaue to talke at your pleasure.

Hare. It is proued that you did talke with Wiat against the comming of the Spaniards, and deuised to interrupt their arriuall: and you promised to do what you could against them: whereupon Wiat being incoraged by you, did leuie a force, and attempted warre against the quénes roiall person.

Throckmorton. It was no treason nor no procurement of treason, to talke against the comming hither of the Spaniards, neither was it treason for me to saie I would hinder their comming hither as much as I could (vnderstanding me rightlie as I meane it) yea though you would extend it to the worst, it was but words, it was not treason at this daie as the law standeth. And as for Wiats doing, they touch me nothing; for at his death when, it was no time to report vntruelie, he purged me.

Bromleie. By sundrie cases remembred here by the quénes learned councell (as you haue heard) that procurement which did appeare none otherwise but by words and those you would make nothing, hath béene of long time, and by sundrie well learned men in the lawes adiudged treason. And therefore, your procurement being so euident as it is, we maie lawfullie saie it was treason, bicause Wiat performed a traitorous act.

Throckmorton. As to the said alleaged forepresidents against me, I haue recited as manie for me, and I would you my lord chiefe iustice should incline your iudgments rather after the example of your honourable predecessors, iustice Markam, and others, which did eschue corrupt iudgements, iudging directlie and sincerelie, after the law & the principles in the same, than after such men as swarning from the truth, the maxime, and the law, did iudge corruptlie, maliciouslie, and affectionatlie.

Bromleie. Justice Markam had reason to warrant his doings: for it did appeare, a merchant of London was arreigned and slanderouslie accused of treason for compassing and imagining the kings death, he did saie he would make his sonne heire of the crowne, and the merchant meant it of a house in Cheapside at the signe of the crowne, but your case is not so.

Throckmorton. My case doth differ I grant, but speciallie bicause I haue not such a iudge: yet there is an other cause to restreine these your strange and extraordinarie constructions: that is to saie, a prouiso in the latter end of the statute of Edward the third, hauing these words: Prouided alwaies, if anie other case of supposed treason shall chance hereafter to come in question or triall before anie iustice, other than is in the said statute expressed, that then the iustice shall forbeare to adiudge the said case, vntill it be shewed to the parlement to trie whether it should be treason or felonie. Here you are restreined by expresse words to adiudge anie case, that is not manifestlie mentioned before, and vntill it be shewed to the parlement.

Pirtman. That prouiso is vnderstood of cases that maie come in triall which hath béene in vse, but the law hath alwaies taken the procurer to be a principall offendor.

Sanders. The law alwaies in cases of treason doth account all principals and no accessaries as in other offenses, and therefore a man offending in treason, either by couert act or procurement, whereupon an open deed hath insued, as in this case, is adiudged by the law a principall traitor.

Throckmorton. You adiudge (me thinke) procurement verie hardlie, besides the principall, and besides the good prouiso, and besides the good example of your best and most godlie learned predecessors, the iudges of the realme, as I haue partlie declared, and notwithstanding this grieuous racking & extending of this word procurement, I am not in the danger of it, for it doth appeare by no deposition that I procured neither one or other to attempt anie act.

Stanford. The iurie haue to trie whether it be so or no, let it weie

wele as it will.

Hare. I know no meane so apparant to trie procurement as by words, & that meane is probable inough against you, as well by your owne confession, as by other mens depositions.

Throckmorton. To talke of the quénes marriage with the prince of Spaine, and also the comming hither of the Spaniards, is not to procure treson to be done: for then the whole parlement house, I meane the common house did procure treason. But sith you will make no difference betwixt words and acts, I praie you remember a statute made in my late souereigne lord and maisters time, king Edward the first, which apparantlie expresseth the difference. These be the words: Whosoeuer doth compasse or imagine to depose the king of his roiall estate by open preaching, expresse words or saiengs, shall for the first offense lose and forfet to the king all his and their goods and cattels, and also shall suffer imprisonment of their bodies at the kings will and pleasure. Whosoeuer, &c: for the second offense shall lose & forfet to the king the whole issues and profits of all his or their lands, tenements and other hereditaments, benefices, prebends, and other spirituall promotions. Whosoeuer, &c: for the third offense, shall for tearme of life or liues of such offendor or offendors, &c: and shall also forfet to the kings maiestie, all his or their goods and cattels, and suffer during his or their liues perpetuall imprisonment of his or their bodies. But whosoeuer, &c: by writing, ciphering, or act, &c: shall for the first offense be adiudged a traitor, and suffer the paines of death. Here you maie perceiue how the whole realme and all your iudgements hath before this vnderstood words and acts diuerselie and aparantlie. And therfore the iudgements of the parlement did assigne diuersitie of punishments, bicause they would not confound the true vnderstanding of words & deeds, appointing for compassing and imagining by word, imprisonment: and for compassing and imagining by open deed, paines of death.

Bromleie. It is agréed by the whole bench, that the procurer and the adherent be deemed alwaies traitors, when as a traitorous act was committed by anie one of the same conspiracie: and there is aparant proofe of your adhering to Wiat, both by your owne confession and other waies.

Throckmorton. Adhering and procuring be not all one, for the statute of Edward the third doth speake of adhering, but not of procuring; & yet adhering ought not to be further extended, than to the quénes enimies within hir realme, for so the statute doth limit the vnderstanding. And Wiat was not the quénes enimie, for he was not so reputed when I talked with him last, and our speech implied no enimie, neither tended to anie treason, or procuring of treason: and therefore I praie you of the iurie note, though I argue the law, I alleage mine innocencie, as the best part of my defense.

Hare. Your adhering to the quénes enimies within the realme, is euidentlie proued: for Wiat was the quænes enimie within the realme, as the whole realme knoweth it, and he hath confessed it both at his arreignement and at his death.

Throckmorton. By your leaue, neither Wiat at his arreignement nor at his death, did confesse that he was the quénes enimie when I talked last with him; neither was he reputed nor taken in fouretæne daies after, vntill he assembled a force in armes, what time I was at your house maister Englefield, where I learned the first intelligence of Wiats stirre. And I aske you who doth depose that there passed anie maner of aduertisement betwixt Wiat and me, after he had discouered his doings, and shewed himselfe an enimie: If I had bæne so disposed, who did let me that I did not repaire to Wiat, or to send to him, or to the duke of Suffolke either, who was in mine owne countrie, and thither I might haue gone and conueied my selfe with him, vnsuspected for my departing homewards.

Englefield. It is true that you were there at my house, accompanied with others your brethren, and to my knowledge, ignorant of these matters.

Bromleie. Throckmorton, you confessed you talked with Wiat and others against the comming of the Spaniards, and of the taking of the tower of London, whereupon Wiat leuied a force of men against the Spaniards he said, and so you saie all: but in deed it was against the quéne, which he confessed at length: therefore Wiats acts do proue you counsellor and procurer, howsoeuer you would auoid the matter.

Throckmorton. My thinke you would conclude against me with a mishapen argument in logike, and you will giue me leaue, I will make an other.

Stanford. The iudges sit not here to make disputations, but to declare the law, which hath bæne sufficientlie done, if you would consider it.

Hare. You haue heard reason and the law, if you will conceiue it.

Throckmorton. Oh mercifull God, oh eternall father, which séest all things, what maner of proceedings are these? To what purpose serueth the statute of repeale the last parlement, where I heard some of you here present, and diuerse other of the quænes learned councell, grieuouslie inueie against the cruell & bloudie lawes of king Henrie the eight, and against some lawes made in my late souereigne lord and maisters time, king Edward the first. Some termed them Dracos lawes, which were written in bloud: some said they were more intollerable than anie laws that Dionysius or anie other tyrant made. In conclusion, as manie men, so manie bitter tearmes and names those lawes had. And moreouer, the preface of the same statute doth recite, that for words onelie, manie great personages, and others of good behauiour, haue bæne most cruellie cast awaie by these former sanguinolent thirstie lawes, with manie other suggestions for the repeale of the same. And now let vs put on indifferent eies, and throughlie consider with our selues, as you the iudges handle the constructions of the statute of Edward the third, with your equitie and extentions, whether we be not in much worse case now than we were when those cruell laws yoked vs. These lawes albeit they were grieuous and captious, yet they had the verie propertie of a law after saint Paules description. For those lawes did admonish vs, and discouer our sinnes plainelie vnto vs, & when a man is warned, he is halfe armed. These lawes, as they be handled, be verie baits to catch vs, & onlie prepared for the same, and no laws: for at the first sight they ascerteine vs we be deliuered from our old bondage, and by the late repeale the last parlement, we liue in more securitie. But when it pleaseth the higher powers to call anie mans life and saiengs in question, then there be constructions, interpretations, and extentions reserued to the iustices and iudges equitie, that the partie triable, as I am now, shall find himselfe in much worse case than before when those cruell lawes stood in force. Thus our amendment is from Gods blessing into the warme sunne. But I require you honest men which are to trie my life, consider these opinions of my life, iudges be rather agréeable to the time, than to the truth: for their iudgements be repugnant to their owne principle, repugnant to their godlie and best learned predecessors opinions, repugnant I saie to the prouiso in the statute of repeale made in the last parlement.

The atturnie. Maister Throckmorton quiet your selfe, and it shall shall be the better for you.

Throckmorton. Maister attornie, I am not so vnquiet as you be, and yet our cases are not alike: but bicause I am so tedious to you, and haue long troubled this presence, it maie please my lord chiefe iustice to repeat the euidence wherewith I am charged, and my answers to all the obiections, if there be no other matter to laie against me.

¶ Then the chiefe iustice remembred particularlie all the depositions and euidences giuen against the prisoner, and either for want of good memorie, or good will, the prisoners answers were in part not recited: wherevpon the prisoner craued indifferencie, and did helpe the iudges old memorie with his owne recitall.]

Sendall. My maisters of the iurie, you haue to inquire whether sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, here prisoner at the barre, be giltie of these treasons, or anie of them, whereof he hath bene indicted and this daie arreigned, yea or no. And if you find him giltie, you shall inquire what lands, tenements, goods, and cattels he had at the daie of his treasons committed, or at anie time since: and whether he fled for the treasons or no, if you find him not giltie.

Throckmorton. Haue you said what is to be said?

Sendall. Yea for this time.

Throckmorton. Then I praie you giue me leaue to speake a few words to the iurie. The weight and grauitie of my cause hath greatlie occasioned me to trouble you here long, and therfore I mind not to interteine you here long, with anie prolixitie: you perceiue notwithstanding this daie great contention betwixt the iudges and the quenes learned councell on the one partie, and me the poore and wofull prisoner on the other partie. The triall of our whole controuersie, the triall of my innocencie, the triall of my life, lands, and goods, and the destruction of my posteritie for euer, doth rest in your good iudgements. And albeit manie this daie haue greatlie inueied against me, the finall determination thereof is transferred onelie to you. How grieuous & horrible the shedding of innocents bloud is in the sight of almightie God, I trust you do remember. Therefore take héed (I saie) for Christs sake, do not defile your consciences with such heinous & notable crimes. They be grieuouslie and terriblie punished, as in this world and vale of miserie vpon the childrens children to the third and fourth generation, and in the world to come with euerlasting fire and damnation. Lift vp your minds to God, and care not too much for the world, looke not backe to the fleshpots of Aegypt, which will allure you from heauenlie respects, to worldlie securitie, and can thereof neither make you anie suertie. Beléeue I praie you, the quæne and hir magistrats be more delighted with fauourable equitie, than with rash crueltie. And in that you be all citizens, I will take my leaue of you with S. Paules farewell to the Ephesians, citizens also you be, whom he toke to record that he was pure from sheding anie bloud, a speciall token & doctrine left for your instruction, that euerie of you maie wash his hands of innocents bloud shed, when you shall take your leaue of this wretched world. The holie ghost be amongest you.

Sendall. Come hither sergeant, take the iurie with you, and suffer no man to come at them, but to be ordered as the law appointeth, vntill they be agreed vpon their verdict.

Throckmorton. It may please you my lords and maisters which be commissioners, to giue order that no person haue accesse or conference with the iurie, neither that anie of the quenes learned councell be suffered to repaire to them, or to talke with anie of them, vntill they present themselues here in open court, to publish their verdict.

¶ Vpon the prisoners sute on this behalfe, the bench gaue order that two seargeants were sworne to suffer no man to repaire to the iurie, vntill they were agreed according vnto order. Wherevpon then the prisoner was by commandement of the bench withdrawne from the barre, and the court adiourned vntill three of the clocke at afternoone, at which houre the commissioners returned to the Guildhall, and there did tarie vntill the iurie were agreed vpon the verdict. And about fiue of the clocke, their agreement being aduertised to the commissioners, the said prisoner, sir Nicholas Throckmorton was againe brought to the barre, where also the iurie did repaire; and being demanded whether they were agreed vpon their verdict, answered vniuersallie with one voice, Yea. Then it was asked who should speake for them: they answered, Whetston the foreman.]

Sendall. Nicholas Throckmorton knight, hold vp thy hand.

Throckmorton. Then the prisoner did so vpon the summons.

Sendall. You that be of the iurie, looke vpon the prisoner.

Iurie. The iurie did as they were inioined.

Sendall. How saie you, is maister Throckmorton knight there prisoner at the bar, giltie of the treasons whereof he hath bene indicted and arreigned in maner and forme, yea or no?

Whetston. No.

Sendall. How saie you, did he flie vpon them?

Whetston. No, we find no such thing.

Throckmorton. I had forgotten to answer that question before, but you haue found according to truth: and for the better warrantie of your doings, vnderstand that I came to London, and so to the quenes councell vnbrought, when I vnderstood they demanded for me: & yet I was almost an hundred miles hence, where if I had not presumed vpon my truth, I could haue withdrawne my selfe from catching.

Wrotesley. How saie you the rest of you, is Whetstons verdict all your verdicts?

Iurie. The whole inquest answered Yea.

Wrotesley. Remember your selues better, haue you considered substantially the whole euidence in sort as it was declared & recited; the matter doth touch the quenes highnesse, and your selues also, take good héed what you do.

Whetston. My lord, we haue throughlie considered the euidence laid against the prisoner, and his answers to all these matters, and accordinglie we haue found him not giltie agreeable to all our consciences.

Wrotesley. If you haue done well, it is the better for you.

Throckmorton. It is better to be tried, than to liue suspected. Blessed be the Lord God of Israell, for he hath visited and redéemed his people, and hath raised vp a mightie saluation for vs in the house of his seruant Dauid. And it may please you my lord chéefe iustice, forsomuch as I haue bene indicted and arreigned of sundrie treasons, and haue according to the law put my triall to God and my countrie, that is to saie, to these honest men which haue found me not giltie, I humblie beseech you to giue me such benefit, acquitall and iudgement, as the law in this case doth appoint.

¶ When the prisoner had said these words the commissioners consulted togither.]

Throckmorton. Maie it please you my lord chéefe iustice to pronounce sentence for my discharge?

Wrotesley. Whereas you do aske the benefit that the law in such case doth appoint, I will giue it you; to wit, that where you haue béene indicted of sundrie high treasons, & haue béene héere this daie before the quenes commissioners and iustices arreigned of the said treasons, whereunto you haue pleaded not giltie, and haue for triall therein put your selfe on God & your countrie, and they haue found you not giltie, the court doth award that you be cléerlie discharged, paieng eng your fees. Notwithstanding maister lieutenant take him with you againe, for there are other matters to charge him withall.

Throckmorton. It maie please you my lords ¶ maisters of the Q. highnesse priuie councell, to be on my behalfe humble suters to hir maiestie, that like as the law this daie (God be praised) hath purged me of the treasons wherewith I was most dangerouslie charged: so it might please hir excellent maiestie to purge me in hir priuat iudgement, and both forgiue ¶ forget my ouerrash boldnesse, that I vsed in talke of hir highnes marriage with the prince of Spaine, matters too far aboue my capacitie, and I verie vnable to consider the grauitie thereof, a matter impertinent for me a priuat person to talke of, which did apperteine to hir highnesse priuie councell to haue in deliberation. And if it shall please hir highnesse of hir bountifull liberalitie, to remit my former ouersights, I shall thinke my selfe happie for triall of the danger that I haue this daie escaped, and maie thereby admonish me to eschue things aboue my reach, and also to instruct me to deale with matters agreeable to my vocation. And God saue the queens maiestie, and grant the same long to reigne ouer vs. And the same Lord be praised for you the magistrats, before whome I haue had my triall this daie indifferentlie by the law, and you haue proceeded with me accordinglie; ¶ the grace of God be amongst you now and euer. ¶ There was no answer made by anie of the bench to the prisoners sute, but the atturnie did speake these words.]

The atturnie. And it please you my lords, forsomuch as it seemeth these men of the iurie, which haue strangelie acquited the prisoner of his tresons wherof he was indicted, will forthwith depart the court, I praie you for the queene, that they, and euerie of them maie bee bound in a recognisance of fiue hundred pounds a peece, to answer to such matters as they shall bee charged with in the quenes behalfe, whensoeuer they shall be charged or called.

Whetston. I praie you my lords be good to vs, and let vs not be molested for discharging our consciences trulie. We be poore merchantmen, and haue great charge vpon our hands, ¶ our liuings do depend vpon our trauels, therefore it maie please you to appoint vs a certeine day for our appearance, for perhaps some of vs maie be in forren parties about our businesse.

¶ Thus much for sir Nicholas Throckmortons arreignement, wherein is to be considered, that the repealing of certeine statutes in the last parlement, was the chiefe matter he had to alledge for his aduantage: whereas the repealing of the same statutes was meant notwithstanding for an other purpose (as before you haue partlie heard) which statutes, or the effect of the chiefe branches of them haue beene since that time againe reuiued, as by the bookes of the statutes it maie better appeare, to the which I referre the reader.] The eight and twentith of Aprill, the lord Thomas Greie, brother to the duke of Suffolke, was beheaded at the tower hill, a proper gentleman, and one that had serued right valiantlie both in France and Scotland, in the daies of the late kings Henrie and Edward.

The lord Tho. Greie beheaded.

Upon saturdaie the eight and twentith of Aprill, sir James Crofts and maister William Winter were brought from the tower to the Guildhall in London, where sir James Crofts was arreigned: but bicause the daie was farre spent, maister Winter was not arreigned, but caried backe againe to the tower with the said sir James Crofts. William Thomas, of whome mention is made before in the historie of sir Thomas Wiat, with certeine other, were arreigned and condemned for the conspiring of the murther and killing of the queene vpon the sudden: and for that offense, the said William Thomas was the eightéenth daie of Maie, drawne, hanged, and quartered at Tiburne. The nineteenth daie of Maie next following, the ladie Elisabeth sister to queene Marie, was deliuered out of the tower, and committed to the custodie of sir John Williams knight, afterward lord Williams of Tame, by whome hir grace was more courteoulie intreated than some would haue wished. Wherefore shortlie after she was committed to the manour of Woodstocke, vnder the custodie of sir Henrie Benningfield of Drenbourough in the countie of Norffolke, knight, at whose hands she found not the like courtesie, who (as it is well knowne) vsed his office more like a gailor than a gentleman, and with such rigour as was not meet to be shewed to such an estate, which extremitie of crueltie to a person of great dignitie notwithstanding hir innocencie, is verie well noted by C. O. in Eirenarchia siue Elisabetha, where he saieth:

William Thomas arreigned & condemned.

The ladie Elisabeth deliuered out of the tower.

Sir Henrie Benningfield knight.

——odio quoque tenditur acri
Suspicio vehemens in te clarissima princeps
Elisabetha, caputq; tuum: quòd vixeris insons,
Quódq; animi candor culpa noxáq; remotus
Hactenus inuidiæ renitens hebetarit ocellos,
Ah liuore tumens sacer obliuiscitur ordo.
Implacata cohors spumante exæstuat ira
*Furfuris eiusdem, donec custodibus agna
(Arcebat Deus ipse lupos) committitur arctis
Asseruanda locis, vi libertatis adempta.

* Elisabetha.

But here is to be noted, not so much the vnciuill nature of the man, as the singular lenitie, and gratious clemencie of that gentle and vertuous princesse, who afterward (as shall appeare) comming to the possession of the crowne as hir rightfull inheritance, was at that time so farre from reuenge of iniuries receiued, that whereas diuerse princes haue requited much lesse offenses with losse of life, she neuer touched him either with danger of life, or losse of lands or goods, nor neuer proceeded further than to discharge him of the court: which manie thought was the thing that pleased him best. At whose departing from hir presence, she vsed onelie these words, or the like in sense: God forgiue you that is past, and we do: and if we haue anie prisoner whome we would haue hardlie handled and streictlie kept, then we will send for you.

Rich. Grafton.

Queene Elisabeths words to Benningfield hir butcherlie keeper in the time of hir durance.

The fiue and twentith of Maie, the erle of Deuonshire was brought out of the tower at three of the clocke in the morning, sir Thomas Tresham knight, and maister Chamberlaine of Suffolke, with certeine of the gard, being appointed to attend on him to Fodringham castell in Northamptonshire, where he was assigned to remaine vnder custodie of the said sir Thomas Tresham and others. ¶ On the tenth of June, the foresaid doctor Pendleton preached at Poules crosse, at whome a gun was shot, the pellet wherof went verie neere him, and light on the church wall: but the shoter could not be found.] The eleuenth of June the lord John Greie, brother to the late duke of Suffolke, was arreigned at Westminster in the Kings bench, and there condemned: but yet through the painfull trauell and diligent sute of the ladie Greie his wife, his pardon was obteined, and so he escaped with life, and was at length set at libertie, as after it shall appeare.

A gun shot at the preacher: See before pag. 1102.

Anno Reg. 2. The lord John Greie arreigned, pardoned, and released.

¶ The two and twentith of June was proclamation made, forbidding the shooting in handguns, and bearing of weapons. The fiftéenth of Julie, Elisabeth Croft, a wench about eightéene yeares old, stood vpon a scaffold at Pauls crosse all the sermon time, where she confessed, that she being moued by diuerse lewd persons there vnto, had vpon the fourteenth of March last before passed, counterfeited certeine speaches in an house without Aldresgate of London, through

Abr. Fl. ex I. Stow. 1091. A spirit in a wall without Aldersgate doth penãce at Paules crosse for abusing the people, &c.

through the which the people of the whole citie were wonderfullie molested, for that all men might heare the voice, but not see his person. Some said it was an angell, some a voice from heauen, some the Holie-ghost, &c. This was called the spirit in the wall: shee had laine whistling in a strange whistle made for that purpose, which was giuen hir by one Drakes: then were there diuerse companions confederat with hir, which putting themselues amongst the preasse, tooke vpon them to interpret what the spirit said, expressing certeine seditious words against the queene, the prince of Spaine, the masse, and confession, &c.]

The prince of Spains preparation to come into England.

But now in this meane while that these things thus passed here in England, the prince of Spaine prepared for his hither comming, vnto whome had beene sent the earle of Bedford lord priuie seale, and the lord Fitzwaters, accompanied with diuerse noble men and gentlemen, who arriuing at the Corone in Galisia, were receiued verie honorablie. And forsomuch as the prince was then at vale Dolido, distant from thence neere hand an hundred leagues, they were desired to staie there for their better ease, till he might haue conuenient opportunitie to repaire thither: which neuertheless he could not do so soone as he pretended to haue desire thereto, as well by reason of the sickenesse of his sister, the princes Dowager of Portugall, as by other weightie affaires.

The Englsh ambassadors meet him at S. James Copostella.

But being at length rid of such incumbers, & come into Galisia, the English ambassadors met him at saint James de Compostella. And after he had in presence of a great number of noble men and gentlemen there ratified the contract, and sworne to obserue the couenant, he departed towards Corone, where within a few daies after he imbarked, and accompanied with the number of an hundred and fiftie saile, directed his course toward England.

The arriuall the prince Spaine in Southampto.

The lord admerall hauing continuallie beene abrode on the seas for the space of three moneths or more, with a nauie of eight and twentie ships and other vessels, accompanied also with the viceadmerall of the low countries, that had vnder his gouernance fourteene ships of the emperours, met with the said prince the nineteenth of Julie, about the Néedles, and from thence accompanied him vnto Southampton, where he arriued the morrow after the twentith of Julie, the earle of Arundell lord steward of the queens house being sent from hir to present to him the George and the garter of the order (of the which fellowship he was at the last chapiter holden by the confrers chosen one of the companie) met him vpon the water, and at his comming to land, presented the said George and garter vnto him. At his landing he was receiued by the lord treasuror, the bishop of Lincolne, the lord Saint-John, and others, by whom he was first conueied to the church, and from thence to his lodging.

e is receiued the nobilitie d lords.

After his landing, the lord chancellor accompanied with diuerse gentlemen, was sent from the queene to bid him welcome on hir behalfe; & so was he visited by diuerse noble personages whilest he remained at Southampton, sent thither for that purpose. And he on the other part sent diuerse on his noble men to visit hir maiestie on his behalfe. Monday the three & twentith of Julie, he departed from Southampton towards Winchester, whither shée was the saturdaie before remoued from Bishops Waltham. On the waie he was accompanied, beside the noblemen & gentlemen of his owne traine, with the marques of Winchester, the earles of Arundell, Darbie, Worceter, Bedford, Rutland, Penbroke, Surrie: the lords Clinton, Cobham, Willoughbie, Darcie, Matrauers, Talbot, Strange, Fitzwaren, and North, with manie other noblemen and gentlemen, and their traines, to the number of two thousand horsses. At his comming to the church in Winchester, the lord chancellor accompanied with the bishops of Durham, Elie, London, Lincolne, Chichester, and diuerse other prelats, were readie to receiue him. After he had made his praiers, he was conueied to his lodging prepared for him in the deans house.

The queene hir selfe was lodged in the bishops palace, whither his highnesse the nert daie came, and was receiued by hir in the hall, in most courteous & louing maner. And after such salutations & talke ended, as was thought conuenient for the time, he returned to his lodging, where he continued all that night: and the nert daie being the fiue and twentith of Julie, the mariage was openlie solemnized. At the which were present, the ambassadors of the emperor, the king of Romans, the king of Bohem, of Uenice, Florence, Ferrare, and Sauoie, with certeine agents of other states in Italie. As for the shot of ordinance, the diuerse kinds of musicke, the sumptuous and costlie apparell, trapers, and other furniture, readie prouided against the receiuing of him, with other ceremonies vsed aswell about the mariage, as in other places where he was to be receiued, were euerie such, and euerie thing done in such good order, as better for such a purpose might not lightlie be deuised. Nobles of Spaine were, the duke of Alua, the duke of Medina celi, the admerall of Castilla, the marques of Bergues, the marques of Piscara, the marques of Saria, the marques of Valli, the marques of Aguillar, the earle of Egmund, the earle of Horne, the earle of Feria, the earle of Chinchon, the earle of Oliuares, the earle of Saldana, the earle of Modica, the earle of Fuentesalida, the earle of Landriano, the earle of Castellar, Don Roigomes, the bishop of Cuenca, Don John de Benauides; and diuerse others.

The queens lodging in the bishops palace.

The mariage solemnized and what states of Italie & Spaine were present at it.

The names of the noble men that came ouer from Spaine with the prince.

An abstract of the conditions of this mariage betweene both the princes.

But now forsomuch as some would happilie be desirous to know the conditions of this memorable mariage betwixt these two high princes, the consequence whereof might haue proued of so great importance, although by the queens decease the effect was made void, I haue thought good to recite in briefe the chiefe articles thereof.

He to be intituled king during the matrimonie, &c.

1 It was couenanted that he should enioy the title and name of king, during the matrimonie, and should aid hir highnesse (being his wife) in the administration of hir realmes and dominions; but yet he should permit and suffer hir to haue the whole disposition of all benefices, offices, lands, reuenues, and fruits of the said realmes and dominions, and that the same should be bestowed vpon such as were hir naturall borne subiects, and that all matters of the said realmes and dominions should be treated and handled in the same tongs, wherein of old they haue béene wont to be treated.

She to be intituled to his dominions during the mariage.

2 That the queene by vertue of the said mariage should be admitted into the societie of the realmes and dominions of the said prince of Spaine, as well such as he now presentlie hath, as such other also as during the matrimonie may come to him.

Hir dowrie if she surmued him.

3 And for hir dowrie, in case she ouerliued him, she was appointed to receiue yeerlie three score thousand pounds, after the value of fortie groats Flemmish monie the pound, to be allotted vpon all the realms, lands, and patrimoniall dominions of his father the emperor, that is to saie, fortie thousand pounds to be assigned vpon the realms of Spaine, Castile, and Aragon,

Aragon, according to the custome of those realms. The other twentie thousand pounds were appointed vpon the dukedoms, earledoms, and dominions of Brabant, Flanders, Henalt, Holland, and other patrimoniall lands and inheritances of the said emperor in the low countries of Germanie; in like maner as the ladie Margaret of England, sometime wife and widow of the lord Charles, sometime duke of Burgogne, had and receiued of the same. And if anie parcell or parcels thereof be alienated, then in lieu thereof, other lands should be in due forme assigned forth for hir to enioy, lieng nere to the residue of hir dower.

Touching the issue of hir bodie male or female.

4 The issue that should chance to come of this mariage, touching the right of the mothers inheritance in the realme of England, and the other realmes and dominions depending of the same, aswell the males as females should succeed in them, according to the laws, statutes, and customs of the same.

Touching the prince of Spaines disposing of his lands after his decease.

5 And as touching the lands that the said prince of Spaine shall leaue behind him, first there should be reserued vnto his eldest sonne the lord Charles of Austrich, infant of Spaine, and to the children and heires of him descending, as well females as males all and singular their rights, which to the said prince dooth either then, or thereafter should belong, or should at anie time be deuolued to him in the realmes of Spaine, of both the Sicils, in the dukedome of Millaine, and other lands and dominions in Lumbardie and Italie, which neuertheles shall be burdened and charged with the foresaid dower of fortie thousand pounds. And if it fortuned the said lord Charles to die, and the issue of his bodie to faile, then the eldest son of this matrimonie should succeed, and be admitted vnto the said right, according to the nature, lawes, and customs of those realmes and dominions. The same eldest son should also succeed in all the dukedoms, earledoms, dominions, and patrimoniall lands belonging vnto the said emperor father to the said prince of Spaine, as well in Burgogne, as in the low countries, in the dukedoms of Brabant, Lurenburgh, Gelderland, Zutphane, Burgongne, Freeseland, in the countries of Flanders, Arthois, Holland, Zeland, Namure, and the land beyond the Iles, and all other whatsoeuer thereunto belonging.

Touching the lord Charles and his descendents if heire male came by this mariage.

6 But if the said lord Charles, or they that should come of him, remaine in life; and that there be anie male child by this matrimonie: the said lord Charles and his descendents should then be excluded from the said lands and patrimoniall dominions of the low countries, and of Burgongne, and the same should descend vnto the said eldest son borne of this matrimonie. And to the other children borne thereof, as well males as females, a conuenient portion and dower should be allotted in the realme of England, and dominions depending of the same, and in the said lands & patrimoniall dominions of the low countries: and neither the eldest sonne of this matrimonie, nor the sons begotten in the same, should pretend anie right in the realme of Spaine, or in the dominions of the same, and reserued to the said lord Charles the infant, otherwise than by their fathers and grandfathers disposition.

What is to be done if heire male faile, and there be none but issue female.

7 Moreouer, if it fortune no issue male to be borne of this matrimonie, but onelie females, in that case the eldest female should with full right succeed in the said lands and dominions of the low countries, so as neuertheless she being minded to chose to husband anie noble man not borne in England, or in the low countries, without the consent of the said lord Charles the infant, in that case the right of the succession should remaine to the said lord Charles, in the said dominions of the low countries, Burgongne, and their appurtenances. And yet neuertheless in that case, both she and the other daughters also descending of this matrimonie, shall be indowed of their fathers lands & possessions aswell in Spaine, as in the low countries.

What for want of issue by the lord Charles.

8 And for want of the said lord Charles, and issue of him; and none but daughters remaining of this mariage, the eldest daughter in that case should succeed, not onelie in the lands of the low countries; but also in the realmes of Spaine, England, and the rest, after the nature, the lawes, and customs of the same.

A prouiso touching succession.

9 Herewith was a prouiso accorded, that whatsoeuer he or she should be that should succeed in them, they should leaue to euerie of the said realms, lands, and dominions, whole and entire their priuileges, rites and customs, and gouerne the same by the naturall borne of the same realmes, dominions, and lands, &c.

Touching a perpetuall league or bond of fraternitie, &c.

10 Finallie, that betweene the said emperor, the prince and his successors, their realmes, and the said queene, it was concluded, that from thenceforth there should be an entire & sincere fraternitie, vnitie, and most strict confederacie for euer, &c: so as they should mutuallie aid each other in all things, according to the strength, forme, & effect of the latter treatise of a strict amitie, bearing date at Westminster in the yeere 1542: the declaration of which treatie beareth date at Uteright, the sixteenth of Januarie, in the yeare 1546.

In another treatise were these articles following comprised.

No stranger to be admitte to anie office, &c in England.

First, that the prince of Spaine should not promote, admit, or receiue vnto anie office, administration, or benefice in the realme of England, or dominions to the same belonging, anie stranger, or persons not borne vnder the subiection of the said queene.

Englishmen to attend at the court.

2 That he should receiue into his household and court, gentlemen and yeomen of the said realme of England in a conuenient number, esteeming, interteining, and nourishing them as his proper subiects, & bring none with him in his retinue that will doo anie wrong to the subiects of the said realme; & if they doo, he to correct them with condigne punishment, and to see them expelled his court.

The state in no point to be innouated.

3 That he shall doo nothing whereby anie thing be innouated in the state and right either publike or priuat, or in the lawes and customs of the said realme of England, or the dominions thereunto belonging; but shall keepe to all estates and orders their rights and priuileges.

The queene not to be conueied out of hir owne territories.

4 That he shall not leade awaie the queene out of the borders of hir graces realme, vnlesse she hir selfe desire it; or carrie the children that may be borne of this matrimonie out of the same realme, vnlesse it be otherwise thought good by the consent and agreement of the nobilitie of England.

The prince of Spaines title to end with the queenes death.

5 And in case no children being left, the said queene doo die before him, he shall not challenge anie right at all in the said kingdome, but without impediment shall permit the succession therof to come vnto them to whome it shall belong, by the right and lawes of the realme.

The iewels, &c of the land not to be carried out, alienated, vsurped, &c.

6 Item that he shall not beare nor carrie ouer out of the said realme, the iewels and pretious things of estimation. Neither shall he alienat or doo awaie anie whit of the appurtenances of the said realme of England, or suffer anie part of them to be vsurped by his subiects, or anie other. But shall see that all and singular places of the realme, and specially the forts and frontires of the same be faithfullie kept and preserued preserued to the vse and profit of the said realme, and by the naturall borne of the same.

No ships, guns, ordinance, &c: to be remoued, conueied, &c: out of the land.

7 He shall not suffer anie ship, guns, ordinance whatsoeuer of warre or defense, to be remoued or conueied out of the same realme: but shall contrariwise cause them diligentlie to be kept and viewed when need requireth; and shall so prouide that the same maie be alwaies readie in their strength and force for defense of the realme.

Peace to be mainteined in his realme without meding in other forren nations warres.

8 Item the realme of England by occasion of this matrimonie, shall not directlie nor indirectlie be intangled with the warre that is betweene the emperor father to the said prince of Spaine, and Henrie the French king; but he the said prince (as much as in him maie lie) on the behalfe of the said realme of England, shall see the peace betweene the said realmes of France and England obserued, and shall giue no cause of anie breach, by which couenant the latter treatise of a strict amitie should not be in anie point derogated, but the same still to remaine in the former force, &c.

But now to returne where we left. At the time of the solemnization of the foresaid marriage holden at Winchester (as before ye haue heard) the emperors ambassadors being present, openlie pronounced, that in consideration of that marriage, the emperor had giuen and granted to the said prince his sonne the kingdome of Naples and Jerusalem, with diuerse other seats and seniories. The solemnitie of that marriage ended, the king of heralds called Garter, openlie in the church in the presence of the king, the queene, & the lords as well of England as Spaine, all the people being present, solemnelie proclamed the title and stile of those two princes, as followeth: Philip and Marie by the grace of God king and queene of England, France, Naples, Jerusalem, and Ireland, defendors of the faith, princes of Spaine and Sicilie, archdukes of Austrich, dukes of Millaine, Burgundie, and Brabant, counties of Hapsburge, Flanders, and Tiroll. The proclamation being ended, the trumpets blew, and the king with the queene came forth of the church hand in hand and two swords borne before them, and so returned to their palace.

The emperors gift to the prince his sonne.

The title of state belonging both to Philip and Marie proclamed by the herald.

¶ By this time report had sufficientlie sounded abrode all that happened, spectallie the solemnities executed about this rotall marriage; whereby some supposed that this land would haue become a golden world, and that such amitie would haue insued betweene both nations, as nothing should dissolue. But others were of a contrarie opinion, supposing (as it came to passe indeed) that the peoples minds would be alienated and estranged from the disposition whereto they were addicted in king Edwards daies, and that manie would become heauie hearted vpon heare-saie of this coniunction; much more pensife & grieued at the meditation of the miseries which were like immediatlie to follow; as C. O. noteth in discoursing on this matter, saieng as here followeth:

Succedit regi defuncto, sceptra capescens
Fœmina, cui nomen Maria est, soror vna duarum
Ex stirpe Henrici: quæ paucis nupta diebus
Post homini externo consanguineóque Philippo,
Coniugio tali subtristes reddidit Anglos.
Námque duas gentes raro coalescere cernas
Vnanimes patria plerunque & amore diremptas.

John Fox in the Acts and Monuments.

Of this marriage (saith maister Fox) as the papists chieflie seemed to be verie glad, so diuerse of them after diuerse studies, did shew forth their inward affections: some made interludes and pageants, and some drew forth genealogies, deriuing his pedegree from Edward the third, and John of Gant; some made verses. Amongst all other maister White then bishop of Lincolne in his poeticall veine, being drunken with ioie of the marriage, spued out certeine verses, the copie whereof we haue here inserted, to impart vnto common knowlege.

Philippi & Mariæ genealogia, qua amho principes ex Iohanne de Gandauo Eduardi tertij, Angliæ, Franciæque regis filio descendisse ostenduntur, White Lincolniense authore.

Ille parens regum Gandaua ex vrbe Iohannes
Somersetensem comitem profert Iohannem.
Somersetensis venit hoc patre dux Iohannes,
Qui Margaretam Richemundi habuit comitissam.
Hæc dedit Henricum, qui regni septimus huius
Henrico octauo solium regale reliquit.
Hoc patre propitio, & fausto quasi sydere nata
Iure tenes sacram, teneásque Maria coronam.

These verses are answered in maister Fox by the learned.

Verses of maister White bishop of Lincolne, concerning the marriage of Philip and Marie.

Nubat vt Angla Anglo, regina Maria Philippo,
Inque suum fontem regia stirps redeat,
Noluit humani generis dæmon vetus hostis,
Sed Deus Anglorum prouida spes voluit.
Nollet Scotus inops, timidúsque ad prælia Gallus, Cæsar, & Italia, & Flandria tota volet.
Noluit Hæreticus (stirps Caiphæ) pontificum grex
Pontificum sed grex Catholicus voluit.
Octo vxorati Patres in dæmone nollent:
Quinque Cathenati pro pietate volent.
Noluit Iohannes Dudley Northumbrius vrsus,
Sed fidum regni Concilium voluit.
Noluit ætatis nostræ Catilina Piatus,
Sed proceres & plebs & pia turba volet.
Nollet Grauus dux, & Cantia terra rebellans:
Nos quoniam Dominus sic voluit, volumus.
Clarior effectus repetat sua limina sanguis,
Cùm sit Philippo iuncta Maria viro.]

But to proceed. As soone as the feasting & solemnitie of the said marriage was ended, the king and queene departed from Winchester, and by easie iournies came to Windsore castell, where the first of August being sundaie, he was stalled according to the order of the garter, and there kept S. Georges feast himselfe in his rotall estate, and the earle of Sussex was also the same time stalled in the order. At which time an herald tooke downe the armes of England at Windsore, and in the place of them would haue set the armes of Spaine, but he was commanded to set them vp againe by certeine lords. The seuenth of August was made a generall hunting with a toile raised of foure or fiue miles in length, so that manie a deere that day was brought to the quarrie. The eleuenth of August they remoued to Richmond, and from thence the 27 of the same moneth they came by water to London, landing at the bishop of Winchesters house, through which they passed both to Southworke parke, and so to Suffolke place, where they lodged that night: and the next daie being saturdaie and the nineteenth of August, they being accompanied with a great number of nobles and gentlemen, rode from thence ouer the bridge, and passed through London vnto Westminster.

King Philip stalled at Windsor.

Iohn Fox.

A generall hunting.

The king and queene come through London to Westminster.

¶ Now as the king came to London bridge, & as he entred at the drawbridge, was a vaine great spectacle set vp, two images representing two giants, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagog holding betweene them certeine Latine verses, which for the vaine ostentation of flatterie I ouerpasse. And as they passed ouer the bridge, there was a number of ordinance shot at the tower, such as by old mens report the like hath not beene heard or seene these hundred yeeres. From London bridge they passed to the conduit in Gratious street, which was finelie painted, and among other things, the nine worthies, whereof king Henrie the eight was one. He was painted in harnesse having in one hand a sword, and in the other hand a booke, whereupon was written Verbum Dei, deliuering the same booke (as it were) to his sonne king Edward, who was painted in a corner by him. But hereupon was no small matter made, for the bishop of Winchester lord chancellor, sent for the painter, and not onelie called him knaue for painting a booke in king Henries hand, and specíallie for writing thereupon Verbum Dei: but also ranke traitor & villen, saieng to him that he should rather haue put the booke into the quéenes hand (who was also painted there) for that she had reformed the church and religion, with other things according to the pure and sincere word of God indeed. The painter answered and said, that if he had knowne that that had beene the matter wherefore his lordship sent for him, he could haue remedied it, and not haue troubled his lordship.

Abr. Fl. ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio. Maine pageants of London.

Winchester cannot abide the booke called Verbum Dei.

The painter sent for to the bishop of winchester.

The painters answer.

The bishop answered and said, that it was the quéenes maiesties will and commandement, that he should send for him; and so commanding him to wipe out the booke and Verbum Dei too: he sent him home. So the painter departed, but fearing least he should leaue some part either of the booke, or of Verbum Dei, in king Henries hand: he wiped awaie a péece of his fingers withall. Here I passe ouer and cut off other gauds and pageants of pastime shewed vnto him in passing through London, with the flattering verses set vp in Latine, wherin were blazed out in one place the fiue Philips, as the fiue worthies of the world, Philip of Macedonia, Philip the emperor, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philip prince of Spaine and king of England. In another poetrie king Philip was resembled by an image representing Orpheus, and all English people resembled to brute and sauage beasts following after Orpheus harpe, and dansing after king Philips pipe. Not that I reprehend the art of the Latine verses, which was fine and cunning; but that I passe ouer the matter, hauing other grauer things in hand, and therefore passe ouer also the sight at Paules church side, of him that came downe vpon a rope tied to the batlements with his head before, neither staieng himselfe with hand or foot: which shortlie after cost him his life.

Fiue Philips

But one thing by the waie I cannot let passe, touching the yong flourishing rod newlie set vp against this present time, to welcome king Philip into Paules church. The setting vp of which rod was this, and may make as good a pageant as the best. Anno 2. Mariæ Boner in his rotaltie, and all his prebendaries about him in Paules quére, the rod laid along vpon the pauement, and also all the doores of Paules being shut, the bishop with other said and song diuers praiers by the rod: that being done they annointed the rod with oile in diuers places, and after the annointing crept vnto it and kissed it. After that they tooke the said rod and wreted him vp and set him in his old accustomed place, and all the while they were doing thereof, the whole quære sang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the bels, not onlie for ioy, but also for the notable and great fact they had done therein.

The erecting vp of the rod at Paules.

Bishop Baners god the rod of Pauls set vp with Te Deum.

Not long after this, a merrie fellow came into Paules, and spied the rod with Marie and John new set vp, wherto (among a great sort of people) he made low curtsie & said: Sir, your maisterships is welcome to towne, I had thought to haue talked further with your maisterships, but that ye be héere clothed in the quénes colours. I hope ye be but a summers bird, for that ye be dressed in white & gréne, &c. The prince thus being in the church of Paules, after doctor Harpesfield had finished his oration in Latine, set forward through Fléetstreet, & so came to White hall, where he with the quéene remained foure daies after, and from thence remoued vnto Richmond. After this, all the lords had leaue to depart into their countries, with strict commandement to bring all their harnesse and artillerie into the tower of London with all spéed. Now remained there no English lord at the court but the bishop of Winchester.

Salutation to the rod of Paules.

From Richmond they remoued to Hampton court, where the hall doore within the court was continuallie shut, so that no man might enter, vnlesse his errand were first knowne: which séemed strange to Englishmen that had not béene vsed thereto. The seuentéenth daie of September, was a proclamation in London, that all vagabonds and maisterlesse men, as well strangers as Englishmen, should depart the citie within fiue daies: and strictlie charging all inholders, victelers, tauerners, and alehousekéepers, with all other that sold victels, that they (after the said fiue daies) should not sell anie meat, drinke, or ante kind of victels or relése to ante seruingman whatsoeuer, vnlesse he brought a testimoniall from his maister to declare whose seruant he was, & were in continuall household with his said maister, vpon paine to runne in danger of the law if they offend herein.]

A proclamation for the auoiding of maisterlesse men out of the citie of London.

In September, the duke of Norfolke departed this life at Fremingham castell in Norfolke, and there was honorablie buried among his ancestors. ¶ The 26 of October, a Spaniard was hangd at Charingcrosse for killing an Englishman, there was offered for his life by other strangers 500 crownes, but all that would not staie iustice.] On fridaie the same 26 of October, those honest men that had béene of Throckmortons quest, being in number eight (for the other foure were deliuered out of prison, for that they submitted themselues, and said they had offended like weakelings, not considering truth to be truth, but of force for feare said so) these eight men I saie (whereof maister Emanuell Lucar and maister Whetston were chéefe) were called before the councell in the Starrechamber, where they affirmed that they had done all things in that matter according to their knowledge, and with good consciences, euen as they should answer before GOD at the date of iudgement. Where maister Lucar said openlie before all the lords that they had done in the matter like honest men, and true and faithfull subiects: and therefore they humblie besought my lord chancellor and the other lords, to be meanes to the king and quénes maiesties, that they might be discharged and set at libertie: and said that they were all contented to submit themselues to their maiesties, sauing and reseruing their truth, consciences, and honesties.

Death of the Duke of Norfolke

A Spaniard hanged. Iohn Stow.

Eight of maister Throckmortons iurie appéere in the Starchamber.

The lords taking their words in maruellous euill part, iudged them worthie to paie excessiue fines. Some said they were worthie to paie 1000 pounds a péece. Other said that Lucar and Whetston were worthie to paie a thousand marks a péece, and the rest fiue hundred pounds a péece. In conclusion, sentence was giuen by the lord chancellor that they should paie a thousand marks a péece, he that paid least; and that they should go to prison againe, and there remain till further order were taken for their punishment. The thirtith of October being tuesdaie, the lord John Greie was deliuered out of the tower, and set at libertie. Vpon saturdaie the tenth of Nouember, the shiriffes of London had commandement to take an inuentarie of each one of their goods, which were of

The hard iudgement of the lords against those eight honest men.

The L. Iohn Greie set at libertie.

Further extremitie against Throckmortons quest.

of maister Throckmortons quest, & to seale vp their dores, which was done the same daie.

Maister Whetston, and maister Lucar, and maister Rightlie, were adiudged to paie two thousand pounds a péece, and the rest a thousand marks a péece, to be paid within one fortnight after. From this paiment were exempted those foure which confessed a fault, & thereupon had submitted themselues, whose names are these: maister Loe, maister Pointer, maister Beswicke, and maister Cater. The 12 of Nouember being mondaie, the parlement began at Westminster, to the beginning whereof both the king and quéene rode in their parlement robes, hauing two swords borne before them. The earle of Penbroke bare his sword, and the earle of Westmerland bare the quénes. They had two caps of maintenance likewise borne before them: whereof the earle of Arundell bare the one, and the earle of Shrewesburie the other. During this parlement, cardinall Pole landed at Douer vpon wednesdaie, being the 21 of Nouember, who being receiued with much honor in all other countries through which hee had passed, was receiued here at the first, with no great shew, for the causes aboue mentioned. The same daie on the which he arriued, an act passed in the parlement house, for his restitution in bloud, vterlie repealing (as false and most slanderous) that act made against him in K. Henrie the eights time. And on the next daie being thursdaie and the 22 of Nouember, the king and quéene both came to the parlement house to giue their rotall assent, and to establish this act against his comming. On saturdaie the foure and twentith of Nouember, he came to the court, and after went to Lambeth where his lodging was prepared.

On wednesdaie following in the after noone, he came into the parlement house, being at that present kept in the great chamber of the court of the White hall, for that the quéene by reason of sickenesse was not able to go abrode (where the king and quéene sitting vnder the cloth of estate, and the cardinall sitting on the right hand, with all the other estates of the realme being present) and the knights and burgesses of the common house being also called thither, the bishop of Winchester being lord chancellor, spake in this maner. My lords of the vpper house, and you my maisters of the nether house, here is present the right reuerend father in God, my lord cardinall Pole, legat A Latere, come from the apostolike sée of Rome, as ambassador to the king and quénes maisties, vpon one of the weightiest causes that euer happened in this realme, and which appertaineth to the glorie of God, and your vniuersall benefit; the which ambassage, their maiesties pleasure is to bee signified vnto you all by his owne mouth, trusting that you will receiue and accept it in as benenolent and thankefull wise, as their highnesse haue done, and that you will giue attentiue and inclinable eare vnto his grace, who is now readie to declare the same. So soone as the lord chancellor had ended his tale, the cardinall began and made a long & solemne oration, the which for shortnesse sake I haue collected into these few articles, remitting the reader to maister Foxes Acts and Monuments, where they shall find the same wholie and entierlie as by him it was vttered.

1 First, he yelded most heartie thanks to the king and quéene, and next vnto the whole parlement; that of a man exiled & banished from this commonweale, they had restored him againe to be a member of the same, and to the honour of his house and familie, and of a man hauing no place, neither here nor elsewhere within the realme, to haue admitted him into a place where to speake, and to be heard.

2 Secondlie, that his especiall comming was for the restitution of this realme to the ancient estate, and to declare that the sée apostolike hath a speciall care of this realme aboue all other: and chiefli for that this Iland first of all other prouinces of Europe, receiued the light of Christs religion from the sée of Rome.

3 Thirdlie, he exhorted that though the realme had swarued from the catholike vnitie, that yet being better informed, we ought to returne into the bosome of the church, most open to receiue all penitents. For the persuasion wher of he brought a number of old examples, what perill and hurt hath happened vnto them that haue swarued and gone from the church of Rome, namelie Græce and Germanie.

4 Fourthlie, how much we are bound to God for the king and quéens maieslies, and how miraculouslie God had saued and defended our quæne from hir enimies in most dangerous times: and also that hée hath prouided to ioine with hir in mariage, such a noble prince as king Philip was, & one of hir owne religion.

5 Fiftlie, he exhorted them all to obedience of these two princes, and to call vpon God for issue to be had betweene them, adding that king Philips father the emperour, had amongst other princes trauelled most for the restitution of the peace and vnitie of the church. But as almightie God said vnto Dauid, though he had a mind and will to build his temple: yet bicause he had shed bloud, he should not build it. And so bicause the emperour hath had so manie warres, and shed so much bloud: therefore hee could not atteine to bring perfect peace to the church. But trulie (said he) this gratious prince king Philip his sonne, as I conceiue, is appointed of God to it, considering now the calling of him to be ioined with so catholike a princesse, as is the quæne of this realme, one without all doubt sent likewise of God, for the restoring of the said realme to the vnitie of the church, from whence it hath erred and gone astrate, as it doth and maie manifestlie appeare.

6 Sixtlie, he protested that his commission was not to preiudice anie person, for he came not to destroie, but to build; he came to reconcile, and not to condemne; he came not to compell, but to call againe; he came not to call anie thing in question alreadie done: but his commission was of grace and clemencie to all such as would receiue it. For touching all matters past, and done, they should be cast into the sea of forgetfulnesse, and neuer more to bee thought vpon.

7 Finallie (said he) the meane whereby to receiue this high benefit, is first to reuoke and repeale all such lawes as are impediments, blocks and barres to this most gratious reconciliation. For like as he himselfe had no place to speake there, before such lawes were abrogated and remoued as stood in his waie: euen so they could not receiue the grace offered from the sée apostolike, vntill these like impediments of lawes made against the sée of Rome, were vtterlie abolished and repealed. And so in conclusion aduertised them, first for the glorie of God, and next for the conseruation and suertie of the wealth and quietnesse of the whole realme, that they should earnestlie trauell therein, and that then he would make them participants of the benefit of his commission.

The next daie the whole court of parlement drew out the forme of a supplication, and the next daie following, when the king, the quéene, and the cardinall, with all the nobles and commons were assembled againe in the great chamber of the White hall afore said, the bishop of Winchester there shewed what the parlement had determined concerning the cardinals request, and then offered to the king and quæne

John Fox.

A parlement whereat the king & quæne are present.

Cardinall Pole arriueth at Douer

An act for the restitution in bloud of cardinall Pole.

Cardinall Pole cometh into the parlement house.

The words of the bishop of winchester then lord chancellor.

Rich. Grafton.

The effect of the cardinals oration in the assemblie of parlement.

He sheweth the speciall cause of his comming into England.

He exhorteth to a generall returne into the bosome of the church.

He declareth how wonderfullie god had preserued Q. Marie.

He exhorteth to obedience and treateth of restoring this realme to the vnitie of the church.

He protesteth that he ment the preiudice of no man. &c.

He sheweth the meanes of procuring the foresaid reconciliation.

the said supplication, to be by them presented to the cardinall. Wherein would be noted the readinesse of the assemblie to submit themselues to antichristian slauerie: but omitting to giue iudgement, marke their supplication, the copie whereof followeth.

A supplication exhibited to cardinall Poole by the parlement.

This supplication was exhibited to the king and quéne.

WE the lords spirituall and temporall, and commons in this present parlement assembled, representing the whole bodie of the realme of England and dominions of the same, in the name of our selues particularlie, and also of the said bodie vniuersallie, offer this our most humble supplication to your maiesties, to this end and effect; that the same by your gratious intercession and meane maie be exhibited to the most reuerend father in God the lord cardinall Poole legat, sent specially hither from our most holie father pope Julie the third, and the sée apostolike of Rome. Wherin we do declare our selues verie sorie and repentant of the long schisme and disobedience happening in this realme, and the dominions of the same, against the sée apostolike, either by making, agréeing, or executing of ante lawes, ordinances or commandements against the primasie of the same sée, or otherwise doing or speaking that might impugne or preiudice the same. Offering our selues, and promising by this our supplication, that for a token & knowledge of our said repentance, we be and shall be euer readie, vnder and with the authorities of your maiesties, to the vttermost of our power, to do that shall lie in vs, for the abrogation and repealing of all the said lawes and ordinances, made and enacted to the preiudice of the sée apostolike, as well for our selues as for the whole bodie whome we represent. Wherevpon we humblie beséech your maiesties, as persons vndefiled in offense of his bodie towards the said sée, which neuertheless God by his prouidence hath made subiect to you, so to set forth this our humble suite, as we the rather by your intercession maie obteine from the sée apostolike, by the said most reuerend father, as well particularlie as generallie, absolution, release, and discharge from all dangers of such censures and sentences as by the lawes of the church we be fallen into. And that we maie as children repentant, be receiued into the bosome and vnitie of Christs church: so as this noble realme, with all the members thereof, maie in this vnitie & perfect obedience to the sée apostolike, and popes for the time being, serue God and your maiesties to the furtherance and aduancement of his honour and glorie, Amen.

Promise in signe of repentance to make full amends by being reconciled to the catholike church

This supplication being first openlie read, the same was by the chancellor deliuered to the king and quéne, with petition to them, to exhibit the same to the lord cardinall. And the king and quéne rising out of their seats, and doing reuerence to the cardinall, did deliuer the same vnto him. The cardinall perceiuing the effect thereof to answer to his expectation, did receiue it most gladlie at their maiesties hands. And then, after that hée had in few words giuen thanks vnto God, and declared what great cause hée had to reioise aboue all others, that his comming from Rome into England had taken such most happie successe; then he caused his commission to bée read (wherby it might appeare he had authoritie from the pope to absolue them) which commission was verie long and large. And that being done, and all the parlement on their knées, this cardinall, by the popes authoritie, gaue them absolution in maner following.

The king and quéne exhibit the supplicatiõ to Poole the pyoud prelat.

An absolution pronounced by cardinall Poole to the parlement house.

OUr lord Jesus Christ, which with his most pretious bloud hath redéemed and washed vs from all our sins and iniquities, that he might purchase vnto himselfe a glorious spouse without spot or wrinkle, and whom the father hath appointed head ouer all his church; he by his mercie absolue you. And we by the apostolike authoritie giuen vnto vs by the most holie lord pope Julius the third (his vicegerent in earth) do absolue and deliuer you, and euerie of you, with the whole realme, and the dominions thereof, from all heresie and schisme, and from all and euerie iudgements, censures and paines for that cause incurred. And also wee do restore you againe to the vnitie of our mother the holie church, as in our letters of commission more plainelie shall appeare.

Pope Julie the third gaue cardinall Poole his authoritie apostolike.

After this generall absolution receiued, the king and the quéne, and all the lords with the rest, went into the kings chappell, and there sang Te Deum with great ioy and gladnesse, for this new reconciliation. The report whereof with great spéed flew to Rome, as well by the French kings letters, as also by the cardinals. Wherevpon the pope caused solemne processions to be made in Rome, namelie one, wherein he himselfe with all his cardinals were present, passing with as great solemnitie and pompe as might be, giuing thanks to God with great ioy, for the conuersion of England to his church. At what time also he not a little commended the diligence of cardinall Poole, and the deuotion of the king and quéne. And on Christmas euen next following, he set forth by his buls a generall pardon to all such as did reioise in the same reconciliation.

Solemne procession at Rome for the new reconcilement of England to the catholike church.

The eight and twentith of November next following, it was commonlie reported, that the quéne was quicke with child, & therefore commandement was giuen by Edmund Bonner then bishop of London (and as it was said not without the commandement of the councell) that there should be made in most solemne manner one generall procession in London, wherein the maior, and all the companies of the citie were in their liueries, at whose returne to the church of Pauls, there was song verie solemnlie Te Deum for ioy therof. The same date at this procession was present ten bishops with all the prebendaries of Paules. The copie of the councels letter implieng the aforesaid commandement touching the generall procession here followeth, Ad perpetuam rei memoriam.

A report that the quéns was with child.

A copie of a letter sent from the councell vnto Edmund Bonner bishop of London, concerning queene Marie conceiued with child.

AFter our hartie commendations vnto your good lordship. Whereas it hath pleased almightie God amongst other his infinit benefits of late most gratiouslie powred vpon vs and this whole realme, to extend his benediction vpon the quéns maiestie in such sort, as she is conceiued & quicke of child; whereby (hir maiestie being our naturall liege ladie, quéne and vndoubted inheritor of this imperiall crowne) good hope hope of certeine succession in the crowne is giuen vnto vs, and consequentlie, the great calamities, which (for want of such succession might otherwise haue fallen vpon vs & our posteritie) shall by Gods grace be well auoided, if we thankefullie acknowledge this benefit of almightie God, indeuoring our selues with earnest repentance to thanke, honor, & serue him as we be most bounden. These be not onelie to aduertise you of these good news, to be by you published in all places within your dioces; but also to praie and require you, that both your selfe do giue God thanks with vs for this his especiall grace, and also giue order that thanks maie be openlie giuen by singing of Te Deum in all the churches within your said dioces; and that likewise all priests and other ecclesiasticall ministers, in their masses and other diuine seruices, may continuallie praie to almightie God, so to extend his holie hand ouer his maiestie, the kings highnesse and this whole realme, as this thing being by his omnipotent power gratiouslie thus begun, may by the same be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glorie of his name. Whereunto albeit we doubt not ye would of your selfe haue had speciall regard without these our letters: yet for the earnest desire we haue to haue this thing done out of hand, & diligentlie continued, we haue also written these our letters, to put you in remembrance: & so bid your lordship most hartilie well to fare. From Westminster the 27 of Nouember. 1554.

The councels letter to bishop Bonner of the quénes conceiuing of child.

Your assured and louing friends

S. Winton. Chancel. | Iohn Bathon.
Arundell. | R. Rich.
F. Shrewesburie. | Thomas Warthom.
Edward Darbie. | Iohn Huddilstone.
Henrie Sussex. | R. Southwell.

Upon this letter of the councels sent to bishop Bonner (signifieng the good news of quéne Marie to be not onelie conceiued, but also quicke with child, which was in the moneth of Nouember, the eight and twentith daie) it is out of count what great talke began at this time to rise in euerie mans mouth, with busie preparation and much adoo, especiallie among such as séemed in England to carrie Spanish hearts in English bodies. In number of whome here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condigne commendation for his worthie affection toward his prince and hir issue, one sir Richard Southwell, who being the same time in the parlement house, when as the lords were occupied in other affaires and matters of importance, suddenlie starting vp for fulnesse of ioy, burst out in these words following: Tush my maisters (quoth he) what talke ye of these matters? I would haue you take some order for our yong maister that is now comming into the world apace, least he find vs vnprouided, &c. By the which words both of him, and also by the foresaid letters of the councell, and the common talke abroad, it may appeare what an assured opinion was then conceiued in mens heads of quéne Marie, to be conceiued and quicke with child. In somuch that at the same time, and in the same parlement, there was eftsones a bill exhibited, and an act made vpon the same, the words whereof for the more euidence, I thought here to exemplificat.

If Quéne Marie were quicke with child on the 28. of the moneth of Nouember and afterward did labour in the moneth of June, then went she almost seuen moneths quicke with child.

The words of sir Richard Southwell in the parlement house for his yong maister.

The words of the act.

Albeit we the lords spirituall & temporall, & the commons in this present parlement assembled, haue firme hope & confidence in the goodnes of almightie God, that like as he hath hitherto miraculouslie preserued the quéenes maiestie from manie great imminent perils and dangers; euen so he will of his infinit goodnesse giue hir highnesse strength, the rather by our continuall praiers to passe well the danger of deliuerance of child, wherewith it hath pleased him (to all our great comforts) to blesse hir: yet for so much as all things of this world be vncerteine, and hauing before our eies the dolorous experience of this inconstant gouernment during the time of the reigne of the late king Edward the first, do plainlie see the manifold inconueniences, great dangers and perils that maie insue to this whole realme, if foresight be not vsed to preuent all euill chances, if they should happen. For the eschewing hereof, we the lords spirituall and temporall, & the commons in this present parlement assembled; for and in consideration of a most speciall trust and confidence that we haue and repose in the kings maiestie, for and concerning the politike gouernment, order, and administration of this realme in the time of the yong péere of the issue or issues of hir maiesties bodie to be borne, if it should please God to call the quéenes highnesse out of this present life, during the tender yeares of such issue or issues (which God forbid) according to such order & maner as hereafter in this present act his highnesse most gratious pleasure is, should be declared and set forth, haue made our humble suite by the assent of the quéens highnesse, that his maiestie would vouchsafe to accept & take vpon him the rule, order, education & gouernment of the said issue or issues to be borne as is aforesaid, vpon which our suite being of his said maiestie most gratiouslie accepted, it hath pleased his highnes, not onlie to declare, that like as for the most part his maiestie verelie trusteth that almightie God (who hath hitherto preserued the quéens maiestie) to giue this realme so good an hope of certeine succession in the blod roiall of the same realm, will assist hir highnes with his graces and benedictions to see the fruit of hir bodie well brought forth, liue and able to gouerne (whereof neither all this realme, ne all the world besides, should or could receiue more comfort than his maiestie should & would) yet if such chance should happen, his maiestie at our humble desires is pleased & contented not onlie to accept & take vpon him the cure and charge of the education, rule, order, and gouernment of such issues, as of this most happie mariage shall be borne betweene the quéenes highnes and him: but also during the time of such gouernment, would by all waies & meanes studie, trauell and imploie himselfe to aduance the weale, both publike & priuat, of this realme & dominions thereto belonging, according to the said trust in his maiestie reposed, with no lesse good will & affection than if his highnes had béene naturallie borne among vs. In consideration whereof, be it enacted by the king & the quéens most excellent maiesties, by assent of the lords spirituall and temporall, & the commons in this present parlement assembled, and by the authoritie of the same, &c: as it is to be séene in the act more at large ratified and confirmed at the same parlement, to the same intent and purpose.

Order taken by parlement for quéne Maries child.

Trust disappointed.

Thus much out of the act and statute I thought to rehearse, to the intent the reader maie vnderstand, not so much how parlements maie sometimes be deceiued (as by this child of quéne Marie may appéere) as rather what cause we Englishmen haue to render most earnest thanks vnto almightie God, who so mercifullie against the opinion, expectation, and working of our aduersaries, hath helped and deliuered vs in this case: which otherwise might haue opened such a window to the Spaniards, to haue entred and replenished this land, that peraduenture by this time Englishmen should haue inioied no great quiet in their owne countrie. The Lord therefore make vs

Parlements maie be deceiued.

perpetuallie mindfull of his benefits, Amen.

Thus we see then how man doth purpose, but God disposeth as pleaseth him. For all this great labor, prouision, and order taken in the parlement house for their yong maister long looked for, comming so sureste into the world; in the end appeered neither yong maister nor yong maistresse that anie man yet to this daie can heare of. Furthermore as the labor of the laie sort was herein deluded, so no lesse ridiculous it was to behold what little effect the praiers of the popes churchmen had with almightie God, who trauelled no lesse with their processions, masses, and collects, for the happie deliuerance of this yong maister to come, as here followeth to be seene.

The praiers of the papists of what litle effect they are with God.

A praier made by doctor Weston deane of Westminster, dailie to be said for the queenes deliuerance.

A praier for quéene Marie and hir child, turned out of Latine into English.

MOst righteous Lord God, which for the offense of the first woman, hast threatned vnto all women a common, sharpe, and vneuitable malediction, and hast intoined them that they should conceiue in sinne; and being conceiued, should be subiect to manie and grieuous torments, and finallie be deliuered with the danger and ieopardie of their life: we beseech thée for thine exceeding great goodnesse and botomlesse mercie, to mitigate the strictnes of that law. Allwage thine anger for a while, and cherish in the bosome of thy fauor and mercie our most gratious quéene Marie, being now at the point of hir deliuerance. So helpe hir, that without danger of hir life, she maie ouercome the sorow, and in due season bring forth a child, in bodie beautifull and comelie, in mind noble and valiant. So that afterward the forgetting the trouble, maie with ioie, laud and praise the bountifulnesse of thy mercie; and together with vs, praise and bless both thée and thy holie name world without end. This (O Lord) we desire thee, we beseech thee, and most hartilie craue of thée. Heare vs (O Lord) and grant vs our petition. Let not the enimies of thy faith and of thy church saie; Where is their God:

A solemne praier made for king Philip and queene Maries child, that it maie be a male child, welfauored and wittie, &c.

A deuout praier made by the catholikes for quéene Marie being great and quicke with child.

* The papists call the protestants heretikes and enimies to the crosse of Christ, euen as Achab called Elias the disturber of Israell, when he was onelie the disturber himselfe.

OMost mightie Lord God, which regardest the praier of the humble, and despisest not their request, bow downe from thine high habitation of the heauens, the eies of thy mercie vnto vs wretched sinners, bowing the knees of our harts, and with manie and deepe sighs bewailing our sinnes and offenses humblie with eies intent, and hands displaied, praieng and beseeching thee, with the shield of thy protection, to defend Marie thy seruant and our quéene, who hath none other helper but thee, and whome through thy grace thou hast willed to be conceiued with child; and at the time of hir trauell gratiouslie with the helpe of thy right hand deliuer hir, and from all danger with the child in hir conceiued, mercifullie preserue. It hath seemed good in thy sight (mercifull father) by thy seruant Marie to worke these wonders, that is to saie; in hir hands to vanquish and ouerthrow the stout enimie, and to deliuer vs thy people out of the hands of * heretikes, infidels, enimies to thee, and to the crosse of thy beloued sonne Iesus Christ, that of thy seruant thou mightest speake in farre countries. Therefore for these wonderfull workes which thou dwelt to thy seruants, thou art magnified Lord God for euer, & we thy people bless thée the God of heauen, which hast wrought vpon vs this great mercie, and hast excluded from vs the heretike, the enimie of truth, and the persecutor of thy church. We know, we know that we haue grieuouslie (Lord) sinned, that we haue been deceiued by vanitie, and that we haue forsaken thée our God. Our iniquities be multiplied on our head, and our sinnes be increased vp to heauen, and we our selues haue offended, and our princes and our priests: for these our sinnes haue deserued an hypocrit to our prince, our sinnes haue deserued a tyrant to our gouernor that should bring our life vnto bitternesse. We be not worthie to haue so gentle and mercifull a quéene, so godlie a ruler, and finallie so vertuous a prince. At the verie beginning of whose reigne, a new light, as it were of Gods religion, seemed to vs for to spring and arise. The Iews did bless the widow Iudith with one voice; saieng: Thou art the glorie of Ierusalem, thou art the ioie of Israell, thou art the honor of our people, for that thou hast loued chastitie, and thou shalt be blessed for euer.

Quéene Marie compared of the papists to quéene Iudith.

And we the English people with one agréeable consent do crie: Thou Marie art the glorie of England, our ioie, the honour of thy people, for that thou hast imbraced chastitie: thine hart is strengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thée, and therefore thou shalt be blessed for euer. But bow downe, O most mercifull father thine eare, and open thine eies, and behold our affliction, and our humble confession. Thou knowest Lord, that against Philip, not by humane, but by thy ordinance our king, and against thy seruant Marie by thy prouidence our quéene, the restorers and mainteiners of thy testament, and of the faith and most constant defenders of thy church; thou knowest (I saie) that against these our two gouernors (the enimies of thy holie testament, and of the church thy spouse) be most ranke rebels, and spitefull murmurers, walking after their lusts, whose mouth speaketh words of pride, to the end they maie set vp the kingdome of heretikes and schismatikes. By the power of their hands they would change thy promises, and destroie thine inheritance, and stop and shut vp the mouths of them that praise thée, and extinguish the glorie of thy catholike church and altar.

Marke how forgetting his praier he falleth to the praising of quéen Marie.

The testament setteth vp onelie the glorie of Christ.

It is manifest and plaine, how manie contentions, how manie conspiracies & seditions, how great warres, what tumults, how manie and how great troublesome verations, how manie heresies and schismes (for these be the most readie deuises and euident tokens of heretikes) for our sinnes do hang ouer vs, if thy seruant be taken from this life: for we acknowledge that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwelling place in the middest of his people, to the intent to deliuer vs out of the hands of our enimies. Turne therefore thy countenance vnto vs, shew vnto vs, O Lord, thy face. Punish vs for our sinnes according to thy will and pleasure, onelie now deliuer vs. We bowing the knées of our heart, beseech thée that thou wilt not reserue vnto vs punishment for euer, and we shall praise thée, all the daies of our life. Heare our crie, and the praier of thy people, and open to them the treasure of thy mercie, thy gratious fauour, the spring of liuelie water. Thou that hast begun, make in the hand of thy seruant a perfect worke. Suffer not, we praie thee, the faithlesse rebels to saie of thy seruant and hir councellors, that they haue deuised matters which they can not performe. And grant vnto thy seruant an happie and an easie trauell. For it is not impossible to thy power, nor indecent to thy iustice, nor vnwonted vnto thy mercie.

If the changing of Gods promises, destroieng his inheritance, stopping the mouths of Gods people if contentiõs, warres, and schismes be tokens of heretikes, who so great heretikes as the papists be?

Crie vp lowder you priests peraduenture your god is a slépe.

The Lord gaue a pro-

It is well knowne vnto vs, how marueilouslie then mise to Sara and Elisabeth: so did he not to quæne Marie.

thou diddest worke in Sara of the age of fourescore and ten yeares, and in Elisabeth the barren, and also sarre stricken in age: for thy counsell is not in the power of men. Thou Lord that art the searcher of hearts and thoughts, thou knowest that thy seruant neuer lusted after man, neuer gaue hir selfe to wanton companie, nor made hir selfe partaker with them that walke in lightnesse: but she consented to take an husband with thy feare, and not with hir lust. Thou knowest that thy seruant tooke an husband, not for carnall pleasure, but onelie for the desire and loue of posteritie, wherein thy name might be blessed for euer and euer. Giue therefore vnto thy seruants Philip our king, & Marie our quæne, a male issue, which maie sit in the seat of thy kingdome. Giue vnto our quæne thy seruant, a little infant in fashion and bodie comelie and beautifull, in pregnant wit notable and excellent.

It is not best such one to be granted vnto you, for being like Abraham, Joseph, Moses, and Salomon, he maie chance smell out your corrupt doctrine, and to detest your bloudie tyrannie, &c.

Grant the same to be in obedience like Abraham, in hospitalitie like Lot, in chastitie and brotherlie loue like Joseph, in meekenesse and mildnesse like Moses, in strength and valiantnesse like Samson. Let him be found faithfull as Dauid after thy heart. Let him be wise among kings as the most wise Salomon. Let him be like Job, a simple and an vpright man, fearing God and eschewing euill. Let him finallie be garnished with the comelinesse of all vertuous conditions, and in the same let him waxe old and liue, that he maie see his childrens children to the third and fourth generation. And giue to our soueregne lord and ladie, king Philip and quæne Marie, thy blessing and long life vpon earth. And grant that of them maie come kings and quænes which maie stedfastlie continue in faith, loue, and holinesse. And blessed be their seed of our God, that all nations maie know thou art onelie God in all the earth, which art blessed for euer and euer, Amen.

Another praier for queene Marie, and hir conceiued child.

An other praier for the same.

OAlmightie father, which diddest sanctifie the blessed virgine and mother of Marie in hir conception, & in the birth of Christ our sauiour, thy onelie sonne; also by thy omnipotent power diddest safelie deliuer the prophet Jonas out of the whales bellie: defend O Lord we beseech thee, thy seruant Marie our quæne, with child conceiued, and so visit hir in and with thy godlie gift of health, that not onelie the child thy creature within hir conteined, maie joifullie come from hir into this world, and receiue the blessed sacraments of baptisme and confirmation, inioieng therewith dailie increase of all princelie and gratious gifts both of bodie and soule; but that also she, the mother, through thy speciall grace and mercie, maie in time of hir trauell auoid all excessiue dolour and paine, and abide perfect and sure from all perill and danger of death, with long and prosperous life, thorough Christ our Lord, Amen. ¶ And thus much shall suffice touching this great adoo about quæne Marie and hir babe.]

Cardinall Pole commeth to Pauls crosse with great pompe.

The second daie of December being sundaie, cardinall Pole came to Pauls church in London with great pompe, hauing before him a crosse, two pillers and two pollares of siluer, and was there solemnlie receiued by the bishop of Winchester, chancellor of England, who met him with procession. And shortlie after, king Philip came from Westminster by land, being accompanied with a great number of his nobles. And the same daie, the bishop of Winchester preached at Pauls crosse, in the which sermon he declared, that the king and quæne had restored the pope to his right of primasie; & that the three estates assembled in parlement, representing the whole bodie of the realme, had submitted themselues to his holinesse, and to his successors for euer. And in the same also, he greatlie praised the cardinall, and set forth the passing high authoritie that he had from the see of Rome, with much other glorious matter, in the commendation of the church of Rome, which he called the see apostolike. This sermon being ended, the king and the cardinall riding togither, returned to White hall, and the king had his sword borne before him, and the cardinall had onelie his crosse, and no more.

Certeine points of Stephã Gardiners sermon.

The king and the cardinall ride togither.

The seauen and twentith daie of the said moneth, Emanuell Philibert earle of Sauois and prince of Piemount came into England, accompanied with diuerse other lords and gentlemen strangers, who were receiued at Grauesend by the earle of Bedford lord priuie seale, and conueied by water through London bridge to White hall, where the king and quæne then laie. ¶ On the ninth of Januarie next following, the prince of Orange was in like maner receiued at Grauesend, and from thence conueied to the court, being at White hall. The twelfth of Januarie, the said prince of Orange, with other lords, was conducted by the lord chamberlein to the tower of London, where was shewed vnto him the ordinance, artillerie, munitions, and armorie, with the mint, &c: and so was brought into the white tower, from whence, as he returned through the long galleric, all the prisoners saluted him: vnto whome the prince said, he was sorie for their captiuitie, and trusted the king and quæne would be good vnto them. At his departing from the tower, he gaue the gunners ten peeces of Flemmish gold at fiue shillings the peece, and the warders other ten peeces, as a reward.]

Prince of Piemount commeth into England.

I. Stow. 1053. Prince of Orange.

Upon wednesdaie the 12 of December, fiue of the eight men which laie in the Fleet, that had passed vpon sir Nicholas Throckmortons triall, were discharged and set at libertie vpon their fines paid, which was two hundred and twentie pounds a peece. The other three put vp a supplication, therein declaring their goods did not amount to the summe of that which they were appointed to paie: and so vpon that declaration, paieng three score pounds a peece, they were deliuered out of prison on saint Thomas daie before Christmas, being the one & twentith of December. The two and twentith of the same moneth, the parlement (which began the two and twentith of Nouember before) was dissolued, wherein among other acts passed there, the statute Ex officio, and other lawes made for punishment of heresies were reuiued. But chiefelie, the popes most liberall bull of dispensation of abbeie land was there confirmed, much to the contentation of manie, who not without cause suspected by this new vnion, to lose some peece of their late purchase. ¶ On new yeares daie at night was a great tumult betweene Spaniards and Englishmen at Westminster, whereof was like to haue insued great mischiefe, through a Spanish frier which got into the church and rong alarum. The occasion was about two whores which were in the cloister of Westminster with a sort of Spaniards, whereof whilest some plaied the knaues with them, other some did keepe the entrie of the cloister with dags and harnesse. In the meane time certeine of the deanes men came into the cloister, and the Spaniards discharged their dags at them, and hurt some of them. By and by the noise of this doing came into the streets, so that the whole towne was vp almost, but neuer a stroke was stricken. Notwithstanding, the noise of this doing with the deans men, and also the ringing of the alarum made much Fiue of Throckmortons iuries released.

Parlement dissolued.

Abr. Fl. ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio. A sturre betweene the Spaniards and Englishmen at Westminster.

adoo,

adw, and a great number also to be sore afraid.]

1555
I.S. pag. 1095.

Upon fridaie the eightéenth of Januarie, all the councell, by name, the lord chancellor, the bishop of Elie, the lord treasuror, the earle of Shrewesburie, the comptrollor of the quénes house, secretarie Bourne, and sir Richard Southwell maister of the ordinance and armorie, went to the tower, and there the same daie discharged and set at libertie all the prisoners of the tower, or the more part of them, namelie the archbishop of Yorke, the late duke of Northumberlands sonnes, the lords Ambrose, Robert, and Henrie; also, sir Andrew Dudleie, sir James Croftes, sir Nicholas Throckmorton, sir John Rogers, sir Nicholas Arnold, sir George Harper, sir Edward Warner, sir William Sentlow, sir Gawen Carew, William Gibbes esquier, Cuthert Vaughan, and diuerse others.

Prisoners deliuered out of the tower.

Moreouer, about this season diuerse learned men being apprehended, and in prison for matters of religion, were brought before the bishops of Winchester and London, and other the bishops and commissioners apointed therefore: who vpon the constant standing of the said learned men in their opinions, which they had taken vpon them to mainteine, as grounded vpon the true word of God, as they protested, proceeded in iudgement against them, and so diuerse of them were burned at London in Smithfield, and in diuerse other places. Nate not onelie by fire but by other torments were the good christians persecuted, whose zeale was hot in religion and defiance of the pope: insomuch that then he was counted Gods enimie, which toke not the pope for the friend of Christ (whome he hateth with hostilitie) as C.O. noteth verie trulie in his Elisabetha, saieng:

Trouble and persecution for religion.

——— nam creditur hostis
Esse Dei, papam si quis pius asserit hostem
Esse Dei, veros Christi qui tollit honores.

In Februarie next following, doctor Thirlebie bishop of Elie, and Anthonie lord Montacute, with a verie honorable traine of gentlemen and others, rode forth of the citie of London towards Rome as ambassadors sent from the king and quéne, to confirme this new reconciliation to the pope. A yong stripling, whose name was William Fetherstone, a millers sonne, about the age of eightéene yeares, named and bruted himselfe to be king Edward the first, whereof when the quéene and the councell heard, they caused with all diligence inquirie to be made for him, so that he was apprehended in Southwarke, or (as other haue) at Eltham in Kent the tenth of Maie, and brought before the councell at Hampton court, and there examined. And it was demanded of him why he so named himselfe? To which he counterfetting a maner of simplicitie, or rather frensie, would make no direct answer, but praid pardon; for he wist not what he said: affirming further, that he was counselled so to saie, and to take vpon him the name, whereof he accused certeine persons: but his talke was not found true, wherefore he was committed to the Marshalseie, as a lunatike sole.

Ambassadors out of England to Rome.

William Fetherstone, alias Constable a boie, nameth himselfe king Edward the first.

On the eight and twentith daie of Maie next following, the aforesaid counterfet prince was brought in a cart from the Marshalseie thorough the citie of London, with a paper ouer his head, wherein was written, that he named himselfe king Edward. And from thense was conueied to Westminster, being led round about the hall, and shewed to all the people there: and afterward he was taken out of the cart and stripped, and then whiped round about the palace at the same carts taile, and then thorough Westminster into Smithfield, and then banished into the north, in which countrie he was borne, and had béene sometime lackie to sir Peter Mewtas, and without more punishment was discharged, and set at libertie. But the next yeare following, for that he had spred abroad that king Edward was aliue, and that he had spoken with him, he was againe apprehended, and arreigned of high treason, whereof being condemned, he shortlie after was drawne vnto Tiburne, and there hanged and quartered the thirteenth of March. ¶ Here, as in a fit and conuenient place, the obseruation of the daie and moneth offering no lesse, it is not amisse to set downe the speech of quéene Marie vttered to sundrie of hir lords, touching a motion which no doubt certeine popish prelats had put into hir mind, the effect whereof followeth as I find it in maister Foxe.

John Stow.

The counterfet king executed.

Abr. Flex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio.

Before I passe this moneth of March (saith he) I cannot but leaue a little memorandum of the words or consultation of quéene Marie, vsed to certeine of the councell, the eight & twentith daie of the said moneth of March, touching the restoring againe of the abbeie lands. Who after she had called vnto hir presence foure of hir priuie councell, the daie and moneth aforesaid: the names of which councellors were these; William lord marquesse of Winchester high treasuror of England, sir Robert Rochester knight, the quénes comptrollor, sir William Peter knight, secretarie, sir Francis Inglefield knight, maister of wards; the said quéene Marie inferred these words: the principall effect & summe whereof here followeth.

The names of the councellors called before quéene Marie.

The effect of quéene Maries words touching abbeie lands to be restored.

You are here of our councell, and we haue willed you to be called to vs, to the intent ye might heare of me my conscience, and the resolution of my mind, concerning the lands and possessions as well of monasteries, as other churches whatsoeuer being now presentlie in my possession. First, I do consider, that the said lands were taken awaie from the churches aforesaid, in time of schisme, and that by vnlawfull means, such as are contrarie both to the law of God and of the church. For the which cause my conscience doth not suffer me to deteine them: and therefore I here expresselie refuse either to claime or to reteine the said lands for mine: but with all my heart frælie and willinglie without all paction or condition, here and before God I do surrender and relinquish the said lands and possessions or inheritances whatsoeuer, & do renounce the same with this mind and purpose, that order and disposition thereof may be taken as shall séeme best liking to our most holie lord the pope, or else his legat the lord cardinall, to the honour of God and wealth of this our realme.

The quéene taketh a conscience in keeping abbeie lands.

The quéene surrendreth from hir seife the possessiō of abbeie lands.

And albeit you may obiect to me againe, that considering the state of my kingdome, the dignitie thereof, and my crowne imperiall cannot be honorablie mainteined and furnished without the possessions aforesaid: yet notwithstanding I set more by the saluation of my soule, than by ten kingdoms: and therefore the said possessions I vtterlie refuse here to hold after that sort and title, and giue most hartie thanks to almightie God, which hath giuen me an husband likewise minded, with no lesse good affection in this behalfe, than I am my selfe. Wherefore I charge and command, that my chancellor (with whom I haue conferred my mind in this matter before) and you foure, to morrow together do resort to the most reuerend lord legat, and do signifie to him the premisses in my name, & giue your attendance vpon him for the more full declaration of the state of my kingdome, and of the foresaid possessions accordinglie, as you your selues do vnderstand the matter, and can informe him in the same. This charge (as the sequele gaue proofe) was followed with no lesse diligence of the lords, than it was imposed with willingnes vpon them by the quéene: insomuch that shortlie after (as anon you shall heare) she performed hir promise to the pith.

Promise for restitution of abbeie lands.

But to let this matter passe, till due time & place require require a declaration of the conclusion thereof; I am here (saith master Fox, as occasion serueth) to intreat of pope Julius death, for so much as he made his end about the latter end of this foresaid moneth of March. Concerning the deeds and acts of which pope, to make a full declaration, it were not so much tedious to the reader, as horrible to all good eares. Under this Julius florished the archbishop of Benuentanus, a Florentine, named Iohannes a Casa, deane of the popes chamber, and chiefe legat to the Venetians: who well declaring the fruit of that filthie see, so farre forgat both honestie and nature, that he chamed not onelie to plaie the filthie Sodomite himselfe, and to boast openlie of the same: but also toke vpon him most impudentlie in Italian metre, to all mens eares, to set forth the praise and commendation of that beastlie iniquitie, saieng that he himselfe neuer vsed other: and this booke was printed at Venice, by one Troianus Nauus. And yet the pope could suffer this so great iniquitie and shamelesse beastlinesse, euen vnder his nose in his owne chamber, which could not abide the true doctrine of Christ in christian bookes.

Read more of this in a booke called a warning to England.

The death of pope Julius the third.

Vide scriptum Pauli Vergerij contra hunc archiepiscopum.

Note here what an holie catholike church this is

Amongst other pranks and deeds of this foresaid pope, in his Jubilee, and in the synod of Trent, and in confirming of the idoll of Lauretane, this is also reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatlie in porke flesh and peacocks. Upon a time when he was admonished of his physician to abstaine from all swines flesh, for that it was noisome for his gout, and yet would not follow his counsell: the physician afterward gaue warning to his steward or orderer of his diet, that he should set no more porke flesh before him. Wherevpon when the pope perceiued the said porke flesh to be lacking in his accustomed seruice; Where (said he) is my porke? And when his steward had answered that his physician had forbidden anie porke to be serued: then the pope bursting out in great rage, said in these words; Bring me, said he, my porke flesh Al dispetto di Dio: that is to saie in English, In the despight of God.

A porkish pope.

Monstrous blasphemie in the pope.

At an other time, he sitting at dinner, pointing to a peacocke vpon his table, which he had not touched; Keepe (said he) this cold peacocke for me against supper, and let me sup in the garden, for I shall haue ghests. So when supper came, and amongst other hot peacocks, he saw not his cold peacocke brought to his table: the pope after his wonted manner, most horrible blaspheming God, fell into an extreame rage, &c. Wherevpon one of his cardinals sitting by, desired him saieng: Let not your holinesse, I praie you, be so moued with a matter of so small weight. Then this Julius the pope answering againe; What (said he) if God was so angrie for one apple, that he cast our first parents out of paradise for the same, why maie not I being his vicar, be angrie then for a peacocke, sithens a peacocke is a greater matter than an apple? Behold here good reader, by this pope, the holinesse of that blasphemous see: and yet thou shalt see here, what affection was borne vnto this pope here in England, by the diriges, hearses, and funerals commanded to be had and celebrated in all churches by the quéene and hir councell, as may appeare by the copie of their letters here following.

Pope Julius blaspheme th God for a peacocke.

O Neronem anti-christo dignum.

A letter from the bishop of Winchester (being lord chancellour) vnto Boner bishop of London, touching the celebrating of the popes funerals.

Anno Reg.

Aprill 10. winchesters letter to Boner for the popes funerall

AFter my hartie commendations to your good lordship. The king and quæenes maiesties hauing certeine knowledge of the death of the popes holinesse, thought good there should be as well solemne obsequies said for him throughout the realme, as also these praiers (which I send you herein inclosed) vsed at masse times in all places at this time of vacation; and therefore willed me to signifie their pleasures vnto you in this behalfe, that therevpon ye might proceed to the full accomplishment therof, by putting the same in due execution within your owne diocesse, and sending word to the rest of the bishops to do the like in theirs. Thus doubting not but that your lordship will vse such diligence in this matter at this time, as shall be necessarie, I bid your lordship hartilie well to fare. From my house at Asher, the tenth of Aprill. 1555.

Your assured freend and brother,
Stephanus Winton. Cancel.

Praiers commanded to be vsed in the funerall masses for the pope, Apostolica sede vacante.

I collect for the pope.

Supplici te Domine humilitate deposcimus, vt tua immensa pietas sacrosanctæ Romanæ ecclesiæ concedat pontificem illum, qui & pro in nos studio semper tibi gratus, & tuo populo pro salubri regimine sit assidue ad gloriam tui nominis venerandus, per Dominum nostrum.

Secreta.

Another praier for chusing of the pope.

Tuæ nobis Domine pietatis abundantia indulgeat, vt gratum maiestati tuæ pontificem sanctæ matris ecclesiæ regimini præesse studeamus per Dominum nostrum.

Post communionem.

Pretiosi corporis & sanguinis tui Domine sacramento refectos, mirifica tuæ maiestatis gratia de illius summi pontificis assumptione lætificet, qui & plebem tuam virtutibus instruat, & fidelium mentes spiritualium aromatum odore perfundat, per Dominum nostrum.

Upon this commandement, on wednesdaie in Easter weeke there were hearses set vp, & diriges song for the said Julius in diuerse places. At which time it chanced a woman to come into S. Magnus church at the bridgefoot in London, & there seeing an hearse and other preparation, asked what it meant: and other that stood by, said, that it was for the pope, and that she must praie for him. Maie (quoth she) that will I not, for he needeth not my praier: and seeing he could forgiue vs all our sinnes, I am sure he is cleane himselfe: therefore I need not to praie for him. She was heard speake these words of certeine that stood by: which by and by caried hir vnto the cage at London bridge, and bad hir cole hir selfe there.

A woman of S. Magnus parish imprisoned for not praieng for the pope.

And here (saith master Fox) commeth to be remembred the notable working of Gods hand vpon a certeine priest in Kent named Nightingall, parson of Crondall besides Canturburie: who vpon Shroue sundaie, which was about the third daie of the said moneth of March, and yeare of our Lord aforesaid, reioising belike not a little at this alteration of religion, began to make a sermon to his parishioners, taking his theame out of the words of saint John: He that saith, he hath no sinne, is a lier, and the trueth is not in him, &c. And so vpon the same, verie impertinentlie, declared to them all such articles as were set forth by the popes authoritie, and by the commandement of the bishops of this realme; saieng moreouer vnto the people in this wise: Now masters and neighbors reioise and be merrie, for the prodigall sonne is come home. For I know that the most part of you be as I am: for I know your hearts hearts well enough. And I shall tell you what hath happened in this weeke past. I was before my lord cardinall Poles grace, and he hath made me as cleane from sinne, as I was at the font stone: and on thursdaie last being before him, he hath appointed me to notifie (I thanke him for it) the same vnto you. And I will tell you what it is. And so reading the popes bull of pardon that was sent into England, he said, he thanked God that euer he had liued to see that daie: adding moreouer that he beleeued, that by the vertue of that bull he was as cleane from sinne, as that night that he was borne: and immediatlie vpon the same fell suddenlie downe out of the pulpit, and neuer stirred hand nor foot, and so laie he. Testified by Robert Austen of Tartham, which both heard and saw the same, and is witnessed also by the whole countrie round about.]

A terrible example of Gods seuere punishment vpon Nightingall parson of Crondall in Kent.

Blasphemie to Christs gospell punished.

About this time, Edward Courtneie, earle of Deuonshire, of whom before ye haue heard, how he was appointed to remaine at Fodringheie vnder safe custodie, at length was set at libertie, came to the court, and got licence to passe the seas, went into Italie, where shortlie after he sickened, and died within foureteene daies after his sickenesse first tooke him: he was honorablie buried in Padwaie. This Courtneie was the onelie sonne and heire of Henrie, marquesse of Excester, cousine germane to king Henrie the eight, as is said before. For the said king and he were descended of two sisters, Elizabeth and Katharine, two of the daughters of king Edward the fourth, which propinquitie of bloud notwithstanding the said marquesse, for points of treason laid against him, suffered at the tower hill, the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, to the great dolour of the most of the subiects of this realme, who for his sundrie vertues bare him great fauour and goodwill.

The lord Courtneie goeth ouer into Italie.

The lord Courtneie descended of the bloud roiall.

After whose death, this yong gentleman his sonne, being yet a child, was committed prisoner to the tower, where he remained vntill the beginning of the reigne of this queene Marie (as before you haue heard.) This gentleman (as it appeared) was borne to be a prisoner, for from twelue yeares of age vnto thirtie, he had scarse two yeares libertie, within the which time he died, and obteined quiet, which in his life he could neuer haue. In the moneth of Maie next following, cardinall Pole, who had bin a great labourer for peace betweene the French king and the emperour, being accompanied with Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester and chancellor of England, the erle of Arundell lord steward, and the lord Paget, were sent by the king and queene ouer the sea to Calis, & from thence went to the towne of Marke where they met with the ambassadors of the emperor and the French king. From the emperour were sent the bishop of Arras with others. From the French king was sent the cardinall of Lorraine, and the constable of France. In this treatie, cardinall Pole sat as president and vmpier in the name of the queene of England. This peace was greatlie laboured, where at the first, there was much hope, but in the end nothing was concluded: wherefore the seauentéenth daie of June, this assemblie was dissolued, and the English ambassadours returned againe into England.

Ambassadors sent to treat a peace betweene the French king and the emperour.

¶ In this moneth of August, in Suffolke, at a place by the sea side, all of hard stone and pibble, called in those parts a shelfe, lieng betweene the townes of Orford and Alborough, where neuer grew grasse, nor any earth was euer seene, there chanced in this barren place suddenlie to spring vp without any tillage or sowing, great abundance of peason, whereof the pore gathered (as men iudged) aboue an hundred quarters; yet remained some ripe, & some blossoming, as manie as euer there were before. To the which place rode the bishop of Norwich, and the lord Willoughbie with others in great number, who found nothing but hard rockie stone for the space of three yards vnder the rots of those peason, which rots were great and long, and verie sweet in tast to the mouth of the eater, &c.

Abr. Fl. ex I. S. 1097.

The necessitie of the pore relieued by Gods prouidence.

On Bartholomew euen, after the Lord maior and aldermen of London had rid about Bartholomew faire, they came to Christes hospitall within Newgate, where they heard a disputation betweene the scholers of Paules schole, saint Anthonies schole, and the scholers of the said hospitall, for whome was prouided three games, which was three pennes: the best pen of siluer and gilt, valued at fiue shillings, wone by a scholer of saint Anthonies schole, and the maister of that schole had six shillings eight pence: the second, a pen of siluer parcell gilt, valued at fiue shillings, wone by a scholer of Paules schole, & his maister had fiue shillings in monie: the third a pen of siluer, valued at three shillings, wone by a scholer of the said hospitall, and his maister had foure shillings. And there were two preests maisters of arts appointed for iudges, which had each of them a siluer rule for their paines, valued at six shillings eight pence the peece. The disputation being ended, the maior and aldermen entred the hall, where the children of the hospitall vse to dine, and had fruit & wine, and so departed.

Disputation at Christs hospitall, as had beene accustomed at saint Bartholomewes in Smithfield, being an incouragement to yong scholers.

King Philip went ouer seas, and landed at Calis on the fourth of September, where he was honorably receiued by the lord deputie, & the maior of the staple of Calis, an alderman of London named sir Andrew Iud, presenting his maiestie with a purse & a thousand marks of gold in it: that night the king was lodged in staple inne: and on the morrow he departed from Calis towards Brussels in Brabant, to visit the emperor his father: he gaue at his departing among the souldiors of the towne of Calis, a thousand crownes of gold, and there accompanied him in his iournie of English lords, the earle of Arundell lord steward of the queenes house, the earle of Penbroke, the earle of Huntington, and others.

King Philip went ouer into Flanders.

On Michaelmasse euen, the prisoners that laie in the counter in Bredstreet, were remoued to a new counter made in Woodstreet of the cities purchase & building, the which remouing was confirmed by a common councell assembled at the Guildhall for that purpose.

New counter in woodstreet.

On the last of September, by occasion of great wind and raine that had fallen, was such great floods, that that morning the kings palace at Westminster, and Westminster hall was ouerflowne with water, vnto the staire foot, going to the chancerie and kings bench: so that when the lord maior of London should come to present the shiriffes to the barons of the exchequer, all Westminster hall was full of water. And by report there, that morning, a whirriman rowed with his bote ouer Westminster bridge, into the palace court, and so through the staple gate: and all the wollstaple into the kings street, and all the marshes on Lambeth side, were so ouerflowne, that the people from Newington church could not passe on foot, but were caried by bote from the said church to the pinfold, neere to saint Georges in Southwarke.]

Great landwaters whereby diuerse frequented places were ouerflowne.

About this time, the bishop of Lincolne, Gloucester, and Bristow, were sent in commission to Orford by the popes authoritie, to examine Ridleie and Latimer, vpon certeine articles by them preached, which if they would not recant, and consent to the popes doctrine, then had they power to proceed in sentence against them as heretikes, and to commit them ouer to the secular power. Those two doctors neuertheles Anno Reg. 3. Commissioners sent to Orford, by the popes authoritie, & whye.

theles stod constantlie to that which they had taught, and would not reuoke: for which cause, they were condemned, and after burned in the towne ditch at Oxford, the sixteenth daie of October. In the time of whose examination, because the bishops aforesaid declared themselues to be the popes commissioners, neither Ridleie nor Latimer would do them any reuerence, but kept their caps on their heads: wherefore they were sharplie rebuked by the bishop of Lincolne, and one of the officers was commanded for to take of their caps. Of these men, and the maner of their death, ye may read at large in the booke of the monuments of the church.

A parlement wherein the liuings of the church are restored.

The one and twentith of October, a parlement was holden at Westminster, in the which amongst other things the queene being persuaded by the cardinall (and other of hir clergie) that she could not prosper, so long as she kept in hir hands any possessions of the church, did frankelie and freelie resigne and render vnto them all those reuenues ecclesiasticall, which by the authoritie of parlement, in the time of king Henrie, had beene annexed to the crowne, called the first fruits and tenths of all bishopricks, benefices, and ecclesiasticall promotions. The resignation whereof was a great diminution of the reuenues of the crowne. ¶ In this parlement was granted to the king & queene a subsidie of the laitie from fiue pounds to ten pounds eight pence of the pound, from ten pounds to twentie pounds twelue pence of the pound, & from twentie pounds vpward sixteene pence of the pound, and all strangers double, and the cleargie granted six shillings of the pound.

A subsidie. I. Stow.

This Storie was executed in queene Elizabeths time.

Doctor Storie and other were appointed by the cardinall, to visit euerie parish church in London and Middlesex, to see their relikes repared, and the images of the crucifix, with Marie and Iohn thereupon to be fixed.] During the time of this parlement, Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester, and chancellor of England died at his house called Winchester place, beside saint Marie Oueries in Southworke, the ninth daie of November, whose corps was shortlie after solemnly from thence conueied to his church of Winchester, & there buried. The maner of whose death why should I blush to blaze as I find it by report? ¶ One mistresse Wondaie, being the wife of one maister Wondaie secretarie sometime to the old lord Thomas duke of Norffolke, a present witnes of this that is testified, thus openlie reported in the house of a worshipfull citizen, bearing office in this citie, in words and effect as followeth. The same daie, when as bishop Ridleie and maister Latimer suffered at Oxford, being about the nineteenth daie of October, there came to the house of Stephan Gardiner, the old duke of Norffolke with the foresaid Wondaie his secretarie aboue named, reporter heerof. The old aged duke, there waiting and tarieng for his dinner, the bishop being not yet disposed to dine, deferred the time till three or foure of the clocke at after noone.

The death of Stephan Gardiner bishop of winchester.

Abr. Fl. ex I. F. martyrologio. The reporter of this addition a person of credit.

At length, about foure of the clocke commeth his seruant posting in all possible spæd from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the bishop what he had heard and seene: of whom the said bishop diligentlie inquiring the truth of the matter, & hearing by his man, that fire most certeinlie was set vnto them, commeth out reioising to the duke: Now saith he, let vs go to dinner. Whereupon, they being set downe, meat immediatlie was brought, and the bishop began merilie to eate: but what followed? The bloudie tyrant had not eaten a few bits, but the sudden stroke of God his terrible hand fell vpon him in such sort, as immediatlie he was taken from the table, & so brought to his bed, where he continued the space of fifteene daies, in such intollerable anguish and torments, that all that meane while, during those fifteene daies, he could not auoid by order of vrine, or otherwise, any thing that he receiued: whereby his bodie being miserablie inflamed within (who had inflamed so manie good martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof no doubt, as most like it is, came the thrusting out of his tong from his mouth so swolne & blacke, with the inflammation of his bodie. A spectacle worthie to be noted and beholden of all such bloudie burning persecutors.

Gardiner visited with the sudden stroke of God.

But whatsoeuer he was, seeing he is now gone, I referre him to his iudge, to whom he shall stand or fall. As concerning his death and maner thereof, I would they which were present thereat, would testifie to vs what they saw. This we haue all to thinke, that his death happened so opportunelie, that England hath a mightie cause to giue thanks to the Lord therfore: not so much for the great hurt he had done in times past in peruerting his princesse, in bringing in the six articles, in murthering Gods saints, in defacing Christs sincere religion, &c: as also especiallie for that he had thought to haue brought to passe in murthering also our noble queene that now is. For whatsoeuer danger it was of death that she was in, it did (no doubt) proceed from that bloudie bishop, who was the cause thereof. And if it be certeine which we haue heard, that hir highnesse being in the tower, a writ came downe from certeine of the councell for hir execution, it is out of controuersie, that willie Winchester was the onelie Dedalus and framer of that engine. Who (no doubt) in that one daie had brought this whole realme into woefull ruine, had not the lords most gratious councell, thorough maister Bridges then the lieutenant, comming in hast to the queene, certified hir of the matter, and preuented Achitophels bloudie deuises. For the which, thanks be to the same our Lord and Sauiour, in the congregation of all English churches, Amen.]

Stephan Gardiner especiallie hunteth for the life of ladie Elizabeth.

M. Elizabeth preserued.

M. Bridges lieutenant the Lords organ in sauing the ladie Elizabeths life.

After whose death, Nicholas heath archbishop of Yorke, was preferred by the queene to the office of the chancellor. ¶ She likewise gaue the priuie seale to the lord Paget, and made him lord priuie seale, these were both Londoners borne. In this moneth of Februarie, the lord maior of London and the aldermen entered into Bridewell, and tooke possession thereof, according to the gift of king Edward, now confirmed by queene Marie.] In the moneth of March next following, there was in maner no other talke, but of the great preparation that was made for the queens lieng in childbed, who had alredie taken vp hir chamber, and sundrie ladies and gentlewomen were placed about hir in euerie office of the court.

The archbishop of Yorke lord chancellor.

Iohn Stow.

Abr. Fl. ex I. F. martyrologio. Rockers and nurses prouided for queene Maries child.

¶ And now forsomuch as in the beginning of the moneth of June about Whitsuntide, the time was thought to be nie, that this yong maister should come into the world, and that midwiues, rockers, nurses, with the cradle and all, were prepared and in a readinesse, suddenlie vpon what cause or occasion it is vncerteine, a certeine vaine rumor was blowne in London of the prosperous deliuerance of the queene, and the birth of the child: insomuch that bels were rong, bonefiers and processions made, not onelie in the citie of London, and in most other parts of the realme, but also in Antwerpe guns were shot off vpon the riuer by the English ships, and the mariners thereof were rewarded with an hundred pistolets or Italian crownes by the ladie regent, who was the queene of Hungarie. Such great reioising and triumph was for the queenes deliuerie, and that there was a prince borne. Yea, diuerse preachers, namelie one the person of saint Anne within Aldersgate, after procession and Te Deum song, tooke vpon him to describe the proportion of the child, how faire, how beautifull, and great a prince it was, as she like had Processions and bonefires in London for ioy of the yong prince.

Triumph at Antwerpe for the same.

had not béene séene.

In the middest of this great adoe, there was a simple man (this I speake but vpon information) dwelling within foure miles of Barwike, that neuer had béene before halfe waie to London, which said concerning the bonefires made for quéene Maries child; Here is a iolifull triumph, but at length all will not proue worth a messe of pottage, as in deed it came to passe: for in the end all proued cleane contrarie, and the ioy & expectations of men were much deceiued. For the people were certified, that the quéene neither was as then deliuered, nor after was in hope to haue anie child. At this time manie talked diuerslie. Some said this rumour of the quéenes conception was spread for a policie: some other affirmed that she was deceiued by a timpanie or some other like disease, to thinke hirselfe with child, and was not: some thought shée was with child, and that it did by some chance miscarie, or else that she was bewitched: but what was the truth therof, the Lord knoweth, to whome nothing is secret. One thing of mine owne hearing and séeing I cannot passe ouer vnwitnessed.

There came to me, whome I did both heare and sée, one Isabell Walt, a woman dwelling in Aldersgate street in Horne allie, not farre from the house where this present booke was printed, who before witnesse made this declaration vnto vs, that she being deliuered of a man-child vpon Whitsundaie in the morning, which was the eleuenth daie of June Anno 1555, there came to hir the lord North, and another lord to hir vnknowne, dwelling then about old Fishstreet, demanding of hir if she would part with hir child, and would sweare that she neuer knew nor had no such child. Which if she would, hir sonne (they said) should be well prouided for, she should take no care for it, with manie faire offers if she would part with the child.

After that came other women also, of whome one (she said) should haue béene the rocker: but she in no wise would let go hir sonne, who at the writing hereof being aliue and called Timothie Walt, was of the age of thirtéene yeares and vpward. Thus much (I saie) I heard of the woman hir selfe. What credit is to be giuen to hir relation, I deale not withall, but leaue it to the libertie of the reader, to beléeue it they that list: to them that list not, I haue no further warrant to assure them. Among manie other great preparations made for the quénes deliuerance of child, there was a cradle verie sumptuouslie and gorgeouslie trimmed, on the which cradle for the child appointed, these verses were written, both in Latine and in English, as they are set downe here in record:

Quam Maria sobolem Deus optime summe dedisti,
Anglis incolumem redde, tuere, rege.

The child which thou to Marie,
ô Lord of might hast send,
To Englands ioie in health preserue, keepe and defend.

About this time there came ouer into England a certeine English booke, giuing warning to the Englishmen of the Spaniards, and disclosing certeine close practises for recouerie of abbeie lands, which booke was called A warning for England. Whereof ye shall vnderstand much more at large where we speake of the Spanish inquisition. So that by the occasion of this booke, vpon the thirtenth daie of this moneth came out a certeine proclamation, set forth in the name of the king and the quéene, repealing and disanulling all maner of bookes written or printed, whatsoeuer should touch anie thing the impairing of the popes dignitie, wherby not onelie much godlie edification was hindered, but also great perill grew among the people. This proclamation is recorded at large with other appendents, in the Acts and Monuments, vnder the title of quéene Marie.]

¶ In this yeare died sir John Gresham, who bare the office of lord maior of London 1547, a man of a mercifull nature, and good deuotion both to God and his countrie. He founded a free schole at Holt, a market towne in Norfolke, & gaue to euerie ward in London ten pounds to be distributed to the poore; and to threescore poore men and women, euerie one of them three yeards of broade cloth of eight or nine shillings the yard, to be made in gownes readie to their backs. He gaue also to maids marriages, and to the hospitals in London, aboue two hundred pounds in readie monie. A blasing starre was séene at all times of the night, the first, seuenth, eight, ninth, and tenth of March.]

About this time, Brookes bishop of Glocester was by the cardinall sent downe as commissioner from the pope to Oxford, there to sit vpon the examination of Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie, in such things as should be laid to his charge by John Storie and Thomas Martin, doctors in the lawes, sent speciallie in commission from the quéene. At which time the said archbishop making low obeisance to them that sate in the quænes name, shewed no token of reuerence to the bishop that was the popes commissioner: who neuertheless proceeded against him as iudge, and conuicted him of heresie. According to the which sentence, the one and twentith date of March next following, he was disgraded by Edmund Boner, and Thomas Thirlebie, bishops of London and Elie, sent downe for that purpose, and he was burned in the same place where Ridleie and Latimer before had suffered.

Before his death by the persuasion of a Spanish frier, named frier John, a reader of diuinitie in Oxford, and by the counsell of certeine other that put him in hope of life and pardon, he subscribed to a recantation, wherein he submitted himselfe wholie to the church of Rome, and continued in the same mind to outward appearance, vntill he was brought out of prison, to go to the fire. Afore whose execution, a sermon was made by doctor Cole deane of Paules, in saint Martins church in Oxford. And in the end of his sermon, the said doctor Cole praied the people to incline their eares to such things as the said Cranmer would declare vnto them by his owne mouth. For (saith he) he is a man verie repentant, and will here before you all reuoke his errors. Neuertheless he did cleane contrarie. For when he came to the place where the holie bishops and martyrs of God, Hugh Latimer and Ridleie were burnt before him, for the confession of the truth, kneeling downe hée praied to God, & not tarieng long in his praiers, putting off his garments to his shirt, he prepared himselfe to death. His shirt was made long downe to his féet: his féet were bare. Likewise his head, when both his caps were off, was so bare, that one heare could not be séene vpon it. His beard was long and thicke, couering his face with maruellous grauitie. Such a countenance of grauitie moued the hearts both of his friends and of his enimies.

And as for the recantation aforesaid, with manie tears he protested, that he had subscribed to the same against his conscience, onelie for feare of death, and hope of life. Which séemed true: for when he came to the stake, & the fire kindled, he put his right hand into the fire, and held it there a good space, saieng: that the same hand should first burne, because it held the pen to subscribe against his Lord God. Vpon the death of this Cranmer I find these reuerend verses:

Infortunatè est fœlix, qui numine læso,
Cuiusuis gaudet commoditate boni.

Infelix

I. Stow. 1037. Free scole at Holt, with other charitable deeds of sir Io. Gresham

A blasing starre.

Brookes bishop of Glocester appointed to examine Cranmer.

Th. Cranme archbishop of Canturburie condemned.

He is burnt.

The archbishop brought to the place of execution.

Iohn Fox.

The description of his person.

Maries child would not come.

What became of Q. Maries child no man can tell.

Ex testimonio eiusdem puerperæ Londinensis.

The yong princes cradle

Verses vpon the cradle.

*I. Fox in marc. sub tit. Hen. 8.

Infœlix ille est verò fœliciter, orbi
Inuisus quisquis tristia fata subit.
Hoc Cranmere probas, vitæ præsentis amore,
Dum quæris sanctam dissimulare fidem.
Et dum consilys tandem melioribus vsus,
Præponis vitæ funera sæua tuæ.

Cardinall Pole made archbishop of Canturburie.

Immediatlie after the death of the said bishop Cranmer, cardinall Pole (a popish prelat, and a sore enimie to the religion receiued & established in king Henrie the eights time) was made archbishop of Canturburie, who (during the life of the other) would neuer be consecrated archbishop. Who so desireth to see more of this matter, maie see the same at large in the booke of the monuments of the church, where you shall also find, that about this time manie were in trouble for religion. The eight and twentith daie of the aforesaid moneth of March, by the negligence of the keepers maid of the gaile of Newgate in London, who had left a candle where a great deale of straw was, the same was set on fire, and burnt all the timber worke on the northside of the same gate.

Persecution for religion.

Newgate set on fire.

A conspiracie.

The Summer next following was a new conspiracie brought to light, which was, to haue raised war in the realme against the quéene, for maintenance whereof, their first enterprise was to haue robbed the treasurie of the quéens exchequer at Westminster, called the receipt of the exchequer, in the which there was of the quéens treasure aboue fiftie thousand pounds the same time, to the intent they might be able to maintéine warre against the quéene, as it fell out afterwards in prose. The vtterer of which conspiracie was one White, who at the beginning was made priuie to the same, whereupon diuerse of the conspiracie, namelie, Henrie Peckham, Dantell, Dethicke, Udall, Throckmorton, and capteine Stanton, were apprehended, and diuerse other fled into France. Moreouer, sir Anthonie Kingston knight was accused and apprehended for the same, and died in the waie comming to London. The eight and twentith of Aprill, Throckmorton and Richard Ueale, were drawen to Tiborne, and there hanged & quartered. The nineténth of Maie Stanton was likewise executed. The eight of June, Rosseie, Redike, and Bedell suffered at Tiborne for the same offense. The eightéenth of June, one Sands, yonger son to the lord Sands, was executed at S. Thomas Waterings, for a robberie committed by him and others to the value of thrée thousand pounds. The seuen and twentith of June, eleuen men & two women, were had out of Newgate, and in thrée carts conueied to Stratford the bow, where for religion they were burnt to ashes.

Stow, pag. 100.

The names of the conspirators and their end.

Sir Anthonie Kingston departeth this life.

Executions for treason, rebellion, and religion.

John Stow.

Anno Reg. 4.

The eight of Julie, in the beginning of this fourth yeare of the quéens reigne, Henrie Peckham and John Dantell were executed, and after they were dead, were headed on the tower hill: their bodies were buried in Barking church. ¶ About this time one Clober, which sometime kept a schole at Dis in Norffolke, with thrée brethren, whose names were Lincolne, pretended an insurrection, and would haue gathered the people at a mariage, vnto the which the brethren promised either of them to bring an hundred horsse with men. At which time by them appointed, the said Clober gaue charge to a seruant of his, to watch in a lane nigh to the church where they should méet, and as soone as he saw anie horseman comming thitherward, to giue him warning with all spéed. So it chanced (by the will of God) that certeine men riding through that lane, to some other place about their businesse, came about such an houre as Clober had appointed. Upon sight of which men, his said seruant returned to his maister, and told him that his friends were come: and immediatlie the said Clober stood vp in the parish church of Parleie, and read a traitorous proclamation of purpose prepared: which being ended, and séeing his part was too weake, for that his mates were not come, began to flée. But one maister Shireman pursued and toke him at a towne called Eie in Suffolke, and was kept in prison vntill the next sessions at saint Edmundsburie, and his thrée mates being brought to him, were there all togither drawne, hanged, and quartered.]

Execution.

I.S. pag. 1101. Conspiracie begun by one Clober and thrée brethren called Lincolne.

A traitorous proclamation read, and the reader apprehended.

This yeare, the hot burning feuers and other strange diseases, which began the yeare before, consumed much people in all parts of England; but namelie, of most ancient and graue men: so that in London, betwéene the twentith of October, and the last of December, there died seuen aldermen, whose names were Henrie Heardson, sir Richard Dobs late maior, sir William Laxton late maior, sir Henrie Hobllethorne late maior, sir John Champneis late maior, sir John Aileph late shiriffe, and sir John Gresham late maior. ¶ The one & twentith of Nouember, John Fecknam late deane of Pauls in London, now made abbat of Westminster, was stalled, and toke possession of the same: and fourtéene monks more receiued the habit with him that daie of the order of saint Benet. The said one and twentith of Nouember, a man was brought from Westminster hall riding with his face to the horsse taile, and a paper on his head, to the standard in Cheape, and there set on the pillorie, and then burned with an hot iron on both his chéekes, with two letters F. and A. for false accusing one of the court of the common plées in Westminster of treason.

Great death.

Seuen aldermen of London dead in one yeare.

Ab. Fl. ex I. Stow. 1103.

Fecknam abbat of Westminster.

False accuser set on the pillorie & burnt in both chéeks; would to God all such accusers were so well marked.

The sirtéenth of December, Gregorie Carpenter smith, and a Frenchman borne, was arreigned for making counterfeit keies, therewith to haue opened the locks of Newgate, to haue slaine the keeper, and let forth the prisoners. At which time of his arreignement, hauing conueied a knife into his sléeue, he thrust it into the side of William Whitrents his fellow prisoner, who had giuen witnesse against him, so that he was in great perill of death thereby. For the which fact he was immediatlie taken from the barre into the street before the iustice hall, where his hand being first stricken off, he was hanged on a gibbet set vp for that purpose. The keeper of Newgate was arreigned & indicted, for that the said prisoner had a weapon about him, and his hands lose, which should haue béene bound. The fourth of Januarie, a ship before Gréenewich (the court being there) shot off hir ordinance, one péece being charged with a bullet of stone, which passed through the wals of the court, and did no more hurt.]

A stranger would haue murdered the keeper of Newgate.

A gun shot into the court at Gréenewich.

About this time came to London an ambassador to the quéene from the emperor of Cathaie, Muscouia, and Russeland, who was honorablie receiued at Totenham by the merchants of London, hauing trade in those countries, riding in veluet coates and chaines of gold, who bare all his costs and charges from the time of his entrie into England out of Scotland: for thither by tempest of weather he was driuen, and there forced to land. ¶ The lord Montacute with the quéens pensioners met him at Islington townes end; and at Smithfield barres the lord maior and aldermen in scarlet receiued him, and conueied him through the citie vnto maister Dimmocks house in Fanchurch street, where he lodged vntill the twelfe of Maie, all which time he wanted no resort.] And after his message and ambassage done to the quéene, he departed againe with thrée faire ships from Grauesend into his countrie, when he had remained here by the space of two moneths and more.

1557

An ambassador out of Muscouia.

John Stow.

The lord Sturton committeth a shamefull murther.

Also about this time, the lord Sturton, for a verie shamefull and wretched murther committed by him vpon two gentlemen, the father and the son, of the surnames of Hargill, being his nere neighbors, whom he caused to be smitten downe with clubs, then their throtes to be cut, and after to be buried in his owne house fifteene foot deepe; for the which heinous offense he was apprehended and committed to the tower of London. And although the queene seemed to fauour him much, as one professing the catholike religion: yet when she vnderstood the truth of his vile deed, she abhorred him, & commanded that he should be vsed according to iustice; wherefore shortlie after, he was brought to Westminster, & there arreigned & found guiltie, & had iudgement as a murtherer to be hanged. And for the same fact were likewise condemned foure of his seruants. And the second daie of March next following, the said lord with his foure seruants were conueied by the queens gard from the tower of London through the citie, he hauing his armes pinioned at his backe, & his legs bound vnder the horsse bellie, and so caried to Salisburie, where the first daie of March next, he was hanged in the market place, and his foure seruants were hanged in the countrie nere vnto the place where the murther was committed.

The lord Sturton hanged.

Abr. Fl. ex I. S. 1105. Dearth and plentie.

¶This yeare before harueſt, wheat was sold for foure marks the quarter, malt at foure & fortie shillings the quarter, beans & rie at fortie shillings the quarter, & pease at six and fortie shillings and eight pence: but after harueſt wheat was sold for fiue shillings the quarter, malt at six shillings eight pence, rie at three shillings foure pence. So that the penie wheat loafe, that weied in London the last yere but eleuen ounces Troie, weied now six and fiftie ounces Troie. In the countrie, wheat was sold for foure shillings the quarter, malt at foure shillings eight pence; and in some places a bushell of rie for a pound of candles which was foure pence. The seauenth of September, at seauen of the clocke at night, in a blacke rainie cloud in the west was seene a rainbow, the mone in the east risen one houre before, and faire shining, and at the full the daie before.] This present moneth of March king Philip, who a long season had beene in Flanders to take possession & gouernment of the low countries (as is afore said) did now returne into England, and passed through London, being accompanied with the queene and diuerse nobles of the realme.

John Caius.

The returne of king Philip into England.

The foure and twentith of Aprill Thomas Stafford, second sonne to the lord Stafford, with other to the number of two and thirtie persons, comming forth of France by sea, arriued at Scarborough in Yorkeshire, where they tooke the castell, and held the same two daies, and then were taken without effusion of bloud by the earle of Westmerland. The said Stafford and Richard Sanders, otherwise called capteine Sanders, with three or foure others, of the which one was a Frenchman, were sent vp to London, & there committed to prison in the tower. The said Stafford and foure others were arreigned and condemned. Whereupon the eight and twentith of Maie, being fridaie, the said Stafford was beheaded on the tower hill; and on the morrow three of his companie, as Strellie, Bradford, and Proctor, were drawen from the tower to Tiborne, and there executed. Their heads were set ouer the bridge, and their quarters ouer the gates about the same citie. Capteine Sanders had his pardon, and so escaped. The first of Maie Thomas Persie was made knight, and after lord, and on the next daie he was created earle of Northumberland. The queene gaue vnto him all the lands which had beene his ancestors, remaining at that time in hir hands.

Stafford and others committed to the tower, and after executed.

Thomas Persie created earle of Northumberland.

In this season, although the French king (as was said) was verie loth to haue warres with England, yet the queene tangling hir selfe contrarie to promise in hir husbands quarrell, sent a defiance to the French king by Clarenceaux king of armes; who comming to the citie of Remes, where the said king then laie, declared the same vnto him the seuenth of June, being the mondaie in Whitsunweeke. On the which daie, Garter and Norreis king of armes, accompanied with other heralds, and also with the lord maior and certeine of the aldermen of the citie of London, by sound of three trumpets that rode before them, proclamed open war against the said French king, first in Cheape side, and after in other parts of the citie, where customarilie such proclamations are made: the shiriffes still riding with the heralds, till they had made an end, although the lord maior brake off in Cheape side, and went to saint Peters to heare seruice, and after to Paules, where (according to the vsage then) he went on procession. King Philip because of the warres towards, betwixt him and the French king, the first of Julie passed ouer to Calis, and so into Flanders, where on that side the seas he made prouision for those warres: at which time there was great talke among the common people, muttering that the king making small account of the queene, sought occasions to be absent from hir.

Queene Marie proclameth open warre against the French king.

King Philip passed ouer to Flander.

Neuertheleſſe, she shortlie after caused an armie of a thousand horsemen, and foure thousand footmen, with two thousand pioners to be transported ouer to his aid, vnder the leading of diuerse of the nobilitie and other valiant capteins, whose names partlie follow: the earle of Penbroke capteine generall, sir Anthonie Browne vicount Montacute lieutenant generall vnder the said earle, the lord Greie of Wilton lord marshall, the earle of Rutland generall of the horsemen, the lord Clinton earle of Lincolne coronell of the footmen, the lord Russell earle of Bedford, the lord Robert Dudleie earle of Leicester and maister of the ordinance, the lord Thomas Howard, sir William West lord de la Ware, sir Edward Windsore after lord Windsore, the lord Braie, sir Edmund Briges lord Shandois, the lord Ambrose Dudleie earle of Warwike, the lord Henrie Dudleie, Edward Randall esquier sergeant maior, maister Whiteman treasuror of the armie, Edward Chamberleine esquier capteine of the pioners, sir Richard Leigh trenchmaster, John Higate esquier prouost marshall, Thomas Yaruie esquier mustermaster, sir Peter Carew, sir William Courtneie, sir Giles Stranguish, sir Thomas Finch maister of the campe, and other nobles, knights, and gentlemen of right approued valiancie: although diuerse of them were suspected to be protestants. Furthermore, to make king Philips power the stronger, there came aid vnto him from sundrie places; whereby as his armie increased in number, so likewise grew the same more puissant in strength. The people that assisted him are thus remembred by C. O. in his discourse of this warre, as here followeth:

The names of the capteins ouer the queenes forces.

Misit in auxilium Germania lecta virorum
Corpora ferratas acies peditúmque caterua.
Nec deerat miles Latia de gente cruentus,
Dalmata non deerat bello huic nec defuit Hannus.
Attamen ante alios, fiducia summa locata est
In quibus armatus validè comenerat Anglus.
Fœdus amicitiæ vetus id poscebat, & vxor,
Cui cum rege fuit socio commune periclum.

Varie gentes in exercitu Philippi.

The fiftéenth of Julie, the ladie Anne of Cleue departed this life at Chelseie, and was honorablie buried at Westminster the six of August: a ladie of right commendable regard, courteous, gentle, a good housekeeper, & verie bountifull to hir seruants.

The death of the ladie Anne of Cleue.

The

Obsequie for the king of Portingale.

The eightéenth of August was a solemne obsequie celebrated in the church of S. Paule in London, for John king of Portingale, who departed this life in Julie last past. The lord treasuror was cheefe mourner. The quænes armie being transported ouer to Calis (as before ye haue heard) marched to ioine with king Philips power: the which alreadie being assembled, had inuaded the French confines, and being come before saint Quintins, planted a strong siege before that towne. To the rescue whereof, the French king sent a great armie both of horssemen and footmen, vnder the leading of the conestable of France: which armie consisted of about nine hundred men at armes, with as manie light horssemen, seuen or eight hundred Roisters, two & twentie ensignes of lancequenets, and sixtéene ensignes of French footmen. They had also with them fiftéene péeces of great artillerie, to wit, six double canons, foure long culuerings, the rest bastard culuerings, and other péeces of smaller mould. The conestable thus garded vpon saint Laurence daie, which is the tenth of August, approched the towne, meaning to put into the same succours of more soldiors, with Dandelot the admerals brother, that was within the towne not furnished with such a garrison as was thought expedient for the defense therof, against such a power as king Philip had prepared against it.

Fiftéene or sixtéene thousand footmen, and a three or foure thousand horssemen.

The conestable of France duke Montmorencie generall of the French forces.

The duke of Sauoie and other capteins of the armie that laie at siege before the towne, aduertised of the conestables comming towards them, assembled the most part of their horssemen togither, and with all speed made towards a passage distant from the place where the French armie stood houering about a two English miles: and being got ouer, they diuided themselues into eight troopes of horssemen, led by the earles of Egmond, Horne, Mansfield, the dukes of Brunswike and others, being in all to the number of fiue thousand men of armes, beside the swart Rutters and light horssemen. Which gaue such a furious & cruell charge vpon the Frenchmen, that they not able to resist the same, were altogither defeated, and their battels as well horssemen as footmen put to flight. Wherof king Philip hauing knowlege, pursued them with all his force, in which pursute there were slaine of the Frenchmen a great number, the chiefe whereof were these that follow. John of Burbon duke of Anghien the vicount of Turraine & eldest sonne of Roch du Maine, the lord of Chandenier, with a great number of other gentlemen that bare armes in the field. There were taken these prisoners following; the duke of Montmorencie conestable of France hurt with an harquebuz shot in the hanch, the duke of Montpenser hurt in the head, the duke of Longueuille, the marshall of saint Andrews, the lord Lewes brother to the duke of Mantoa, monsieur de Valse, the baron of Curton, monsieur de la Roch du Maine, the Reingraue colonell of the Almans: moreouer the counte de Roch Foucault, monsieur d'Obignie, monsieur de Peru, monsieur de Montbrun, monsieur de Biron, sonnes to the conestable, monsieur de la chapelle de Biron, monsieur de saint Heran: beside manie other gentlemen and capteins of good account and estimation. Yet there escaped the more part of the French horssemen, and manie of their footmen, with certeine of their capteins of honor; as the duke of Neuers, the prince of Conde brother to the king of Nauarre, the earle of Montmorencie eldest sonne to the conestable, the earle of Sancerre, monsieur de Burdillon, and other of the barons of France.

Prisoners of name. These nine were knights of the order.

Within two or three daies after this ouerthrow, king Philip with the English armie, vnder the gouernement of the earle of Penbroke, and others, came to the siege afore saint Quintins, & so was the siege greatlie reinforced; and on the seuen and twentith of August by the speciall aid & helpe of the Englishmen, the towne of saint Quintins was taken. For when the other soldiours, after diuerse assaults were repelled and gaue ouer, the Englishmen of a stout courage gaue a new onset, by reason whereof the towne was taken. And in reward of their well doing, king Philip granted them the saccage of the said towne. But then the swart Rutters, which keepe no rule when they be strongest, set vpon the Englishmen, in taking of the spoile, and killed a great number of them. This grudge was with much difficultie appeased, & men thought that if the Englishmen being much fewer in number had not béene oppressed with the multitude of the other, that it would haue growne to a great slaughter on both parts. At the assault the lord Henrie Dudleie, yongest sonne to the duke of Northumberland was slaine with the shot of a great péece, as he stoped vpon his approch vnto the wall, and staid to rip his hose ouer the knée, thereby to haue béene the more apt and nimble to the assault. This was his end, of whome one saith thus:

Henricus Dudleius heros,
Ille annis generosam animam iuuenilibus efflat,
Quem referunt socij flentes in castra peremptum,
Vt mos christicolæ est, velatum sindone, gentis.

taken and sacked.

The lord Henrie Dudleie slaine with the shot of a gun.

After the winning of this towne, newes in post were brought into England to the quæne, who caused generall processions to be made, and Te Deum to be song, giuing all laud and praise to almightie God for this great victorie. And in the streets of euerie citie and towne of the realme were made bonefires with great reioising: which sudden short gladnesse turned verie shortlie after to great & long sorow. For if ought were woone by hauing of saint Quintins, England got nothing at all, for the gaine thereof came onelie to king Philip. But the losse of Calis, Hammes and Guisnes, with all the countrie on that side the sea (which followed some after) was such a basket to England, as happened not in more than an hundred yeares before; and a dishonor wherwith this realme shall be blotted, vntill God shall giue power to redub it with some like requitall to the French.

Doctor Weston being (as you haue heard before) prolocutor of the conuocation house, was at this time in displeasure with cardinall Pole, and other bishops: bicause he was vnwilling to resigne his deanrie of Westminster vnto the quæne, whose purpose was to place there (as in old time before) the religion of monks, whome in deed he fauoured not, although in all other things he stood with the church of Rome. Neuertheless, by verie importunate sute, or rather compulsion, he with his collegues resigned the deanrie of Westminster. In recompense wherof he was made deane of Windsor, where not long after he was taken in adulterie, and for that fact was by the cardinall depriued of all his spirituall liuings, from whose sentence he appealed vnto the court of Rome. For the following of which appeale he sought secretlie to depart the realme: but he was apprehended by the waie, and committed to the tower of London, where he remained prisoner, vntill (by the death of quéene Marie) quéene Elizabeth came vnto the crowne, by whome he was set at libertie, and forthwith fell sicke and died.

Doctor Weston resigneth the deanrie of Westminster by compulsion and is recompensed.

The common talke was, that if he had not so suddenlie died, he would haue disclosed the purpose of the chiefe of the clergie, meaning the cardinall, which was to haue taken vp K. Henries bodie at Windsor, and to haue burned it, as manie thought. The thirtith of November, being saint Andrews daie, in the forenoone, the quéene came from saint Iames to hir palace at Westminster, where she heard masse, at the which, sir Thomas Tresham knight receiued

The malice of cardinall Pole against king Henrie the eight.

Sir Thomas Tresham made lord of saint Johns of Jerusalem.

Calis not furnished with a sufficient number of men.

the order of the crosse, & was instituted lord of saint Johns of Jerusalem in England. At this time, although there was open hostilitie and warre betweéne England & France: yet contrarie to the common custome before vsed, the towne of Calis and the forts thereabouts were not supplied with anie new accrewes of soldiors, but rather withdrawne from thense, and discharged. Which negligence was not vnknowne to the enimie, who long before had practised the winning of the said towne and countrie.

The losse of saint Quintins netleth the French king.

The French king therefore being sharplie nettled with the late losse of saint Quintins, and a great péece of his countrie adioining, and desirous of reuenge, thought it not meet to let slip this occasion, but rather to aduance the same with all expedition, according vnto the plot laied by the constable before hand. The king yet neuertheless hauing an armie in a readinesse (although the constable were now prisoner, and therefore could not be present himselfe) to imploie where most aduantage should appeare, determined with all spéed to put in proofe the enterprise of Calis, which long and manie times before was purposed vpon, as it was well knowne. This practise was not secret, but that the deputies of Calis and Guisnes had some intelligence thereof, and informed the quéene and hir councell accordinglie, as well by letters, as by sufficient messengers: for not onelie John Hiefield master of the ordinance was sent from thense to giue due aduertisement of the French kings purpose, & to haue a supplie of things necessarie for mounting of the great artillerie whereof he had charge; but also sir Rafe Chamberleine, capteine of the castell, was likewise sent to giue the like aduertisement, who returned not past two or three daies before the duke of Guise came thither with the armie. And so either by wilfull negligence, or lacke of credit by the quénes councell here, this great case was so slenderlie regarded, that no prouision of defense was made, vntill it was somewhat too late.

The duke of Guise with a great armie commeth toward Calis.

Guise entreth the English frontier.

The duke of Guise being generall of the French armie, proceéded in this enterprise with maruellous spæd and no lesse policie. For approching the English frontier vnder colour to vittell Bullongne and Ard, he entered the same vpon a sudden on Newyeares daie, a forie little plot of ground, intrenched at Sandgate, and then diuided his armie into two parts, sending one part with certeine pœces of great artillerie along the downes by the sea side towards Ricebanke: and the other part furnished also with batterie pœces, marched streight forth to Newnambridge, meaning to batter these two forts both at one time. Which thing he did with such readie dispatch, that comming thither verie late in the euening, he was master of both by the nert morning: where at the first shot discharged at Newnambridge, the head of the master gunner of that pœce, whose name was Horlie was stricken off.

1558.
Anno Reg. 5.

Newnambridge taken by the French.

The master gunners head smitten cleane off with a gun.

The capteine hauing sent vnto the lord deputie of Calis for some supplie of men, was answered that if he perceiued the enimies force to be such, whereby his péce should grow to be in anie danger: that then he should choke vp the artillerie, and retire with his men vnto Calis for defense of the towne, where they stood in great want of men also, euen to the perill of losing the whole, if the enimies came forwards to besiege it. Hereupon the capteine within Newnambridge perceiuing he might haue no succors, retired with his soldiors vnto Calis, in such secret wise, that the Frenchmen perceiued it not of a prettie while; insomuch that they shot still at the fort, when there was not a man within it to make resistance: and by that time that they were come to Calis, the other part of the French armie that went by the sea side with their batterie, had woone Ricebanke, being abandoned to their hands. The next daie the Frenchmen with fiue double canons and three culuerings began a batterie, from the Sandhils nert Ricebanke against the curteine betwixt the watergate and the soldiors prison on the wall, and continued the same by the space of two or three daies, vntill they had made a little breach nert vnto the watergate, which neuertheless was not yet assaultable: for that which was broken in the daie, was by them within the towne made vp againe in the night stronger than before. But the batterie was not begun there by the French, for that they intended to enter in that place, but rather to abuse the English, to haue the lesse regard vnto the defense of the castell, which was the weakest part of the towne, and the place where they were ascertained by their espials to win easie entrie. So that while our people trauelled fondlie to defend that counterfet breach of the towne wall, the duke had in the meane season planted fiftéene double canons against the castell. Which castell being considered by the rulers of the towne, to be of no such force as might resist the batterie of the canon (by reason it was old and without anie rampiers) it was deuised to make a traine with certeine barrels of powder to this purpose, that when the Frenchmen should enter (as they well knew that there they would) to haue fired the said traine, and blowne vp the keépe, and for that purpose left neuer a man within to defend it.

Ricebanke taken by the French.

The duke of Guise his policie.

The Englishmens fond defense.

But the French hauing passed through the ditch full of water, & thereby with their cloths wringing wet as they passed ouer the traine, they moisted so the powder, that it would not take fire when it was giuen. Hereupon the Frenchmen espieng the traine, auoided the same; so as that deuise came to no purpose, and without anie resistance they entered the castell, and thought to haue entered the towne by that waie. But by the prowesse and hardie courage of sir Anthonie Ager knight, & marshall of the towne, with his soldiors they were repelled, and driuen backe againe into the castell, and so hard followed, that our men forced them to close and shut the castell gate for their suertie, least it should haue béene recouered against them, as it was once attempted by sir Anthonie Ager; who there with his sonne and heire, and a pursenant at armes called Calis, with diuerse others to the number of three or foure score Englishmen lost their liues.

The Frenchmen disappoint the Englishmens deuise.

Sir Anthonie Ager and his sonne slaine.

The same night after the recule of the Frenchmen, whose number so increased in the castell, that the towne was not able to resist their force, the lord Wentworth being deputie of the towne, appointed Nicholas Fellow, alias Guisnes, and Richard Turpine, alias Yannes, to go to the French within the castell, to demand parlée: whereunto they assented, put forth of the posterne two French gentlemen, and in pledge for them receiued into the castell John Hiefield master of the ordinance, and Edmund Hall one of the constables of the staple. Hereupon they falling in talke about a composition: at length after some long debating of the matter, they concluded in this sort. First that the towne, with all the great artillerie, vittels, and munitions, should be freelie yeelded to the French king, the liues of the inhabitants onelie saued, to whome safe conduct should be granted to passe where they listed: sauing the lord deputie, with fiftie such other as the duke should appoint, to remaine prisoners, and be put to their ransome. The nert morning, the Frenchmen entered and possessed the towne: and forthwith all the men, women, and children, were commanded to leaue their houses, and to go to certeine places appointed for them to remaine in, till order might be taken for their sending awaie.

The lord Wentworth.

A parlé demanded of the French.

Calis deliuered to the French.

The

The places thus appointed for them to remaine in, were chiefly foure, the two churches of our ladie, and saint Nicholas, the deputies house, and the staple, where they rested a great part of that daie, and one whole night, and the next daie till three of the clocke at afternoone, without either meat or drinke. And while they were thus in the churches, and those other places, the duke of Guise in the name of the French king, in their hearings made a proclamation, strictlie charging all and euerie person that were inhabitants of the towne of Calis, hauing about them anie monie, plate, or iewels, to the value of one groat to bring the same forthwith, and laie it downe vpon the high altars of the said churches vpon paine of death; bearing them in hand also, that they should be searched. By reason of which proclamation, there was made a great & sorowfull offertorie. And while they were at this offering within the churches, the Frenchmen entered into their houses, and rifled the same, where was found inestimable riches and treasure: but specialtie of ordinance, armor, and other munitions.

The duke of Guises proclamation to bring in monie and plate, &c.

The French fall to spoiling and rifling.

¶ Thus dealt the French with the English in lieu and recompense of the like vsage to the French when the forces of king Philip preuailed at S. Quintins: where not content with the honour of victorie, the English in sacking the towne sought nothing more than the satisfieng of their greedie veine of couetousnesse, with an extreame neglect of all moderation. So likewise did the Spanish soldiors, and the rest that could come to finger anie thing of value: insomuch that neither monie nor plate, either of siluer or gold, rich hangings, bedding nor houshold stuffe was spared: but what they could not carie awaie for cumbersomnesse, they sold dogcheape; were the same necessarie furniture seruiceable for the chamber, the kitchin, or anie other roome in a mans house. Pearls and pretious stones, iewels and owches, the rich ornaments of the French dames were then bought and sold at a low price, which a long time had béene kept shut vp vnder locke and keie: all laie open now to the greedie eie of the soldiors, who like landlords kept possession of houses, as C.O. noteth, of whom I haue borrowed the report of this reuell rout, saieng:

Armatis muros firmissimáque occupat vrbis
Militibus victor, dominantur in ædibus altis
Iam vacuis veterum dominorum Marce phalanges
Conspicuæ.]

About two of the clocke the nert daie at after none, being the seuenth of Januarie, a great number of the meanest sort were suffered to passe out of the towne in safetie, being garded through the armie with a number of Scottish light horssemen, who vsed the Englishmen verie well and friendlie: and after this euerie daie for the space of three or foure daies togither, there were sent awaie diuerse companies of them till all were auoided, those only excepted that were appointed to be reserued for prisoners, as the lord Wentworth, & others. There were in the towne of Calis fiue hundred English soldiors ordinarie, and no more: and of the townesmen not fullie two hundred fighting men (a small garison for the defense of such a towne) and there were in the whole number of men, women, and children (as they were accounted when they went out of the gate) foure thousand and two hundred persons. But the Lord Wentworth deputie of Calis, sir Rafe Chamberleine capteine of the castell, John Harlston capteine of Ricebanke, Nicholas Alexander capteine of Newnambridge, Edward Grimstone the comptrollor, John Rogers surueior, with others, to the number of fiftie (as afore said) such as it pleased the duke of Guise to appoint, were sent prisoners into France.

The pettie & meanest sort voided out of Calis.

Garison of soldiors that were in Calis

Thus haue ye heard the discourse of the ouerthrow and losse of the towne of Calis, the which enterprise was begun and ended in lesse than eight daies, to the great maruell of the world, that a towne of such strength, and so well furnished of all things as that was (sufficient numbers of men of warre onlie excepted) should so suddenlie be taken and conquered, but most specialtie in the winter season, what time all the countrie about (being marish ground) is commonly ouerflowne with water. The said towne was won from the French king by K. Edward the third, in the time of Philip de Valois then French king: and being in possession of the kings of England two hundred and eleuen yeares, was in the time of Philip and Marie king & quéene of England lost within lesse than eight daies: being the most notable fort that England had. For the winning whereof, king Edward afore said, in the 21 yeare of his reigne, was faine to continue a siege eleuen moneths and more. Wherefore it was iudged of all men, that it could not haue come so to passe, without some secret trecherie.

Calis conquered and lost in lesse than eight daies.

How long Calis was in possession of the kings of England.

Here is also to be noted, that when quéene Marie and hir councell heard credible of the Frenchmens sudden approch to that towne, she with all spéed possible (but somewhat too late) raised a great power for the rescue thereof; the which comming to Douer, staied thereabouts till the towne was woone, either for that their whole number was not come togither, or for that there were not ships readie sufficient to passe them ouer, although the wind and weather serued verie well to haue transported them thither, till the sundaie at night after the towne was deliuered: for then began a maruellous sore and rigorous tempest, continuing the space of foure or fiue daies togither, that the like had not béene seene in the remembrance of man. Wherefore some said that the same came to passe through necromancie, and that the diuell was raised vp and become French, the truth whereof is knowne (saith maister Grafton) to God. True it is that after the said tempest began, for the time it lasted, no ship could well brooke the seas, by reason of the outragious storms. And such of the quéenes ships as did then aduenture the passage, were so shaken and torne with the violence of the weather, that they were forced to returne in great danger, & not without losse of all their tackle and furniture: so that if this tempestuous weather had not chanced, it was thought that the armie should haue passed to haue giuen some succors to Guisnes, and to haue attempted the recouerie of Calis.

As good neuer as too late.

A terrible tempest.

Rich. Grafton.

The quéenes ships sore shaken with storme and tempest.

But if the same armie might haue béene readie to haue transported ouer in time, before the losse of Calis, and whilest the weather was most calme and sweet, as was possible for that time of the yeare, the towne might haue béene preserued; and the other péeces which through want of timelie succours came into the enimies possession. And thus by negligence of the councell at home, conspiracie of traitors elsewhere, force and false practise of enimies, holpen by the rage of most terrible tempests of contrarie winds and weather, this famous fort of Calis was brought againe and left in the hands and possession of the French. ¶ Now were he worthie of a kingdome, that could sensiblie and significantlie set forth the insolent triumphs and immoderate reioising of the French for the recouerie of Calis so long possessed by the English, and now in forren tenure. In describing whereof a man had néed of manie heads fraught with extraordinarie inuention, and of manie hands readilie to deliuer in writing his rare conceipts in this case. For as they are a people depending wholie vpon extremities in their actions: so in this they vsed no measure, insomuch that euen the learneder sort among them, namelie Turnebus, Au-

Abr. Fl. ex opere historico Schardij collecto ratus, Bellaius, and others did both pen and publish pamphlets in Latine verse, replenished with scoffs and vntreuerend termes against the English, calling them Perfidos, and in flowting sort Diuisos orbe Britannos; but aduancing to the skies their Henrie, their Guise, and the rest of the rowt that were actors in this conquest. A sight of which verses in some part I may not omit (for it requireth a booke to transcribe all) least I might be thought to impose vpon them a false charge. This therefore in the forme of a dialog betweene a post and the people writeth Auratus the French kings publike reader in the Greeke tong:

Ex tomo tertio historiarum Schardij de capto Caleto pag. 1973 &c.

N. Clamate Galli nunc ter io io.
V. Quæ læta Gallis instat oratio?
N. Capti Caletes. V. Multa paucis
Digna nouo memoras triumpho.
N. Vicêre Galli, sed duce Guisio.
V. Io triumphe, nunc ter io io.
N. Vicêre victores Britannos.
V. Nunc ter io, ter io triumphe.
N. Annos ducentos serua Britanniæ
Vrbs liberata est. V. Nunc ter io io.
N. Migrate iam prisci coloni.
V. Nunc ter io, ter io triumphe, &c.

And thus proceedeth he in his od veine of inuention, concluding with a question, whether the king of France or the duke of Guise are the more happie and blessed person? The answer is made that they are both blessed, the king for the duke sake, and the duke for the kings; and therefore his pose must of force sing and sound to them both thrise, that is, oftentimes Ter io triumphe, ter io triumphe. But I would to God the English had not beene so soon and so suddenlie turned out of their old possession, nor the French fondlings obteined such a iust cause of immoderate ioy and outragious triumph.]

But to leaue Calis in the present state, you shall vnderstand, that so soone as this duke of Guise (contrarie to all expectation) had in so few daies gained this strong towne of Calis (afore thought impregnable) and had put the same in such order as best semed for his aduantage, proud of the spoile, and pressing forward vpon his good fortune, without giuing anie long time to the residue of the guides or capteines of the forts there, to breath vpon their businesse, the 13 daie of the said moneth being thursdaie, with all prouision requisite for a siege, marched with his armie from Calis, vnto the towne and fort of Guisnes, fiue miles distant from thence. Of which towne and castell at the same time there was capteine a valiant baron of England, called William lord Greie of Wilton, who not without cause suspecting a siege at hand, and knowing the towne of Guisnes to be of small force, as being large in compasse, without walles or bulworks, closed onlie with a trench, before the Frenchmens arriuall had caused all the inhabitants of the towne to auoid, and so manie of them as were able to beare armes he caused to retire into the castell, which was a place well fortified with strong and massie bulworks of bricke, hauing also an high and mightie tower, of great force and strength, called the Keepe.

The duke of Guise marcheth to the fort and town of Guisnes.

The L. Greie capteine of Guisnes.

The towne being thus abandoned, the Frenchmen had the more easie approch to the castell, who thinking to find quiet lodging in those vacant houses, entred the same without any feare. And being that night at their rest (as they thought) a chosen band of souldiors appointed by the lord Greie, issued out by a posterne of the said castell, and slue no small number of their sleepie ghests, & the rest they put out of their new lodgings, and maugre the duke and all the French power, consumed all the houses of the towne with fire. That notwithstanding, the said duke with all diligence began his trenches. And albeit the shot of the great artillerie from the castell was terrible, & gaue him great impeachment: yet did he continue his worke without intermission, and for examples sake wrought in his owne person as a common pioner or labourer. So that within lesse than three dates, he brought to the number of fiue & thirtie batterie peeces, hard to the brim of the castell ditch, to batter the same on all sides, as well forthright as acrosse. But his principall batterie he planted against the strongest bulworke of all, called Marie bulworke, thinking by gaining of the stronger to come more easilie by the weaker. Rabutine.

The L. Greie taketh the French at a sleepie aduantage.

On mondaie morning therefore by breake of the daie, they had laid two battries to the said bulworke, thirteene canons in the one, and nine in the other, with which they plied it so well, as that by none they had not onelie dismounted their counter batterie within, but also cleane cut awaie the hope of bricke off the whole forefront of their bulworks, whereof the filling being but of late digged earth, did crimble awaie. Which the enimie finding about two of the clocke in the same afternoone, sent forth or fiftie forlorne hoies with swords and targets to viewe and assaie the breach. The ditch at that place before the batterie was not foure and twentie foot broad, now assuredlie not a dozzen, nor in deapth aboue a mans knees, therefore with small adoo they came to the breach, and with as little paine came vp the same, the clime was so easie; from whence hauing discharged certeine pistols vpon the Englishmen, and receiued a few pushes of the pike, they retired. And making report of the easinesse of the breach, strait a band or two of Gascoigns (as it was thought) threw themselues into the ditch, and vp they came. Then a little more earnestly the Englishmen leaned to their tackling, their flankers walked, their pikes, their culuers, their pots of wild fire were lent them, the harquebush saluted them, so as iollie maister Gascoigne was set downe with more hast than he came vp with good speed: and so ended mondaies worke, sauing that vpon the retire from the assalt, they gaue seuen or eight such terrible tires of batterie, as tooke cleane away from them within the top of their baumure and maunds, leauing them all open to the canons mouth. Wherby surelie but for night that came on, the Englishmen had beene forced to haue abandoned the place.

Batterie laid to the Marie bulworke.

The Gascoignes put backe with more hast than they came vp with good speed.

At this assault was slaine of gentlemen, one capteine Bourne an Englishman, verie valiant, also a Spanish gentleman, and common souldiours to the number of fortie or fiftie. There was also fore hurt at the same assault, one other Spanish capteine, with diuerse others, whom for the auoiding of tediousnesse I let passe. At night the lord Greie came to the bulworke, and hauing rendred thanks to God for that daies good successe, did greatlie commend them all for their manfull defense and valiant behauiour, exhorting them to continue therein, as the onelie thing wherein their safetie and good name did rest. The batterie (as before is told) hauing laid the bulworks open, they within were inforced for winning of a new baumure, to intrench within the bulworke fiue foot deape, and nine in thicknesse, which maruellouslie did strengthen the peece, the same being of no great largenesse before. By the next daie being tuesdaie, they had planted two batteries more; the one in the market place of the towne, to beate a curteine of the bodie of the castell, of fiue canons; the other vpon the rampire of the towne of three peeces, to beat the Cat and a flanker of the Barbican, which two garded one side of the Marie bulworke.

The number slaine at this assault.

The lord Greie commendeth his souldiours.

This morning they bestowed most in battering at the flankers, which the daie before they had felt, and in deed wone euerie one from them within, saing

Battering at the flankers.

uing

uing that of the Cat, which laie high and somwhat secret, and an other at the end of a braie by the gate on the other side of the bulworke; all the rest, as those of the Garden bulworke which chéeflie beheld the maine breach of the Barbican, and of the Keepe, were quite bereued them. And besides the enimie continuallie interteined the breach, with eight or nine tires the houre. In the afternoone, about the same houre that they made their attempt the daie afore, a regiment of Swilles, with certeine bands of Frenchmen approched the dich, as if presentlie they would haue giuen the assault; but there they did staie, sending to the breach onelie a capteine or two, seeking thereby to haue discouered what flankers yet were left to them within: wherein they were preuented, the lord Graie hauing before warned the gunners not to disclose them, but vpon extremitie. And thus after an houres plaie with the harquebush onelie, and a light offer or two of approach, this people retired them, and gaue the canon place againe, which by night had driuen them within anew to become moldwarps, and to intrench themselues with all speed possible.

Certeine Swilles and French approch the dich as if they would offer assault.

The morrow being wednesdaie, by the peepe of daie, all the batteries began, and without intermission held on till one of the clocke in the afternoone, and especiallie that in the market place so preuailed, as hauing cleane ruined the old wall, did drive through the rampire, and a new countermure of earth raised vpon the same, where the lord Greie himselfe sitting vpon a forme, with sir Henrie Palmer, and master Lewes Diue his lordships cousin and deputie, made a faire escape, the forme being stricken asunder vnder them, without anie further harme to anie of them: though sundrie other that daie and the nert following lost their liues on the same curteine by the foresaid battrie, which full in flanke did beat it, wherein yet was his lordships onelie abode as his chéefest place, to view and regard the behauiour and need of all the other lims, from which also a quoit might be throwne into Marie bulworke. The enimies canon (as is said) hauing plaid thus all the morning, and well searched (as they thought) euerie corner that flankers might lurke in, about the foresaid houre of one of the clocke, the Englishmen might descrie the trench before the breach to be stuffed with ensignes. The L. Greie streight expecting that which followed, gaue word incontinentlie to euerie place to stand on their gard, incouraging euerie man to continue in their well begun endeuor. A tower that was called Webs tower, and yet standing, which flanked one side of the beaten bulworke, he stuffed with twentie of the best shot with curriers. These things no soner thus ordered, but that eight or nine ensignes of Swilles, and three of Gascoigns, did present themselues vpon the counterscarfe; and without staie the Gascoignes flue into the ditch, run vp the breach, whome they within receiue with harquebush shot, but they requite the Englishmen againe with two for one. The top of the baumure or rather trench, the enimie boldlie approcheth, the pike is offered, to handblowes it commeth. Then the Swille with a statelie leasure stepeth into the dich, and close together marcheth vp the breach, the fight increaseth, waxeth verie hot, & the breach all couered with the enimies. The small shot in Webs tower began now their parts, no bullet that went in vaine. On the other side againe 20 of the Spaniards on the inside of the braies had laid themselues close till the heat of the assault: and then shewing themselues, did no lesse gall the enimies than the tower. Thus was it no lustilier assailed than brauelie defended. At last after an houres fight and more, the gouernors without, finding the great slaughter that theirs went to, and small auaile, and perceiuing the two little casemates of the tower and braies to be the chéefest annoiances, did cause a retire to be sounded: and withall three or foure of the canons in the market place, to be turned vpon Webs tower, the which at two tires brought cleane downe the same vpon the souldiors heads, wherein two or three were slaine outright, others hurt to death, and who escaped best, so maimed or bruised, as they were no more able to serue.

The danger which my lord Greie escaped sitting vpon a forme with two gentlmen.

The Swilles & Gascoigns giue the assault.

The manhood of the Spaniards against the French.

The enimie this while hauing breathed, and a brace of an hundred shots put forth onelie to attend on the few Spaniards that kept the corners of the braies the assault afresh is begun, and their beaten bands with new companies relieued. The lord Greie also sent into the bulworke two hundred fresh men. Now grew the fight heauie vpon the Englishmen, all their defense resting in the pike and bill, their chéefest flankers being gone, their places to bestow shot in taken from them, their fier-works in manner spent, the Spanish shot on the other side so ouerlaid, as not one of them but was either slaine or marred, yer a quarter of the assault was past. The easinesse of the fight thus alluring the enimie, vnappointed companies flue to the breach, and courage was on euerie side with them, what hauocke they made it is not hard to gesse. My lord Greie perceiuing the extremitie, sent to the two forenamed flankers, that they should no longer spare. They streight went off, the diches and breach being couered with men. These vnlooked for ghests made the enimie that was coming to pause, and the other alreadie come to repent their hast. Three or foure bowts of these salutations began to cleare well the breach, though the dich grew the fuller at night. At last parted with no great triumph of others winnings (for as the Englishmen within went not scotfrée) so suerlie no small number of their enimies carcasses toke vp their lodgings in the ditch that night.

A fresh assault begun and the fight hot and heauie against the English.

Enimies slaine.

My lord Greies worke after the skirmish ended.

My L. Greie hurt by mischance.

The French make bridges.

Consultation betweene the lord Greie and the English gentlemen.

My lord Greie this night came into the bulworke, where after praise first to God, he gaue thanks and commendations to them all. The slaine men he caused to be buried, the hurt to be remoued and looked vnto, saw the breach repared, inquired of their lacks, and (as he might) supplied the same. They that were great could not be helped, as corn powder, fierworks, pea and pikes began to falle vs. The most part of the night he here bestowed, and longer as was thought had taried, had not a scaberdles sword about one of the souldiors as he went in the throng & darke amongst them, thrust him almost through the foot: whereupon he withdrew him to be dressed, vsing first vnto his souldiors an exhortation to acquite themselues no lesse valiantlie the nert daie, assuring them that one or two more such bankets as this last, giuen to the enimie, would cole their courages for anie more assaults.

This night now, great noise & working was heard in the dich, whereupon the bulworke was once or twice on alarum. At the last with cressets it was espied that they were making a bridge. The morning came, and then the same was seene to be finished, emptie casks with ropes fastened togither, & sawed bords laid thereon. This yet did but put them within, in a certeintie of that which before they accounted of, and stood prepared for. To be short, the enimies spent all the daie till it was full two of the clocke in batterie, & beating at the two last flankers, which at length they wone from them within, & the gunners of either slaine. Whereupon the lord Greie taking counsell of sir Henrie Palmer, master Lewes Diue and Pontdragon the leader of the Spaniards: it was resolued, that there might be order to make a fucasse within the bulworke, and presentlie to withdraw all from thence, sauing a certeine for a face and stale to toll in the enimie, and then to haue blowne it vp vp whole to the destruction of them all.

Rich. Grafton.

In the meane time, the duke of Guise hauing giuen order to monsieur Dandelot coronell of the French footmen, that he with his bands should be in a readinesse to giue the assault when signe should be giuen, did withdraw him to an higher ground, from whence he might plainlie discouer the behauiour as well of his souldiors in the assault giuing, as also of the defendants in answering the same. And perceiuing not so manie of the English part appearing for defense (as he douted there would) gaue order forthwith, that a regiment of his most forward lanceknights should mount the breach, to open the first passage: and that monsieur Dandelot with his French footbands should backe them, which order was followed, with such hast & desperat hardines, that entring a deepe ditch full of water, from the bottome whereof to the top of the breach, in some places, was well neare fortie foot, without feare either of the water beneath, or the fire aboue, they mounted the breach.

The duke of Guise and monsieur Dandelot with their powers.

Rabutine.

And whereas the duke had prepared (as ye haue heard) bridges made of planke bords, borne vp with casks and emptie pipes, tied one to another, for his men to passe the said ditch: manie of them now at this assault, without care of those bridges, plunged into the water, and toke the next waie to come to the assault. Which hot hast notwithstanding, the assailants were at the first so stoutlie repelled and put backe by the defendants, being furnished with great store of wildfire, and other fucasies for the purpose, that they were turned headlong one vpon another, much faster than they came vp, not without great wast and slaughter of their best and most forward souldiors, to the small comfort of the stout duke, who (as is said before) stood all this while vpon a little hill to behold this businesse. Wherefore he not induring this sight any longer, as a man inraged, ran among his men, so rebuking some, and incouraging other, that the assault was hot renewed, with much more vehemencie and furie than before, and with no lesse sturdie obstinacie and desperation receiued by the defendants, whereby all the breach beneath was filled with French carcases.

The desperat aduenture of the French.

The duke of Guise in a rage with his soldiers.

This notwithstanding, the duke still redoubled his forces with fresh companies, and continued so manie assaults one vpon another, that at the last charge, being most vehement of all the other, the Englishmen being tired, and greatlie minished in their numbers, by slaughter and bloudie wounds, were of fine force driuen to auoid, & so after halfe an houres fight, the enimie entered. Which when the lord Greie beheld, he leaped to the top of the rampire, wishing of God that some shot would take him. When one that stood next him, by the scarfe suddenlie pulled him downe, otherwise the effects had well declared the earnestnes of the praier: for he was not yet vp againe, when a canon shot grated vpon the same place from whence he fell. And thus verie narrowlie hee scaped the danger of that shot, which if it had hit him would (no doubt) haue wrought his dispatch. For what is the weake frame of a mans bodie to mightie forts and strong castels, builded of timber and stone, beside the iron worke therewith compact, oftentimes redoubling the strength of the same? And yet these (we see by experience) ruinated, battered, and laid leuell manie times with the thundering shot of this dreadfull artillerie: an engine of no great antiquitie, and not vsed among ancient warriours in former ages, but a late deuise of a Franciscan frier; pitie it is that euer he was borne to set abroch such a pestilent inuention, as the poet noteth, shewing also the vse and the mischeefous effect therof as followeth:

Tormenti genus est ex ferro aut ære coactum,
Quod Franciscanus frater reperisse refertur,
Vt capias paucis validissima castra diebus,
Quæ vix cepisses armis toto prius anno, &c.

The English forced to auoid & the enimie entereth.

But to proceed. The fight within the bulworke yet lasted, to the great slaughter of them that defended it. Hereupon my lord Greie presentlie called to maister Lewes Diue, and others that were about him, to follow him to the gate. The maze was such, that besides his sonne maister Arthur Greie, and now lord Greie, maister Lewes Diue, capteine Brickewell, and halfe a dozen of armed corslets, not a man else did follow him. By this means the Englishmen were cleane driuen out of the bulworke, the enimie yet not daring to passe the braies, gaue them that escaped good leisure to recouer the gate, where my lord Greie holding the wicket himselfe, receiued them in. Upon the taking of this bulworke, the souldiors of Whiteleies bulworke and the base court in discomfiture abandoned their charges, flieng to the castell: so that more than the keepe and the bodie of the castell no part was free from the enimie. My lord Greie hauing receiued all his, caused the gates to be rammed vp.

Arthur Greie now lord Greie.

The enimie is dastardlie, all his victories notwithstanding.

Thus were the cheefe bulworks and vtter lims of the castell of Guisnes obteined by the French, on saint Sebastians daie, being the twentith of Januarie, but yet not without great expense of blood on both sides: for of the French part there were slaine in those assaults aboue the number of eight or nine hundred, and of the English not manie fewer: amongst whom the greatest losse lighted vpon those few Spaniards and Wallons that were come to assist the English at that present. It was now night: when a trumpetter came to the ditches side in the base court, & sounded a summons: who being called vnto, & asked what he would, told that he was sent to my lord Greie by the duke of Guise, with offer of a parlee if it would be harkened vnto. The souldiors no sooner heard these newes, but forsaking the walles came all in rowt togither, & confusedlie speaking to their chiefteine the said lord Greie, praied him to harken to the message, & to haue consideration of their liues, which so long as anie hope remained, they willinglie had ventured. The lord Greies answer was, that he marueiled, either what causelesse mistrust of his caring for them was now come vpon them, or what sudden vnwonted faintnesse of mind had so assailed them, as to cause them in such disorder to forsake their places, and leaue the walles naked, and he willed them to returne to the same.

Ric. Grafton.

A trumpetter from the duke of Guise to the lord Greie.

My lord Greie hereof toke counsell, and it was thought good not to reiect the offer, the extremitie on euerie side weied. The trumpetter receiuing answer, accordinglie departed, & without long abode returned againe, requiring in the dukes behalfe hostages for a truce during the parlee from vs, he minding to deliuer the like into the castell. From him in fine monsieur Dessrees, and a gentleman of the kings chamber were sent in: and maister Arthur Greie my lords sonne, and maister Lewes Diue, were put out. Monsieur Dandelot in the braies receiued them, and caried them ouer the vnfortunate bulworke, being come vpon naked and new slaine carcases, some of them spralling yet and groning vnder their feet, were onelie the earth they trod on. So passing downe the breach somewhat to the ease of the former heauie sight, they saw it, and the ditch little lesse fraught with the enimies corpses. Then to the campe they came, and were lodged in the said Dandelots tent.

Hostages required on the dukes part from the lord Greie during the time of the parlee, &c.

The next daie in the morning, the lord Greie was to meet the duke abroade: betweene them willinglie one houre was spent in talking without agreement, onelie vpon this point, that the lord Greie would haue his bands depart with their ensignes displaied, which which would not be yælded vnto: so he returned, & the hostages also therevpon were sent in. Monsieur Destrées not being yet come forth, my lord was no sooner entered againe, but that the souldiers effsones forsaking the walles, willinglie & to the present cutting of all their owne throtes (if monsieur Destrées himselfe had not bëene, with a few capteins & gentlemen of the lord Greies owne retinue) came and met him, crieng vpon him to haue pitie vpon them. The lord Greie herewith staied, and pausing a while, had this speach.

The duke and the lord Greie haue communication an whole houre.

The lord Greis words to his soldiers being ashamed of their timerousnesse, and yet pitieng their present distresse.

The onelie pitie (if fond I cannot saie) sh at I haue of you, hath caused me this daie to make such offers of composition, as neither your honestie, nor my honour, nor either of our duties in my thought maie well beare, which refused to take harder to the vtter defacing of our credits, sith the best would blot it. If I would, souldiers, your selues (me thinketh) in vengeance thereof should turne your weapons vpon me, and sacrifice so hartlesse a capteine, rather than to take it as a token of a pitifull capteine ouer you, and to yëeld thanks for the same. We haue begun, as becommed vs: we haue yet held on as dutie doth bind vs: let vs end then as honest dutie and fame doth will vs. Neither is there anie such extremitie of despaire in our case, but that we maie yet dearelie inough sell our skins yer we lose them. Let vs then either march out vnder our ensignes displaied, or else herewith die vnder them displaied.

The lord Greies souldiers in a mutinie do murmur against him, &c.

The soldiers herewith in a mutinie flatlie answered, that they for his vainglorie would not sell their liues. The desperatnesse of their case was not vnknowne vnto them (said they) and that their liues in other seruice might yet availe their prince and countrie. In this now further to venture, was but like oxen to be thrust to the butcher. That his lordship was not to expect anie one blow at their hands.

Articles of agreement betweene the lord Greie and the enimie.

Herewith in hast came one from monsieur Destrées that stood at the rampire, aduising him to send his souldiors to the wals, other wise that the Swisses would assuredlie enter. So constreined, his lordship promised them to compound, and so he got them to the wals. Then my lord going to councell, at length agreed vpon these conditions. First, that the castell with all the furniture therin as well vittels as great artillerie, powder, and all other munitions of warre, should be wholie rendred without wasting, hiding, or minishment thereof. Secondarilie, that the lord Greie with all the capteins, officers and others, hauing charge there, should remaine prisoners at the dukes pleasure, to be ransomed after the maner of warre. Thirdlie, that all the rest, as well souldiors as others, should depart with their armors, and baggage to what parties it seemed them best: neuertheless to passe without sound of drum or trumpet, or ensigne, and to leaue them behind. These articles sent by monsieur Destrées to the duke were accepted, & so in the after noone, the duke himselfe came & receiued the keies of my lord Greie, who presentlie went out, and was giuen to the marshall Strozzie, and from him sold to monsieur de Randan, by whom he came into his brother the counte de Rochefoucalt his hands, and there rested, till he was redëemed for foure and twentie thousand crownes.

The soldiors of Guisnes depart thense with bag and baggage.

The daie following, that is saie the two and twentith of Januarie, all the souldiors of the said fortresse of Guisnes, as well English as strangers, with all the rest of the inhabitants, and other (excepted the lord Greie himselfe, maister Arthur Greie his son, sir Henrie Palmer knight, Montdragon capteine of the Spaniards, and other men of charge reserued by the composition) departed with their bag and baggage from thense towards Flanders. At whose issuing forth, there were estëemed to the number of eight or nine hundred able men for the warre, part English & part Burgognians. Of Spaniards so few were left, as no account is to be made of them, in maner the whole number of them being slaine, and selling their liues right dërelie, according to the order of good & hardie souldiors. Thus endeth this siege, wherein for breuities sake we haue left to saie anie thing of the prouisions that the lord Greie made against the same, of the aduertisements that from time to time he sent to king Philip and quëene Marie, and of their answers, of the sundrie aduentures which they of Guisnes had with the enimie during their being about Calis, and of the great and manie booties that were there taken. Onelie in a word or two will I ad what bands of strangers were within the pëce, because thereof as in an other thing or two, I do find maister Grafton in his chronicle speake at rouers. First came in Montdragon, with two Spaniards more, verie valiant men, whome did follow within a daie or two, about foure or fiue and thirtie other Spaniards, all shot, of which (as I haue heard) there went not fiue out of the castell.

What bands of strangers were within the fort.

There came one capteine Desquie a Burgognian, with two hundred souldiors, pikes most. This band was appointed to the Marie bulworke, whose capteine being full of the gout, and an impotent man, would not yet be from his charge, but in his bed ended his life in the bulworke. And so of this enough. But now after the winning of this towne and castell, the duke aduising well vpon the place, and considering that if it should happen to be regained by Englishmen, what a noisome neighbor the same might be to Calis, now being French; and specialtie what impeachment should come thereby for the passage thither from France, considering also the nëere standing thereof to the French kings fortresse of Ard: so that to këepe two garrisons so nigh together should be but a double charge, and not onlie nëedlesse, but also dangerous for the cause afore rehearsed. Upon these considerations (as the Frenchmen write) he tooke order for all the great artillerie, vittels and other munition, to be taken forth, and the castell with all the bulworkes and other fortifications there, with all spëed to be razed and throwne downe, and the stuffe to be caried awaie, and employed in other more necessarie places.

Rich. Grafton.

Hammes castell could not be easilie approched vnto, and why.

Then rested nothing within all the English pale on that side vnconquered, but the little castell or pile called Hammes, which though it were but of small force, made by art and industrie of mans hand, and being altogither of old workemanship without rampiers or bulworks: yet neuertheless, by the naturall situation thereof, being on all sides inuironed with fens and marish grounds, it could not easilie be approched vnto, either with great ordinance for the batterie, or else with anie armie to incampe there for a siege: but hauing one streit passage thereto by a narrow causeie, trauersed and cut through in diuerse places, with dëepe ditches, alwaies full of water. Which thing being well forsëene by Edward lord Dudleie then capteine there, hauing as good cause to suspect a siege there, as his neighbors had afore the Frenchmens comming to Guisnes, caused all the bridges of the said causeie being of wood to be broken, to giue thereby the more impeachment to the French, if they should attempt to approch the same, as shortlie after they did, and kept diuerse of the passages.

The lord Edward Dudleie.

But to deliuer the duke and his souldiors from that care, there came to him glad newes from those that had charge to watch the said causeie, how the capteine hauing intelligence of the rendering of Guisnes, secretlie the same night had conueied himselfe, selfe, with his small garrison by a secret passage ouer the marish into Flanders. Whereby the duke being now past care of anie further siege to be laid in all the frontier, tooke order forthwith to seize the said little fort into his own hands, as it was easie to do, when there was no resistance. When this peece was once seized by the French, then remained there none other place of defense nor strength of the English on all that side the sea, for the safegard of the rest of the countrie. Whereby the French king became wholie and throughlie lord & maister of all the English pale: for now (as ye haue heard) there was neither towne, castell, or other fortresse, more or lesse on that side (sauing Bots bulwarke neere to Grauelling, which after king Philip kept as his) but that it was either taken awaie by force, or else abandoned, and left open to the enimie. And (as the Frenchmen write) besides the great riches of gold and siluer, coine, iewels, plate, wools, and other merchandize (which was inestimable) there were found three hundred peeces of brasse mounted on wheeles, and as manie of iron, with such furniture of powder, pellets, armour, vittels, and other munitions of war scarselie credible.

A prouiso of aduantage for the duke.

This was a maruellous rich bootie for the enimie, and a great losse to the partie contrarie.

Thus haue you heard the whole discourse of the conquest of the noble towne of Calis, with all the English fortresses and countrie adioining made by the duke of Guise. The newes whereof when they came to the French king, no need to aske how ioifullie they were receiued, not onelie of him and all his court, but also vniuersallie through the whole realme of France. For the which victorie, there was (as the maner is) Te Deum sung, and bonefiers made euerie where, as it is wont to be in cases of common ioy and gladnesse, for some rare benefit of God. In so much that shortlie vpon the conquest, there was a publike assemblie at Paris of all the estates of France, who franklie in recompense of the kings charges employed in the winning of Calis, and the places aforesaid, and for maintenance of his wars to be continued afterwards, granted vnto him three millians of French crowns: whereof the clergie of France contributed one millian, besides their disnes. And no maruell though the French did highlie reioise at the recouerie of Calis out of the Englishmens hands: for it is constantlie affirmed of manie, that be acquainted with the affaires of France, that euer since the same towne was first woone by Englishmen, in all solemne councels assembled to treat vpon the state of France, there was a speciall person apointed to put them in remembrance from time to time of Calis: as it were to be wished that the like were vsed in England, vntill it were regained from the French.

Triumphs in France for the getting againe of Calis.

A. Fl. ex opere historico Schardij collectio. pag. 1070.

¶ And here because thus much is said of the French by waie of discourse concerning their exulting, and immoderat ioyfulnesse manie waies testified, somewhat being alredie written thereof before: it is noteworthie, either for the increase of wit in vs, if it were the fault of our follie; or the aggrauating of their impudencie, if they blush not to publish a most lewd and lewdlie; to remember what I haue read in verses set forth by a Frenchman; wherein among manie words & terms vsed touching this conquest of Calis & Guisnes (wherein also a prophesie of Merline (of which name there were two, and both prophets) is introduced, foretelling the reuolution of the same to be rather fatall to that nation, than recouerable by prowesse martiall (for thus he saith;)

D. Powell in hist. Camb. pag. 4, 5.

Namque erat in fatis redditurum haud antè Caletum
Ad veteres dominos, quàm se regina marito
Traderet externo, veterumque propagine regum
Posthabita, nouus hic succederet aduena regnis;
Ipse Valesina venturum à stirpe nepotem
Merlinus vates multo prædixerat antè,
Sanguinis vltorem nostri cladisque futurum.)

But this is not the matter that I meant (though it conteine somewhat whereat men may muse) but a further reach to the rebuke of rashnesse in some, if it were their deed; and to the shame of others, if the report be false. For thus saith the same author, whose verses euen now I rehearsed, speaking of the Englishmen, whome former victories (saith he) made verie venterous, confident, and full of heart; and besides that, so disdainfull and scornefull towards the French, that they caused to be grauen in hard marbell aloft at the entrie of the castell or fortresse in legible letters (but he telleth not in what language, no more than which of the Merlins prophesie it was; howbeit (saith he) thus much in effect in Latine:

Tùm demùm Francus premet obsidione Caletum,
Cùm ferrum plumbúmue natabit suberis instar.
Then shall the Frenchmen Calis win,
When iron and lead like corke shall swim.

Thus report the French, but how trulie, let them saie that are able (vpon their owne knowledge) to iudge: and thus much shall suffice for that matter.] Now seemed euerie date a yeare to the French king vntill he personallie had visited Calis, and his new conquered countrie. Wherefore about the end of Januarie he tooke his viage thither, accompanied with no small number of his nobilitie: and immediatlie vpon his arriuall there, he perused the whole towne and euerie part thereof from place to place, deuising with the duke of Guise for the better fortification thereof, what should be added vnto the old, and what should be made new, and what should be taken awaie. And after order taken for that businesse, he placed there a noble man, & no lesse valiant knight of the order, called monsieur de Thermes to be capteine of the towne, and so departed he againe into France.

The French king goeth to visit and see Calis.

Monsieur de Thermes made capteine of Calis.

After the French kings departure from Calis, he made great hast for the accomplishment of the marriage, moued betweene Francis his eldest sonne, called the Dolphin, and Marie Steward daughter & sole heire of Iames the fift late king of Scotland: which princesse, if the Scots had bin faithfull of promise, as they seldome be) should haue married king Edward the first. For the breach of which promise began all the warre betweene England & Scotland, as you heard in the latter end of the life of king Henrie the eight, and in the beginning of king Edward the first. This mariage (saith Grafton) though it be not of my matter, I thought not to omit, for that manie things were meant thereby, which thanks be to God neuer came to effect. But one speciall point was not hidden to the world, that by meanes of the same, the realme of Scotland should for euermore haue remained as vnited and incorporat to the crowne of France: and that as the sonne and heire of euerie French king doth succeed to the inheritance and possession of a countrie called the Dolphin, & is therfore called Dolphin; & like as the principalitie of Wales apperteineth to the eldest son of the king of England, who therefore is called the prince of Wales: euen so the Dolphin heire of France should thereby haue beene king of Scotland for euermore: which name and title vpon this mariage was accordinglie giuen to Francis Dolphin and heire apparant of France, to be called king Dolphin. The meaning whereof was vtterlie to exclude for euermore ante to be king of Scotland, but onelie the eldest sonne of France.

The mariage betweene the Dolphin and the princesse of Scots.

Why the son and heire of euerie French king is called the Dolphin.

This memorable marriage was solemnized in the citie of Paris the foure and twentith date of Aprill, in the yeere of Christ 1558, with most magnificall pompe and triumph, and honored with the presence of the most part of the princes, prelats, lords and and barons of both the realmes, as it were for a confirmation of this new aliance. Which as it was much to the aduantage and benefit of France: so nothing could be more prejudice & derogation to the crowne of Scotland, as a deuise tending to the perpetuall abolishing and extinguishment of the name & state of kings in that realme. In this meane time also the quæne Dowager of Scotland had done what in hir laie, to procure the Scotish nobilitie to make warres against England: but they being not willing thereto, monsieur Doisell coronell of certeine bands of Frenchmen came to Aimouth within six miles of Berwike, and fortified that place, making sundrie rodes and inuasions into England. In reuenge whereof the Englishmen made the like inrodes into Scotland, whereupon the Scotishmen in their defense (as some pretend) were driuen to haue warres: and thereupon the earle of Huntlete was made lieutenant of the Scots borders, who remaining there by the helpe of the Frenchmen did manie displeasures to the Englishmen. This warre was begun in the yeere last past, and so continued: during the which manie skirmishes and diuerse proper feats of armes were put in practise betwixt the parties (as in the historie of Scotland more at large it doth appeare) where we speake of the doings in the yeares 1557 and 1558.

The mariage of the quéne of Scots with the Dolphin.

The quæne Dowager of Scotland doth what she can to procure war against England.

¶ A prest was granted to the quæne by the citizens of London, of twentie thousand pounds, which was leuied of the companies: for the which summe to be paied againe, the quæne bound certeine lands, & also allowed for interest of the monie twelue pounds of euerie hundred for a yeare. Also this yeare within a mile of Nottingham, was a maruellous tempest of thunder, which as it came through two townes, beat downe all the houses and churches, the bels were cast to the out side of the churchyards, and some webs of lead foure hundred fot into the field, writhen like a paire of gloues. The riuer of Trent running betweene the two townes, the water with the mud in the botome was carried a quarter of a mile, and cast against the trées, the trées were pulled vp by the roots and cast twelue score off. Also a child was taken forth of a mans hands two speares length hie, and carried a hundred fot off, and then let fall, wherewith his arme was broken, & so he died. Fiue or six men thereabout were slaine, and neither flesh nor skinne perished; there fell some hailestones that were fifteene inches about, &c. This yeare in haruest time the quartane agues continued in like maner, or more vehementlie, than they had done the last yeare past, where through died manie old people, and speciallie priests, so that a great number of parishes were vnserued, and no curats to be gotten: and much corne was lost in the field for lacke of workemen & labourers. Whereupon insued a great scarsitie; so that in the beginning of sir Thomas Leighs maioralitie, corne rose to fourteene shillings the quarter, and wood waxed scant in London, and was sold for thirteene and foureteene shillings the thousand of billets, and coles at ten pence the sacke, by reason of the great death and sicknesse the last summer for lacke of helpe and carriage.] ¶ And here before we passe the yeare 1558, it were a fowle ouersight, not to make mention of a memorable discourse touching the ladie Katharine late dutchesse of Suffolke, a personage of honor, and worthie of commemoration in chronicles for hir godlinesse to hir high praise: where manie a malefactor is recorded for their outragious wickednesse to their immortall shame. Concerning the said ladie therefore thus writeth maister Fox.

Abr. Fl. ex Ls pag. 1106. A prest to the quæne.

A wonderfull tempest of thunder wonderfull indeed.

A great death of old people through vehement quartane agues.

Ex Ioh. Foxi martyrologio. The old hatred of Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester against the dutchesse of Suffolke.

Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester, surmising the ladie Katharine baronesse of Willoughbie and Eresbie, and dutchesse Dowager of Suffolke, to be one of his ancient enimies, because he knew he had deserued no better of hir, deuised in the holie time of the first Lent in quæn Maries reigne, a holie practise of reuenge, first by touching hir in the person of hir husband maister Richard Bertie esquier, for whome he sent an attachment (hauing the great seale at his deuotion) to the shiriffe of Lincolnshire, with a speciall letter, commanding most strictlie the same shiriffe to attach the said Richard immediatlie, and without baile to bring him vp to London to his great lordship. Maister Bertie hir husband being cleare in conscience, and free from offense towards the quæne, could not coniecture anie cause of this strange processe, vnlesse it were some quarrell for religion, which he thought could not be so sore as the processe pretended.

Maister Richard Bertie husband to the dutchesse, attached by the bishop of winchester.

The shiriffe, notwithstanding the commandement, aduentured onelie to take the bond of maister Bertie, with two sureties in a thousand pounds for his appearance, to be made before the bishop on good fridaie following: at which daie maister Bertie appeared, the bishop then lieng at his house by saint Marie Oueries. Of whose presence when the bishop vnderstood by a gentleman of his chamber, in a great rage he came out of his gallerie into his dining chamber, where he found a preasse of suters, saieng he would not that daie heare anie: but came forth onelie to know of maister Bertie, how he being a subiect durst so arrogantlie set at light two former processes of the quænes. Maister Bertie answered, that albeit my lords words might seeme to the rest somewhat sharpe towards him, yet he conceiued great comfort of them. For whereas he before thought it extremitie to be attached, hauing vsed no obstinacie or contumacie: now he gathered of those words, that my lord ment not otherwise but to haue vsed some ordinarie processe; albeit indeed none came to his hands. Yea Marie, quoth the bishop, I haue sent you two subpœnas, to appeare immediatlie, and I am sure you receiued them: for I committed the trust of them to no worse man but to maister solicitor, and I shall make you an example to all Lincolnshire for your obstinacie. Maister Bertie denieng the receipt of anie, humblie prated his lordship to suspend his displesure and the punishment, till he had good triall thereof: and then (if it pleased him) to double the paine for the fault, if anie were. Well (quoth the bishop) I haue appointed my selfe this daie (according to the holinesse of the same) for deuotion, and I will not further trouble me with you: but I inioine you in a thousand pounds, not to depart without leaue, and to be here againe to morrow at seauen of the clocke.

Maister Bertie well obserued the houre, and no iot failed. At the which time the bishop had with him maister sergeant Stamford, to whome he moued certeine questions of the said maister Bertie, because maister sergeant was towards the lord Wriothesleie late earle of Southampton, & chancellor of England, with whom the said maister Bertie was brought vp. Maister sergeant made verie friendlie report of maister Bertie of his owne knowledge for the time of their conuersation togither. Whereupon the bishop caused maister Bertie to be brought in; and first making a false traine (as God would, without fire) before he would descend to the quarrell of religion, he assaulted him in this maner. The quænes pleasure is (quoth the bishop) that you shall make present paiment of foure thousand pounds due to hir father by duke Charles, late husband to the dutchesse your wife, whose executor she was. Pleaseth it your lordship (quoth maister Bertie) that debt is estalled, and is according to that estallment truelie answered. Tush (quoth the bishop) the quæne will not be bound Maister Bertie appeareth before bishop Gardiner.

Talke betweene bishop Gardiner and maister Bertie.

The deuotion of bishop Gardiner to good fridaie.

Maister Bertie attached for debt of foure thousand pounds due to the quæne.

to

Ket captein of the rebels in Norfolke in king Edwards time.

to eſtallments, in the time of Kets gouernment, for ſo I eſteeme the late gouernment. The eſtallment (quoth maiſter Bertie) was appointed by king Henrie the eight; beſides, the ſame was by ſpeciall commiſſioners confirmed in king Edwards time, and the lord treaſuror being an executor alſo to the duke Charles ſolie and wholie, toke vpon him before the ſaid commiſſioners to diſcharge the ſame.

If it be true that you ſaie (quoth the biſhop) I will ſhew you fauor. But of an other thing maiſter Bertie, I will admoniſh you as mening you well. I heare euill of your religion; yet I hardlie can think euill of you, whoſe mother I know to be as godlie and catholike, as anie within this land, your ſelfe brought vp with a maiſter, whoſe education if I ſhould diſallow, I might be charged as author of his error. Beſides partlie I know you my ſelfe, and vnderſtand of my friends inough to make me your friend: wherfore I will not doubt of you, but I praie you if I maie aſke the queſtion of my ladie your wife; is ſhe now as readie to ſet vp the maſſe, as ſhe was latelie to pull it downe, when ſhe cauſed in hir progreſſe, a dog in a rochet to be caried & called by my name? Or doth ſhe thinke hir lambs now ſafe inough, which ſaid to me when I vailed my bonnet to hir out of my chamber window in the tower, that it was merie with the lambs now the woolfe was ſhut vp? Another time my lord hir husband hauing inuited me and diuerſe ladies to dinner, deſired euerie ladie to chooſe him whome ſhe loued beſt, and ſo place themſelues. My ladie your wife taking me by the hand, for that my lord would not haue hir to take himſelfe, ſaid, that for ſo much as ſhe could not ſit downe with my lord whome ſhe loued beſt, ſhe had choſen me whome ſhe loued worſt.

A dog clothed in a rochet vnder the name of biſhop Gardiner.

It is merie with lambs when wolues be tied.

Of the deuiſe of the dog, quoth maiſter Bertie, ſhe was neither the author nor the allower. The words, though in that ſeaſon they ſounded bitter to your lordſhip: yet if it ſhould pleaſe you without offenſe to know the cauſe, I am ſure the one will purge the other. As touching ſetting vp of maſſe, which ſhe learned not onelie by ſtrong perſuaſions of diuerſe excellent learned men, but by vniuerſall conſent and order whole ſix yeares paſt inwardlie to abhorre; if ſhe ſhould outwardlie allow, ſhe ſhould both to Chriſt ſhew hir ſelfe a falſe chriſtian, and vnto hir prince a maſking ſubiect. You know my lord, one by iudgement reformed, is more worth than a thouſand tranſformed temporizors. To force a confeſſion of religion by mouth, contrarie to that in the heart, worketh damnation where ſaluation is pretended. Yea marie (quoth the biſhop) that deliberation would do well if ſhe neuer required to come from an old religion to a new. But now ſhe is to returne from a new to an ancient religion: wherein when ſhe made me hir goſſip, ſhe was as earneſt as anie.

Purgation of the ladie ducheſſe for not comming to maſſe.

For that, my lord (ſaid M. Bertie) not long ſince, ſhe anſwered a friend of hirs vſing your lordſhips ſpeech, that religion went not by age but by truth: and therefore ſhe was to be turned by perſuaſion and not by commandement. I praie you (quoth the biſhop) thinke you it poſſible to perſuade hir? Yea verelie (ſaid maiſter Bertie) with the truth: for ſhe is reaſonable inough. The biſhop therevnto replieng, ſaid: It will be a maruellous griefe to the prince of Spaine, and to all the nobilitie that ſhall come with him, when they ſhall find but two noble perſonages of the Spaniſh race within this land, the queene, and my ladie your wife, and one of them gone from the faith. Maiſter Bertie anſwered, that he truſted they ſhould find no fruits of infidelitie in hir. So the biſhop perſuading maiſter Bertie to trauell earneſtlie for the reformation of hir opinion, and offering large friendſhip, releaſed him of his band from further appearance.

Religion goeth not by age, but by truth.

Maiſter Bertie releaſed from his band of appearing.

The duchеſſe and hir huſband, daſtie more and more, by their friends vnderſtanding that the biſhop meant to call hir to an account of hir faith, whereby extreamitie might follow, deuiſed waies how by the queenes licence they might paſſe the ſeas. Maiſter Bertie had a redie meane: for there reſted great ſummes of monie due to the old duke of Suffolke (one of whoſe executors the duchеſſe was) beyond the ſeas, the emperour himſelfe being one of thoſe debtors. Maiſter Bertie communicated this his purpoſed ſute for licence to paſſe the ſeas, and the cauſe, to the biſhop; adding, that he toke this time moſt meet to deale with the emperour, by reaſon of likelihood of marriage betweene the queene and his ſonne. I like your deuiſe well (quoth the biſhop) but I thinke it better, that you tarrie the princes comming, and I will procure you his letters alſo to his father. Naie (quoth maiſter Bertie) vnder your lordſhips correction & pardon of ſo liberall ſpeech, I ſuppoſe the time will then be leſſe conuenient: for when the marriage is conſummate, the emperour hath his deſire: but till then he will refuſe nothing to win credit with vs.

Waies practiſed how to conuеie the duchеſſe ouer the ſeas with the queenes licence.

Maiſter Bertie deuiſeth cauſes to paſſe ouer into Flanders.

By ſaint Marie (quoth the biſhop, ſmiling) you geſſe ſhrewdlie. Well, proceed in your ſute vnto the queene, and it ſhall not lacke my helping hand. Maiſter Bertie found ſo good ſucceſſe, that he in few daies obteined the queenes licence, not onlie to paſſe the ſeas, but to paſſe and repaſſe them ſo often as to him ſeemed good, till he had finiſhed all his buſineſſe and cauſes beyond the ſeas. So he paſſed the ſeas at Douer about the beginning of June in the firſt yeare of hir reigne, leauing the duchеſſe behind, who by agreement and conſent betwixt hir and hir huſband, followed, taking barge at Lion kete, verie earlie in the morning, on the firſt daie of Januarie next inſuing, not without ſome perill. There was none of thoſe that went with hir, made priuie to hir going till the inſtant, but an old gentleman called maiſter Robert Cranwell, whome maiſter Bertie had ſpeciallie prouided for that purpoſe. She toke with hir hir daughter an infant of one yeare, and the meaneſt of hir ſeruants: for ſhe doubted the beſt would not aduenture that fortune with hir. They were in number foure men, one a Greeke borne, which was a rider of horſſes, an other a ioiner, the third a brewer, the fourth a fole one of the kitchin, one gentlewoman, and a landreſſe.

Maiſter Bertie licenced by the queene to paſſe the ſeas.

Preparation made how to conuеie the duchеſſe ouer the ſeas.

M. Cranwell a truſtie friend to maiſter Bertie.

As ſhe departed hir houſe called the Barbican, betwixt foure and fiue of the clocke in the morning, with hir companie and baggage, one Atkinſon an herald, keeper of hir houſe, bearing noiſe about the houſe, roſe and came forth with a torch in his hand as ſhe was yet iſſuing out of the gate: wherewith being amazed, ſhe was forced to leaue a male with neceſſaries for hir yong daughter, & a milkepot with milke in the ſame gatehouſe, commanding all hir ſeruants to ſpeed them before awaie to Lion keie: and taking with hir onelie the two women and hir child, ſo ſoone as ſhe was out of hir owne houſe, perceiuing the herald to follow, ſhe ſlept in at Garterhouſe hard by. The herald comming out of the duchеſſe houſe, and ſeeing no bodie ſtirring, not aſſured (though by the male ſuſpecting) that ſhe was departed, returned in: and while he ſtaied ranſacking parcels left in the male, the duchеſſe iſſued into the ſtreet, and proceeded in hir iournie, he knowing the place onelie by name where ſhe ſhould take hir boat, but not the waie thither, nor none with hir. Likewiſe hir ſeruants hauing diuided themſelues, none but one knew the waie to the ſaid keie.

The duchеſſe with hir companie departed the realme.

The maner of the duchеſſe flieng out of hir houſe.

So ſhe apparelled like a meane merchants wife, and the reſt like meane ſeruants, walking in the ſtreets vnknown, ſhe toke the way that led to Finſ-

burie

burie field, and the others walked the citie streets as they laie open before them, till by chance more than discretion, they met all suddenlie together a little within More gate, from whence they passed directlie to Lion keie, and there toke barge in a morning so mistie, that the stearesman was loth to lanch out, but that they urged him. So sone as the daie permitted, the councell was informed of hir departure, and some of them came forthwith to hir house to inquire of the maner thereof, and toke an inuentarie of hir goods, besides further order deuised for search and watch to apprehend and staie hir. The fame of hir departure reached to Leigh, a towne at the lands end, before hir approching thither. By Leigh dwelt one Gosling a merchant of London, an old acquaintance of Cranwels, whither the said Cranwell brought the duchesse, naming hir mistresse White, the daughter of master Gosling, for such a daughter he had which neuer was in that countrie. There she reposed hir, and made new garments for hir daughter, hauing lost hir owne in the male at Barbican.

When the time came that she should take ship, being constreind that night to lie at an inne in Leigh (where she was againe almost bewraied) yet notwithstanding by Gods good working she escaping that hazzard, at length as the tide and wind did serue, they went aboord, and being carried twise into the seas, almost into the coast of Zeland, by contrarie wind were driuen to the place from whence they came. And at the last recule, certeine persons came to the shore, suspecting she was within that ship: yet hauing examined one of hir companie that was one land for fresh Achates, and finding by the simplicitie of his tale, onelie the appearance of a meane merchants wife to be a shipboord, he ceased anie further search. To be short, so sone as the duchesse had landed in Brabant, she and hir women were apparelled like the women of Netherland with hukes, and so she and hir husband toke their iournie towards Cleueland, and being arriued at a towne therin called Santon, toke a house there, vntill they might further deuise of some sure place where to settle themselues.

About fiue miles from Santon is a free towne called Wesell, vnder the said duke of Cleues dominion, and one of the Hauns townes, priuileged with the companie of the Stilliard in London, whither diuerse Wallons were fled for religion, and had for their minister one Francis Perusell, then called Francis de Riuers, who had receiued some courtesie in England at the duchesse hands. Master Bertie being yet at Santon, practised with him to obteine a protection from the magistrats for his abode and his wiues at Wesell: which was the soner procured bicause the state of the duchesse was not discouered but onelie to the cheefe magistrate, earnestlie bent to shew them pleasure, whilest this protection was in seeking.

In the meane while, at the towne of Santon was a muttering, that the duchesse and hir husband were greater personages than they gaue themselues forth, and the magistrats not verie well inclined to religion; the bishop of Arras also being deane of the great minster, order was taken, that the duches and hir husband should be examined of their condition and religion vpon the sudden. Which practise discouered by a gentleman of that countrie to master Bertie, he without delaie taking no more than the duches hir daughter, and two other with them, as though he meant no more but to take the aire, about three of the clocke in the afternoone in Februarie, on foot, without hiering of horsse or wagon for feare of disclosing his purpose, meant priuilie that night to get to Wesell, leauing his other familie still at Santon.

After the duches and he were one English mile from the towne, there fell a mightie raine of continuance, whereby a long frost and ise before congealed was thawed, which doubled more the wearinesse of those new lackies. But being now on the waie, and ouertaken with the night, they sent their two seruants (which onelie went with them) to villages, as they passed, to hire some car for their ease: but none could be hired. In the mene time master Bertie was forced to carrie the child, and the duches his cloke and rapier. At last betwixt six and seauen of the clocke in the darke night, they came to Wesell, and repairing to their innes for lodging and some repose after such a painfull iournie, found hard interteinment: for going from inne to inne, offering large monie for small lodging, they were refused of all the inholders, suspecting master Bertie to be a lanceknight, and the duches to be his woman. The child for cold and sustenance cried pittifullie, the mother wept as fast, and the heauens rained as fast as the clouds could powre.

Master Bertie destitute of all other succor of hospitalitie, resolued to bring the duchesse to the porch of the great church in the towne, and so to buie coles, victuals and straw for their miserable repose there that night, or at least till by Gods helpe he might prouide hir better lodging. Master Bertie at that time vnderstood not much Dutch, and by reason of euill weather and late season of the night, he could not happen vpon anie that could speake English, French, Italian, or Latine; till at last going towards the church porch, he heard two striplings talking Latine, to whome he approched and offered them two stiuers to bring him to some Wallons house. By these boies, and Gods good conduct, he chanced at the first vpon the house where master Perusell supped that night, who had procured them the protection of the magistrats of that towne. At the first knocke, the goodman of the house himselfe came to the doore, and opening it, asked master Bertie what he was. Master Bertie said, an Englishman, that sought for one master Perusels house. The Wallon willed master Bertie to staie a while, who went backe and told master Perusell that the same English gentleman, of whome they had talked the same supper, had sent, by likelihood his seruant to speake with him. Whereupon master Perusell came to the doore, and beholding master Bertie, the duchesse, & their child, their faces, apparels, and bodies so farre from their old forme, deformed with durt, weather, and heauinesse, could not speake to them, nor they to him for teares. At length recouering themselues, they saluted one another, & so togither entered the house, God knoweth full toilfullie: master Bertie changing of his apparell with the goodman, the duchesse with the good wife, and their child with the child of the house.

Within few daies after, by master Perusels means, they hired a verie faire house in the towne, and did not let to shew themselues what they were, in such good sort as their present condition permitted. It was by this time through the whole towne what discourtesie the inholders had shewed vnto them at their entrie, in so much as on the sundaie following, a preacher in the pulpit openlie in sharpe termes rebuked that great inciuilitie towards strangers; by allegation of sundrie places out of holie scriptures, discoursing how not onelie princes sometime are receiued in the image of priuat persons, but angels in the shape of men, and that God of his iustice would make the strangers one day in an other land, to haue more sense of the afflicted heart of a stranger. The time was passing forth, as they thought themselues thus happilie setled, suddenlie a watchword came from sir John Mason, then quéene Maries ambassadour in Netherland, that my lord Paget had fained

The duchesse with hir companie taketh barge.

Pursute after the duchesse.

The duchesse retained in M. Gollings house by Leigh, vnder the name of his daughter.

The hard aduenture of the duchesse vpon the seas.

The duchesse landed in Brabant.

M. Bertie with the duchesse his wife retired at Santon.

The free towne of Wesell in Cleueland.

A protection procured for the duchesse, & the magistrates of Wesell.

M. Bertie & the duchesse in danger of taking by the bishop of Arras at Santō.

Another escape of the duchesse and hir husband.

The hard distresse of the duchesse by euill wether.

The hard interteinment of M. Bertie & the duchesse at their entring into Wesell.

Gods prouidence in time of distresse.

The meeting of M. Perusell & the duchesse at Wesell.

The citizens of Wesell admonished by their preacher of their hartnesse toward strangers.

A frendlie part of sir John Mason towards the duchesse.

I traine laid for ỹ dutches by the lord Paget and the duke of Brunswicke.

an errant to the baths that waies: and whereas the duke of Brunswicke was shortlie with ten ensignes to passe by Wesell for the seruice of the house of Austricke against the French king, the said duchesse, and hir husband should be with the same charge and companie intercepted. Wherefore to preuent the crueltie of these enimies, master Bertie with his wife and child departed to a place called Winheim in high Dutchland vnder the Palsgraues dominion, where vnder his protection they continued till their necessaries began to faile them, and they almost fainting vnder so heauis a burthen, began to faile of hope.

M. Bertie & the dutchesse remoue to Winheim vnder the Palsgraue.

At what time, in the middest of their despaire, there came suddenlie letters to them from the Palatine of Vilua and the king of Pole, being instructed of their hard estate by a baron named Ioannes Alasco, that was somtime in England, offring them large curtesie. This purraison vnlooked for greatlie reuiued their heauie spirits. Yet considering they should remoue from manie their countriemen and acquaintance, to a place so farre distant, a countrie not haunted with the English, and perhaps vpon their arriuall not finding as they looked for, the end of their iornie should be worse than the beginning: they deuised thereupon with one maister Barlow, late bishop of Chichester, that if he would vouchsafe to take some paines therin, they would make him a fellow of that iournie. So finding him prone, they sent with him letters of great thanks to the king & Palatine, and also with a few principall iewels (which onlie they had left of manie) to solicit for them, that the king would vouchsafe vnder his seale, to assure them of the thing which he so honourablie by letters offered.

The helping hand of the Lord againe in their necessitie.

Ioan. Alasco a meanes to the king of Pole for the duchesse of Suffolke.

The dutchesse inuited into Poleland by the kings letters.

M. Barlow a messenger from the dutchesse to the king of Pole.

That suit by the forwardnes of the Palatine was as soone granted as vttered. Vpon which assurance the said dutchesse and hir husband, with their familie, entred the iournie in Aprill 1557, from the castell of Winheim, where they before laie, towards Francfort. In the which their iournie, it were long here to describe what dangers fell by the waie vpon them, & their whole companie, by reason of the Lantgraues capteines, who vnder a quarrell pretensed for a spaniell of maister Berties, set vpon them in the high waie, with his horsemen, thrusting their borespears through the wagon where the children and women were, maister Bertie hauing but foure horsemen with him. In the which brabble it happened the capteins horsse to be slaine vnder him.

The Palatine of Vilua a great friend of the dutches.

The dutches taketh hir iournie toward Pole.

The troubles happening to the dutches in hir iournie to Poleland.

Whereupon a rumor was sparsed immediatlie through townes and villages about, that the Lantgraues capteine should be slaine by some Wallons, which incensed the ire of the countriemen there more fiercelie against maister Bertie, as afterwards it proued. For as he was motioned by his wife to saue himselfe by the swiftnes of his horsse, and to recouer some towne thereby for his rescue, he so doing was in worse case than before: for the townesmen and the capteines brother supposing no lesse but that the capteine had beene slaine, pressed so egerlie vpon him, that he had beene there taken and murthered among them, had not he (as God would) spieng a ladder leaning to a window, by the same got vp into the house, and so gone vp in to a garret in the top of the house, where he with his dag and rapier defended himselfe for a space: but at length the Burghmaister comming thither with another magistrate, which could speake Latine, he was counselled to submit himselfe vnto the order of the law. Maister Bertie knowing himselfe cleere, and the capteine to be aliue, was the more bolder to submit himselfe to the iudgement of the law, vpon condition that the magistrate would receiue him vnder safe conduct, and defend him from the rage of the multitude. Which being promised, maister Bertie putteth himselfe and his weapon in the magistrates hand, and so was committed to safe custodie, while the truth of his cause should be tried. Then maister Bertie writing his letters to the Lantgraue and to the earle of Erbagh, the next daie erlie in the morning the earle of Erbagh dwelling within eight miles, came to the towne whither the dutchesse was brought with hir wagon, maister Bertie also being in the same towne vnder custodie.

M. Bertie in great danger of his life.

The earle, who had some intelligence of the dutches before, after he was come, & had shewed such courtesie as he thought to hir estate was seemelie, the townesmen perceiuing the earle to behaue himselfe so humblie vnto hir, began to consider more of the matter: and further vnderstanding the capteine to be aliue, both they, and especallie the authors of the stir shrunke awaie, and made all the friends they could to maister Bertie and his wife, not to report their doings after the worst sort. And thus maister Bertie and his wife escaping that danger, proceeded in their iournie toward Poleland, where in conclusion they were quietlie interteined of the king, and placed honorablie in the earledome of the said king of Poles in Sanogelia, called Crozan, where maister Bertie with the dutchesse hauing the kings absolute power of gouernment ouer the said earldome, continued both in great quietnesse and honor, till the death of quæne Marie.] Whose troublesome time (sauoring altogither of bloudshed & mercilesse murthering of Gods saints, wherof the poet saith full trulie,

M. Bertie with the dutchesse honorablie interteined of the K. of Pole.

——— tellus madefacta cruore
Christicolûm regerit decursus sanguinis atros,
Heu carnem mollem puerorum deuorat ignis,
Fœmina másque perit, nulla ratione virilis Fœminei aut sexus habita)

being expired, and the peaceable reigne of gratious quæne Elizabeth established, the said dutchesse and hir husband returned into England, where they liued in libertie both of bodie and mind; in which good state we will leaue them. And bicause we are entred into a discourse of troubles happening to personages of good account and name; it is necessarie that wee adde another narration of like argument vnto the former, concerning the troubles and happie deliuerance of the reuerend father in God doctor Sands, first bishop of Worcester, next of London, and now archbishop of Yorke, as I find it word for word in maister Fox, who beginneth and continueth the said discourse as followeth.

¶ King Edward died, the world being vnworthie of him, the duke of Northumberland came downe to Cambridge with an armie of men, hauing commission to proclame ladie Jane quæne, and by power to suppresse ladie Marie, who toke vpon hir that dignitie, and was proclamed quæne in Norfolke. The duke sent for doctor Sands being vicechancellor, for doctor Parker, for doctor Bill, and maister Leauer, to sup with him. Amongst other speeches he said; Maisters, praie for vs that we speed well: if not, you shall be made bishops, and we deacons. And euen so it came to passe: doctor Parker, and doctor Sands were made bishops, and he and sir John Gates, who was then at the table, were made deacons yer it was long after on the tower hill. Doctor Sands being vicechancellor, was required to preach on the morrow. The warning was short for such an auditorie, and to speake of such a matter: yet he refused not the thing, but went to his chamber, and so to bed. He rose at three of the clocke in the morning, toke his bible in his hand, and after that he had praied a good space, he shut his eies, and holding his bible before him, earnestlie praied to God that it might fall open where a most fit text should be for him to intreat of. The bible (as God would haue it) fell open vpon the first chapter of Iosua, where he found so conuenient Abr. Fl. ex I. Fox martyrologio. D. Sands vicechancellor when the duke of Northumberland came down to Cambridge to proclame the ladie Jane quæne.

ent a péce of scripture for that time, that the like he could not haue chosen in all the bible. His text was thus: Responderúntque ad Iosue, atque dixerunt, Omnia quæ præcepisti nobis faciemus, & quocunque miseris ibimus: sicut obediuimus in cunctis Mosi ita obediemus & tibi, tantùm sit Dominus Deus tuus tecum sicut fuit cum Mose, qui contradixerit ori tuo, & non obedierit cunctis sermonibus quos præceperis ei, moriatur: tu tantùm confortare & viriliter age. Who shall consider what was concluded by such as named themselues by the state, and withall, the auditorie, the time, and other circumstances, he shall easilie sée that this text most fitlie serued for the purpose. And as God gaue the text, so gaue he him such order and vtterance, as pulled manie teares out of the eies of the biggest of them.

The text of D. Sands whereupon he made his sermon.

In the time of his sermon one of the gard lift vp to him into the pulpit a masse booke and a graile, which sir George Howard with certeine of the gard had taken that night in maister Hurlestons house, where ladie Marie had béene a little before, & there had masse. The duke with the rest of the nobilitie required doctor Sands to put his sermon in writing; and appointed maister Leauer to go to London with it, and to put it in print. Doctor Sands required one daie and a halfe for writing of it. At the time appointed he had made it readie, and maister Leauer was readie bowted to receiue it at his hands, & carie it to London. As he was deliuering of it, one of the bedels named maister Adams, came wéeping to him, & praied him to shift for himselfe, for the duke was retired, and quéene Marie proclamed.

The duke & nobles desire D. Sands to write his sermon that it might be printed.

Doctor Sands was not troubled herewithall, but gaue the sermon written to maister Leifield; maister Leauer departed home, and he went to dinner to one maister Powes a bedell, his great friend. At the dinner, mistresse Powe séeing him merrie and pleasant (for he had euer a mans courage, and could not be terrified) dranke vnto him, saieng: Maister vicechancellor, I drinke vnto you, for this is the last time that euer I shall sée you. And so it was, for shée was dead before doctor Sands returned out of Germanie. The duke that night retired to Cambridge, and sent for doctor Sands to go with him to the market place to proclame quéene Marie. The duke cast vp his cap with others, and so laughed, that the teares ran downe his chéekes for greefe. He told doctor Sands that quéene Marie was a mercifull woman, and that he doubted not thereof: declaring, that shée had sent vnto hir to know hir pleasure, and loked for a generall pardon. Doctor Sands answered; My life is not deare vnto me, neither haue I done or said anie thing that vrgeth my conscience. For that which I spake of the state, I haue instructions warranted by the subscription of sixténe councellors. Neither can speach be treason, neither yet haue I spoken further than the word of God, and lawes of this realme doth warrant me, come of me what God will. But be you assured, you shall neuer escape death: for if shée would saue you, those that now shall rule will kill you.

Mistresse Powe spake truer than peradventure she thought.

D. Sands words to the duke touching his owne sermon and the dukes action.

That night the gard apprehended the duke, and certeine groomes of the stable were as busie with doctor Sands, as if they would take a prisoner. But sir John Gates who laie then in doctor Sands his house, sharplie rebuked them, and draue them awaie. Doctor Sands, by the aduise of sir John Gates, walked into the fields. In the meane time the vniuersitie (contrarie to all order) had met togither in consultation, and ordered that doctor Mouse and doctor Hatcher should repaire to doctor Sands lodging, and fet awaie the statute booke of the vniuersitie, the keies, and such other things that were in his kéeping, and so they did. For doctor Mouse being an earnest protestant the daie before, and one whome doctor Sands had done much for, now was he become a papist, and his great enimie.

Bail intended against doctor Sands.

Certeine of the vniuersitie had appointed a congregation at afternoone. As the bell rang to it, doctor Sands commeth out of the fields, and sending for the bedels, asketh what the matter meaneth, and requireth them to wait vpon him to the schooles, according to their dutie. So they did. And so soone as doctor Sands, the bedels going before him, came into the regent house and toke his chaire; one maister Pitch with a rabble of vnlearned papists went into a by-schoole, and conspired togither to pull him out of his chaire, and to vse violence vnto him. Doctor Sands began his oration, expostulating with the vniuersitie, charging them with great ingratitude, declaring that he had said nothing in his sermon, but that hée was readie to iustifie, and that there case was all one with his: for they had not onelie concealed, but consented to that which he had spoken.

A conspiracie of papists against doctor Sands, and their behauior towards him.

And thus while he remembred vnto them how beneficiall he had béene to the vniuersitie, and their vnthankfulnesse to him againe, in commeth maister Pitch with his conspirators about twentie in number. One laieth hand vpon the chaire to pull it from him, another told him that that was not his place, and another called him traitor. Whereat he perceiuing how they vsed violence, and being of great courage, groped to his dagger, and had dispatched some of them as Gods enimies; if doctor Bill and doctor Blith had not fallen vpon him, and praied him for Gods sake to hold his hands and be quiet, and patientlie to beare that great offered wrong. He was persuaded by them, and after that tumult was ceased, he ended his oration, and hauing some monie of the vniuersities in his hands, he there deliuered the same euerie farthing. He gaue vp the books, reckonings & keies perteining to the vniuersitie, & withall yelded vp his office, praieng God to giue to the vniuersitie a better officer, and to giue them better and more thankfull hearts, and so repaired home to his owne college.

D. Sands couragious heart and manhood.

D. Sands resigneth vp his office of vicechancellorship

On the morrow after, there came vnto him one maister Gerningham, and one maister Thomas Mildmaie. Gerningham told him, that it was the quéens pleasure that two of the gard should attend on him, and that he must be carted prisoner to the tower of London with the duke. Maister Mildmaie said he marueled that a learned man would speake so vnaduisedlie against so good a prince, and wilfullie run into such danger. Doctor Sands answered, I shall not be ashamed of bonds. But if I could do as maister Mildmaie can, I needed not feare bonds: for he came downe in paiment against quéene Marie, and armed in the field, and now he returneth in paiment for quéene Marie: before a traitor and now a great friend. I can not with one mouth blow hot and cold after this sort.

Maister Mildmaies trecherie noted by doctor Sands to his obloquie

Upon this, his stable was robbed of foure notable good geldings, the best of them maister Hurlestone toke for his owne saddle, and rode on him to London in his sight. An inuentarie was taken of all his goods by maister Pore bedell for the vniuersitie. Hée was set vpon a lame horse that halted to the ground, which thing a friend of his perceiuing, praied that he might lend him a nag. The yeoman of the gard were content. As he departed out of the townes end, some papists resorted thither to géere at him, some of his friends to mourne for him. He came into the ranke to London, the people being full of outcries. And as he came in at Bishops gate, one like a milkewise hurled a stone at him, and hit him on the breast with such a blow, that he was like to fall off his horsse. To whome he mildlie said: Woman, God forgiue it thée. Truth it is, that iourneieng & euill intreating so mortified him, that he was more readie to die than to liue.

The miusage of certeine drabs against doctor Sands as he was brought prisoner to the tower.

As he came through tower hill street, one woman standing in hir doore, cried: Fie on thée thou knaue, thou knaue, thou traitor, thou heretike. Whereat hée smiled. Loke; the desperat heretike (saith she) laugheth at this geare. A woman on the other side of the street answered, saieng: Fie on thée neighbour, thou art not worthie to be called a woman, railing vpon this gentleman whom thou knowest not, neither yet the cause whie he is thus intreated. Then shée said, God gentleman, God be thy comfort, and giue thee strength to stand in Gods cause euen to the end. And thus he passed through fire and water into the tower, the first prisoner that entered in that daie, which was saint Iames daie. The yeoman of the gard toke from him his borowed nag, and what else soeuer hée had. His man one Quintin Swainton brought after him a bible, and some shirts, and such like things. The bible was sent in to him, but the shirts and such like serued the yeoman of the gard.

The gard ofter him towle wrong.

After he had béene in the tower three weekes in a bad prison, he was lift vp into Nunnes bower, a better prison, where was put to him master John Bradford. At the daie of quéene Maries coronation, their prison doore was set open, euer shut before. One master Michell his old acquaintance, who had béene prisoner before in the same place, came in to him and said: Master Sands, there is such a stur in the tower, that neither gates, doores, nor prisoners are loked to this daie. Take my cloake, my hat and my rapier, and get you gone; you maie go out of the gates without questioning; saue your selfe, and let me dow as I maie. A rare friendship: but he refused the offer, saieng: I know no iust cause why I should be in prison. And thus to dow were to make my selfe guiltie, I will expect Gods good will, yet must I thinke my selfe most bound vnto you: and so master Michell departed.

Master Michels counsell to D. Sands to make an escape.

While doctor Sands and master Bradford were thus in close prison togither nine and twentie weeks, one John Bowler was their keeper, a verie peruerse papist, yet by often persuading of him, for he would giue eare, and by the gentle vsing of him, at length he began to mislike poperie, and to fauour the gospell, and so persuaded in true religion, that on a sundaie when they had masse in the chappell, he bringeth vp a seruice booke, a manchet and a glasse of wine, and there doctor Sands ministred the communion to Bradford and to Bowler. Thus Bowler was their sonne begotten in bonds when Wiat was in armes, & the old duke of Norfolke sent forth with a power of men to apprehend him, that rome might be made in the tower for him and other his complices. Doctor Cranmer, doctor Ridleie, and master Bradford were cast into one prison, & doctor Sands with nine other preachers were sent into the Marshalsea.

Bowler of a peruerse papist becometh reformed in true religion.

D. Sands remoued to the Marshalsea.

The keeper of the Marshalsea appointed to euerie preacher a man to lead him in the street, he caused them go farre before, and he and doctor Sands came behind, whome he would not lead, but walked familiarlie with him. Yet doctor Sands was knowne, and the people euerie where praied to God to comfort him, & to strengthen him in the truth. By that time the peoples minds were altered, poperie began to be vnsauerie. After they passed the bridge, the keeper Thomas Waie said to doctor Sands: I perceiue the vaine people would set you forward to the fire, you are as vaine as they, if you being a yong man will stand in your own conceit, & prefer your own knowledge before the iudgement of so manie worthie prelats, ancient, learned, and graue men, as be in this relme. If you so dow, you shal find me as strict a keeper as one that vtterlie misliketh your religion. Doctor Sands answered; I know my yeares yong, and my learning small, it is inough to know Christ crucified, and he hath learned nothing that seeth not the great blasphemie that is in poperie, I will yéeld vnto God and not vnto man: I haue read in the scriptures of manie godlie and courteous keepers, God may make you one; if not, I trust he will giue me strength and patience to beare your hard dealing with me. Saith Thomas Waie; Dow you then mind to stand to your religion? Yea saith doctor Sands, by Gods grace. Trulie saith the keeper, I loue you the better, I did but tempt you. What fauor I can shew you, you shall be sure of, and I shall thinke my selfe happie if I may die at the stake with you. The said keeper shewed doctor Sands euer after all friendship: he trusted him to go into the fields alone, and there met with maister Bradford, who then was remoued into the Bench, and there found like fauor of his keeper. He laid him in the best chamber in the house: he would not suffer the knight marshals men to late fetters on him, as others had. And at his request, he put maister Sands in to him, to be his bedfellow, and sundrie times suffered his wife, who was maister Sands daughter of Essex, a gentlewoman, beautifull both in bodie & soule to resort to him. There was great resort vnto doctor Sands, and maister Sanders: they had much monie offered them, but they would receiue none. They had the communion there three or foure times, and a great sort of communicants. Doctor Sands gaue such exhortation to the people, for at that time being yong, he was thought verie eloquent, that he moued manie tears and made the people abhorre the masse, and defie all poperie.

The frendship that doctor Sands found at his keepers hands.

When Wiat with his armie came into Southwarke, he sent two gentlemen into the Marshalsea to doctor Sands: saieng, that maister Wiat would be glad of his compants and aduise, & that the gates should be set open for all the prisoners. He answered: Tell maister Wiat, if this his rising be of God it will take place: if not, it will fall. For my part I was committed hither by order, I will be discharged by like order, or I will neuer depart hence. So answered maister Sanders, and the rest of the preachers being there prisoners. After that doctor Sands had béene nine weekes prisoner in the Marshalsea, by the mediation of sir Thomas Holcroft then knight marshall he was set at libertie. Sir Thomas sued earnestlie to the bishop of Winchester, doctor Gardiner for his deliuerance after manie repulses, except doctor Sands would be one of their sect, and then he could want nothing. He wrong out of him, that if the quæne could like of his deliuerance, he would not be against it: for that was sir Thomas his last request. In the meane time he had procured two ladies of the priuie chamber to moue the quéene in it: who was contented, if the bishop of Winchester could like of it. The next time that the bishop went into the priuie chamber to speake with the quéene, maister Holcroft followed, and had his warrant for doctor Sands remission readie, and praied the two ladies, when as the bishop should take his leaue, to put the quéene in mind of doctor Sands. So they did. And the quæne said: Winchester, what thinke you by doctor Sands, is he not sufficientlie punished? As it please your maiestie, saith Winchester. That he spake, remembring his former promise to maister Holcroft, that he would not be against Sands, if the quéene should like to discharge him. Saith the quéene: Then trulie, we would that he were set at libertie. Immediatlie maister Holcroft offered the quéene the warrant, who subscribed the same, and called Winchester to put to his hand, and so he did. The warrant was giuen to the knight

Wiats message to doctor Sands, and his answer reuersed.

Doctor Sands set at libertie by the meanes of sir Thomas Holcroft.

How quéene Marie is disposed to set doctor Sands at large, and sealeth hir warrant for his libertie.

Thomas Waie the keeper pretendeth to persuade doctor Sands to poperie.

knight marshall againe, sir Thomas Holcroft. As the bishop went forth of the priuie chamber dore, he called maister Holcroft to him: commanding him not to set doctor Sands at libertie, vntill he had taken suerties of two gentlemen of his countrie with him, euerie one bound in fiue hundred pounds, that doctor Sands should not depart out of the realme without licence. Maister Holcroft immediatlie after met with two gentlemen of the north, friends & cosins to doctor Sands, who offered to be bound in bodie, goods and lands for him.

At after dinner the same daie, maister Holcroft sent for doctor Sands to his lodging at Westminster, requiring the keeper to accompanie with him. He came accordinglie, finding maister Holcroft alone, walking in his garden: maister Holcroft imparted his long sute, with the whole proceeding, and what effect it had taken to doctor Sands: much reioising that it was his good hap to do him good, & to procure his libertie, and that nothing remained, but that he would enter into bonds with his two suerties, for not departing out of the realme. Doctor Sands answered: I giue God thanks, who hath moued your hart to mind me so well, & I thinke my selfe most bound vnto you, God shall requite, and I shall neuer be found vnthankfull. But as you haue dealt friendlie with me, I will also deale plainlie with you. I came a free man into prison, I will not go forth a bondman. As I cannot benefit my friends, so will I not hurt them: and if I be set at libertie, I will not tarie fiue daies in this realme if I may get out. If therefore I may not go free forth, send me to the Marshalsea againe, and there you shall be sure of me.

Communication betweene sir Thomas Holcroft and doctor Sands about his departing out of England.

This answer much misliked maister Holcroft, who told doctor Sands that the time would not long continue, a change would shortlie come: the state was but a cloud, and would sone shake awaie; and that his cousine sir Edward Braie would gladlie receiue him and his wife into his house, where he should neuer need to come at church, and how the ladie Braie was a zealous gentlewoman, who hated poperie: adding that he would not so deale with him to lose all his labor. When doctor Sands could not be remoued from his former saieng, maister Holcroft said: Seeing you can not be altered, I will change my purpose, and yeeld vnto you, come of it what will, I will set you at libertie: and seeing you mind ouer sea, get you gone so quicklie as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you write nothing to come hither, for so ye may vndo me. He freendlie kissed doctor Sands, bad him farewell, and commanded the keeper to take no fees of him: saieng; Let me answer Winchester as I may. Doctor Sands returned with the keeper to the Marshalsea and taried all night. There on the morrow gaue a dinner to all the prisoners, bad his bedfellow and sworne stakefellow, if it had so pleased God, maister Saunders farewell, with manie teares and kissings, the one falling on the others necke, and so departed, clearelie deliuered without examination or bond. From thence he went to the Bench, and there talked with maister Bradford, and maister Farrar bishop of S. Dauids, then prisoners. Then he comforted them, & they praised God for his happie deliuerance. He went by Winchesters house, and there toke boate, and came to a freends house in London called William Banks, and taried there one night. On the morrow at night he shifted to an other freends house, and there he learned that search was made for him.

Sir Thomas Holcroft cannot persuade doctor Sands to tarie in England, and therefore setteth him at large.

Search made for doctor Sands after his inlargement.

Doctor Watson and maister Christopherson, comming to the bishop of Winchester, told him that he had set at libertie the greatest heretike in England, and one that had of all other most corrupted the vniuersitie of Cambridge, doctor Sands. Whereupon the bishop of Winchester, being chancellor of England, sent for all the constables of London, commanding them to watch for doctor Sands, who was then within the citie, and to apprehend him; and who so euer of them should take him and bring him to him, he should haue fiue pounds for his labor. Doctor Sands suspecting the matter, conueied himselfe by night to one maister Barties house a stranger, who was in the Marshalsea with him prisoner a while, he was a good protestant and dwelt in Marke lane. There he was sir daies, and had one or two of his frends that repaired to him. Then he repaired to an acquaintance of his, one Hurlestone a skinner, dwelling in Cornehill, he caused his man Quintin to prouide two geldings for him, minding on the morrow to ride into Essex to maister Sands his father in law, where his wife was.

Gardiners commandement to watch and ward for doctor Sands and to apprehend him, with a reward promised to the taker of him.

At his going to bed in Hurlestons house, he had a paire of hose newlie made that were too long for him. For while he was in the tower, a tailor was admitted him to make him a paire of hose. One came vnto him whose name was Beniamin, a good protestant, dwelling in Birchin lane: he might not speake to him, or come vnto him, to take measure of him, but onelie loke vpon his leg, he made the hose, and they were two inches too long. These hose he praied the good wife of the house to send to some tailor to cut his hose two inches shorter. The wife required the boy of the house to carie them to the next tailor to cut. The boy chanced (or rather God so prouided) to go to the next tailor, which was Beniamin that made them, which also was a constable, and acquainted with the lord chancellors commandement. The boy required him to cut the hose. He said I am not thy maisters tailor. Saith the boy, Because ye are our next neighbor, and my maisters tailor dwelleth far off, I come to you, for it is far nights, and he must occupie them timelie in the morning. Beniamin toke the hose and loked vpon them, he toke his handie worke in hand, and said: These are not thy maisters hose, but doctor Sands, them I made in the tower. The boy yeelded, and said it was so. Saith he, Go to thy mistresse, praie hir to sit vp till twelue of the clocke, then I will bring the hose and speake with doctor Sands to his good.

Note Gods prouidence in giuing a way to doctor Sands for his safe escaping out of danger.

At midnight the goodwife of the house, and Beniamin the tailor, commeth into doctor Sands chamber. The wife praieth him not to be afraid of their comming. He answereth: Nothing can be amisse, what God will, that shall be done. Then Beniamin telleth him that he made his hose, and by what good chance they now came to his hands, God vsed the meane that he might foretell him of his perill, & aduise him how to escape it, telling him that all the constables of London, whereof he was one, watched for him, & some were so greedilie set, that they praied him (if he toke him) to let them haue the carriage of him to the bishop of Winchester, and he should haue the fiue pounds. Saith Beniamin, It is knowen that your man hath prouided two geldings, and that you mind to ride out at Aldgate to morrow, and there then yee are sure to be taken. Follow mine aduise, and by Gods grace yee shall escape their hands. Let your man walke all the daie to morrow in the street where your horses stand, booted and readie to ride. The goodmans seruant of the house shall take the horses and carrie them to Bednoll greene. The goodman shall be booted, and follow after as if he would ride. I will be here with you to morrow about eight of the clocke; it is both terme and parlement time, here we will breake our fast, and when the street is full we will go forth. Loke wildelie, and if you méet your brother in the street, shun him not, but outface him, and know him not. Accordinglie doctor Sands did, clothed like a gentleman in all respects, and loked wildlie as one that had bæne long kept in prison out of the light. Beniamin carried him through Birching lane, and from one lane to another till he came at Moore gate: there they went forth vntill they came to Bednoll græne, where the horsses were readie, and maister Hurleston to ride with him as his man. Doctor Sands pulled on his boots, and taking leaue of his friend Beniamin, with teares they kissed ech other, he put his hand in his purse, and would haue giuen Beniamin a great part of that little he had, but Beniamin would take none. Yet since doctor Sands hath remembred him thankfullie. He rode that night to his father in law maister Sands where his wife was, he had not bæn there two houres, but it was told maister Sands that there was two of the gard which would that night apprehend doctor Sands, and so they were appointed.

All the mischiefes intended against doctor Sands disclosed by a constable, who telleth him how to escape.

Doctor Sands disguiseth himselfe like a gentleman, and escapeth.

That night doctor Sands was guided to an honest farmer nære the sea, where he taried two daies and two nights in a chamber without all companie. After that he shifted to one James Mower a shipmaster, who dwelt at Milton shore, where he expected wind for the English fléet readie into Flanders. While he was there, James Mower brought to him fortie or fiftie mariners, to whome he gaue an exhortation; they liked him so well, that they promised to die for it, yer that he should be apprehended. The first of Maie, being sundaie the wind serued: he toke his leaue of his host and hostesse, and went towards the ship. In taking leaue of his hostesse who was baren, and had bæne married eight yeares, he gaue hir a fine handkercher and also an old rotall of gold in it, thanking hir much, and said: Be of good comfort, yer that an whole yéere be past God shall giue you a child a boie. And it came to passe, for that daie twelue moneths lacking one daie, God gaue hir a faire sonne.

God stirreth vp the harts of the mariners to fauor doctor Sands &c.

Doctor Sands his prophetical blessing to his hostesse at his departing.

At the shore doctor Sands met with maister Isaac of Kent, who had his eldest sonne there, who vpon the liking he had to doctor Sands, sent his sonne with him, who afterward died in his fathers house in Frankford. Doctor Sands and doctor Cor were both in one ship, being one Cokzels ship. They were within the kenning when two of the gard came thither to apprehend doctor Sands. They arriued at Antwerpe, being bid to dinner to maister Locke. And at dinner time one George Gilpin being secretarie to the English house, and kinsman to doctor Sands, came to him and rounded him in his eare, and said; King Philip hath sent to make search for you, and to apprehend you. Herevpon they rose from their dinner in a maruellous great shower, and went out at the gate toward the land of Cleue; there they found a wagon and hasted awaie, and came safe to Ausburge in Cleueland, where doctor Sands tarried fouretæne daies, and then iourned towards Strasborough, where after he had liued one yeare, his wife came vnto him. He fell sore sicke of a flix which kept him nine moneths, and brought him to deaths dore. He had a child which fell sicke of the plague and died. His wife at length fell sicke of a consumption and died in his armes; no man had a more godlie woman to his wife.

Doctor Sands and doctor Cor go by wagon into Cleueland.

After this, maister Samson went awaie to Emanuell, a man skilfull in the Hebrue. Maister Grindall went into the countrie to learne the Dutch tong. Doctor Sands still remained in Strasborough, whose sustentation then was chieflie from one maister Isaac, who loued him most dearelie, and was euer more readie to giue than he to take. He gaue him in that space aboue one hundred marks, which sum the said doctor Sands paied him againe, and by his other gifts and friendlinesse shewed himselfe to be a thankfull man. When his wife was dead, he went to Zurike, and there was in Peter Martyrs house for the space of fiue wéekes. Being there as they sate at dinner, word suddenlie came that quéene Marie was dead, and doctor Sands was sent for by his friends at Strasborough. That newes made maister Martyr and maister Jarret then there verie ioyfull: but doctor Sands could not reioise, it smote into his hart that he should be called to miserie. Maister Bullinger and the ministers feasted him, and he toke his leaue and returned into Strasborough, where he preached, and so maister Grindall and he came towards England, and then to London the same daie that quéene Elizabeth was crowned.

Happie newes of quéen Maries death: whereupon doctor Sands returneth into England.

This is the true storie of such accidents as befell doctor Sands, a reuerend father, and constant in the truth; whereof if anie part had bæne false, likelie it is that one or other would haue barked against it yer now. But the report being common, and hauing bæne thus long extant in print, the silence of men is a sufficient proofe & confirmation of the truth.] Here therfore we will leaue doctor Sands in his archiepiscopall sée of Yorke; and after this long (but yet nédfull) digression fall againe to the discourse of Calis; which being lost (as you haue heard) in a verie short time after so long possession, tidings thereof were carried to and fro, farre and nére, by word of mouth and by writting. In so much that the same newes likewise being made notorious and knowne to the French were not so ioifullie receiued in France, as they were generallie grieuous and displeasant to the whole relme of England: but speciallie to quéene Marie, who being a princesse of hart and courage, more than commonlie is in womankind, thought hir selfe so much touched in honour by the losse of hir said towne and possessions on that side the sea, as she counted hir life irkesome, vntill the same were either recouered againe, or the losse redoubled with some like victorie against the French elsewhere.

with what indignation quéene Marie toke the losse of Calis.

In respect whereof she ceased not to trauell after with king Philip hir husband, as with hir owne priuie councell, and the lords of the realme, which waie should be best to reuenge this iniurie: and speciallie now whilest the French king was occupied in wars with king Philip, to indamage some of his countries by waie of inuasion, & to surprise some of his townes vpon the sudden. And among sundrie deuises, none was thought so fit to be attempted as an hauen towne in Britaine called Brest, which in the time of king Richard the second was kept and mainteined with an English garrison, vntill the said king rendered the same to the French king againe by composition. This towne as well for the conuenient situation alwaies readie to receiue fresh succors and victelling out of England by sea, as also for that it was knowne to the quéene and hir councell at that present, not to be furnished with anie garrison of soldiors, sufficient to repell the power of a prince vpon the sudden, was thought to be the best marke to be shot at for the time. Wherefore vpon this case well debated, there was immediatlie order giuen to Edward lord Clinton then high admerall of England, with all expedition to prepare himselfe with all the quénes ships of warre, furnished with soldiors, munition & victels, to ioine with the admerall of king Philip, who had like order from the said king to ioine with the naule of England for the atchiuing of this enterprise.

Force intended against Brest in Britaine.

The lord Clinton admerall of England sent out against Brest.

But before I declare to you the aduenture of these two great naules by sea, it shall not be impertinent to touch some accidents in the meane time by land.

land. While king Philip being absent from the low countrie, was (as you haue heard) occupied with his warres in France, monsieur de Thermes the new capteine of Calis, being a man verie expert in the wars (whose propertie is neuer to neglect anie time of aduantage) cast in his mind, how (during king Philips absence) to doo some singular seruice to the French king his maister. And espieng well the negligence of the Flemings his neighbors, how little they vnderstood the great weakening of their countrie by the losse of Calis, and that there was no new prouision made for the defense thereof, more than was before, whilest Calis was English, by the losse wherof, their frontiers were now become open for the French at all times to enter. He therefore taking out of Calis so manie of his soldiors as might be spared from thense, adioining to them all the forces of the French garrisons in Arthois, Bullongnois, and Picardie, whereof togither with the soldiors of Calis, being to the number of seuen hundred footmen, and three hundred light horsemen Scotish, there were assembled fouretéene ensigns of the French footmen, eightéene vanlins of Almans, foure or fiue hundred men at armes of France, beside the light horsemen Scots, amounting in the whole to the number at the least of nine thousand footmen, and fiftéene hundred horsemen, entred into Flanders, with full determination to spoile and waste all king Philips countrie along the sea coast, and namelie a proper hauen towne called Dunkirke, and with like purpose to haue surprised the towne of Graueling; if occasion would so serue.

Monsieur de Thermes capteine of Calis worketh vpon the aduantage to do the French king more honorable seruice.

Monsieur de Thermes determination to spoile king Philips countrie.

This capteine following his enterprise, of a policie passing by the towne of Graueling, laid siege to a little towne not farre from thence called Berghs, which he wan in a small time, and with small resistance, leauing the saccage of the same vnto his soldiors, where they found manie good booties. And without long staieng they marched forth to Dunkirke before said, and planting a siege in like maner there, battered the same so sharplie with the cannon, that within lesse than foure daies he became master of the towne, which he in like maner put to the sacke, where was found more plentie of spoile and good bootics, than in anie place before, so farre forth as the meanest slaues and lackies came awaie rich. And after setting the towne on fire (whereby all in the countrie about were maruellouslie put in feare) and the French spreading further abroad, wasted the most fruitfull quarter of all that part of Flanders, euen almost vnto Newport. But yet because that monsieur de Thermes fell diseased of the gowt, the armie withdrew and incamped within halfe a mile of Graueling, & for his more ease, he himselfe laie in Dunkirke, and in the meane time diuerse skirmishes fell out betweene the Frenchmen, and them of the garrison within Graueling.

Dunkirke beieged, taken, nd burned by he French.

Monsieur de Thermes icke of the gowt.

During which pastime, the countie de Aiguemont (or as he is commonlie called Egmond) lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countrie, with all hast possible assembled all the power as well of king Philips garrisons, as also of men of warre in the low countrie, to the number of fouretéene or fiftéene thousand footmen, and two or three thousand horsemen, whereof there were fiftéene hundred swart Rutters, determining so to affront the French, that either they should passe no further into the countrie, or at the least waie to impeach them from the siege of Graueling, whereof there was great appearance. Monsieur de Thermes hearing of this power assembled (though scarselie well recouered) made all possible hast toward Graueling, where he was no soner arriued, but that he saw his enimies readie ranged in the field. By reason whereof his studie was now nothing else but how he might bring home his armie in safetie to Calis.

Countie Egmond lieutenant generall or king Philip in the low countrie.

The countie de Egmond espieng the Frenchmen bent to march awaie with the spoile of the countrie, cut betweene them and home, placing his battels in such order, that the Frenchmen had no waie to passe, but vpon the sands betweene the towne and the sea. Whereas by good chance laie a great fleet of quéene Maries ships of warre, within the danger of whose gunshot the Frenchmen had no shift but to passe as their iournie laie. And so being forced either to skamish or to fight at disaduantage, monsieur the Thermes without staieng anie longer, caused his vantgard to passe ouer the riuer somewhat néere the towne, to auoid the shot of the English ships. And staieng vpon the further side for the residue of his battels, there came such thicke hailshot of artillerie out of the towne on the one side, and from the English ships on the other side, that there was a full batterie made vpon the Frenchmen on all sides, which they neuertheless abode, without breaking order for the time, when suddenlie appeered before them two great troops of horsemen, of fiftéene hundred a péece, part swart Rutters, and part Burgognians, whereof the one in front, and the other in flanke, gaue strong charges vpon the French vantgard, who being well backed with their other battels (whereof the most part then had passed the riuer) stoutlie repelled these two first troops, though not without losse of manie their best soldiors.

The English ships annoie the French with gunshot, &c.

A valiant onset giuen vpon the Frenchmen by countie Egmond.

So thus both parties being at a staie, and seuered somewhat asunder, the countie de Egmond himselfe with eightéene hundred men of armes, and his foot battels following, before the French had well recouered breath, recharged vpon them with all his forces togither, so terriblie that he choked all their battell, and the number tooke them to flight, without further triall. So by that time that the footmen on either side came to the push of the pike, the victorie was soone had, by reason (as the Frenchmen report) that the Almans beaten back with artillerie, as well of the towne as of the ships before said, brake their order, and came not to the shocke, whereby the whole charge of the battell rested vpon the French bands onelie. This field was fought the thirtéenth of Julie 1558, vpon the sea sands nære to Graueling, where besides those that were slaine, being estéemed to the number of fiue thousand fighting men, there were taken prisoners the marshall de Thermes capteine of Calis, monsieur Senerpont gouernour of Bullongne, monsieur Villebon gouernour of Picardie, monsieur Annebault sonne to the late admerall Annebault, knight of the order, monsieur de Montilliers gouernour of Abuile, monsieur de Channe gouernour of Corbie, beside a great number of other gentlemen, valiant capteins & soldiors: but specialle the bands of Calis went to wracke, so as verie few returned home to bring tidings. Which gaue such a terrour to the soldiors remaining in Calis, that it is verelie beleeued, that if the admerals of England and Flanders had béene present there with their nauies, as the said other few ships of England were, and vpon this sudden had attempted Calis, with the aid of the countie Egmond hauing his power present: the towne of Calis might haue béene recouered againe with as little difficultie, and happilie in as short time as it was before gained by the duke of Guise. But the said admerals (as it appeared) knew nothing thereof. Wherfore following their prescribed course, & ioining togither at the place appointed, they sailed from thence with prosperous wind & weather, & by the nine and twentith daie of the same moneth, and in the said yeare, with seauen score ships of warre, appeared by the breake of the

A recharge vpon the French scarse recouered.

A great victorie.

Certeine French prisoners taken, and what they were by name.

Calis might haue béene recouered from the French.

the daie before the hauen of Conquest, commonlie called Conquet in Britaine; whereof the poet saith, touching the seat of the same, abutting vpon the sea:

Nobile Conquetum falsis Thetis alluit vndis.

At whose arriuall there (as the manner is) they sounded their trumpets, & with a thundering peale of great ordinance gaue a lowd salue vnto the Britains: and by eight of the clocke the same morning, mauger all the power of the countrie, being assembled there in armes, with manie peeces of great artillerie, to defend the entrie of their port, the Englishmen manning forth their shipboats, with manie valiant capteins and soldiors, recouered landing, and within short time became maisters of the said towne of Conquet, which they put to the sacrage, with a great abbeie, and manie pretie townes and villages neere thereabouts, where our men found great store of pillage and good booties. This done, they marched into the countrie, and burned manie villages and houses: and after withdrew downe vnto the sea side, where their ships laie readie to receiue them. But the Flemmings being couetous of spoile, passing further into the land, before they could recouer their ships againe, were incountered by the power of the countrie, by whome there were slaine of them to the number of foure or fiue hundred.

Conquest or Conquet taken and burned.

A great slaughter of the Flemmings occasioned by their owne couetousnesse.

The admerals perceiuing the power of the countrie greatlie to increase, and hauing intelligence that the duke of Estampes the French kings lieutenant in Britaine was verie neere, comming on with a great number of horssemen and footmen, esteemed to be about twentie thousand (as the Frenchmen themselues affirme) thought not best to attempt anie assault against the towne of Brest, or to make longer abode there. But yet in hope to doo some further exploit elsewhere, they laie there houering on the coast a while, to vnderstand the demeanour of the Britains: but by this time there was such numbers of people raised in all those parts for defense of the same coasts, that the admerals afterward attempting in diuers places to land their men, and finding ech where more appearance of losse than of gaine, returned home without atchiuing anie further enterprise. In this meane time, while king Philip and the French king, with two most puissant armies affronted ech other, neere vnto the water of Some, either of them was obstinatelie bent to driue the other out of the field, for which cause they intrenched their campes.

The admerals remoue for feare of losse.

Anno Reg. 6.

During which time there was nothing done betweene them worthie memorie, more than dailie skirmishes of no great account. Neuertheless, the countrie of France could not but sustaine extreame damage, so long sustaining such a maine multitude, specially of men of warre, which those two mightie kings had assembled. And daie by daie came fresh companies to either partie; so as it was thought a thing impossible that such two princes being so neere, could depart without some cruell bloudie battell to determine their quarrels. But God, in whose hands are the hearts of kings (when least hope was) conuerted their obstinate minds from warre to peace, which came chiefly to passe by the mediation of the duchesse of Lorraine, who had beene a long and earnest trauailer to that end; and neuer ceassed, vntill by hir intercession, both the said kings appointed speciall commissioners to treat vpon peace. So that after diuerse conferences, they at last concluded vpon all controuersies, except the matter of Calis, wherof queene Marie by hir ambassadours required restitution: but the French partie would in no wise heare thereof. By reason of which difficultie, this treatie could not come to anie good conclusion. King Philip thinking himselfe bound in honour to stand in that case with the queene his wife, who for his sake had entered into a needlesse warre against France, and thereby lost hir said towne, with all the countrie adioining (as you haue heard before) did therefore staie a long time before he concluded peace with the French king.

No memorable act done by either of the kings during the affronting of their armies.

Peace is procured betweene both kings at the sute and seeking of the duchesse of Lorraine.

Queene Marie seeing no likelihood, nor hauing anie hope of the restitution of Calis, and considering also that most of hir affaires had but hard successe, conceiued an inward sorrow of mind: by reason whereof about September next she fell sicke of a hot burning feauer, which sickenesse was common that yeare through all the realme, and consumed a marueilous number, as well noblemen, as bishops, iudges, knights, gentlemen, and rich farmers: but most of the clergie, and other ancient and graue persons. In which while the queene laie languishing of a long sickenesse, and so continued vntill the seuenteenth of Nouember next betweene the houres of fiue or six in the morning, and then ended hir life in this world, at hir house of saint James besides Westminster, when she had reigned fiue yeares, foure moneths, and eleuen daies, and in the three and fortith yeare of hir bodilie age. The death of this said queene made a marueilous alteration in this realme, namelie in the case of religion, which like as by the death of king Edward the first it suffered a change from the establishment of his time: so by the death of this queene it returned into the former estate againe. So that we see the vncertaintie of the world, and what changes do come in times by their reuolutions, and that euerie thing is subiect to vnconstancie, and nothing free from variablenesse; as the poet saith:

Q. Marie pensife for the losse of Calis.

The death of queen Marie.

——nihil vsquam
Perpetuum solet in terris fixumque manere:
Humanis quàm nulla subest constantia rebus!

And here, because we are come to the knitting vp of queene Maries reigne, I cannot ouerslip with silence that notable and needfull discourse of master Fox concerning our blessed souereigne, queen Elizabeth, whose maiestie the Lord of his mercie inuiron with friends as in number manie, so in seruice trustie; and whose enimies the same Lord in iustice rot out from the land of the liuing, heaping vpon them plague after plague, to their vtter confusion, because they haue reiected the gratious means of their conuersion. Thus therefore writeth master Fox concerning the mischeefous persecution and miraculous preseruation of ladie Elizabeth, now queene of England, from extreame calamitie and danger of life, in the time of queene Marie hir sister.

But (saith master Fox) when all hath beene said and told, what soeuer can be recited touching the admirable working of Gods present hand in defending and deliuering anie one person out of thraldome, neuer was there since the memorie of our fathers, anie example to be shewed, wherin the Lords mightie power hath more admirablie and blessedlie shewed it selfe, to the glorie of his owne name, to the comfort of all good hearts, and to the publike felicitie of this whole realme, than in the miraculous custodie and outscape of this our souereigne ladie, now queene, then ladie Elizabeth, in the strict time of queene Marie hir sister. In which storie, first we haue to consider in what extreame miserie, sicknesse, feare, and perill hir highnesse was; into what care, what trouble of mind, and what danger of death she was brought. First with great routs and bands of armed men (and happie was he that might haue the carrieng of hir) being fetched vp as the greatest traitour in the world, claped in the tower, and againe tossed from thence, from house to house, from prison to prison, from post to piller, at length also prisoner in hir owne house, and garded with a sort of cut-throats, which euer

The blessed protection of almightie God in preseruing the ladie Elizabeth in hir manifold dangers and troubles.

The troubles of ladie Elizabeth in Q. Maries time.

gaped

gaped for the spoile, whereby they might be fingering of somewhat.

Secondlie, we haue againe to consider, all this notwithstanding, how strangelie, or rather miraculouslie from danger she was deliuered: what fauour and grace she found with the almightie, who when all helpe of man, and hope of recouerie was past, stretched out his mightie protection, and preserued hir highnesse, and placed hir in this princelie seat of rest and quietnesse, wherin now she sitteth, and long maie she sit, the lord of his glorious mercie grant, we beseech him *. In which storie, if I should set forth at large and at full, all the particulars and circumstances thereunto belonging, and as iust occasion of the historie requireth, besides the importunate length of the storie discoursed, peraduenture it might moue offense to some being yet aliue, and truth might get me hatred. Yet notwithstanding, I intend (by the grace of Christ) therein to vse such breuitie and moderation, as both may be to the glorie of God, the discharge of the storie, the profit of the reader, & hurt to none, suppressing the names of some, whome here although I could recite, yet I thought not to be more cruell in hurting their name, than the quéene hath béene mercifull in pardoning their liues.

*Amen.

The historie of the ladie Elizabeth.

Therefore now to enter into the discourse of this tragicall matter, first here is to be noted, that quéene Marie when she was first quéene, before she was crowned, would go no whither, but would haue hir by the hand, and send for hir to dinner and supper: but after she was crowned, she neuer dined nor supped with hir, but kept hir aloofe from hir, &c. After this it happened, immediatlie vpon the rising of sir Thomas Wiat (as before was mentioned, * pag. 1418, 1419) that the ladie Elizabeth and the lord Courtneie were charged with false suspicion of sir Thomas Wiats rising. Whereupon quéene Marie, whether for that surmise, or for what other cause I know not, being offended with the said Elizabeth hir sister, at that time lieng in hir house at Ashridge, the next daie after the rising of Wiat, sent to hir three of hir councellors, to wit, sir Richard Southwell, sir Edward Hastings, then master of the horsse, and sir Thomas Cornwallis, with their retinue and troope of horsemen, to the number of two hundred & fiftie. Who at their sudden and vnprouided comming, found hir at the same time sore sicke in hir bed, and verie feble and weake of bodie. Whither when they came, ascending vp to hir graces priuie chamber, they willed one of hir ladies, whome they met, to declare vnto hir grace, that there were certeine come from the court, which had a message from the quéene.

*These references by the page where soeuer they fall in this discourse of Q. Elizabeth are ment of the impression published 1583

Sir Richard Southwell, sir Edward Hastings, and sir Thomas Cornwallis, sent to fetch vp ladie Elizabeth, with whom also afterward was sent the lord william Howard, &c.

Hir grace hauing knowledge thereof, was right glad of their comming: howbeit, being then verie sicke, and the night farre spent (which was at ten of the clocke) she requested them by the messenger, that they would resort thither in the morning. To this they answered, and by the said messenger sent word againe, that they must néeds sée hir, and would so do, in what case soeuer she were. Whereat the ladie being aguish, went to shew hir grace their words: but they hastilie following hir, came rushing as soone as she into hir graces chamber vnbidden. At whose so sudden comming into hir bed chamber, hir grace being not a little amazed, said vnto them: Is the hast such, that it might not haue pleased you to come to morrow in the morning? They made answer, that they were right sorie to sée hir in that case. And I (quoth she) am not glad to sée you here at this time of the night. Whereunto they answered, that they came from the quéene to do their message and duetie: which was to this effect, that the quéens pleasure was, that she should be at London the seauenth daie of that present moneth. Whereunto she said; Certeslie, no creature more glad than I to come to hir maiestie, being right sorie that I am not in case at this time to wait on hir, as you your selues do sée and can well testifie.

The vnmanerlinesse of the knights.

A strait commission from the quéene to bring the ladie Elizabeth either quicke or dead.

In deed we sée it true (quoth they) that you do saie: for which we are verie sorie: albeit we let you to vnderstand, that our commission is such, and so straineth vs, that we must néeds bring you with vs, either quicke or dead. Whereat she being amazed, sorrowfullie said, that their commission was verie sore: but yet notwithstanding she hoped it to be other wise, and not so strict. Yes verelie, said they. Whereupon they called for two physicians, doctor Owen and doctor Wendie, demanding of them, whether she might be remoued from thence with life, or no. Whose answer and iudgement was, that there was no impediment (in their iudgement) to the contrarie, but that she might trauell without danger of life. In conclusion, they willed hir to prepare against the morning at nine of the clocke to go with them, declaring that they had brought with them the quænes litter for hir. After much talke, the messengers declaring how there was no prolonging of times and dates, so departed to their chamber, being interteined and cheared as apperteined to their worships.

The gentlenesse of quéene Marie to send hir horslitter to bring hir sister to trouble.

On the next morrow at the time prescribed, they had hir forth as she was, verie faint and féeble, and in such case that she was readie to sound three or foure times betwéene them. What should I speake héere that cannot well be expressed, what an heauie house there was to behold the vnreuerend and doleful dealing of these men, but especiallie the carefull feare and captiuitie of their innocent ladie and mistresse. Now to proceed in hir iornie from Ashridge all sicke in the litter, she came to Redborne, where she was garded all night: from thence to S. Albons, to sir Rafe Rowlets house, where she tarried that night, both feble in bodie, and comfortlesse in mind. From that place they passed to maister Dods house at Wims, where also they remained that night: and so from thence she came to Highgate: where she being verie sicke, taried that night and the next daie. During which time of hir abode there, came manie purseuants and messengers from the court: but for what purpose I cannot tell.

Ladie Elizabeth taketh hir iourneie toward the quéene.

From that place she was conueied to the court: where (by the waie) came to méet hir manie gentlemen, to accompanie hir highnesse, which were verie sorie to sée hir in that case. But especiallie a great multitude of people there were standing by the way, who then flocking about hir litter, lamented and bewailed greatlie hir estate. Now, when she came to the court, hir grace was there straightwaies shut vp, and kept as close prisoner a fortnight, which was till Palmesundaie, seeing neither king nor quéene, nor lord, nor friend, all that time, but onelie then the lord chamberlaine, sir John Gage, and the vicechamberlaine which were attendant vnto the doores. About which time sir William Sentlow was called before the councell; vnto whose charge it was laid, that he knew of Wiats rebellion. Which he stoutlie denied, protesting that he was a true man, both to God and his prince, defieng all traitors and rebels: but being strictlie examined, he was in conclusion committed to the tower.

Ladie Elizabeth brought vp to Lond̄.

Sir William Sentlow committed to the tower.

The fridaie before Palmesundaie, the bishop of Winchester, with nine téene others of the councell (who shall be here nameles se) came vnto hir grace from the quénes maiestie, and burdened hir with Wiats conspiracie: which she vtterlie denied, affirming that she was altogither giltles se therein. They being not contented with this, charged hir grace with businesse made by sir Peter Carew, and the rest of the gentlemen of the west countries: which also she Ladie Elizabeth charged with sir Thomas Wiats conspiracie.

Ladie Elizabeth charged with the businesse of Peter Carew.

she vtterlie denieng, cleared hir innocencie therein. In conclusion, after long debating of matters, they declared vnto hir, that it was the quænes will and pleasure that she should go vnto the tower, while the matter were further tried and examined. Whereat she being agast, said, that she trusted the quænes maiestie would be more gratious ladie vnto hir, and that hir highnesse would not otherwise conceiue of hir, but that she was a true woman: declaring furthermore to the lords, that she was innocent in all those matters wherin they had burdened hir; and desired them therefore to be a further meane to the quæne hir sister, that she being a true woman in thought, word, and deed towards hir maiestie, might not be committed to so notorious & dolefull a place: protesting that she would request no mercie at hir hand, if she should be proued to haue consented vnto anie such kind of matter, as they had laid vnto hir charge: and therefore in fine desired their lordships to thinke of hir what she was, and that she might not so extremelie be dealt withall for hir truth.

Ladie Elizabeth threatned to go to the tower.

Ladie Elizabeth purgeth hir selfe to the lords.

Wher vnto the lords answered againe, that there was no remedie, for that the quænes maiestie was fullie determined that she should go vnto the tower. Where with the lords departed, with their caps hanging ouer their eies. But not long after, within the space of an houre or little more, came foure of the foresaid lords of the councell, which were the lord treasuror, the bishop of Winchester, the lord steward, the earle of Suster, with the gard, who warding the nert chamber to hir, secluded all hir gentlemen and yeomen, ladies and gentlewomen, sauing that for one gentleman vsher, three gentlewomen, and two groomes of hir chamber, were appointed in their rowmes three other men of the quænes, and three waiting women to giue attendance vpon hir, that none should haue accesse to hir grace. At which time there were an hundred of northerne souldiers in white cotes, watching and warding about the gardens all that night, a great fire being made in the midst of the hall, and two certeine lords watching there also with their band and companie.

Ladie Elizabeths seruãts remoued from hir.

The quænes men, and waiting women attendant vpõ ladie Elizabeth.

Upon saturdaie following, two lords of the councell (the one was the earle of Suller, the other shall be nameles) came and certified hir grace, that forthwith she must go vnto the tower, the barge being prepared for hir, and the tide now readie, which tarieth for no bodie. In heauie mood hir grace requested the lords that she might tarie another tide, trusting that the nert would be better and more comfortable. But one of the lords replied, that nether tide nor time was to be delaied. And when hir grace requested him that she might be suffered to write to the quænes maiestie, he answered, that he durst not permit that: adding that in his iudgement it would rather hurt, than profit hir grace in so doing. But the other lord, more courteous and fauorable (who was the earle of Suller) kneeling downe, said she should haue libertie to write; and as he was a true man, he would deliuer it to the quænes highnesse, & bring an answer of the same, what soeuer came thereof. Whereupon she wrote, albeit she could in no case be suffered to speake with the quæne to hir great discomfort, being no offendor against the quænes maiestie.

The hard dealing of a certeine lord with the ladie Elizabeth.

The earle of Suster gentle to the ladie Elizabeth.

Ladie Elizabeth writeth to the quæne but it would not serue.

And thus the tide and time passed awaie for that season, they priuilie appointing all things readie that she should go the nert tide which fell about midnight: but for feare she should be taken by the waie, they durst not. So they staied till the nert daie, being Palmesundaie, when about nine of the clocke these two returned againe, declaring that it was time for hir grace to depart; she answering: If there be no remedie, I must be content, willing the lords to go before. Being come forth into the garden, she did cast vp hir eies toward the windowe, thinking to haue seene the quæne, which she could not. Whereat she said she maruelled much what the nobilitie of the realme meant, which in that sort would suffer hir to be led into captiuitie, the Lord knew whither, for she did not. In the meane time commandement was giuen in all London, that euerie one should keepe the church and tarie their palmes, while in the meane season she might be conueied without all recourse of people into the tower.

After all this, she toke hir barge with the two foresaid lords, three of the quænes gentlewomen, and three of hir owne, hir gentleman vsher, and two of hir grooms, lieng & houering vpon the water a certeine space, for that they could not shoot the bridge, the bargemen being verie vnwilling to shoot the same so soone as they had, because of the danger therof: for the sterne of the boat stroke vpon the ground, the fall was so big, and the water was so shallow, that the boat being vnder the bridge, there staied againe a while. At landing, she first staied, and denied to land at those staires where all traitors and offendors customablie vsed to land, neither well could she vnlesse she should go ouer hir shoo. The lords were gone out of the boat before, and asked why she came not. One of the lords went backe againe to hir, and brought word she would not come. Then said one of the lords which shall be nameles, that she should not chose: and because it did then raine, he offered to hir his cloke, which she (putting it backe with hir hand with a good dash) refused. So she comming out, hauing one foot vpon the staire, said; Here landeth as true a subiect being prisoner, as euer landed at these staires: and before thee O God I speake it, hauing none other frends but thee alone.

Ladie Elizabeth sent to the tower.

The words of ladie Elizabeth entring the tower.

To whome the same lord answered againe, that if it were so, it was the better for hir. At hir landing there was a great multitude of their seruants and warders standing in their order; What needed all this said she: It is the vse (said some) so to be when anie prisoner came thither. And if it be (quoth she) for my cause, I beseech you that they may be dismissed. Wherat the poore men kneeled downe, and with one voice desired God to preserue hir grace, who the nert daie were released of their cold coats. After this passing a little further, she sat downe vpon a cold stone, and there rested hir selfe. To whom the lieutenant then being, said; Madame, you were best to come out of the raine, for you sit vnwholesomelie. She then replieng, answered againe: Better sitting here than in a worse place, for God knoweth, I know not whither you will bring me. With that hir gentleman vsher wept: she demanding of him what he meant so vncomfortablie to vse hir, seeing she toke him to be hir comforter, and not to dismaie hir, especiallie for that she knew hir truth to be such, that no man should haue cause to weepe for hir. But forth she went into the prison.

The doores were locked and bolted vpon hir: which did not a little discomfort and dismaie hir grace. At what time she called to hir gentlewoman for hir booke, desiring God not to suffer hir to build hir foundation vpon the sands but vpon the rocke, whereby all the blasts of blustering weather should haue no power against hir. The doores being thus locked, and she close shut vp, the lords had great conference how to keepe ward and watch, euerie man declaring his opinion in that behalfe, agreeing strictlie and circumspectlie to keepe hir. Then one of them, which was the lord of Suller swearing, said: My lords, let vs take heed, and do no more than our commission will beare vs, what soeuer shall happen hereafter. And further, let vs consider that she was the king our maisters daughter, and therefore let vs vse such dealing, dealing, that we may answer vnto it hereafter, if it shall so happen, for iust dealing (quoth he) is alwaies answerable. Wherevnto the other lords agréed that it was well said of him, and therevpon departed. Being in the tower, within two daies, commandement was that she should haue masse within hir house. One maister Pong was then hir chapleine: and bicause there was none of hir men so well learned to helpe the priest to saie masse, the masse staied for that daie.

The christian praier of ladie Elizabeth.

The lord of Suller speaketh for ladie Elizabeth.

The next daie two of hir yeomen, who had gone long to schoole before, and were learned, had two abcies prouided and deliuered them, so that vpon the abcies they should helpe the priest. One of the said yeomen, holding the abcie in his hand, pretending ignorance at Kyrie eleison, set the priest, making as though he could answer that no further. It would make a pitifull and a strange storie, here by the waie to touch and recite what examinations and rackings of poore men there were, to find out that knife which should cut hir throte: what gaping among my lords of the cleargie, to see the daie wherein they might wash their goodlie white rochets in hir innocent bloud, but especiallie the bishop of Winchester Stephan Gardiner, then lord chancellor, ruler of the rost, who then within fiue daies after came vnto hir, with diuerse others of the councell, and examined hir of the talke that was at Alhridge, betwixt hir and sir James Acroft, touching hir remouing from thence to Dunnington castle, requiring hir to declare what she meant thereby.

The bishop of Winchester enimie to ladie Elisabeth.

At the first, she being so suddenlie asked, did not well remember anie such house: but within a while, well aduising hir selfe, she said; In déed (quoth she) I do now remember that I haue such a place, but I neuer laie in it in all my life. And as for anie that hath moued me therevnto, I do not remember. Then to inforce the matter, they brought forth sir James Acroft. The bishop of Winchester demanded of hir what she said to that man? She answered, that she had little to saie to him, or to the rest that were then prisoners in the tower. But my lords (quoth she) you do examine euerie meane prisoner of me, wherein me thinks you do me great iniurie. If they haue done euill and offended the quéenes maiestie, let them answer to it accordinglie. I beséech you my lords, ioine not me in this sort with anie of these offendors. And as concerning my going vnto Dunnington castle, I do remember that maister Hobbie and mine officers and you sir James Acroft, had such talke: but what is that to the purpose, my lords, but that I may go to mine owne houses at all times?

Ladie Elisabeth examined by the bishop of winchester.

The friendlie speach of the earle of Arundell to the ladie Elisabeth.

The lord of Arundell knéeling downe, said: Your grace saith true, & certeinlie we are verie sorie that we haue so troubled you about so vaine matters. She then said: My lords, you do sift me verie narrowlie, but well I am assured, you shall not do more to me than God hath appointed, and so God forgiue you all. At their departure, sir James Acroft knéeled down, declaring that he was sorie to sée the daie in which he should be brought as a witnesse against hir grace. But I assure your grace (said he) I haue béene marueilouslie tossed and examined touching your highnesse, which the lord knoweth is verie strange to me. For I take God to record before all your honors, I do not know anie thing of that crime that you haue laid to my charge, and will therevpon take my death, if I should be driuen to so strict a triall.

Sir James Acroft examined touching the ladie Elisabeth.

That daie, or thereabouts, diuerse of hir owne officers, who had made prouision for hir diet, brought the same to the vtter gate of the tower, the common rascall souldiers receiuing it: which was no small greefe vnto the gentlemen the bringers thereof. Wherfore they required to speake with the lord chamberleine, being then constable of the tower. Who comming before his presence, declared vnto his lordship, that they were much afraid to bring hir graces diet, and to deliuer it to such common and desperat persons as they were which did receiue it: beséching his honor to consider hir grace, and to giue such order, that hir viands might at all times be brought in by them which were appointed therevnto. Yea sirs (said he) who appointed you this office? They answered, Hir graces councell. Councell (quoth he?) There is none of them which hath to do, either in that case, or anie thing else within this place: and I assure you, for that she is a prisoner, she shall be serued with the lieutenants men, as other the prisoners are. Whereat the gentlemen said, that they trusted for more fauor at his hands, considering hir personage, saieng; that they mistrusted not, but that the quæne and hir councell would be better to hir grace than so, and therewith shewed themselues to be offended at the vngratefull words of the lord chamberleine towards their ladie and mistresse.

Ladie Elisabeths seruats restreined for bringing hir diet to the tower.

Displeasure betweéne the lord chamberleine and ladie Elisabeths men.

At this he sware by God, striking himselfe vpon the breast, that if they did either frowne or shrug at him, he would set them where they should neither sée sunne nor moone. Thus taking their leaue, they desired God to bring him in a better mind towards hir grace, and so departed from him. Vpon the occasion whereof, hir graces officers made great sute vnto the quéenes councell, that some might be appointed to bring hir diet to hir, & that it might no more be deliuered in to the common soldiers of the tower. Which being reasonablie considered, was by them granted. Wherevpon were appointed one of hir gentlemen, hir clearke of hir kitchin, and hir two purueiors to bring in hir prouision once a day; all which was done the warders euer waiting vpon the bringers thereof. The lord chamberleine himselfe being alwaies with them, circumspectlie and narrowlie watched, and searched what they brought: and gaue héed that they should haue no talke with anie of hir graces waiting seruants, and so warded them both in and out. At the said sute of hir officers were sent by the commandement of the councell, to wait vpon hir grace, two yeomen of hir chamber, one of hir robes, two of hir pantrie and ewrie, one of hir buttrie, another of hir cellar, two of hir kitchin, and one of hir larder, all which continued with hir the time of hir trouble.

Ladie Elisabeths waitingmen in the tower.

Here the constable, being at the first not verie well pleased with the comming in of such a companie against his will, would haue had his men still to haue serued with hir graces men. Which hir seruants at no hand would suffer, desiring his lordship to be contented: for that order was taken, that no stranger should come within their offices. At which answer being sore displeased, he brake out into these threatning words: Well (said he) I will handle you well inough. Then went he into the kitchin, and there would néeds haue his meat rosted with hir graces meat, & said that his cooke should come thither and dresse it. To that hir graces cooke answered; My lord, I will neuer suffer anie stranger to come about hir diet, but hir owne sworne men, so long as I liue. He said they shuld. But the cooke said, his lordship should pardon him for that matter. Thus did he trouble hir poore seruants verie stoutlie: though afterwards he were otherwise aduised, and they more courteoulie vsed at his hands. And good cause why, for he had good cheare, and fared of the best; and hir grace paied well for it. Wherefore he vsed himselfe afterwards more reuerentlie toward hir grace.

Variance betweene the lord chamberleine & ladie Elisabeths seruants.

These were not officers of the tower, but such as went in white and greene.

After this sort, hauing lien a whole moneth there in close prison, and being verie euill at ease therwithall, she sent for the lord chamberleine, and the lord Shandois, Shandois to come and speake with hir. Who comming, she requested them that she might haue libertie to walke in some place, for that she felt hirselfe not well. To the which they answered, that they were right sorie that they could not satisfie hir graces request, for that they had commandement to the contrarie, which they durst not in anie wise breake. Furthermore, she desired of them, if that could not bee granted, that she might walke but into the quænes lodging. No nor yet that (they answered) could by anie meanes be obteined without a further suite to the quéene and hir councell. Well (said she) my lords, if the matter be so hard that they must be sued vnto for so small a thing, and that friendship be so strict, God comfort me: and so they departed, she remaining in hir old dungeon still, without anie kind of comfort but onelie God.

Ladie Elisabeth denied the libertie of the tower.

The next daie after, the lord Shandois came againe vnto hir grace, declaring vnto hir that he had sued vnto the councell for further libertie. Some of them consented thereunto, diuerse other dissented, for that there were so manie prisoners in the tower. But in conclusion they did all agrée, that hir grace might walke into those lodgings, so that he & the lord chamberleine, and three of the quénes gentlewomen did accompanie hir, the windowes being shut, and shée not suffered to looke out at anie of them: wherewith she contented hirselfe, and gaue him thanks for his good will in that behalfe. Afterwards there was libertie granted to hir grace to walke in a little garden, the doores and gates being shut vp, which notwithstanding was as much discomfort vnto hir, as the walke in the garden was pleasant and acceptable. At which times of hir walking there, the prisoners on that side strictlie were commanded not to speake or looke out at the windows into the garden, till hir grace were gone out againe, hauing in consideration thereof, their keepers waiting vpon them for that time. Thus hir grace with this small libertie contented hir selfe in God, to whome be praise therefore.

Libertie granted to ladie Elisabeth to walke in a little garden.

During this time, there vsed a little boie, a mans child in the tower to resort vnto their chambers, and manie times to bring hir grace flowers, which likewise hee did to the other prisoners that were there. Whereupon naughtie and suspicious heads thinking to make and wring out some matter thereof, called on a time the child vnto them, promising him figs and apples, and asked of him when he had béene with the earle of Deuonshire, not ignorant of the childs wonted frequenting vnto him: The boy answered that he would go by and by thither. Further they demanded of him, when he was with the ladie Elisabeths grace? He answered: Euerie daie. Furthermore they examined him, what the lord of Deuonshire sent by him to hir grace? The child said: I will go know what he will giue to carie to hir. Such was the discretion of the child, being yet but foure years of age. This same is a craftie boy, quoth the lord chamberleine, how saie you my lord Shandois? I praie you my lord (quoth the boy) giue me the figs you promised me. No marie (quoth he) thou shalt be whipped if thou come anie more to the ladie Elisabeth, or the lord Courtneie. The boy answered: I will bring my ladie and mistresse more flowers. Wherupon the childs father was commanded to permit the boy no more to come vp into their chambers.

Suspicious heads.

A yong child examined for bringing flowers to the ladie Elisabeth.

The next daie, as hir grace was walking in the garden, the child peeping in at a hole in the doore, cried vnto hir, saieng: Mistresse, I can bring you no more flowers. Whereat she smiled, but said nothing, vnderstanding thereby what they had done. Wherefore afterwards the chamberleine rebuked highlie his father, commanding him to put him out of the house.

Alas poore infant, quoth the father. It is a craftie knaue (quoth the lord chamberleine) let me see him here no more. The tith of Maie the constable was discharged of his office of the tower, & one sir Henrie Benefield placed in his rome, a man vnknowne to hir grace, and therefore the more feared: which so sudden mutation was vnto hir no little amaze. He brought with him an hundred souldiors in blew cotes, wherewith she was maruellouslie discomforted, and demanded of such as were about hir, whether the ladie Janes scaffold were taken awaie or no, fearing by reason of their comming, least she should haue plaied hir part. To whome answer was made, that the scaffold was taken awaie, and that hir grace néeded not to doubt of anie such tyrannie: for God would not suffer anie such treason against hir person. Wherewith being contented, but not altogither satisfied, she asked what sir Henrie Benefield was, and whether he was of that conscience or no, that if hir murthering were secretlie committed to his charge, he would see the execution thereof: She was answered, that they were ignorant what maner of man he was. Howbeit they persuaded hir that God would not suffer such wickednesse to proceed: Well, quoth she, God grant it be so. For thou O God canst mollifie all such tyrannous hearts, and disappoint all such cruell purposes: and I beseech thée to heare me thy creature, which am thy seruant, and at thy commandement, trusting by thy grace euer so to remaine.

The constable of ỹ tower discharged of his office.

Sir Henrie Benefield with his companie, placed about the lad. Elisabeth.

Ladie Elisabeth in great feare and doubt of life.

Ladie Elisabeth in doubt of sir Henrie Benefield.

About which time it was spread abroad, that hir grace should be caried from thense by this new iollie capteine and his souldiors: but whither, it could not be learned. Which was vnto hir a great griefe, especiallie for that such a companie was appointed to hir gard, requesting rather to continue there still, than to be led thense with such a sort of rascals. At last plaine answer was made by the lord Shandois, that there was no remedie, but from thense she must néeds depart to the manour of Woodstocke, as he thought. Being demanded of hir for what cause: For that (quoth he) the tower is like further to be furnished. She being desirous to know what he meant thereby, demanded wherewith: He answered, with such matter as the quéene and councell were determined in that behalfe, wherof he had no knowledge: and so departed. In conclusion, on Trinitie sundaie being the nineteenth daie of Maie, she was remoued from the tower, the lord treasuror being then there for the lading of hir carts, and discharging the place of the same. Where sir Henrie Benefield (being appointed hir gaoler) did receiue hir with a companie of rakehels to gard hir, beside the lord of Darbies band, waiting in the countrie about for the moneshine in the water. Unto whome at length came my lord of Tame, ioined in commission with the said sir Henrie, for the safe guiding of hir to prison: and they togither conueied hir grace to Woodstocke, as hereafter followeth. The first daie they conducted hir to Richmond, where she continued all night, being restreined of hir owne men, which were lodged in outchambers, and sir Henrie Benefields souldiors appointed in their romes to giue attendance on hir person. Whereat she being maruellouslie dismaied, thinking verelie some secret mischiefe to be a working towards hir, called hir gentleman vsher, and desired him, with the rest of his companie, to praie for hir. For this night (quoth she) I thinke to die. Wherewith he being stricken to the heart, said: God forbid that anie such wickednesse should be pretended against your grace. So comforting hir as well as he could, at last he burst out into teares, & went from hir downe into the court, where were walking the lord of Tame and sir Hen-

Ladie Elizabeth remoued from the tower to Woodstocke.

Ladie Elizabeth secluded from hir seruants.

Ladie Elizabeth in despaire of hir selfe.

rie

rie Benefield.

Then he comming to the lord of Tame (who had proffered to him much friendship) desired to speake with him a word or two. Unto whome he familiarlie said, he should with all his heart. Which when sir Henrie standing by heard, he asked what the matter was? To whome the gentleman vsher answered: No great matter sir (said he) but to speake with my lord a word or two. Then when the lord of Tame came to him, he spake on this wise: My lord (quoth he) you haue béene alwaies my good lord, and so I beséech you to remaine. The cause why I come to you at this time, is to desire your honor, vnfeinedlie to declare vnto me whether anie danger is meant towards my mistresse this night, or no, that I and my poore fellows may take such part as shall please God to appoint: for certeinlie we will rather die, than she should secretlie and innocentlie miscarie. Marie (said the lord of Tame) God forbid that anie such wicked purpose should be wrought: and rather than it should be so, I with my men are readie to die at hir foot also: and (so praised be God) they passed that dolfull night, with no little heauinesse of heart. Afterwards passing ouer the water at Richmond, going towards Windsore, hir grace espied certeine of hir poore seruants standing on the other side, which were verie desirous to sée hir. Whome when she beheld, turning to one of hir men standing by, she said: Ponder I sée certeine of my men, go to them and say these words from me: Tanquam ouis.

Tanquam ouis, i. Like a sheepe to the slaughter.

So she passing forward to Windsore, was lodged there that night in the deane of Windsors house, a place more meet in déed for a priest than for a princesse. And from thense hir grace was garded and brought the next night to maister Dormers house, where much people standing by the way, some presented to hir one gift, and some another: so that sir Henrie was greatlie moued therewith, and troubled the poore people verie sore, for shewing their louing hearts in such a maner, calling them rebels and traitors, with such like vile words. Besides, as she passed thorough the villages, the townesmen rang the bels, as being ioyfull of hir comming, thinking verelie it had béene otherwise than it was indeed, as the sequele proued after to the said poore men. For immediatlie the said sir Henrie hearing the same, sent his souldiors thither, who apprehended some of the ringers, setting them in the stocks, and otherwise vncourteoustie misusing other some for their good wils.

Ladie Elizabeth honourablie receiued and beloued of the people.

On the morrow hir grace passing from maister Dormers (where was for the time of hir abode there a strict watch kept) came to the lord of Tames house where she laie all night, being verie princelie interteined, both of knights and ladies, gentlemen and gentlewomen. Wherat sir Henrie Benefield grunted, and was highlie offended, saieng vnto them, that they could not tell what they did, and were not able to answer to their doings in that behalfe; letting them to vnderstand that she was the quéens maiesties prisoner, and no otherwise: aduising them therfore to take héed & beware of afterclaps. Whereunto the lord of Tame answered in this wise: that he was well aduised of his doings, being ioined in commission as well as he, adding with warrant, that hir grace might and should in his house be merrie. The next daie as she should take hir iournie from Richmond towards Woodstocke, the lord of Tame, with an other gentleman being at tables, plaieng, and dropping die crownes, the ladie Elizabeth passing by, staied & said she would sée the game plaied out, which sir Henrie Benefield would scarse permit. The game running long about, and they plaieng drop die crownes; Come on saith he: I will tarie saith she, and will sée this game out.

The gentle interteinment of ladie Elizabeth at the lord of Tames house.

M. Benefield grudgeth at the gentle interteinment of ladie Elizabeth.

The rude and vngentlemanlie behauiour of sir Henrie Benefild.

Ladie Elizabeth commeth to Woodstocke.

The strict watch kept at woodstocke.

After this, sir Henrie went vp into a chamber, where was appointed for hir grace a chaire, two cushions, and a foot carpet verie faire and princelike, wherein presumptuoulie he sat, and called one Barwike his man to pull off his boots. Which as soone as it was knowen among the ladies and gentles, euerie one mused thereat, & laughed him to scorne, obseruing his vndiscréet maners in that behalfe, as they might verie well. When supper was done, he called my lord, and willed him that all the gentlemen and ladies should withdraw themselues euerie one to his lodging, maruelling much that he would permit there such a companie, considering so great a charge committed to him. Sir Henrie (quoth my lord) content your selfe, all shall be voided, your men and all. Nay my souldiors (quoth sir Henrie) shall watch all night. The lord of Tame answered, It shall not need. Well said he, Néed or néed not, they shall so do: mistrusting belike the companie, which God knoweth was without cause.

Ladie Elizabeth garded and warded for starting awaie.

The next daie hir grace tooke hir iournie from thense to Woodstocke, where she was inclosed, as before in the tower of London, the souldiors garding and warding both within & without the wals, euerie daie to the number of three score, and in the night without the wals fortie, during the time of hir imprisonment there. At length she had gardens appointed for hir walke, which was verie comfortable to hir grace. But alwaies when she did recreat hir selfe therein, the doores were fast locked vp, in as strict maner as they were in the tower, being at the least fiue or six locks betwéene hir lodging and hir walks: sir Henrie himselfe kéeping the keies, and trusting no man therewith. Whereupon she called him hir gaoler: and he knéeling downe, desired hir grace not to call him so, for he was appointed there to be one of hir officers. From such officers (quoth she) good Lord deliuer me. And now by the way as digressing, or rather refreshing the reader, if it be lawfull in so serious a storie to recite a matter incident, & yet not impertinent to the same: occasion heere moueth, or rather inforceth me to touch briefelie what happened in the same place and time by a certeine merie conceited man, being then about hir grace: who noting the strict & strange kéeping of his ladie & mistres by the said sir Henrie Benefield, with so manie locks & doores, with such watch and ward about hir, as was strange and wonderfull, spied a goat in the ward where hir grace was. And whether to refresh hir oppressed mind, or to notifie hir strict handling by sir Henrie, either else both; he tooke it vp on his necke, and followed hir grace therewith as she was going into hir lodging. Which when she saw, she asked him what he would do with it, willing to let it alone. Unto whome the said partie answered: No by saint Marie (if it like your grace) will I not: for I can not tell whether he be one of the quéens friends or no. I will carie him to sir Henrie Benefield (God willing) to know what he is. So leauing hir grace, he went with the goat on his necke, and cezied it to sir Henrie Benefield. Who when he saw him comming with it, asked him halfe angerlie what he had there. Unto whome the partie answered, saieng: Sir (quoth he) I can not tell what he is, I pray you examine him, for I found him in the place where my ladies grace was walking, and what talke they had I can not tell. For I vnderstand him not, but he should séeme to me to be some stranger, & I thinke verelie a Welshman, for he hath a white frése coat on his backe. And forsomuch as I being the quéens subiect, and perceiuing the strict charge committed to you of hir kéeping, that no stranger should haue accesse to hir without sufficient licence, I haue here found a stranger (what he is I can not tell) in place where hir grace was walking: and therefore for the necessarie discharge of my dutie, I thought it good to bring the said stranger to you, to examine as you see cause: and so he set him downe. At which his words sir Henrie seemed much displeased, and said: Well, well, you will neuer leaue this geare I see: and so they departed.

A merie storie concerning the strict kéeping of the ladie Elizabeth.

The strictnes of sir Henrie Benefield merilie noted.

Now to returne to the matter from whence we haue digressed. After hir grace had bene there a time she made suite to the councell that she might be suffered to write to the queene, which at last was permitted. So that sir Henrie Benefield brought hir pen, inke, and paper; and standing by hir while she wrote (which he strictlie obserued) alwaies she being wearie, he would carie awaie hir letters, and bring them againe when she called for them. In the finishing therof, he would haue béene messenger to the quéene of the same. Whose request hir grace denied, saieng one of hir owne men should carie them, and that she would neither trust him nor none of his therein. Then he answering againe said; None of them durst be so bold (he trowed) to carie hir letters, being in that case. Yes (quoth she) I am assured I haue none so dishonest that would denie my request in that behalfe, but will be as willing to serue me now as before. Well (said he) my commission is to the contrarie, and I maie not so suffer it. Hir grace replieng againe said; You charge me verie often with your commission, I praie God you maie iustlie answer the cruell dealing you vse towards me.

The cruell dealing of sir Henrie Benefield to the ladie Elizabeth reprooued.

Then he kneeling downe, desired hir grace to thinke and consider how he was a seruant, and put in trust there by the queene to serue hir maiestie, protesting that if the case were hirs, he would as willinglie serue hir grace, as now he did the queenes highnesse. For the which his answer hir grace thanked him, desiring God that she might neuer haue need of such seruants as he was; declaring further to him, that his doings towards hir were not good nor answerable, but more than all the friends he had would stand by. To whom sir Henrie replied & said, that there was no remedie but his doings must be answered, and so they should, trusting to make good account thereof. The cause which moued hir grace so to saie, was for that he would not permit hir letters to be carried foure or fiue daies after the writing thereof. But in fine he was content to send for hir gentleman from the towne of Woodstocke, demanding of him whether he durst enterprise the carriage of hir graces letters to the quéene or no. And he answered; Yea sir, that I dare, and will with all my hart. Wherevpon sir Henrie halfe against his stomach toke them vnto him. Then about the eight of June came downe doctor Owen & doctor Wendie, sent by the queene to hir grace, for that she was sicklie; who ministring to hir, and letting hir bloud, tarried there and attended on hir grace fiue or six daies. Then she being well amended, they returned againe to the court, making their good report to the queene and the councell of hir graces behauior and humblenesse towards the quéenes highnesse. Which hir maiestie hearing, toke verie thankfullie: but the bishops thereat repined, loked blacke in the mouth, and told the quéene, they maruelled that she submitted not hir selfe to hir maiesties mercie, considering that she had offended hir highnesse.

The letters of the ladie Elizabeth sent to the quéene.

Doctor Owen and doctor Wendie quéen Maries physicians sent to the ladie Elizabeth.

The popish prelats repined against the ladie Elizabeth.

About this time hir grace was requested by a secret friend, to submit hir selfe to the quéenes maiestie, which would be verie well taken, and to hir great quiet and commoditie. Vnto whome she answered, that she would neuer submit hir selfe to them whome she neuer offended. For (quoth shée) if I haue offended and am guiltie, I then craue no mercie, but the law, which I am certeine (quoth she) I should haue had per this, if it could be proued by me. For I know my selfe (I thanke God) to be out of the danger thereof, wishing that I were as cleare out of the perill of mine enimies, & then I am assured I should not so be locked and bolted vp within wals and doores as I am. God giue them a better mind when it pleaseth him. About this time was there a great consulting among the bishops and gentlemen touching a marriage for hir grace, which some of the Spaniards wished to be with some stranger, that she might go out of the realme with hir portion; some saieng one thing, and some another.

Ladie Ladie Elizabeth to be remoued to Woodstocke.

Counsell of the papists to marrie the ladie Elizabeth to a Spaniard.

A lord (who shall be here nameles) being there at last said, that the king should neuer haue anie quiet common wealth in England, vnlesse hir head were stricken from the shoulders. Wherevnto the Spaniards answered saieng; God forbid that the king and maister should haue that mind to consent to such a mischéefe. This was the courteous answer of the Spaniards to the Englishmen, speaking after that sort against their owne countrie. From that daie the Spaniards neuer left off their good persuasions to the king, that the like honor he should neuer obteine, as he should in deliuering the ladie Elizabeths grace out of prison; whereby at length she was happilie released from the same. Here is a plaine and euident example of the good clemencie and nature of the king and his councellors towards hir grace (praised be God therefore) who moued their harts therein. Then herevpon she was sent for shortlie after to come to Hampton court.

wicked counsell giuen of the Lord Paget against the ladie Elizabeth.

Spaniards more fauourable to ladie Elizabeth than some Englishmen

But before hir remouing awaie from Woodstocke, we will a little staie to declare in what dangers hir life was during this time she there remained. First thorough fire, which began to kindle betweene the boords & séeling vnder the chamber where she laie, whether by a sparke of fire, gotten into a cranie, or whether of purpose by some that meant hir no good, the Lord doth know. Neuertheles a worshipfull knight of Oxfordshire, which was there ioined the same time with sir Henrie Benefield in kéeping that ladie (who then toke vp the boords and quenched the fire) verelie supposed it to be done of purpose. Furthermore it is thought, and also affirmed (if it be true) of one Paule Penie a kéeper of Woodstocke, a notorious russian and a butcherlie wretch, that he was appointed to kill the said ladie Elizabeth, who both saw the man being often in hir sight, and also knew thereof.

Ladie Elizabeth in danger of fire.

Ladie Elizabeth in danger of killing.

Another time one of the priuie chamber, a great man about the quéene, and chiefe darling of Stephan Gardiner, named maister James Vallet came to Blandenbridge a mile from Woodstocke, with twentie or thirtie priuie cotes, and sent for sir Henrie Benefield to come and speake with him. But as God would, which disposed all things after the purpose of his owne will; so it happened, that a little before the said sir Henrie Benefield was sent for by post to the councell, leaning strict word behind him with his brother, that no man whatsoeuer he were, though comming with a bill of the quéenes hand, or anie other warrant, should haue accesse to hir before his returne againe. By reason whereof it so fell out, that maister Benefields brother comming to him at the bridge, would suffer him in no case approch in, who otherwise (as is supposed) was appointed violentlie to murther the innocent ladie. In the life of Stephan Gardiner we declared before, pag. 1787, how that the ladie Elizabeth, being in the tower, a writ came downe subscribed with certeine hands of the councell for hir execution. Which if it were certeine (as it is reported) Winchester (no doubt) was deuiser of that mischéefous drift. And doubtlesse the same

Another conspiracie & murther against ladie Elizabeth.

Ladie Elizabeth preserued by the lords prouidence from execution in the tower.

Achitophell

Achitophell had brought his impious purpose that day to passe, had not the fatherlie prouidence of almightie God (who is euer stronger than the diuell) stirred vp maister Bridges lieutenant at that time of the tower, to come in hast to the queene, to giue certificat therof, & to know further hir consent touching hir sisters death. Wherupon it followed, that all that deuise was disappointed, & Winchesters diuelish platforme which he said he had cast, thorough the Lords great goodnes came to no effect. Where moreouer is to be noted, that during the prisonment of this ladie and princesse, one maister Edmund Tremaine was on the racke, and maister Smithwike, and diuerse other in the tower were examined, and diuerse offers made to them to accuse the giltlesse ladie, being in hir captiuitie. Howbeit all that notwithstanding, no matter could be proued by all examinations, as the the same time lieng at Woodstocke had certeine intelligence, by the meanes of one John Gater, who vnder a colorable pretense of a letter vnto mistresse Cleue from hir father, was let in, and so gaue them secretlie to vnderstand of all this matter. Wherevpon the ladie Elizabeth at hir departing out from Woodstocke, wrote these verses with hir diamond in a glasse window verie legiblie as herefolloweth:

winchesters platforme ouerthrowne: wherof read before pa. 1787

Much suspected by me,
Nothing proued can be:
Quoth Elizabeth prisoner.

verses writen by ladie Elisabeth in the glasse window.

And thus much touching the troubles of ladie Elisabeth at Woodstocke. Whereunto this is more to be added, that during the same time, the lord of Tame had labored to the queene, and became suretie for hir, to haue hir from Woodstocke to his house, and had obteined grant thereof. Wherevpon preparation was made accordinglie, and all things readie in expectation of hir comming. But through the procurement either of maister Benefield, or by the doing of Winchester hir mortall enimie, letters came ouer night to the contrarie: whereby hir iourne was stopped. Thus this worthie ladie oppressed with continuall sorrow, could not be permitted to haue recourse to anie friends she had; but still in the hands of hir enimies was left desolate, and vtterlie destitute of all that might refresh a dolfull hart, fraught full of terror and thraldome. Wherevpon no maruell, if she hearing vpon a time out of hir garden at Woodstocke, a certeine milkmaid singing pleasantlie, wished hir selfe to be a milkemaid as she was, saieng that hir case was better, and life more merier than was hirs in that state as she was.

ladie Elizabeth with hir selfe to be a milkemaid.

Now after these things thus declared, to proceed further where we left before, sir Henrie Benefield and his soldiors, with the lord of Tame, and sir Rafe Chamberleine, garding and waiting vpon hir, the first night from Woodstocke she came to Ricot. In which iourneie such a mightie wind did blow, that hir seruants were faine to hold down hir clothes about hir: in so much that hir hood was twise or thrise blowen from hir head. Wherevpon she desirous to returne to a certeine gentlemans house there neere, could not be suffered by sir Henrie Benefield so to do: but was constreined vnder an hedge to trim hir head as well as she could. After this, the nert night they iourneied to maister Dormers, & so to Colbroke, where she late all that night at the George: and by the waie comming to Colbroke, certeine of hir graces gentlemen and yeomen met hir to the number of three score, much to all their comforts, which had not seene hir grace of long season before: notwithstanding they were commanded in the queenes name immediatlie to depart the towne, to both their and hir graces no little heauinesse, who could not be suffered once to speake with them. So that night all hir men were taken from hir saue hir gentleman vsher, three gentlewomen, two grooms, and one of hir wardrobe, the soldiors watching and warding about the house, and the close shut vp within hir prison.

another conspiracie against ladie Elizabeth renewed from Woodstocke to Hampton court.

The nert daie following, hir grace entred Hampton court on the backeside, into the princes lodging, the doores being shut to hir: and she garded with soldiors, as before, late there a fortnight at the least, yet euer anie had recourse vnto hir. At length came the lord William Howard, who maruellous honourablie vsed hir grace. Wher at she tooke much comfort, & requested him to be a meane that she might speake with some of the councell. To whome (not long after) came the bishop of Winchester, the lord of Arundell, the lord of Shrewesburie, and secretarie Peter, who with great humilitie humbled themselues vnto hir grace. She againe likewise saluting them, said: My lords (quoth she) I am glad to see you: for me thinke I haue beene kept a great while from you desolatelie alone. Wherefore I would desire you to be a meane to the king and queenes maiesties, that I maie be deliuered from prison, wherein I haue beene kept a long space, as to you my lords it is not vnknowne.

lord William Howard gentle and fauorable to ladie Elisabeth.

When she had spoken, Stephan Gardiner the bishop of Winchester kneeled downe, and requested that she would submit hir selfe to the quenes grace, and in so doing he had no doubt but that hir maiestie would be good vnto hir. She making answer that rather than she would so do, she would lie in prison all the daies of hir life, adding that she craued no mercie at hir maiesties hand, but rather desired the law, if euer she did offend hir maiestie in thought, word, or deed. And besides this, in yeelding (quoth she) I should speake against my selfe, and confesse my selfe to be an offendor, which neuer was towards hir maiestie: by occasion whereof the king and the queene might euer hereafter conceiue of me an ill opinion: and therefore I saie my lords, it were better for me to lie in prison for the truth, than to be abroad and suspected of my prince. And so they departed, promising to declare hir message to the queene.

ladie Elisabeth requested by winchester to submit hir selfe to the quenes mercie.

ladie Elisabeth standeth to be tried by the law.

On the nert daie the bishop of Winchester came againe vnto hir grace, and kneeling downe, declared that the queene marueled that she would so stoutlie vse hir selfe, not confessing to haue offended: so that it should seeme the quenes maiestie wrongfullie to haue imprisoned hir grace. Naie (quoth the ladie Elisabeth) it pleaseth hir to punish me as she thinketh good. Well quoth Gardiner, hir maiestie willeth me to tell you, that you must tell an other tale yer that you be set libertie. Hir grace answered, that she had as leefe be in prison with honestie and truth, as to be abroad suspected of hir maiestie: and this that I haue said, I will (said she) stand vnto, for I will neuer belie my selfe. Winchester againe kneeled down and said: Then your grace hath the vantage of me and other the lords for your long and wrong imprisonment. What vantage I haue (quoth she) you know, taking God to record I seeke no vantage at your hands for your so dealing with me, but God forgiue you and me also. With that the rest kneeled, desiring hir grace that all might be forgotten, and so departed, she being fast locked vp againe. A seauen nights after, the queene sent for hir grace at ten of the clocke in the night to speake with hir: for she had not seene hir in two yeares before. Yet for all that she was amazed at the sudden sending for, thinking it had beene worse than afterwards it proued, and desired hir gentlemen and gentlewomen to praie for hir, for that she could not tell whether euer she should see them againe or no.

Talke againe betweene Winchester & ladie Elisabeth.

Ladie Elisabeth denied to confesse ante fault donne to the queene.

Ladie Elisabeth sent for to the queene.

Ladie Elisabeth brought to the quenes bedchamber.

At which time sir Henrie Benefield with mistresse Clarencius comming in, hir grace was brought into the garden vnto a staires fot that went into the quænes lodging, hir graces gentlewomen watting vpon hir, hir gentleman vsher and hir grooms going before with torches, where hir gentlemen and gentlewomen being commanded to staie all saving ons woman, maistresse Clarencius conducted hir to the quænes bedchamber where hir maiestie was. At the sight of whome hir grace kneeled downe, and desired God to preserue hir maiestie, not mistrusting but that she should trie hir selfe as true a subiect towards hir maiestie, as euer did ante, and desired hir maiestie euen so to iudge of hir: and said that she should not find hir to the contrarie, whatsoeuer report otherwise had gone of hir. To whome the quæne answered: You will not confesse your offense, but stand stoutlie to your truth: I praie God it maie so fall out. If it doth not, quoth the ladie Elisabeth, I request neither fauour nor pardon at your maiesties hands. Well said the quæne, you stillie still perseuere in your truth. Belike you will not confesse but that you haue bæne wrongfullie punished. I must not saie so (if it please your maiestie) to you.

Talke betweene the quæne and ladie Elisabeth.

Why then (said the quæne) belike you will to others. No, if it please your maiestie (quoth she) I haue borne the burthen, and must beare it; I humblie beseech your maiestie to haue a good opinion of me, and to thinke me to be your true subiect, not onelie from the beginning hitherto, but for euer, as long as life lasteth: and so they departed with verie few comfortable words of the quæne, in English: but what she said in Spanish, God knoweth. It is thought that king Philip was there behind a cloth, and not seene, and that he shewed himselfe a verie friend in that matter, &c. Thus hir grace departing, went vnto hir lodging againe, and the seauenth night after was released of sir Henrie Benefield hir gaoler (as she tearmed him) and his soldiors, and so hir grace being set at libertie from imprisonment, went into the countrie, and had appointed to go with hir sir Thomas pope, one of quæne Maries councellors, and one of hir gentlemen vshers, maister Gage, and thus strictlie was she looked vnto all quæne Maries time. And this is the discourse of hir highnesse imprisonment.

Small comfort at the quænes hand toward hir sister.

King Philip thought to be a friend to ladie Elisabeth.

Ladie Elisabeth by Gods prouidence set at libertie.

Sir Henrie Benefield discharged.

Maistresse Ashleie sent to the Fleet.

Three gentlewomen of ladie Elisabeths sent to the tower.

Note the wonderfull working of the Lords prouidence in sauing of ladie Elisabeth.

Ladie Elisabeth deliuered by the death of Stephan Gardiner.

Then there came to Lambheire, maister Gerningham, and maister Norris gentleman vsher, quæne Maries men, who toke awaie from hir grace maistresse Ashleie to the Fleet, and three other of hir gentlewomen to the tower: which thing was no little trouble to hir grace, saieng: that she thought they would fetch all awaie at the end. But God be praised, shortlie after was fetched awaie Gardiner thorough the mercifull prouidence of the Lords goodnesse, by occasion of whose opportune decease (as is partlie touched in this storie before, pag. 1705) the life of this excellent princesse, the wealth of all England, was preserued. For this is credible to be supposed, that the said wicked Gardiner of Winchester had long laboured his wits, and to this onelie most principall marke bent all his deuises, to bring this our happie and deere souereigne out of the waie, as both by his words and doings before notified maie sufficientlie appeare.

But such was the gratious and fauourable prouidence of the Lord, to the preseruation not onlie of hir roiall maiestie, but also the miserable and woefull state of this whole Iland, and poore subiects of the same, whereby the proud platforms and péeuish practises of this wretched Achitophell preuailed not: but contrariwise, both he, and all the snares and traps of his pernicious counsell laid against an other, were turned to a net to catch himselfe, according to the prouerbe: Malum consilium consultori pessimum. After the death of this Gardiner, followed the death also and dropping awaie of other hir enimies, whereby by little and little hir ieopardie decreased, feare diminished, hope of comfort began to appeare as out of a darke cloud. And albeit as yet hir grace had no full assurance of perfect safetie, yet more gentle intertainment dailie did grow vnto hir, till at length to the moneth of November, and seauenteenth daie of the same, three yeares after the death of Stephan Gardiner, followed the death of quæne Marie, as heretofore at large hath bæne truelie declared. Although this historie following be not directlie appertaining to the former matter, yet the same maie here not vnaptlie be inserted, for that it doth discouer and shew forth the malicious hearts of the papists towards this vertuous quæne our souereigne ladie in the time of quæne Marie hir sister, which is reported as a truth credible told by sundrie honest persons, of whome some are yet aliue, and do testifie the same. The matter whereof is this.

A note of a storie declaring the malignant hart of the papists towards ladie Elisabeth.

Some after the stirre of Wiat and the troubles that happened to this quæne for that cause: it fortuned one Robert Farrer a haberdasher of London, dwelling neere vnto Newgate market, in a certeine morning to be at the Rose tauerne (from whence he was seldome absent) and falling to his common drinke, as he was euer accustomed, and hauing in his companie three other companions like vnto himselfe, it chanced the same time one Laurence Shirtffe grocer, dwelling also not farre from thence, to come into the said tauerne, and finding there the said Farrer (to whome of long time he had borne good will) sat downe in the seat to drinke with him, and Farrer hauing in his full cups, and not hauing consideration who were present began to talke at large, and namelie against the ladie Elisabeth, and said: That gill hath bæne one of the chiefe doers of this rebellion of Wiat, and before all be done, she and all the heretikes hir partakers shall well vnderstand of it. Some of them hope that she shall haue the crowne, but she and they (I trust) that so hope, shall hop headlesse, or be fried with fagots before she come to it.

Robert Farrer of London a sore enimie to ladie Elisabeth.

Laurence Shirtffe, sworne frier and seruant ladie Elisabeth his mistresse.

Robert Farrer raileth against ladie Elisabeth.

The afforesaid Laurence Shirtffe grocer, being then seruant vnto the said ladie Elisabeth, & sworne vnto hir grace, could no longer forbeare his old acquaintance and neighbor Farrer in speaking so vnreuerentlie of his mistresse, but said to him: Farrer, I haue loued thée as a neighbour, and haue had a good opinion of thée, but hearing of thée that I now heare, I defie thée: and I tell thée I am hir graces sworne seruant, and she is a princesse, and the daughter of a noble king, and it euill becommeth thée to call hir a gill, and for thy so saieng, I saie thou art a knaue, & I will complaine vpon thée. Do thy worst said Farrer, for that I said, I will saie againe: and so Shirtffe came from his companie. Shortlie after, the said Shirtffe taking an honest neighbour with him, went before the commissioners to complaine: the which commissioners sat then at Boner the bishop of Londons house beside Pauls, and there were present Boner then being the chiefe commissioner, the lord Mordant, sir John Baker, doctor Oetbishire chancellor to the bishop, doctor Storie, doctor Harpsfield, and others. The aforesaid Shirtffe comming before them, declared the maner of the said Robert Farrers talke against the ladie Elisabeth. Boner answered, Peraduenture you toke him worse than he meant. Yea my lord (said doctor Storie) if you knew the man as I do, you would saie that there is not a better catholike, nor an honester man in the citie of London.

The part of a good trustie seruant.

Robert Farrer complained of to the commissioners, but no redresse was had.

* A knaue.

Well, said Shirtffe, my lord, she is my gratious ladie and mistresse, and it is not to be suffered that such a varlet as he is, should call so honorable a princesse by the name of a gill: and I saw yesterdaie in the court that my lord cardinall Pole méeting hir in the

How the Lord here began to worke for ladie Elisabeth.

the chamber of presence, kneeled downe on his knees and kissed hir hand: and I saw also that king Philip meeting hir, made hir such obeisance that his knee touched the ground: and then (me thinketh) it were to much to suffer such a varlet as this is, to call hir gill, and to wish them to hop headlesse that shall wish hir grace to inioie the possession of the crowne when God shall send it vnto hir as in the right of hir inheritance. Yea! Staie there (quoth Boner.) When God sendeth it vnto hir, let hir inioie it. But trulie (said he) the man that spake the words that you haue reported, meant nothing against the ladie Elisabeth your mistresse, and no more do we: but he like an honest and zealous man feared the alteration of religion, which euerie good man ought to feare: and therfore (said Boner) good man go your waies home and report well of vs towards your mistresse, and we will send for Farrer and rebuke him for his rash and vndiscreet words, and we trust he will not do the like againe. And thus Shirifke came awaie, and Farrer had a flap with a fox taile. Now that ye maie be fullie informed of the aforesaid Farrer, whome doctor Storie praised for so good a man, ye shall vnderstand that the same Farrer, hauing two daughters, being handsome maidens, the elder of them for a summe of monie he himselfe deliuered vnto sir Richard Cholmleie to be at his commandement; the other he sold to a knight called sir William Goddolphin to be at his commandement: whome he made his lackie and so carried hir with him, being apparelled in mans apparell to Bullongne, and the said Farrer followed the campe. He also was a great and a horrible blaphemer of God, and a common accuser of honest and quiet men, also a common drunkard. And now I referre the life of these catholiks to your iudgement, to thinke of them as you please.

How bishop Boner and doctor Storie bear with him that railed against ladie Elisabeth.

Note the vngodlie life of these catholikes.

But of this matter enough and to much. Now let vs returne where we left before, which was at the death of queene Marie. After whose decease succéded hir foresaid sister ladie Elisabeth into the right of the crowne of England: who after so long restreinement, so great dangers escaped, such blusterous stormes ouerblowne, so manie iniuries digested and wrongs sustained by the mightie protection of our mercifull God, to our no small comfort and commoditie, hath béene exalted and erected out of thrall to libertie, out of danger to peace and quietnesse, from dread to dignitie, from miserie to maiestie, from mourning to ruling; briefle, of a prisoner made a princesse, and placed in hir throne royall, proclamed now queene, with as manie glad hearts of hir subiects, as euer was anie king or queene in this realme before hir, or euer shall be (I dare saie) hereafter. Touching whose flourishing state, hir princelie reigne and peaceable gouernement, with other things diuerse and sundrie incident to the same, and especiallie touching the great stirres and alterations which haue happened in other forren nations, and also partlie among our selues here at home, forsomuch as the tractation hereof requireth an huge volume by it selfe, I shall therefore deferre the reader to the next booke or section insuing: wherein (if the Lord so please to sustaine me with leaue and life) I maie haue to discourse of all and singular such matters done and atchiued in these our latter dales and memorie, more at large.

Ladie Elisabeth proclamed queene the same daie that queene Marie died.

The Lord make England thankefull to him for his great benefits.

He meaneth his owne woorke; not this volume or anie part thereof.

Now then after these so great afflictions falling vpon this realme, from the first beginning of queene Maries reigne, wherein so manie men, women, and children were burned, manie imprisoned and in prisons starued, diuerse exiled, some spoiled of goods and possessions, a great number driuen from house to house, so manie weeping eies, so manie sobbing harts, so manie children made fatherlesse, so manie fathers bereft of their wiues and children, so manie vexed in conscience, and diuerse against conscience constrained to recant; and in conclusion, neuer a good man almost in all the realme but suffered something during all the time of this bloudie persecution: after all this (I saie) now we are come at length (the Lord be praised) to the seuentéenth of Nouember, which daie as it brought to the persecuted members of Christ, rest from their carefull mourning, so it easeth me somewhat likewise of my laborious writing, by the death I meane of queene Marie, who being long sicke before vpon the said seuentéenth daie of Nouember, in the yeare aboue said, about three or foure of the clocke in the morning, yéelded hir life to nature, and hir kingdome to queene Elisabeth hir sister.

Nouemb 17. queene Marie endeth.

Queene Elisabeth beginneth hir reigne.

As touching the maner of whose death, some saie that she died of a timpanie, some by hir much sighing before hir death supposed she died of thought and sorrow. Wherevpon hir councell séeing hir sighing, and desirous to know the cause, to the end they might minister the more readie consolation vnto hir, feared (as they said) that she toke some thought for the kings maiestie hir husband, which was gone from hir. To whome she answering againe; In deed (said she) that may be one cause, but that is not the greatest wound that pearseth mine oppressed mind: but what that was she would not expresse to them. Albeit afterward she opened the matter more plainlie to mistresse Rise and mistresse Clarentius (if it be true that they told me, which heard it of mistresse Rise himselfe) who then being most familiar with hir, and most bold about hir, told hir that they feared she toke thought for king Philips departing from hir. Not that onelie (said she) but when I am dead and opened, you shall find Calis lieng in my hart, &c. Which one supposing to be true, hath left this report:

The maner of queene Maries death.

*Hispani oppidulo amisso contabuit vxor,
Quam cruciatu ægro confecerat anxia cura.

* Caleto.

Q. Marie toke thought for the losse of Calis.

And here an end of queene Marie, and of hir persecution, during the time of hir misgouernment. Of which queene this trulie may be affirmed and left in storie for a perpetuall memorall or epitaph for all kings and queenes that shall succéd hir to be noted, that before hir neuer was read in storie of anie king or queene of England since the time of king Lucius, vnder whom in time of peace, by hanging, heading, burning, and prisoning: so much christian bloud, so manie Englishmens liues were spilled within this realme, as vnder the said queene Marie for the space of foure yeares was to be séene, and I beséech the Lord neuer may be séene hereafter.

More English bloud spilled in queene Maries time, than euer was in anie kings reigne before hir.

Now, for so much as queene Marie, during all the time of hir reigne, was such a vehement aduersarie and persecutor against the sincere professors of Christ Jesus and his gospell: for the which there be manie which do highlie magnifie and approue hir doings therein, reputing hir religion to be sound and catholike, and hir procéedings to be most acceptable and blessed of almightie God: to the intent therfore that all men may vnderstand, how the blessing of the Lord God did not onelie not procéed with hir procéedings; but contrarie, rather how his manifest displeasure euer wrought against hir, in plaging both hir and hir realme, and in subuerting all hir counsels and attempts, what soeuer she toke in hand: we will bestow a litle time therein, to perpend and surueie the whole course of hir doings and cheuances: and consider what successe she had in the same. Which being well considered, we shall find neuer no reigne of anie prince in this land, or anie other, which had euer to shew in it (for the proportion of time) so manie arguments of Gods great wrath and displeasure, as was to be séene in the reigne of this queene Marie,

The reigne of queene Maries how vnprosperous it was both to hir & hir realme in all respects.

Queene Marie neuer had good successe in anie thing she went about.

whether we behold the shortnesse of hir time, or the vnfortunate euent of all hir purposes? Who seemed neuer to purpose anie thing that came luckilie to passe, neither did anie thing frame to hir purpose, what soeuer she toke in hand touching hir owne priuat affaires.

A good king alwaies maketh a flourishing realme.

Of good kings we read in the scripture, in shewing mercie and pitie, in seeking Gods will in his word, and subuerting the monuments of idolatrie, how God blessed their waies, increased their honors, and mightilie prospered all their procéedings: as we sée in king Dauid, Salomon, Iosias, Iosaphat, Ezechias, with such others. Manasses made the stréets of Hierusalem to swim with the bloud of his subiects, but what came of it the text doth testifie. Of queene Elisabeth, which now reigneth among vs, this we must néeds saie, which we sée, that she in sparing the bloud, not onelie of Gods seruants, but also of Gods enimies, hath doubled now the reigne of queene Marie hir sister, with such aboundance of peace and prosperitie, that it is hard to saie, whether the realme of England felt more of Gods wrath in queene Maries time, or of Gods fauour and mercie in these so blessed and peaceable daies of queene Elisabeth.

Comparison betweene the reigne of Q. Marie and queene Elisabeth.

Gamaliels reason. Acts. 5.

Gamaliell speaking his mind in the councell of the Pharisels concerning Christes religion, gaue this reason, that if it were of God, it should continue, who soeuer said naie: if it were not, it could not stand. So may it be said of queene Marie and hir Romish religion, that if it were so perfect and catholike as they pretend, and the contrarie faith of the gospellers were so detestable and hereticall as they make it, how commeth it then, that this so catholike a queene, such a necessarie piller of his spouse the church continued no longer, till she had vtterlie rooted out of the land this hereticall generation? Yea how chanced it rather, that almightie God, to spare these poore heretikes, rooted out queene Marie so soone from hir throne, after she had reigned but onelie fiue yeares and fiue moneths?

Queene Marie prospered so long as she went not against the Lord.

Q. Maries promise to the gospellers broken.

Now further more, how God blessed hir waies and indeuors in the meane time, while she thus persecuted the true seruants of God, remaineth to be discussed. Where first this is to be noted, that when she first began to stand for the title of the crowne, and yet had wrought no resistance against Christ and his gospell, but had promised hir faith to the Suffolke men, to maintaine the religion left by king Edward hir brother, so long God went with hir, aduanced hir, and by the means of the gospellers brought hir to the possession of the realme. But after that she breaking hir promise with God and man, began to take part with Stephan Gardiner, and had giuen ouer hir supremasie vnto the pope, by and by Gods blessing left hir, neither did anie thing well thriue with hir afterward during the whole time of hir regiment. For first incontinentlie the fairest and greatest ship she had, called great Harrie, was burned: such a vessell as in all these parts of all Europe was not to be matched.

The ship called the great Harrie burned.

Q. Maries mariage with a stranger.

Q. Marie disappointed of hir purpose in crowning king Philip.

Q. Marie stopped of hir will in restoring abbeie lands.

Then would she néeds bring in king Philip, and by hir strange marriage with him, make the whole realme of England subiect vnto a stranger. And all that notwithstanding, either that she did or was able to do, she could not bring to passe to set the crowne of England vpon his head. With king Philip also came in the pope and his popish masse: with whome also hir purpose was to restore againe the monks and nunnes vnto their places, neither lacked there all kind of attempts to the vttermost of hir abilitie: and yet therein also God stopt hir of hir will, that it came not forward. After this, what a dearth happened in hir time here in hir land, the like whereof hath not lightlie in England béene séene, in so much that in sundrie places hir poore subiects were faine to féed of acorns for want of corne?

The victorie of king Edward the sixt in Scotland.

Furthermore, where other kings are wont to be renowmed by some worthie victorie and prowesse by them atchiued, let vs now sée what valiant victorie was gotten in queene Maries daies. King Edward the first hir blessed brother, how manie rebellions did he suppresse in Deuonshire, in Norfolke, in Oxfordshire, and else where? What a famous victorie in his time was gotten in Scotland, by the singular working (no doubt) of Gods blessed hand rather than by anie expectation of man? King Edward the third (which was the eleuenth king from the conquest) by princelie puissance purchased Calis vnto England, which hath béene kept English euer since, till at length came queene Marie, the eleuenth likewise from the said king Edward, which lost Calis from England againe: so that the winnings of this queene were verie small; what the losses were, let other men iudge.

The ill lucke of Q. Marie in losing of Calis.

The eleuenth king from the conquest got Calis, and the eleuenth againe after him lost it.

The ill lucke of queene Marie in hir childbirth.

Hitherto the affaires of queene Marie haue had no great good successe, as you haue heard. But neuer worse successe had anie woman, than had she in hir childbirth. For séeing one of these two must néeds be granted, that either she was with child or not with child; if she were with child and did trauell, why was it not séene? if she were not, how was all the realme deluded? And in the meane while where were all the praiers, the solemne processions, the deuout masses of the catholike cleargie? Why did they not preuaile with God, if their religion were so godlie as they pretended? If their masses Ex opere operato be able to fetch Christ from heauen, & to reach downe to purgatorie, how chanced then they could not reach to the queens chamber, to helpe hir in hir trauell, if she had béene with child in déed? If not, how then came it to passe, that all the catholike church of England did so erre, and was so dispitelie deceiued? Queene Marie, after these manifold plagues and corrections, which might sufficientlie admonish hir of Gods displeasure prouoked against hir, would not yet ceasse hir persecution, but still continued more & more to reuenge hir catholike zeale vpon the lords faithfull people, setting fire to their poore bodies by dozens & halfe dozens together. Whereupon Gods wrathfull indignation increasing more and more against hir, ceassed not to touch hir more neare with priuat misfortunes and calamities.

Q. Marie left desolate of K. Philip hir husband.

For after that he had taken from hir the fruit of children (which chiefelie and aboue all things she desired) then he bereft hir of that, which of all earthlie things should haue béene hir chiefe staie of honour, and staffe of comfort; that is, withdrew from hir the affection and companie euen of hir owne husband, by whose mariage she had promised before to hirselfe whole heapes of such ioy and felicitie. But now the omnipotent gouernour of all things, so turned the whéele of hir owne spinning against hir, that hir high buildings of such ioies and felicities came all to a caskell come downe, hir hopes being confounded, hir purposes disappointed, and she now brought to desolation: who séemed neither to haue the fauour of God, nor the hearts of hir subiects, nor yet the loue of hir husband: who neither had fruit by him while she had him, neither could now inioy him whome she had maried, neither yet was in libertie to marrie anie other whome she might inioy. Marke here (christian reader) the wofull aduersitie of this queene, & learne withall, what the Lord can do when mans wilfulnes will néeds resist him, and will not be ruled.

The ill lucke of Q. Marie with hir husband.

The finall end and death of Q. Marie.

At last, when all these faire admonitions would take no place with the queene, nor mooue hir to reuoke hir bloudie lawes, nor to staie the tyrannie of hir priests, nor yet to spare hir owne subiects; but that that the poꝛe ſeruants of God were dꝛawne dailie by heapes moſt pittifullie as ſhæpe to the ſlaughter, it ſo pleaſed the heauenlie maieſtie of almightie God, when no other remedie would ſerue, by death to cut hir off, which in hir life ſo little regarded the life of others: giuing hir thꝛone, which ſhe abuſed to the deſtruction of Chꝛiſts church and people, to another, who moꝛe temperatlie and quietlie could guide the ſame, after ſhe had reigned here the ſpace of fiue yeares and fiue moneths. The ſhoꝛtneſſe of which yeares and reigne, vneth we find in anie other ſtoꝛie of king oꝛ quéene ſince the conqueſt oꝛ before (being come to their owne gouernement) ſaue onelie in king Richard the third. Which reigne was ſo rough and rigoꝛous, notwithſtanding the ſhoꝛtneſſe of the ſame, that it became a verie ſpectacle to all chꝛiſtendome; and the maner of dealing vſed vnder hir gouernment was ſo deteſtable, that as it was rare, ſo it raiſed vp a rare repoꝛt, euen among ſtrangers, whoſe heads being fuller of matter than their pens full of inke, wꝛote in tearmes bꝛode inough of the tumults and ſlaughters happening in hir vnhapie daies: among whome I will ſet downe foꝛ a ſaie a few verſes dꝛawne out of an hundꝛed and od, pꝛeſented to Henrie the French king of that name the ſecond, touching the conqueſt of Calis, whereat foꝛ toy the French were rauiſhed. Thus therfoꝛe he ſaith:

Q. Marie reigned fiue yeares & fiue moneths.

The ſhoꝛtnes of Q. Maries reigne noted.

Ex Simone Schardio de capto Caleto, pag. 1968.

Regina pacem neſcia perpeti,
Iam ſpreta mæret fœdera, iam Dei
Iram pauet ſibi imminentem,
Vindicis & furiæ flagellum.
Ciues & hoſtes iam pariter ſuos
Odit pauétq, & ciuium & hoſtium
Hirudo communis, cruorem
Aequè auidè ſitiens vtrúnque.
Huic luce terror Martius aſſonat,
Diræq, cædis mens ſibi conſcia,
Vmbræq, nocturnæ quietem
Terrificis agitant figuris.

Theſe ſhoꝛt verſes were thus ſubſcribed. La. B. Te.

And thus much here, as in the cloſing vp of this ſtoꝛie, I thought to inſinuat, touching the vnluckie and vnfull reigne of quéene Marie: not foꝛ anie detraction to hir place and ſtate roiall, wherevnto ſhe was called of the Loꝛd: but to this onlie intent and effect, that foꝛſomuch as ſhe would nœds ſet hirſelfe ſo confidentlie to woꝛke and ſtriue againſt the Loꝛd and his pꝛoceedings, all readers and rulers not onelie maie ſée how the Loꝛd did woꝛke againſt hir theꝛfoꝛe, but alſo by hir maie be aduertiſed and learne what a perillous thing it is foꝛ men and women in authoꝛitie, vpon blind zeale and opinion, to ſtirre vp perſecution in Chꝛiſts church, to the effuſion of chꝛiſtian bloud, leaſt it pꝛoue in the end with them (as it did here) that while they thinke to perſecute heretikes, they ſtumble at the ſame ſtone as did the Iewes in perſecuting Chꝛiſt and his true members to death, to their owne confuſion and deſtruction.]

An admonition to all chꝛiſtian rulers.

Leauing quéene Marie being dead & gone, you are to vnderſtand and note, that the ſame euening, oꝛ (as ſome haue wꝛitten) the next daie after the ſaid quéens death, Cardinall Pole the biſhop of Romes legat departed out of this life, hauing béene not long afoꝛe made archbiſhop of Canturburie: he died at his houſe ouer againſt Weſtminſter commonlie called Lambeth, and was buried in Chꝛiſts church at Canturburie. This cardinall was deſcended of the noble houſe of Clarence, that is to ſaie, of one of the yonger ſonnes of Margaret countеſſe of Saliſburie, daughter of Geoꝛge duke of Clarence, bꝛother to K. Edward the fourth. ¶ So that hereby you haue a pꝛoofe of the nobleneſſe of his birth, but how barbarous he was of behauiour, and how vnnaturall in the courſe of his life (which blemiſhed the honour of his deſcent) it maie appeare by the oꝛder and maner of his viſitation in Cambꝛidge, with the condemning, taking vp, and burning both the bones and bookes of Bucer and Paulus Phagius, as alſo by the deſpitefull handling and madneſſe of the papiſts towards Peter Martyꝛs wife at Oꝛford, taken vp from hir graue at the commandement of the ſaid cardinall, and after buried in a dunghill: ſo that in his actions he ſhewed himſelfe (as he is noted) earneſt in burning the bodies of the dead. And foꝛ further teſtimonie of his crueltie, it ſhall not be impertinent out of maiſter Fox, here to adioine and ſet foꝛth to the eies of the woꝛld, the blind and bloudie articles ſet out by cardinall Pole, to be inquired vpon within his dioces of Canturburie. Whereby it maie the better appeare what yokes and ſnares of fond and fruitleſſe traditions were laid vpon the poꝛe flocke of Chꝛiſt, to intangle and oppꝛeſſe them with loſſe of life and libertie. By the which wiſe men haue to ſée what godlie fruits pꝛoceeded from that catholike church and ſée of Rome. In which albeit thou ſeeſt (good reader) ſome good articles inſparſed withall, let that nothing moue thée: foꝛ elſe how could ſuch poiſon be miniſtred, but it muſt haue ſome honie to reliſh the readers taſt?

Cardinall Poole earneſt in burning the bones of the dead.

Here follow the articles ſet forth by cardinall Poole, to be inquired in his ordinarie viſitation, within his dioces of Canturburie.

Touching the cleargie.

Articles of the cardinall to be inquired in his viſitation of Kent.

FIrſt, whether the diuine ſeruice in the church at times, daies and houres, be obſerued and kept dulie oꝛ no.

2 Item, whether the parſons, vicars, and curats, doo comlie and decentlie in their maners and doings behaue themſelues oꝛ no.

3 Item, whether they doo reuerentlie and dulie miniſter the ſacraments oꝛ ſacramentals oꝛ no.

4 Item, whether anie of their pariſhioners doo die without miniſtration of the ſacraments, thꝛough the negligence of their curats oꝛ no.

5 Item, whether the ſaid parſons, vicars oꝛ curats, doo haunt tauerns oꝛ alehouſes, increaſing thereby infamie and ſlander oꝛ no.

6 Item, whether they be diligent in teaching the midwiues how to chꝛiſten childꝛen in time of neceſſitie, accoꝛding to the canons of the church oꝛ no.

7 Item, whether they ſée that the font be comelie kept, and haue holie water alwaies readie foꝛ childꝛen to be chꝛiſtened.

8 Item, if they doo kéepe a booke of all the names of them that be reconciled to the dutie of the church.

9 Item, whether there be anie pꝛieſts, that late vnlawfullie had women vnder pꝛetenſed mariage, and hitherto are not reconciled, and to declare their names and dwelling places.

10 Item, whether they doo diligentlie teach their pariſhioners the articles of the faith, & the ten commandements.

11 Item, whether they doo decentlie obſerue thoſe things that doo concerne the ſeruice of the church, and all thoſe things that tend to a good and chꝛiſtian life, accoꝛding to the canons of the church.

12 Item, whether they doo deuoutlie in their pꝛaiers pꝛaie foꝛ the pꝛoſperous eſtate of the king and quéens maieſties.

13 Item, whether the ſaid parſons and vicars doo ſufficientlie repare their chancels, recoꝛies, and vicarages, and doo kéepe and mainteine them ſufficientlie repared and amended.

14 Item, whether anie of them doo pꝛeach oꝛ teach anie erronious doctrine, contrarie to the catholike faith and vnitie of the church.

15 Item,

The death of cardinall Pole.

The deſcription of cardinall Pole.

Abr. Fl. ex I. F. martyrologio.

15 Item, whether anie of them dō saie the diuine seruice, or dō minister the sacraments in the English tōng, contrarie to the vsuall order of the church.

16 Item, whether anie of them dō suspicioūslie kēpe anie women in their houses, or dō kēpe companie with men suspected of heresies, or of euill opinions.

17 Item, whether anie of them that were vnder pretense of lawfull matrimonie maried, and now reconciled, dō priuilie resort to their pretensed wiues, or that the said women dō priuilie resort vnto them.

18 Item, whether they go decentlie apparelled, as it becommeth sad, sober, and discréet ministers, and whether they haue their crowns and beards shauen.

19 Item, whether anie of them dō vse anie vnlawfull games, as dice, cards, and other like, wherby they grow to slander and euill report.

20 Item, whether they dō kēpe residence and hospitalitie vpon their benefices, and dō make charitable contributions, according to all the lawes ecclesiasticall.

21 Item, whether they dō kēpe the booke or register of christening, burieng, and mariages, with the names of the godfathers and godmothers.

Touching the laie people.

Articles of cardinal Pole to be inquired vpon touching the laitie.

FIrst, whether anie maner of person, of what state, degrée, or condition soeuer he be, dō hold, mainteine, or affirme anie heresies, errors, or erronious opinions, contrarie to the lawes ecclesiasticall, and the vnitie of the catholike church.

2 Item, whether anie person dō hold, affirme, or saie, that in the blessed sacrament of the altar there is not conteined the reall and substantiall presence of Christ: or that by anie maner of meanes dō contemne and despise the said blessed sacrament, or dō refuse to dō reuerence or worship thereunto.

3 Item, whether they dō contemne or despise by anie maner of means anie other of the sacraments, rites or ceremonies of the church, or dō refuse or denie auricular confession.

4 Item, whether anie dō absent or refraine, without vrgent and lawfull impediment, to come to the church, and reuerentlie to heare diuine seruice vpon sundaies and holie daies.

5 Item, whether being in the church, they dō not aplie themselues to heare the diuine seruice, and to be contemplatiue in holie praier, and not to walke, iangle or talke in the time of the diuine seruice.

6 Item, whether anie be fornicators, adulterers, or dō commit incest, or be bawds and receiuers of euill persons, or be vehementlie suspected of anie of them.

7 Item, whether anie dō blaspheme and take the name of God in vaine, or be common swearers.

8 Item, whether anie be periured, or haue committed simonie or vsurie, or dō still remaine in the same.

9 Item, whether the churches and churchyards be well and honestlie repared and inclosed.

10 Item, whether the churches be sufficientlie garnished and adorned with all ornaments and bookes necessarie, & whether they haue a rod in their church of a decent stature, with Marie and Iohn, and an image of the patrone of the same church.

11 Item, whether anie dō withhold, or doth draw from the church anie maner of monie or goods, or that dō withhold their due and accustomed tithes from their parsons and vicars.

12 Item, whether anie be common drunkards, ribalds, or men of euill liuing, or dō exercise anie lewd pastimes, especiallie in the time of diuine seruice.

13 Item, if there be anie that dō practise or exercise anie arts of magike, or necromancie, or dō vse or practise anie incantations, sorceries, or witchcraft, or be vehementlie suspected thereof.

14 Item, whether anie be maried in the degrées of affinitie, or consanguinitie, prohibited by the laws of holie church, or that dō marie, the banes not asked, or dō make anie priuie contracts.

15 Item, whether in the time of Easter last, anie were not confessed, or did not receiue the blessed sacrament of the altar, or did vnreuerentlie behaue themselues in the receiuing thereof.

16 Item, whether anie dō kēpe anie secret conuenticles, preachings, lectures, or readings, in matters of religion contrarie to the lawes.

17 Item, whether anie dō now not duelie kēpe the fasting and embring daies.

18 Item, whether the altars in the churches be consecrated or no.

19 Item, whether the sacrament be caried deuoutlie to them that fall sicke, with light and with a little sacring bell.

20 Item, whether the common schooles be well kept, and that the schoolemaisters be diligent in teaching, and be also catholike, and men of good and vpright iudgement, and that they be examined and approued by the ordinarie.

21 Item, whether anie dō take vpon them to minister the goods of those that be dead, without authoritie from the ordinarie.

22 Item, whether the poore people in euerie parish be charitablie prouided for.

23 Item, whether there dō burne a lampe or a candle before the sacrament: and if there dō not, that then it be prouided for, with expedition.

24 Item, whether infants and children be brought to be confirmed in conuenient time.

25 Item, whether anie dō kēpe or haue in their custodie anie erronious or vnlawfull bookes.

26 Item, whether anie dō withhold anie monie or goods bequeathed to the amending of the high waies, or anie other charitable déed.

27 Item, whether anie haue put away their wiues, or anie wiues dō withdraw themselues from their husbands, being not lawfullie diuorsed.

28 Item, whether anie dō violat or breake the sundaies and holie daies, doing their dailie labors and exercises vpon the same.

29 Item, whether the tauerns or alehouses, vpon the sundaies and holie daies, in the time of masse, matins, and euensong, dō kēpe open their doores, and dō receiue people into their houses to drinke and eate, and thereby neglect their duties in comming to church.

30 Item, whether anie haue, or dō depraue or contemne the authoritie or iurisdiction of the popes holinesse, or the sée of Rome.

31 Item, whether anie minstrels, or anie other persons dō vse to sing anie songs against the holie sacraments, or anie other the rites and ceremonies of the church.

32 Item, whether there be anie hospitals within your parishes, and whether the foundations of them be duelie and trulie obserued and kept; and whether the charitable contributions of the same be done accordinglie.

33 Item, whether anie goods, plate, iewels, or possessions be taken awaie, or withholden from the said hospitals, and by whome.]

Thus you sée of what a malignant nature the cardinall was: neuertheless, of more lenitie than manie other popelings, sauoring of the like lewd leuen of antichristianisme. For at what time two and twentie prisoners for their conscience were apprehended bended and sent vp all togither to London from Colchester (as maister Fox reporteth in his martyrologe) and conuented before Boner then bishop of that see, the said Boner himselfe wrote to cardinall Poole concerning them, as you shall heare.

¶ A letter of bishop Boner to cardinall Poole.

Bishop Boners letter to cardinall Poole, concerning the two and twentie prisoners aforesaid.

MAy it please your good grace with my most humble obedience, reuerence and dutie, to vnderstand that going to London vpon thursdaie last, and thinking to be troubled with maister Germains matter onelie, and such other common matters as are accustomed, inough to werie a right strong bodie, I had the daie following to comfort my stomach withall, letters from Colchester, that either that day, or the day following I should haue sent thense two and twentie heretikes, indicted before the commissioners, and in deed so I had, and compelled to beare their charges as I did of the other, which both stood me in aboue twentie nobles, a summe of monie that I thought full euill bestowed. And these heretikes, notwithstanding they had honest catholike keepers to conduct and bring them vp to me, and in all the waie from Colchester to Stratford of the bow, did go quietlie, and obedientlie, yet comming to Stratford, they began to take heart of grace, & to do as pleased themselues, for there they began to haue their gard, which generallie increased till they came to Algate, where they were lodged fridaie night.

And albeit I tooke order, that the said heretikes should be with me verie earlie on saturdaie morning, to the intent they might quietlie come and be examined by me: yet it was betweene ten and eleuen of the clocke before they would come, and no waie would they take, but through Cheapside, so that they were brought to my house with about a thousand persons. Which thing I tooke verie strange, and spake to sir Iohn Gresham then being with me, to tell the maior and the shiriffes that this thing was not well suffered in the citie. These naughtie heretikes all the waie they came through Cheapside, both exhorted the people to their part, and had much comfort A promiscua plebe, and being entred into my house and talked withall, they shewed themselues desperat and verie obstinat: yet I vsed all the honest meanes I could, both by my selfe and other, to haue wone them, causing diuerse learned men to talke with them: and finding nothing in them but pride & wilfulnesse, I thought to haue had them all hither to Fulham, and here to giue sentence against them. Neuertheless, perceiuing by my last doing that your grace was offended, I thought it my dutie before I anie thing further proceeded herein, to aduertise first your grace hereof, and know your good pleasure, which I beseech your grace I may do by this trustie bearer. And thus most humblie I take my leaue of your good grace, beseeching almightie God alwaies to preserue the same. At Fulham, Postridie Natiu. 1556.

Your graces most bounden bedesman and seruant Edmund Boner.

By this letter of bishop Boner to the cardinall (saith maister Fox) is to be vnderstood, what goodwill was in this bishop, to haue the bloud of these men, and to haue past with sentence of condemnation against them, had not the cardinall somewhat (as it seemed) haue staied his seruent headinesse. Concerning the which cardinall, although it can not be denied by his acts and writings, but that he was a professed enimie, and no otherwise to be reputed but for a papist: yet againe it is to be supposed, that he was none of the bloudie and cruell sort of papists, as may appeare, not by staieng the rage of this bishop: but also by his solicitous writing, and long letters written to Cranmer, also by the complaints of certeine papists, accusing him to the pope to be a bearer with the heretikes, and by the popes letters sent to him vpon the same, calling him vp to Rome, and setting frier Peto in his place, had not queene Marie by speciall intreatie made, kept him out of the popes danger. All which letters I haue (if need be) to shew: besides also, that it is thought of him that toward his latter end, a little before his comming from Rome to England, he began somewhat to sauour the doctrine of Luther, and was no lesse suspected at Rome: yea, and furthermore did there at Rome conuert a certeine learned Spaniard from papisme to Luthers side: notwithstanding the pompe and glorie of the world afterward caried him awaie to plaie the papist thus as he did.]

Cardinall Poole a papist but no bloudie papist.

Cardinall Poole halfe suspected for a Lutheran at Rome.

¶ And sith I haue waded thus far in portraieng the said cardinall, I am willing to make you communicants of a report concerning him, vttered by Cuthbert Tunstall bishop of Duresme, in a sermon which he made vpon Palmesundaie, in the yeare of our Lord 1539, before king Henrie the eight, treating vpon these words of saint Paule to the Philippians, Cap. 2. Hoc sentite in vobis, quod & in Christo Iesu, &c. See the same mind be in you, that was in Iesu Christ, &c. The ground of whose sermon standing vpon obedience and disobedience, after he had discoursed at large ther vpon, he fell into these words in presence of the king, the nobles, and people.

Ab. Fl. ex concione Cut. Tunstalli coram Hen. 8.

And the bishop of Rome now of late, to set forth his pestilent malice the more, hath allured to his purpose a subiect of this realme Reginald Poole, come of a noble bloud, and thereby the more arrant traitor, to go about from prince to prince, and from countrie to countrie, to stur them to warre against this realme, and to destroie the same, being his native countrie. Whose pestilent purpose albeit the princes that he breaketh it vnto, haue in much abhomination, both for that the bishop of Rome (who being a bishop should procure peace) is a sturrer of warre, and because this most arrant and vnkind traitor is his minister to so diuelish a purpose to destroie the countrie that he was borne in, which anie heathen man would abhorre to do. But for all that without shame he still goeth on, exhorting therevnto all princes that will heare him; who do abhorre to see such vnnaturalnesse in anie man, as he shamelesse doth set forwards, whose pernicious treasons late secretlie wrought against this realme, haue béene, by the worke of almightie God so marueilouslie detected, and by his owne brother, without loking therefore so disclosed, and condigne punishment insued, that hereafter (God willing) they shall not take anie more such rot to the noisance of this realme.

Cardinall Poole an arrant traitor.

Cardinall Poole a seditious fellow and an impudent.

Cardinall Poles treasons detected by his owne brother.

And where all nations of gentiles by reason & law of nature preferre their countrie before their parents, so that for their countrie they will die against their parents being traitors: this pestilent man worse than a pagan, is not ashamed to destroie if he could his native countrie. And whereas Curtius a heathen man was content for sauing of the citie of Rome where he was borne, to leape into a gaping of the earth, which by the illusions of the diuell it was answered should not be shut, but that it must first haue one; this pernicious man is content to run headlong into hell: so that he maie destroie thereby his native countrie of England, being in that behalfe incomparablie worse than anie pagan. And besides Cardinall Poole no christian, but worse than a pagan.

Bishop Boners cruelitie somewhat staied by the cardinall.

Cardinall Poles vnkindnesse to king Henrie that brought him vp.

besides his pestilent treason, his vnkindnesse against the kings maiestie, who brought him vp of a child, and promoted both him, and restored his blood being attainted, to be of the peeres of this realme, and gaue him monie yeerelie out of his coffers, to find him honorablie at studie, maketh his treason much more detestable to all the world, and him to be reputed more wild and cruell than anie tiger.

See more thereof before pag. 1134.

Thus much out of Cuthert Tunstals sermon printed Cum priuilegio ad imprimendum solum, by Thomas Berthelet, the yeare aboue named. Now it resteth to conclude this discourse concerning cardinall Pole with a briefe epitome of his last will and testament, which he made not long before he let his life, wherein he professeth him selfe resolute to die in the same faith and obedience of the Romish church wherein he liued; willing & ordeining his bodie to be buried in his cathedrall church of Canturburie (as he termeth it) in the same chappell where the head of the most blessed martyr Thomas Becket, whilome archbishop of the said church was kept: with masses & dirges, &c. to be said for his soule, the soules of his parents, and of all the faithfull departed out of this life, &c.

A traitor he liued, a traitor he died.

The distribution of his goods.

As for patrimoniall goods, sith he had none whereby he ought to haue had regard of his kindred, therefore such goods as he had he willed to be distributed among such persons as had well deserued of him, and vpon godlie vses. He made one Aloisius Priolus a Venetian his heire and executor of all his goods and chattels, as well within England as without, in Spaine, Italie, Rome, Venice, or elsewhere, &c. And for dilapidations, there is no reason (saith he) why my successor in the see of Canturburie should demand anie thing, because I haue bestowed more than a thousand pounds within these few yeeres, in repairing & making better such houses as belonged to the said see, since I came to it (which was no long time by our computation.) The ouerseers and defenders of this his last will he made Nicholas archbishop of Yorke chancellor of England, Thomas bishop of Elie, his cousine the lord Edward Hastings the kings chamberleine, sir John Borall the quenes secretarie, sir Edward Cordall maister of the rolles, and maister Henrie Cole his vicar generall in his spiritualties. All these he besought to giue quéene Marie knowledge of this his last will, and with all reuerence to beseech hir, that what good will and fauor she shewed him in all causes and affaires whiles he was aliue; the same she would vouchsafe to exhibit and bestow vpon him being dead, and graciouslie prouide that all lets and impediments to the execution of this his last will & testament might be remoued and vtterlie taken awaie: and to euerie one of his ouerseers for their paines taking herein, he gaue fiftie pounds a peece by will. This testament was subscribed with his owne hand, and signed with his owne seale, in presence of a number of witnesses there vndernamed. All which, with the tenor of his said last will at large, are remembred by Schardius in epitome rerum gestarum sub Ferdinando imperatore. And thus much of cardinall Pole.

Touching dilapidations.

He is desirous that quéene Marie should haue knowledge of this his last will.

Upon whose discourse presentlie ended, as hath beene done in the treatise of high constables * at the duke of Buckinghams beheadding, and of the lord protectors * at the duke of Summersets suffering (in which two honorable personages those two offices had their end) so here we are to infer a collection of English cardinals, which order ceased when Reginald Pole died. After which treatise ended, according to the purposed order, and a catalog of writers at the end of this quénes reigne annexed, it remaineth that quéene Elizabeth shew hir selfe in hir triumphs at hir gratious and glorious coronation.

* See pa. 865.

* See pa. 1069.

The cardinals of England collected by Francis Thin, in the yeare of our Lord, 1583.

This cardinall Pole being the last cardinall in England, and so likelie to be, as the state of our present time doth earnestlie with, doth here offer occasion to treat of all such Englishmen as haue possessed that honor, Which I onelie do, for that I would haue all whatsoeuer monuments of antiquitie preserued, least Pereat memoria eorum cum sonitu. Wherefore thus I begin.

Adrian the fourth pope of Rome. Will. Parmus lib. 2. cap. 26. Onuphrius. Matt. Parker. Ranulph Higden.

Adrian the fourth of that name bishop of Rome (called before that time Nicholas Breakespeare) being borne in England about saint Albons (whome Onuphrius affirmeth to be borne in the towne of Malmesberie, in the dominions of saint Albons, in the diocés of Bath, somewhat like a stranger mistaking the names of places and persons, as he often doth) was for the pouertie of his father (who after became a monke in saint Albons) not able to be maintained here at learning. Whereupon he goeth into Prouince to the monasterie of saint Rufus, whereof in time he was made a canon, and after abbat of that house; but in the end misliked of the conent, they appealed him to Rome before Eugenius the third then pope: who for that time pacifieng the matter betwéene them, they did after fall at variance againe, and so called him before the pope the second time. Eugenius seeing these continuall brables, wearie to heare them, and fauoring this Nicholas, made them chose an other abbat, and appointed Nicholas to the bishoprike of Alba, and to the honor of a cardinall, sending him legat into Denmarke and Norweie: where he remained some yeares. But at length returning to Rome after the death of Eugenius and his successor Anastasius, this Nicholas was aduanced from a cardinall to a pope, and called Adrian the fourth. Who died in the fift yeare of Henrie the second king of England, in the yeare of Christ 1159.

Bosa. Matt. Parker. Onuphrius.

Bosa, an Englishman and cardinall, was not that Bosa which was bishop of Yorke, of whome Beda maketh mention, lib. 4. cap. 13. and cap. 23. of his ecclesiasticall historie, where he saith that the same Bosa was made bishop of the same see, in the yeare of Christ 678. And therefore being long before this Bosa, our cardinall could not be the same man, as some vnconsideratlie haue still maintened. For this our Bosa was a cardinall deacon, and the nephue to pope Adrian the fourth before named; and intituled a deacon cardinall of the title of Cosma and Damian, in the yeare of Christ 1155, being after made a priest cardinall of the title of saint Prudentian, by pope Alexander the third, in the yeare of Christ 1163, before which he was chamberleine to the church of Rome, being created to the first cardinallship and office of chamberleine by his vncle the said pope Adrian the fourth.

Robert Curson. Matt. Parker. Matt. Paris. Matt. West. Holinshed.

Robert Curson, a man excellentlie learned both in diuine & humane letters, comming from Rome, grew in such estimation, that in the end he became a cardinall, of whom we find recorded in this sort. At the taking of Dameta in Egypt, there was with Pelagius the popes legat, maister Robert Curson an Englishman a most famous clearke, borne of a noble house, and cardinall of the church of Rome.

Stephan Langhton. Matt. Parker. Matt. Paris. Holinshed. Onuphrius.

Stephan Langhton made priest cardinall, in the yeare of Christ 1213, and the sixteenth yeare of pope Innocent the third, of the title of saint Chrysogon, was archbishop of Canturburie, for whose cause and contention betwéene king John and him, the realme of of England was long interdicted, the nobilitie was slaine, the king deposed, his kingdome made feodarie to Rome, and Pandolph the cardinall sent hither to receiue the crowne of K. John. This Stephan departed the world, in the twelfe yeare of Henrie the third, and in the yeare of our redemption 1238.

Robert Somercot. Holinshed. Matt. Paris. Fol. 772.

Robert Somercot a cardinall, a man well estéemed for his vertue and learning, a graue writer, and well beloued of all men, departed from the vanities of this life, in the yeare of our saluation 1241, being the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third.

Ancherus. Onuphrius. Matt. Parker.

Ancherus citizen and archdeacon of London, was made priest cardinall of the title of saint Pastidis, by pope Urban the second, in the yéere that the word became flesh 1262, and the yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, the foure and fortith.

Robert de Kilwarbie. Matt. Parker. Hen. of Lecest. Onuphrius.

Robert de Kilwarbie, whome Onuphrius calleth Robert Biliberie frier preacher, doctor of diuinitie was remoued from the archbishoprike of Canturburie to be bishop of Portus, and afterward was made cardinall of saint Rufinian by pope Nicholas the third, in the yeare of Christ as some saie 1277, and as others haue 1278, or 1273: being about the first yeare of Edward the first of that name king of England; who died vnder the same pope Nicholas, in the yeare of Christ 1280, as hath Onuphrius.

Barnard de Anguiscelle. Matt. Parker.

Barnard de Anguiscelle was remoued from the archbishoprike of Arras, and made bishop of Portua and cardinall of saint Rufinian, being a bishop cardinall, and aduanced to that principalitie by pope Martine the fourth of that name, in the yeare of our redemption 1291, being about the nintéenth yeare of the said Edward the first: whome Onuphrius much mistaking himselfe maketh a Frenchman: and Matthew Parker rightlie setteth him downe as an Englishman.

Hugh Attrat. Matthew Parker. Rafe Baldocke. Onuphrius.

Hugh Attrat priest cardinall, of the title of saint Laurence in Lucina was created cardinall by pope Martine the fourth, in the yéere of our Lord 1281: he was also called Hugh of Euesham, and died at Rome in the yeare of Christ 1287, whilest the sée was vacant, being about the fiftéenth yeare of Edward the first.

Berard. Matthew Parker.

Berard or rather Bernard a cardinall of Prestina was aduanced to the dignitie of a cardinall by Nicholas the fourth of that name bishop of Rome in the yéere (as I suppose) 1298, though some saie in the yéere 1288, the error whereof I gather to be in the printer.

Leonard Guercine. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius. William. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius. Walsingham.

Leonard Guercine bishop, cardinall of Alba was receiued to the scarlet hat and robe by pope Bonifacius the eight, in the yéere of Christ 1300, being the eight and twentith of Edward the first.

William one of the order of the frier preachers doctor of diuinitie in Oxford, priest cardinall of the title of saint Sabina, to which place he was adopted by pope Benedict the eleuenth, in the yéere 1303, being the one and thirtith yeere of Edward the first, in which yeere he died in England.

Walter Winterborne. Matthew Parker. Nic. Triuet. Onuphrius.

Walter Winterborne (that came in place of William last before named) doctor of diuinitie of the order of frier preachers, confessor to Edward the first, and priest cardinall of the title of saint Sabina, was by the said Benedict the eleuenth admitted to the college of cardinals in the yeare of Christ 1304, being the one and thirtith yeere of Edward the first, which Walter small time inioied that place. For going with other cardinals into France, & so into Italie, he died at Genoa or Gene, whose bodie being carried into England, was buried in the church of the frier preachers in the yeere of Christ 1305, being the three and thirtith yeere of Edward the first.

Thomas Iozze. Walsingham. Nic. Triuet. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius.

Thomas Iozze a frier preacher doctor of diuinitie of Oxford, confessor to Edward the first, priest cardinall of the title of saint Sabina was created by pope Clement the fift in the yeere of Christ 1305, being the three and thirtith yéere of Edward the first, or (as saith Walsingham) a little before Christmasse in the yéere of Christ 1306, who by him is also named Iozza. This man (as hath Onuphrius) died in the iorneie he made as ambassador into Italie to Henrie the seuenth of that name emperour in the yéere 1311, & the seuenth yeere of the popedome of Clement the fift, who sent him in that ambassage: his bodie was carried into England, and buried at Oxford in a monasterie of the frier preachers.

Simon Langham.

Simon Langham abbat of Westminster, treasuror of England, bishop of Elie and of Canturburie, and chancellor of England, was elected to the honor of the purple hat and cardinall dignitie, in the yéere of our redemption 1368, being the two and fortith yéere of king Edward the third. And here because I would not set it downe in a distinct place, as receiuing it for truth, sith by search I find it not so, what authoritie soeuer they that wrote the same had to lead them to it: I will note an ouersight passed the fingers of Fabian, Holinshed, and Grafton, all writers of our age, who affirme that the bishop of Winchester, in the fiue and fortith yeere of king Edward the third, being a cardinall (for so I gather by the words and circumstance of the storie) with the bishop of Beauois likewise a cardinall, were put in commission by pope Gregorie the eleuenth to treat betwixt the king of England and France. But because I can not find in Onuphrius nor in Matthew Parker anie such cardinall set downe, I do not at this time imbrace it, vntill I maie find better proofe thereof than the authoritie of Grafton, Fabian, and those before named; especiallie sith that he which was then bishop of Winchester in the said fiue and fortith yéere of Edward the third, and all they which were bishops of Winchester from the first yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, vntill the yeare of Christ 1404, in which Henrie Beaufort was bishop of Winchester, were neuer cardinals: the said bishops in orderlie succession thus named: Adam Orletie, William de Edington, William Wickham, and then Henrie Beaufort, who was a cardinall. But these writers mistaking perchance the yeare of the king, and the name of the bishops sée, in the fiue and fortith yeare of Edward the third (in which yeare John Thorsbie was cardinall as after followeth) haue (in setting downe Winchester for Worcester committed a fault) so easie it is for the printer or anie other to misplace and misname the one bishoprike for the other.

John Thorsbie. Holinshed and other authors.

John Thorsbie bishop of saint Dauids in Wales chancellor of England, bishop of Worcester, and after bishop of Yorke, was made cardinall by Urban the fift then bishop of Rome (as I suppose) before the fiue and fortith yeare of Edward the third. This man surrendred his life in the yeare of our redemption 1374, being the eight and fortith yeare of king Edward the third.

Adam. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Holinshed.

Adam priest cardinall of the title of saint Cicilia, was inuested with the dignitie of a scarlet hat in the yeare of our redemption 1378, about the first yeare of Richard the second. Holinshed mentioneth one Adam Elton to be a cardinall, who (considering the time when he liued) must néeds be this man, of whome he writeth in this sort. Adam Elton well séene in all the tongs, was made a cardinall by pope Gregorie the eleuenth, but by pope Urban the first he was committed to prison in Genoa (in the yeare of our redemption 1383, being about the seuenth yeare of Richard the second) and by contemplation plation of the said king Richard, was taken out of prison, but not fullie deliuered, vntill the daies of Boniface the ninth, who (in the yeare of our redemption 1389, about the thirteenth yeare of Richard the second) restored the said Adam to his former dignitie: all which Holinshed speaketh of him amongst the writers of England, except the yeares of the Lord which I haue added out of Onuphrius, and the yeares of the king which I haue ioined of my selfe. Which Onuphrius maketh this Adam to be bishop of London, and to die in Rome the third calends of Maie, in the yeere of our sauior 1397, being the one and twentith of Richard the second, vnder Boniface the ninth pope of that name, and was buried in the place whereof he was intituled to the honor of a cardinall.

Philip de Repindone. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

Philip de Repindone bishop of Lincolne and doctor of diuinitie, was by pope Gregorie the twelfe, then bishop of Rome, in the yeare of Christ 1408, being the tenth yeare of king Henrie the fourth created cardinall of the title of saint Nereus and Achilleus.

Thomas. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Liber Dunel.

Thomas bishop of Durham was made (as saith Onuphrius, in the yeare of our redemption 1411 by Iohn the two and twentith, commonlie called Iohn the three and twentith) priest cardinall. Touching which matter there is no mention made in the life of Thomas Langleie bishop of Durham, and liuing at this time that this Langleie was a cardinall: for this Thomas Langleie was made bishop of Durham in the yeare of our Lord 1406, and continued in that see one and thirtie yeares, departing the world 1437, and so the creation of this Thomas bishop of Durham mentioned by Onuphrius and Matthew Parker bishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of Christ 1411 must needes fall in the life of this Thomas Langleie bishop of Durham.

Robert. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

Robert bishop of Salisburie priest cardinall (although it be not shewed of what title) was preferred to that place by pope Iohn the three and twentith in the yeare of our redemption 1411, being about the twelfe yere of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, of whom Onuphrius writeth in this sort: Roberti episcopi Sarisburiensis presbyteri cardinalis, & Egidij de campis presbyteri cardinalis gesta & exitus, quòd nunquam Romanam curiam adierint, incerti & obscuri omninò sunt. Satis tamen constat, eos ante papæ Martini electionem mortuos fuisse.

Henrie Beaufort.

Henrie Beaufort, sonne vnto Iohn of Gant and Katharine Swinesord, being bishop of Winchester and chancellor of England, toke the state of a cardinall (of the title of saint Eusebius) at Calis, being absent (as hath Matthew Parker) in the yeare of our redemption 1426: in the fift yeare of king Henrie the first. He was called the rich cardinall of Winchester, being aduanced to that honor by Martine the third, commonlie called Martine the fift then pope of Rome. This Henrie died vnder pope Nicholas the fift in the yeare of Christ 1447: being about the six & twentith yeare of the miserable reigne of king Henrie the first.

John Stafford. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker.

John Stafford bishop of Bath and Welles chancellor of England, after bishop of Canturburie, was created priest cardinall by Eugenius then bishop of Rome, in the yeare that the word became flesh 1434: being the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first.

John Kempe. Holinshed. Polydor. Onuphrius.

John Kempe bishop of London, twise lord chancellour of England, bishop of Yorke, and after that archbishop of Canturburie, was by Eugenius the fourth then archbishop of Rome, made cardinall of the title of saint Sabina, as saith Holinshed, otherwise by Onuphrius called Salbina: contrarie to Polydor, who in his three and twentith booke of the historie of England, affirmeth him to be cardinalited by pope Nicholas the fift. He died (as saith Onuphrius) in the yeare that the godhead was vnited to the manhood, to wit, one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, vnder pope Nicholas the first, which yeare of our Lord met with the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first.

Thomas Bourcher. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Holinshed. Polydor.

Thomas Bourcher (borne of the noble house of the earles of Esser, being chancellor of England, bishop of Worcester, from thence remoued to Elie, from that Ile aduanced to the metropolitan see of Canturburie, and priest cardinall of the title of saint Siriacus in Thermis or the Baths) was honored with the scarlet hat and siluer pillers, by pope Paule the second of that name, in the yeare that the second person in trinitie toke vpon him the forme of a seruant, one thousand foure hundred sirtie & fiue, being the fift yeare of the reigne of the noble prince king Edward the fourth.

John Morton. Onuphrius. Matthew Parker. Polydor. Holinshed.

John Morton bishop of Elie chancellor of England & archbishop of Canturburie, being priest cardinall of the title of saint Anastasius, was honored with a scarlet hat by Alexander the first of that name (then gouernour of the seat of Peter at Rome) in the yeare from the birth of Christ 1493, being the ninth yeare of the Salomon of England king Henrie the seauenth. He died as saith Onuphrius, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand and fiue hundred, being about the eight yeare of Alexander the first still pope of Rome, and the sirteenth yeare of the said Henrie the seauenth then king of England.

Christopher Bembridge. Matthew Parker. Onuphrius.

Christopher Bembridge a gentleman borne, was archbishop of Yorke, & priest cardinall of the title of S. Praxidis, was aduanced to that scarlet dignitie by pope Julius the second, in the yere that the virgin was deliuered of our sauiour one thousand fiue hundred & eleuen, being the third yeare of the triumphant reigne of king Henrie the eight. He died at Rome, (as saith Onuphrius) by poison, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene yeares (being the eleuenth yeare, when Leo the tenth did hold the sterne of the Romane bishoprike, & the fift yeare when the said Henrie the eight did rule the scepter of England) and was buried at Rome in the church of the holie trinitie of the English nation.

Thomas Wolseie.

Thomas Wolseie the kings almoner, deane of Yorke, abbat of saint Albons, and of saint Auskins, bishop of Lincolne, Winchester, and Yorke, chancellour of England: all which or all saue two he held at one time in his owne hands, was made priest cardinall of the title of saint Cicilie, whereunto he was promoted by pope Leo the tenth, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred and fifteene, being the seauenth yeere of the reigne of the famous king Henrie the eight, of whome Onuphrius somewhat mistaking the pronuntiation of his name thus writeth: Thomas Wlcer ex oppido Sufforth diœcesis Norducensis, &c.: wherein like a stranger to our countrimen he mistaketh both name, towne, place, and the prouince of Suffolke for the towne of Ipswich. For this cardinall Wolseie being descended of meane parentage, was borne in the towne of Gipswich now called Ipswich in the prouince or countrie of Suffolke in the diocesse of the bishoprike of Norwich.

John Fisher.

John Fisher bishop of Rochester priest cardinall of the title of saint Vitalis, was (although he neuer came at Rome, nor for anie thing that I can learne was euer out of England) created cardinall at Rome, by Paule the third of that name, then wearing the triple crowned miter, and being bishop of Rome. But this Fisher neuer ware his scarlet hat: for after this high dignitie and before he might couer his priestlie crowne with the same, he lost his head, in the yeare from which the angels sang at the birth of the Messias one thousand fiue hundred thirtie and fiue,

fiue, being the seauen and twentith of the reigne of that king Henrie the eight, which deliuered his kingdome from all subiection to the bishop of Rome Clement the seauenth of that name.

Reginald Pole.

Reginald Pole, noblie borne, a yong sonne to sir Richard Pole knight of the garter, by his wife Margaret countesse of Salisburie, daughter to George duke of Clarence brother to K. Edward the fourth, was made deacon cardinall of the title of saint Marie in Cosmeden, by pope Paule the third of that name, in the yeare that the mother of God brought forth the sonne of man 1536, being the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight. This man legat of pope Julius the third, comming into England in the yeare of our Lord 1554, being the second yeare of quéene Maries reigne, was after made bishop of Canturburie, on the fiue and twentith of March, in the yeare of Christ 1556, being the third yeare of the reigne of the said quéene Marie, and died the seauentéenth daie of Nouember, in the yeare of Christ 1558, being the last date of the reigne of the said quéene Marie, or rather the next daie erlie in the morning, at his house at Lambeth, and was honorablie conueied to Canturburie, where he was buried. This man was the last English cardinall that liued and inioied that title of honour in England. For although the English cardinall which followeth were created after him, yet I suppose that he died much before him: but he liued not in England at the same time that cardinall Pole died, as farre as I can lerne. Wherfore I still make this cardinall Pole the last English cardinall that was liuing in England.

Peter Peto.

Peter Peto, borne of an ancient familie, and one of the order of the frier minors obseruants (whome Onuphrius calleth Angliæ legatus) was created cardinall by Paule the fourth of that name, chéefe bishop of Rome, in the yeare that the word became flesh 1557, being the fift yeare of quéene Marie. Besides this number of thirtie cardinals, there haue bæn manie other to the number of ten or more, before the time that pope Innocent the first of that name did weald the charge of the Romane bishoprike, as Matthew Parker late bishop of Canturburie a worthie antiquarie doth witnesse, and I my selfe haue obserued, besides those which Onuphrius and the said Matthew Parker (in the Latine booke of the archbishops of his owne sée) haue recited. But bicause neither they nor I haue yet atteined to their names, we must and doo omit them: and yet it may be that these thrée which follow, named by Onuphrius being English names, were Englishmen, and part of the said number of ten cardinals, whose names we doo not know, which thrée cardinals were Hugh Foliot, Peter Mortimer, and Simon Braie. But bicause I cannot certeinlie gather out of Onuphrius that they were Englishmen, I dare not presume so to make them; though in mine owne conceit I verelie suppose that they were borne in England: for in vncerteine matters I dare not set downe ante certeintie.

Wherefore to set end to this cardinals discourse, I will knit vp this matter with one onelie note drawne out of Matthew Parkers beforenamed booke of the liues of the bishops of Canturburie, which is as followeth: That this number and remembrance of our cardinals is not so wonderfull as is that computation of the Romane bishops, which pope John the two and twentith of that name hath gathered of his predecessors. For he doth recite that out of the order of saint Benet or Benedict (whereof himselfe was) there haue issued foure and twentie popes, 183 cardinals, 1464 archbishops, 3502 bishops, and abbats innumerable. Thus concluding (that of all these our English cardinals, with the description of their liues, I will more largelie intreat in my booke intituled the Pantographie of England, conteining the vniuersall description of all memorable places and persons, aswell temporall as spirituall) I request the reader to take this in good part, till that booke may come to light. Thus much Francis Thin, who with the whéele of George Ripleie canon of Bridlington, after the order of circulation in alchimicall art, and by a gedmetricall circle in naturall philosophie doth end this cardinals discourse, resting in the centre of Reginald Pole, the last liuing cardinall in England, by whose death the said Francis toke occasion to passe about the circumference of this matter of the cardinals of this realme.]

Learned men in quéene Maries reigne.

Of such learned men as had written and did liue in the reigne of quéene Marie there were manie, of whome no small number ended their liues also during that short time of hir reigne, some by fire, and others in exile. John Rogers borne in Lancashire, wrote diuerse treatises, translated the bible into English with notes, and published the same vnder the name of Thomas Matthew, he suffred in Smithfield the fourth of Februarie, in the yeare 1555. Nicholas Ridleie bishop first of Rochester, and after of London, suffered at Oxford in the said yeare 1555. Hugh Latimer borne in Leicestershire, sometime bishop of Worcester, a notable preacher, and a most reuerend father, suffered at the same place, and in the same daie and yeare with bishop Ridleie. John Hooper borne in Summersetshire, bishop first of Glocester, and after of Worcester, suffered at Glocester in the yeare of our Lord 1555. John Bradford, borne in Manchester, a notable towne in Lancashire, a sober, mild, and discréet learned man, suffered at London the first of Julie in the said yeare 1555.

Stephan Gardiner bishop of Winchester borne in the towne of saint Edmundsburie in Suffolke, of king Henrie the eights councell, and in king Edwards daies committed to ward within the tower, released by quéene Marie, made lord chancellor, and so died a stout champion in defense of the popes doctrine, and a great enimie to the professours of the gospell. John Philpot borne in Hamshire, sonne to sir Peter Philpot knight, was archdeacon of Winchester, ended his life by fire in the yeare aforesaid 1555, the 18 of December, going then on the foure & fortith yeare of his age. Thomas Cranmer borne in Notinghamshire, archbishop of Canturburie, a worthie prelat, in sundrie vertues right commendable, suffered at Oxford the one and twentith of March, one thousand, fiue hundred, fiftie and six. Richard Morison knight, borne in Oxfordshire, wrote diuerse treatises, and deceassed at Strausburge the 17 of March 1556. John Poinet borne in Kent, bishop of Rochester first, & after of Winchester, deceassed likewise at Strausburgh, about the tenth or eleuenth of August, in the yeare of our Lord 1556.

Robert Record a doctor of physicke, and an excellent philosopher, in arithmetike, astrologie, cosmographie, and geometrie most skilfull, he was borne in Wales, descended of a good familie, and finallie departed this life in the daies of quéene Marie. Bartholomew Traheron descended of a worshipfull house in the west parts of England, deane of Chichester, departed this life in Germanie, where he liued in exile, about the latter end of quéen Maries reigne. Cutbert Tunstall, bishop first of London, and after of Durham, borne in Lancashire of a right worshipfull familie, excellentlie learned, as by his workes it may appeare, doctor of both the lawes, departed this life in the yeare 1559. Richard Sampson bishop of Couentrie & Lichfield wrote certeine treatises, & departed this life 1555. Lucas Shepherd borne in Colchester in Esser, an English poet. Jane Dudleie daughter vnto Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke, wrote diuerse things highlie to hir commendation, of whome yée haue heard more before heere in this historie; William Thomas a Welshman borne, of whome yée haue likewise heard how he suffered for treason, wrote the historie of Italie, and other things verie eloquentlie; James Brookes a doctor of diuinitie, John Standish a doctor likewise of the same profession, great defenders of the popes doctrine, as by their workes appeareth; William Perine a blacke frier by profession, and a doctor also of diuinitie, wrote in defense of the masse, and preached sermons which were printed of like stuffe; John Baret borne in Lin, a doctor of diuinitie, and sometime a Carmelit frier, but reuolting from the popes religion, he became an earnest setter forth of the gospell, but eftsoones he fell off, and returned to his former opinions now in the daies of quéene Marie; Henrie lord Stafford, sonne to Edward duke of Buckingham, amongst other things which he wrote, he translated a booke out of Latine into English, intituled Vtriusque potestatis differentia, that is, The difference betwixt the two powers, which booke (as some thinke) was first compiled and set forth by Edward For bishop of Hereford; John Hopkins translated diuerse psalmes of the psalter into English méeter, which are to be found amongst those appointed to be sung in the churches of England.

Thus farre the troublesome reigne of Queene Marie the first of that name (God grant she may be the last of hir religion) eldest daughter to king Henrie the eight.

The

The peaceable and prosperous regiment of blessed Queene Elisabeth, second daughter to king Henrie the eight.

After all the stormie, tempestuous, and blustering windie weather of quéene Marie was ouerblowne, the darkesome clouds of discomfort dispersed, the palpable fogs and mists of most intollerable miserie consumed, and the dashing showers of persecution ouerpast: it pleased God to send England a calme and quiet season, a cleare and louelie sunshine, a quitsest from former broiles of a turbulent estate, and a world of blessings by good quéene Elisabeth: into whose gratious reigne we are now to make an happie entrance as followeth.

When true knowledge was had that quéene Marie was deceased, who left hir life in this world the seuentéenth daie of Nouember, as is before mentioned in the latter end of hir historie: in the time of a parlement, the lords that were assembled in the vpper house, being resolued according to the lawes of the land, to declare the ladie Elisabeth sister to the said quéene to be verie true and lawfull heire to the crowne of England, sent immediatlie to the speaker of the parlement, willing him with the knights and burgesses of the neather house, without delaie to repaire vnto them into the vpper house, for their assents in a case of great importance. Who being come thither, after silence made (as the maner is) the archbishop of Yorke chancellor of England, whose name was Nicholas Heth, doctor in diuinitie, stood vp and pronounced in effect these words following.

The resolution of the lords to declare ladie Elisabeth quéene.

The words of doctor Heath lord chancellor, vttered in the parlement house touching the proclaming of the ladie Elisabeth quéene.

The cause of your calling hither at this time, is to signifie vnto you, that all the lords here present are certeinlie certified, that God this present morning hath called to his mercie our late souereigne ladie quéene Marie. Which hap as it is most heauie and grieuous vnto vs, so haue we no lesse cause another waie to reioise with praise to almightie God; for that he hath left vnto vs a true, lawfull and right inheritrice to the crowne of this realme, which is the ladie Elisabeth, second daughter to our late souereigne lord of noble memorie king Henrie the eight, and sister to our said late quéene, of whose most lawfull right and title in the succession of the crowne (thanks be to God) we néed not to doubt. Wherefore the lords of this house haue determined with your assents and consents, to passe from hence into the palace, and there to proclame the said ladie Elisabeth quéene of this realme, without further tract of time. Whereto the whole house answered with euident apearance of ioy, God saue quéene Elisabeth, long may quéene Elisabeth reigne ouer vs. And so this present parlement being dissolued by the act of God, the said lords immediatlie calling vnto them the kings and principall heralds at armes, went into the palace of Westminster, and directlie before the hall dore in the fore none of the same daie, after seuerall soundings of trumpets made, in most solemne maner, proclamed the new quéene, by this name and title: Elisabeth by the grace of God queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: to the great comfort and reioising of the people, as by their maners and countenances well apeared. After which proclamation made at Westminster, the said lords, to wit the duke of Norffolke, the lord treasuror, the earle of Oxford, and diuerse other lords and bishops, with all spéd repaired into the citie of London, where the like proclamation was made in the presence of them, and also of the lord maior and aldermen in their scarlet gowns, at the crosse in Cheape, with no lesse vniuersall ioy and thanksgiuing to God of all the hearers. And so our most gratious souereigne ladie quæne Elisabeth began hir happie reigne ouer this realme of England, to the great comfort and gladnesse of all estates christianlie minded and disposed, vpon the foresaid seuentéenth day of Nouember,

The ladie Elisabeth proclamed quéen.

The beginning of quéene Elisabeths prosperous reigne.

——(lux hæc venerabilis Anglis,
Hæc est illa dies albo signando lapillo saith the poet) in the yeare after the creation of the world, fiue thousand, fiue hundred, twentie and fiue, after the birth of our sauiour one thousand, fiue hundred, fiftie and eight; of the empire of Ferdinando the first emperor of Rome bearing that name, the first; in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of Henrie the second of that name French king; and in the sixteenth yeare of the reigne of Marie quéene of Scotland. 1558

On wednesdaie the three and twentith of Nouember, the quénes maiestie remoued from Hatfield, vnto the Charter house in London, where she lodged in the lord Northes house: in which remouing, and comming thus to the citie, it might well apeare how comfortable hir presence was to them that went to receiue hir on the waie, and likewise to the great multitudes of people that came abroad to sée hir grace, shewing their reioising harts in countenance and words, with hartie praiers for hir maiesties prosperous estate and preseruation: which no doubt were acceptable to God, as by the sequele of things it may certenlie be belieued, sith his diuine maiestie hath so directed hir doings, that if euer the commonwealth of this land hath flourished, it may rightlie be said, that in hir most happie reigne it hath béene most flourishing, in peace, quietnesse, and due administration of iustice, mixed with mercifull clemencie, so as those which cannot content themselues with the present state of things vnder hir rule, no doubt they are such factious creatures, as will not rest satisfied with anie kind of gouernement, be it neuer so iust and commendable. From the which sort of men the Lord deliuer hir rotall maiestie, and all hir true and louing subiects, and preserue hir in long life to all our comforts, and continue hir in such happie procedings as she hath begun, to the end.

The quénes remouing frō Hatfield.

The flourishing estate of this land vnder quéene Elisabeth.

Hir grace remoueth to the tower.

On mondaie the eight and twentith of November, about two of the clocke in the afternoone, hir grace remoued againe, and taking hir chariot, rode from my lord Moths house alongst Barbican, and entring by Criplegate into the citie, kept along the wall to Bishops gate, and so by blanch Chapelton vnto Marke lane. At hir entring into blanch Chapleton, the artillerie in the tower began to go off, continuallie shooting for the space almost of halfe an houre, but yet had made an end before hir maiestie was aduanced to Berkin church, and so with great ioie and preasle of people, of whom all the streets were full as she passed, declaring their inward reioisings by gesture, words, and countenance, she entered the tower, where she continued till the fift of December being mondaie, on the which daie, she remoued by water vnto Summerset place in the Strond, where she arriued about ten of the clocke in the forenoone the same daie.

Hir remoning to Summerset house.

¶ On thursdaie betweene two and three in the morning the eight of December 1558 in the first yeare of our souereigne ladie queene Elisabeths reigne died in the tower of London, that honorable man sir Thomas Cheinete knight of the order, treasuror of hir maiesties most honorable household, warden of the cinque ports, & of hir highnesse priuie councell, whose pulses (by the report of his surgeon) laboured more than three quarters of an houre after his death, so stronglie as though life had not beene absent from the bodie. By the report also of the same surgeon, he had the sweetest face of death to behold for one of his yeares that euer he saw, and died so quietlie and patientlie, that neither his face, mouth, eies, hands, or feet were vncomelie vsed in the changing of this his life.

Abr. Fl. ex manuscripto Hen. Tennant.

The death of sir Thomas Cheinie lord warden of the cinque ports.

His honest & honorable care for his men that serued him.

For twentie yeares before his departure, he kept in his stable continuallie winter and summer twentie great horsse at the least, and eight or nine geldings, besides sixteene or seuenteene geldings which were kept at grasse, and had in a readinesse furniture for them all to serue in the field: and no one of the same horsse or geldings but he was able and readie for anie man at armes to serue vpon. Beside this he kept so bountifull a house, and was so liberall and good to his men, that well was that noble mans son, gentlemans sonne, or other that might happen to be preferred into his seruice. And againe, the number of his seruants to whom he gaue liueries were 205, whereof in household were six score, besides strangers that were dailie comming and going. And his seruants had no iust cause, either for lacke of great wages trulie paid them euerie quarter, and bordwages euerie sundaie, or plentie of meat and drinke, & lodging on good featherbeds to liue out of order. And such commoditie as might by chance fall within the iurisdiction of his office of wardenrie, being a thing fit for his men, he neuer turned the same to his owne vse, but alwaies gaue it them. Whether this realme hath not lost a worthie subiect, and specialtie his men a good maister, let all men iudge that knew him.

His horsse for seruice which proued him to be a louer of chiualrie.

The like is reported of cardinall Wolsele when he was in the floure of his prosperitie.

But how manie be there now that will giue away the profits of their office to their seruants?

Before his departure out of this world, he seemed to haue a great care for his men, thinking least without some prouision for them, they would after his death run at randon and liue disorderlie, which like a noble man he preuented after this liberall sort as followeth. In his last will and testament, to some he gaue annuities during life, and to others a whole yeares wages after his death; but both to the one sort and the other he prouided that all things which he owght them might be paied: and also so long as they vsed themselues like honest men, and were not reteined in seruice, they should haue meat, drinke, and lodging at his house, till his sonne now lord Cheinie came to his lawfull age, which was the space of three yeares, in no lesse or worsse maner than they were wont and accustomed to haue in his life time. In his last will he also remembred some of his frends, as well those of nobilitie and worship, as others, some with one gift and some with an other, desiring them to assist his executors for the performance of his last will.

His mindfulnes of his friends at his death.

His wit, experience, courtesie, and valiantnesse in seruice was such, as king Henrie the eight, and his children, to wit, king Edward the first, queene Marie, and queene Elisabeth vsed him as one of all their priuie councell, and was treasuror of all their honorable households during his life. He was brought vp in king Henrie the seuenths house, & was one of his henchmen. So that it appeareth before he died, he had serued three kings, and two queenes. His truth was such to all these princes, that he euer liued towards them Sine macula, serning in the court three score yeare. And although he bare this great saile, yet prouided he to paie euerie man iustlie that he owght them. His bountifulnesse, liberalitie, and courtesie to diuerse noble men, gentlemen and others, attending in the court was such, that they were euer glad to haue him there amongst them; and his stoutnesse & haltie courage was such, and so well knowen to the Frenchmen, as they both feared and loued him wonderfullie. In the end he was so worthie a gentleman, and such a necessarie member in the commonwealth, as his want cannot but be lamented of all good and true English harts. But the almightie must be serued when his good will and pleasure is.]

Sir Thomas Cheinete an old seruitor in court. See more of him before, pag. 973, 974.

A commendation of his courtesie, bountifulnes and warlike stoutnesse.

The thirteenth of December being tuesdaie, the corps of queene Marie was right honorablie conueied from hir manor of S. Iames, vnto the abbeie of Westminster. Hir picture was laid on the coffin, apparelled in hir rotall robes, with a crowne of gold set on the head thereof, after a solemne manner. In the abbeie was a rich and sumptuous hearse prepared and set vp with war, and richlie decked with penons, baners, and scutchions, of the armes of England and France, vnder which hearse the corpse rested all that night, and the nert daie it was brought into the new chappell, where king Henrie the seuenth lieth, and was interred there in the chapell on the north side.

Quéene Marie buried.

The foure and twentith of December, being the euen of the natiuitie of our Lord, was a solemne obsequie kept in the abbeie church of Westminster, for Charles the seuenth late emperour, who departed this life in September last, the one and twentith of the same moneth, in the monasterie of S. Iustus in Castile, being then of age about eight and fiftie yeares, hauing gouerned the empire before he renounced the same a six and thirtie yeares; and his kingdoms of Castile, Arragon, Naples, Sicill, and others, aboue fortie yeares.

An obsequie kept for the emperour.

Moreouer in this yeare 1558 there died two of the said emperors sisters, that went with him into Spaine, after he had resigned the empire, to wit, queene Leonor, first maried vnto Emanuell king of Portugall, and after his decease vnto the French king Francis the first of that name: she deceassed in Februarie last past. His other sister Marie, queene of Hungarie, late regent of the low countries, deceassed on saint Lukes daie, the eightenth of October last past. And so the one preuenting him, the other

The deceasse of the queene of France.

The deceasse of the queene of Hungarie.

taried

taried not long after him, in so much that king Philip did celebrate the exequies in the towne of Brusels, of his father the emperour, of his aunt Marie quæne of Hungarie, and of his wife Marie quæne of England, in this present moneth of December subsequentlie, after the most pompous and solemne manner.

1559. The letanie. The epistle and gospell in English.

On sundaie the first of Januarie, by vertue of the quænes proclamation, the English letanie was read accordinglie as was vsed in hir graces chappell in churches through the citie of London. And likewise the epistle and gospell of the daie began to be read in the same churches at masse time in the English tong, by commandement giuen by the lord maior, according to the tenour of the same proclamation, published the thirtith of the last month. On thursdaie the twelfe of Januarie, the quænes maiestie remoued from hir palace of Westminster by water vnto the tower of London, the lord maior and aldermen in their barge, and all the citizens with their barges decked and trimmed with targets and banners of their mysteries accordinglie attending on hir grace.

The quæne remoueth from Westminster to the tower by water.

The bachellers barge of the lord maiors companie, to wit, the mercers had their barge with a foist trimmed with three tops, and artillerie aboord, gallantlie apointed to wait vpon them, shooting off lustilie as they went, with great and pleasant melodie of instruments, which plaied in most sweet and heauenlie maner. Hir grace shut the bridge about two of the clocke in the after none, at the still of the ebbe, the lord maior and the rest following after hir barge, attending the same, till hir maiestie toke land at the priuie staires at the tower wharfe: and then the said lord maior with the other barges returned, passing through the bridge againe with the flood, and landed at the wharfe of the three cranes in the Vintrie. Vpon saturdaie, which was the fourteenth daie of Januarie, in the yeare of our Lord God 1558, about two of the clocke at after none, the most noble and christian princesse, our most dread souereigne ladie Elisabeth, by the grace of God quæne of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: marched from the tower, to passe thorough the citie of London toward Westminster, richlie furnished, and most honourablie accompanied, as well with gentlemen, barons, and other the nobilitie of this realme, as also with a notable traine of goodlie and beautifull ladies, richlie apointed.

The quæne passeth from the tower to Westminster through the citie.

At hir entring the citie, she was of the people receiued maruellous intierlie, as appeared by the assemblies praiers, wishes, welcommings, cries, tender words, and all other signes, which argued a wonderfull earnest loue of most obedient subiects towards their souereigne. And on the other side, hir grace by holding vp hir hands, and merrie countenance to such as stood farre off, and most tender and gentle language to those that stood nigh vnto hir grace, did declare hirselfe no lesse thankefullie to receiue hir peoples good will, than they louinglie offered it vnto hir. To all that wished hir grace well, she gaue heartie thanks; & to such as bad God saue hir grace, she said againe God saue them all, and thanked them with all hir hart. So that on the other side there was nothing but gladnesse, nothing but praier, nothing but comfort. The quænes maiestie reioised maruellouslie to see that so exceedinglie shewed towards hir hir grace, which all good princes haue euer desired, I meane so earnest loue of subiects, so euidentlie declared euen to hir graces owne person, being caried in the midst of them.

The quæne saluteth them that salute hir.

The people againe were wonderfullie rauished with the louing answers and gestures of their princesse, like to the which they had before tried at hir first comming to the tower from Hatfield. This hir graces louing behauiour preconceiued in the peoples heads, vpon these considerations was then throughlie confirmed, and in deed implanted a wonderfull hope in them touching hir worthie gouernment in the rest of hir reigne. For in all hir passage she did not onelie shew hir most gratious loue toward the people in generall, but also priuatlie if the baser personages had either offered hir grace anie flowers, or such like, as a signification of their good will, or mooued to hir anie suite; she most gentlie, to the common reioising of all the lookers on, and priuat comfort of that partie, staied hir chariot, and heard their requests. So that if a man would saie well, he could not better tearme the citie of London that time, than a stage, wherein was shewed the wonderfull spectacle of a noble hearted princesse towards hir most louing people, and the peoples exceeding comfort in beholding so worthie a souereigne, & hearing so princelike a voice, which could not but haue set the enimie on fire, sith the vertue is in the enimie alwaie commended, much more could not but inflame hir naturall, obedient, and most louing people, whose weale leaneth onelie vpon hir grace, and hir gouernment.

The citie of London a stage for the time of this solemnitie.

Thus therefore the quænes maiestie passed from the tower, till she came to Fanchurch, the people on each side ioyouslie beholding the view of so gratious a ladie their quæne, and hir grace no lesse gladlie noting and obseruing the same. Nere vnto Fanchurch was erected a scaffold richlie furnished, whereon stood a noise of instruments, and a child in costlie apatell, which was apointed to welcome the quænes maiestie in the whole cities behalfe. Against which place when hir grace came, of hir owne will she commanded the chariot to be staied, and that the noise might be appeased, till the child had vttered his welcoming oration, which he spake in English as here followeth:

A scaffold set vp at Fanchurch with melodie, &c.

O peereles souereigne queene, behold what this thy towne
Hath thee presented with,
at thy first entrance heere:
Behold with how rich hope
she leades thee to thy crowne,
Behold with what two gifts,
she comforteth thy cheere.
The first is blessing toongs,
which manie a welcome saie,
Which praie thou maist doo well,
which praise thee to the skie.
Which wish to thee long life,
which blesse this happie daie,
Which to thy kingdome heapes
all that in toongs can lie.
The second is true hearts,
which loue thee from their root,
Whose sute is triumph now,
and ruleth all the game,
Which faithfulnesse haue woone,
and all vntruth driuen out,
Which skip for ioy, when as they heare thy happie name.
Welcome therefore ô queene,
as much as heart can thinke,
Welcome againe ô queene,
as much as toong can tell;
Welcome to ioyous toongs,
and hearts that will not shrinke,
God thee preserue we praie,
and wish thee euer well.

These verses were vttered by a child to the quæne who gaue good eare to them.

The people wholie set vpon Elisabeth.

At which words of the last line, all the people gaue a great shout, wishing with one assent as the child had said. And the quæns maiestie thanked most heartilie both the citie for this hir gentle receiuing at the first, & also the people for confirming the same.

Here was noted in the quænes maiesties countenance, during the time that the child spake, besides a perpetuall attentiuenesse in hir face, a maruellous change in loke, as the childs words either touched hir person, or the peoples tongs and hearts. So that she with reioising visage did euidentlie declare that the words toke no lesse place in hir mind, than they were most heartilie pronounced by the child, as from all the hearts of hir most heartie citizens. The same verses were fastened vp in a table vpon the scaffold, and the Latine thereof likewise in Latine verses in another table, as hereafter insueth:

The verses in Latine which the child vttered to ỹ quæne in English.

Vrbs tua quæ ingressu dederit tibi munera primo,
O regina parem non habitura, vide.
Ad diadema tuum, te spe quàm diuite mittat,
Quæ duo lætitiæ det tibi dona, vide.
Munus habes primum, linguas bona multa precantes,
Quæ te quum laudant, tum pia vota sonant,
Fœlicémque diem hunc dicunt, tibi sæcula longa
Optant, & quicquid denig, longa potest.
Altera dona feres, vera, & tui amantia corda,
Quorum gens ludum iam reget vna tuum.
In quibus est infracta fides, falsumq, perosa,
Quaq, tuo audito nomine læta salit.
Grata venis igitur, quantum cor concipit vllum,
Quantum lingua potest dicere, grata venis.
Cordibus infractis, linguisq, per omnia lætis
Grata venis: saluam te velit esse Deus.

Now when the child had pronounced his oration, and the quænes highnesse so thankefullie had receiued it, she marched forward toward Gratious street, where at the vpper end before the signe of the eagle, the citie had erected a gorgeous and sumptuous arch as here followeth. A stage was made which extended from the one side of the street to the other, richlie vawted with battlements conteining three ports, and ouer the middlemost was aduanced three seuerall stages in degrees.

A great stage arched and verie sumptuous at Gratious street.

Upon the lowest stage was made one seat roiall, wherein were placed two personages, representing king Henrie the seuenth, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of king Edward the fourth; either of these two princes sitting vnder one cloth of estate in their seates, none otherwise diuided, but that the one of them which was king Henrie the seuenth, proceeding out of the house of Lancaster, was inclosed in a red rose, and the other which was quæne Elizabeth, being heire to the house of Yorke, inclosed with a white rose, each of them roiallie crowned, and decentlie apparelled, as apperteineth to princes, with scepters in their hands, and one vawt surmounting their heads, wherein aptlie were placed two tables, each conteining the title of those two princes. And these personages were so set, that the one of them ioined hands with the other, with the ring of matrimonie perceiued on the finger. Out of the which two roses sprang two branches gathered into one, which were directed vpward to the second stage or degree, wherein was placed one representing the valiant & noble prince king Henrie the eight, which sprong out of the former stocke, crowned with a crowne imperiall, and by him sat one representing the right worthie ladie quæne Anne, wife to the said king Henrie the eight, and mother to our most souereigne ladie quæne Elizabeth that now is, both apparelled with scepters and diadems, and other furniture due to the state of a king and quæne, and two tables surmounting their heads, wherein were written their names and titles.

The vnitie of the white rose and the red.

Vertuous quæne Anne mother to gratious quæne Elizabeth.

From their seat also proceeded vpwards one branch, directed to the third and vppermost stage or degree, wherein likewise was planted a seat roiall, in the which was set one representing the quænes most excellent maiestie Elizabeth, now our most dread souereigne ladie, crowned and apparelled as the other princes were. Out of the fore part of this pageant was made a standing for a child, which at the quæns maiesties comming declared vnto hir the whole meaning of the said pageant. The two sides of the same were filled with lowd noises of musicke. And all emptie places thereof were furnished with sentences concerning vnitie, and the whole pageant garnished with red roses and white. And in the fore front of the same pageant, in a faire wreath, was written the name and title of the same, which was; The vniting of the two houses of Lancaster and Yorke. This pageant was grounded vpon the quæns maiesties name. For like as the long warre betweene the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster then ended, when Elizabeth daughter to Edward the fourth matched in mariage with Henrie the seuenth, heire to the house of Lancaster: so sith that the quænes maiesties name was Elizabeth, & for somuch as she is the onelie heire of Henrie the eight, which came of both the houses, as the knitting vp of concord: it was deuised, that like as Elizabeth was the first occasion of concord, so the another Elizabeth, might mainteine the same among hir subiects, so that vnitie was the end whereat the whole deuise shot, as the quænes maiesties name moued the first ground.

The posie expresing the shew set forth in colors.

Vnitie the end whereat the deuise of the pageant was directed.

The pageant now against the quænes maiesties comming was addressed with children, representing the forenamed personages, with all furniture due vnto the setting forth of such a matter well meant, as the argument declared costlie and sumptuouslie set forth, as the beholders can beare witnesse. Now the quænes maiestie drew nere vnto the said pageant. And for so much as the noise was great, by reason of the preasse of people, so that she could scarse heare the child which did interpret the said pageant, and hir charlot was passed so far forwards, that she could not well view the personages representing the kings & quænes aboue named: she required to haue the matter opened vnto hir, and what they signified, with the end of vnitie and ground of hir name, according as is before expressed. For the sight whereof hir grace caused hir charlot to be remoued backe, and yet hardlie could she see, because the children were set somewhat with the furthest in. But after that hir grace had vnderstood the meaning thereof, she thanked the citie, praised the faithfulnesse of the worke, and promised that she would do hir whole indeuor for the continuall preseruation of concord, as the pageant did import. The child appointed in the standing aboue named, to open the meaning of the said pageant, spake these words vnto hir grace:

The quæne is desirous to know the meaning of euerie representation.

The meaning of the pageant opened by the speech of a child.

The two princes that sit,
vnder one cloth of state,
The man in the red rose,
the woman in the white:
Henrie the seauenth, and queene Elizabeth his mate,
By ring of marriage,
as man and wife vnite.
Both heires to both their blouds,
to Lancaster the king,
The queene to Yorke, in one
the two houses did knit:
Of whome as heire to both,
Henrie the eight did spring,
In whose seate his true heire thou queene Elizabeth doost sit.
Therefore as ciuill warre,
and shead of bloud did cease,
When these two houses were vnited into one;
So now that iarre shall stint,

and

and quietnesse increase,
We trust, ô noble queene,
thou wilt be cause alone.

The which also were written in Latine verses, and both drawen in two tables vpon the fore front of the foresaid pageant, as hereafter orderlie followeth:

The same verses in Latine.

Hij quos iungit idem solium, quos annulus idem:
Hæc albente nitens, ille rubente rosa:
Septimus Henricus rex, regina Elizabetha,
Scilicet hæredes gentis vterque suæ.
Hæc Eboracensis, Lancastrius ille dederunt
Connubio, è gemmis quo foret vna domus.
Excipit hos hæres Henricus copula regum
Octauus, magni regis imago potens,
Regibus hinc succedis auis regique parenti,
Patris iusta hæres Elizabetha tuis.

Sentences placed therein concerning vnitie.

These verses conceerne concord and discord.

Nullæ concordes animos vires domant.
Qui iuncti terrent, deiuncti timent.
Discordes vnimi soluunt, concordes ligant.
Augentur parua pace, magna bello cadunt.
Coniunctæ manus fortius tollunt onus.
Regno pro mœnibus æneis ciuium concordia.
Qui diu pugnant diutius lugent.
Dissidentes principes subditorum lues.
Princeps ad pacem natus non ad arma datus.
Filia concordiæ copia, neptis quies.
Dissentiens respublica hostibus patet.
Qui idem tenent, diutius tenent.
Regnum diuisum facilè dissoluitur.
Ciuitas concors armis frustrà tentatur.
Omnium gentium consensus firmat fidem, &c.

These verses and other prætie sentences were drawen in void places of this pageant, all tending to one end, that quietnes might be mainteined, and all dissention displaced: and that by the quænes maiestie heire to agrœment, and agrœing in name with hir, which tofore had ioined those houses, which had bœne the occasion of much debate and ciuill war within this realme, as maie appære to such as will search chronicles, but be not to be touched herein: onelie declaring hir graces passage through the citie, and what prouision the citie made therefore. And yet the quænes maiestie came within hearing of this pageant, she sent certeine as also at all the other pageants, to require the people to be silent. For hir maiestie was disposed to heare all that should be said vnto hir.

When the quænes maiestie had heard the childs oration, and vnderstood the meaning of the pageant at large, she marched forward toward Cornehill, alwaie receiued with like reioising of the people. And there as hir grace passed by the conduit, which was curiouslie trimmed against that same time, with rich banners adorned, and a noise of lowd instruments vpon the top thereof, she spied the second pageant. And bicause she feared for the peoples noise, that she should not heare the child which did expound the same, she inquired what that pageant was yet that shee came to it; and there vnderstood, that there was a child representing hir maiesties person, placed in a seat of gouernement, supported by certeine vertues which suppressed their contrarie vices vnder their feet, and so forth, as in the description of the said pageant shall hereafter appære.

The conduit in Cornehill decked, and a noise of lowd instruments on the top of the same.

This pageant standing in the nether end of Cornhill, was extended from the one side of the street to the other. And in the same pageant was deuised three gates all open, and ouer the middle part thereof was erected one chaire or seate roiall, with a cloth of estate to the same apperteining, wherein was placed a child representing the quænes highnesse, with consideration had for place conuenient for a table, which conteined hir name and title: and in a comelie wreath artificiallie & well deuised, with perfect sight and vnderstanding to the people.

The deuise of the pageant in Cornehill.

In the front of the same pageant was written the name and title thereof, which is; The seat of worthie gouernance. Which seat was made in such artificiall maner, as to the appearance of the lookers on, the fore part seemed to haue no staie, & therefore of force was staied by liuelie personages, which personages were in number foure, standing and stateng the fore front of the same seat roiall, each hauing his face to the quæne and people, whereof euerie one had a table to expresse their effects, which are vertues, namelie Pure religion, Loue of subiects, Wisedome and Iustice, which did tread their contrarie vices vnder their feet, that is to wit; Pure religion did tread vpon Superstition and Ignorance, Loue of subiects did tread vpon Rebellion and Insolencie, Wisedome did tread vpon Follie and Vaine glorie, Iustice did tread vpon Adulation and Briberie. Ech of these personages according to their proper names and properties, had not onelie their names in plaine and perfect writing set vpon their breasts easilie to be read of all: but also euerie of them was aptlie and properlie apparelled, so that his apparell and name did agrœ to expresse the same person, that in title he represented.

Liuely workmanship and right commendable.

A proper moral.

This part of the pageant was thus appointed and furnished. The two sides ouer the two side ports had in them placed a noise of instruments, which immediatlie after the childs speech, gaue an heauenlie melodie. Vpon the top or vppermost part of the said pageant, stood the armes of England, roiallie purtraitured with the proper beasts to vphold the same. One representing the quænes highnesse sat in this seat crowned with an imperiall crowne, and before hir seat was a conuenient place appointed for one child, which did interpret and applie the said pageant, as hereafter shall be declared. Euerie void place was furnished with proper sentences, commending the seat supported by vertues, and defacing the vices, to the vtter extirpation of rebellion, and to euerlasting continuance of quietnesse and peace. The quænes maiestie approching nigh vnto this pageant thus beautified and furnished in all points, caused hir charriot to be drawne nigh therevnto, that hir grace might heare the childs short oration, which was this:

How the pageant was appointed and furnished.

The quæne draweth nære the pagent to heare the childs oration.

While that religion true,
shall ignorance suppresse,
And with hir weightie foot,
breake superstitions head:
While loue of subiects shall rebellion distresse,
And with zeale to the prince,
insolencie downe tread.
While iustice flattering toongs,
and briberie can deface,
While follie and vaine glorie,
to wisedome yeeld their hands:
So long shall gouernement swarue from hir right race,
But wrong decaieth still,
and right wisenesse vp stands.
Now all thy subiects hearts,
ô prince of peereles fame,
Do trust these vertues shall mainteine vp thy throne:
And vice be kept downe still,
the wicked put to shame,
That good with good may ioy,
and naught with naught may mone.

Which verses were painted vpon the right side of the same pageant, and the Latine thereof on the left side in in another table, which were theſe héere following:

The ſame verſes in Latine painted on a table.

Quæ ſubnixa altè ſolio regina ſuperbo eſt,
Effigiem ſanctæ principis alma refert,
Quam cuiuis amor fulcit, ſapientia firmat,
Iuſtitia illuſtrat, relligióque beat,
Vana ſuperſtitio & craſſa ignorantia frontis
Preſſæ ſub pura relligione iacent.
Regis amor domat effrænos animóſque rebelles,
Iuſtus adulantes doniuoróſque terret.
Cùm regit imperium ſapiens, ſine luce ſedebunt
Stultitia, atque huius numen inane honor.

Beſide theſe verſes, there were placed in euerie void roome of the pagent, both in Engliſh & Latine, ſuch ſentences as aduanced the ſeat of gouernance vpholden by vertue. The ground of this pageant was, that like as by vertues (which do abundantlie appeare in hir grace) the quænes maieſtie was eſtabliſhed in the ſeat of gouernment: ſo ſhe ſhuld ſit faſt in the ſame, ſo long as ſhe imbraſed vertue, and held vice vnder fot. For if vice once got vp the head, it would put the ſeat of gouerniement in perill of falling. The quænes maieſtie when ſhe had heard the child, and vnderſtood the pageant at full, gaue the citie alſo thanks therefore, & moſt gratiouſlie promiſed hir good indeuor for the maintenance of the ſaid vertues, and ſuppreſſion of vices, and ſo marched on, till ſhe came againſt the great conduit in Cheape, which was beautified with pictures and ſentences accordinglie, againſt hir graces comming thither. Againſt Soper lane end was ertended from the one ſide of the ſtréet to the other, a pageant which had three gates all open: ouer the middlemoſt whereof were erected three ſeuerall ſtages, whereon ſat eight children, as hereafter followeth. On the vppermoſt one child, on the middle three, on the loweſt foure, each hauing the proper name of the bleſſing that they did repreſent, written in a table, & placed aboue their head.

The ground or morall of the pageant.

The quénes promiſe with thanks to the citie.

A pageant at Soper lane end.

In the forefront of this pageant, before the children which did repreſent the bleſſings, was a conuenient ſtanding caſt out for a child to ſtand, which did expound the ſaid pageant vnto the quénes maieſtie, as was done in the other before. Euerie of theſe children were appointed and apparelled, according vnto the bleſſing which he did repreſent. And on the forepart of the ſaid pageant was written in faire letters the name of the foreſaid pageant in this manner:

The inſcription ſet or fixed vpon the front of the ſaid pageant.

The eight beatitudes expreſſed in the fift chapter of the goſpell of ſaint Matthew, applied to our ſouereigne ladie quæne Eliſabeth.

Ouer the two ſide poſts was placed a noiſe of inſtruments. And all the void places in the pageant were furniſhed with prettie ſaiengs, commending & touching the meaning of the ſaid pageant, which was the promiſes & bleſſings of almightie God, made to his people. Before that the quænes highneſſe came vnto this pageant, ſhe required the matter somwhat to be opened vnto hir, that hir grace might the better vnderſtand, what ſhould afterward by the child be ſaid vnto hir. Which ſo was, that the citie had there erected the pageant with eight children, repreſenting the eight bleſſings touched in the fift chapter of ſaint Matthew. Whereof euerie one vpon iuſt conſiderations, was aplied vnto hir highneſſe, and that the people thereby put hir grace in mind, that as hir good doings before had giuen iuſt occaſion, why that theſe bleſſings might fall vpon hir, that ſo if hir grace did continue in hir goodneſſe as ſhe had entered, ſhe ſhould hope for the fruit of theſe promiſes due vnto them that do exerciſe themſelues in the bleſſings: which hir grace heard maruellous gratiouſlie, and required that the charriot might be remoued towards the pageant, that ſhe might better perceiue the childs words, which were theſe, the quénes maieſtie giuing moſt attentiue eare, and requiring that the peoples noiſe might be ſtaid. The verſes were as follow:

The meaning of the pageant.

The quéne giueth attentiue care to the childs words.

Thou haſt beene right times bleſt,
ô queene of worthie fame,
By meekeneſſe of thy ſpirit,
when care did thee beſet,
By mourning in thy griefe,
by mildneſſe in thy blame,
By hunger and by thirſt,
and iuſtice couldſt none get,
By mercie ſhewd, not felt,
by cleanneſſe of thine heart,
By ſeeking peace alwaies,
by perſecution wrong,
Therefore truſt thou in God,
ſith he hath helpt thy ſmart,
That as his promiſe is,
ſo he will make thee ſtrong.

When theſe words were ſpoken, all the people wiſhed, that as the child had vttered, ſo God would ſtrengthen hir grace againſt all hir aduerſaries, whome the quænes maieſtie did moſt gentlie thanke for their ſo louing wiſh. Theſe verſes were painted on the left ſide of the ſaid pageant, and other in Latine on the other ſide, which were theſe héere inſuing:

A conſent on all ſides of prince, people, and children.

Qui lugent hilares fient, qui mitia geſtant
Pectora, multa ſoli iugera culta metent:
Iuſtitiam eſuriens ſitiénſue replebitur: ipſum
Fas homini puro corde videre Deum:
Quem alterius miſeret, Dominus miſerebitur huius:
Pacificus quiſquis, filius ille Dei eſt:
Propter iuſtitiam quiſquis patietur habétque
Demiſſam mentem cœlica regna capit.
Huic hominum generi terram, mare, ſidera, Vouis
Omnipotens, horum quiſque beatus erit.

Beſides theſe, euerie void place in the pageant was furniſhed with ſentences touching the matter and ground of the ſaid pageant. When all that was to be ſaid in this pageant was ended, the quænes maieſtie paſſed on forwards in Cheapſide. At the ſtandard in Cheape, which was dreſſed faire againſt the time, was placed a noiſe of trumpets, with banners and other furniture. The croſſe likewiſe was alſo made faire, and well trimmed. And nére vnto the ſame, vpon the porch of ſaint Peters church doore, ſtood the waits of the citie, which did giue a pleaſant noiſe with their inſtruments, as the quænes maieſtie did paſſe by, which on euerie ſide caſt hir countenance, and wiſhed well to all hir moſt louing people. Soone after that hir grace paſſed the croſſe, ſhe had eſpied the pageant erected at the little conduit in Cheape, and incontinent required to know what it might ſignifie. And it was told hir grace, that there was placed Time. Time, quoth ſhe? And time hath brought me hither. And ſo forth the whole matter was opened to hir grace, as hereafter ſhall be declared in the deſcription of the pageant.

The ſtandard and croſſe in Cheape adorned and trimmed.

A pageant erected at the little conduit in Cheape.

But in the opening, when hir grace vnderſtood that the bible in Engliſh ſhould be deliuered vnto hir by Truth, which was therein repreſented by a child: ſhe thanked the citie for that gift, and ſaid, that ſhe would oftentimes read ouer that booke, commanding ſir John Parrat, one of the knights which held vp hir canopie, to go before, and to receiue the booke. But learning that it ſhould be deliuered vnto hir grace downe by a ſilken lace, ſhe cauſed him to ſtaie, and ſo paſſed forward till ſhe came againſt the aldermen in the high end of Cheape before the little conduit, where the companies of the citie ended, which began at Fanchurch, & ſtood along the ſtréets, one by an other incloſed with raiſes, hanged with cloths, and themſelues well apparelled with manie rich rich furres, and their liuerie hoods vpon their shoulders in comelie and seemelie maner, hauing before them sundrie persons well apparelled in silks and chains of gold: as wiflers and garders of the said companies, besides a number of rich hangings, as well of tapistrie, arras, cloths of gold, siluer, veluet, damaske, sattin, and other silks plentifullie hanged all the waie, as the queenes highnesse passed from the tower thorough the citie.

The quéne promiſeth the citie often to read ouer the bible.

The seuerall companies of the citie shew their ioifull hearts at the queenes coming.

But at the windowes and penthouses of euerie house did hang a number of rich and costlie banners and stremers, till hir grace came to the vper end of Cheape. Where by appointment, the right worshipfull maister Ranulph Cholmelie recorder of the citie, presented to the queenes maiestie a purse of crimson sattin, richlie wrought with gold, wherein the citie gaue vnto the queens maiestie a thousand marks in gold, as maister recorder did declare breefelie vnto the queens maiestie, whose words tended to this end; that the lord maior, his brethren, and communaltie of the citie, to declare their gladnesse and goodwill towards the queenes maiestie, did present hir grace with that gold, desiring hir grace to continue their good and gratious queene, and not to esteeme the value of the gift, but the mind of the giuers. The queens maiestie with both hir hands tooke the purse, and answered to him againe maruellous pithilie; and so pithilie, that the standers by, as they imbraced intirelie hir gratious answer, so they maruelled at the couching thereof, which was in words truelie reported these. I thanke my lord maior, his brethren, and you all. And whereas your request is that I should continue your good ladie and queene, be ye ensured, that I will be as good vnto you, as euer queene was to hir people. No will in me can lacke, neither do I trust shall there lacke anie power. And persuade your selues, that for the safetie and quietnesse of you all, I will not spare (if need be) to spend my bloud, God thanke you all. Which answer of so noble an hearted princesse, if it moued a maruellous thout & reioising, it is nothing to be maruelled at, sith both the haltinesse thereof was so wonderfull, and the words so iointlie knit.

The citie giueth a thousand marks to the queene in a purse.

The verie words of the queene vttered to the lord maior, &c.

When hir grace had thus answered the recorder, she marched toward the little conduit, where was erected a pageant with square proportion, standing directlie before the same conduit, with battlements accordinglie. And in the same pageant was aduanced two hilles or mounteins of conuenient height. The one of them being on the north side of the same pageant, was made cragged, barren, and stonie, in the which was erected one tree, artificiallie made, all withered and dead, with branches accordinglie. And vnder the same tree at the foot thereof sat one in homelie and rude apparell crokedlie, and in mourning maner, hauing ouer his head in a table, written in Latine and English, his name which was Ruinosa respublica, A decaied commonweale. And vpon the same withered tree were fixed certeine tables, wherein were written proper sentences, expressing the causes of the decaie of a commonweale. The other hill on the south side was made faire, fresh, greene and beautifull, the ground thereof full of floures and beautie, and on the same was erected also one tree, verie fresh and faire, vnder the which stood vpright one fresh personage well apparelled and appointed, whose name also was written both in English and Latine, which was, Respublica bene instituta, A flourishing commonweale.

A pageant of a square proportion, and what things the same had represented in it.

Respublica ruinosa.

Respublica bene instituta.

And vpon the same tree also were fixed certeine tables conteining sentences, which expressed the causes of a flourishing commonweale. In the middle betweene the said hils, was made artificiallie one hollow place or caue, with doore and locke inclosed, out of the which, a little before the queenes highnesse comming thither, issued one personage, whose name was Time, apparelled as an old man, with a sieth in his hand, hauing wings artificiallie made, leading a personage of lesser stature than himselfe, which was finelie and well apparelled, all clad in white silke, and directlie ouer hir head was set hir name and title in Latine and English, Temporis filia, The daughter of Time. Which two so appointed, went forwards toward the south side of the pageant. And on hir brest was written hir proper name, which was Veritas, Truth, who held a booke in hir hand, vpon the which was written Verbum veritatis, The word of truth. And out of the south side of the pageant was cast a standing for a child, which should interpret the same pageant. Against whome when the queenes maiestie came, he spake vnto hir grace these sweet words:

Veritas temporis filia, expounded to the queene.

The interpretation of the pageant deliuered in speech to the queene by a child.

This old man with the sieth, old father Time they call,
And hir his daughter Truth,
which holdeth yonder booke:
Whome he out of his rocke, hath brought forth to vs all,
From whence this manie yeares
she durst not once out looke.
The ruthfull wight that sits vnder the barren tree,
Resembleth to vs the forme,
when common weales decaie:
But when they be in state triumphant, you may see
By him in fresh attire,
that sits vnder the baie.
Now sith that Time againe, his daughter Truth hath brought,
We trust ô worthie queene,
thou wilt this truth imbrace,
And sith thou vnderstandst,
the good estate and naught,
We trust wealth thou wilt plant,
and barrennes displace.
But for to heale the sore,
and cure that is not seene,
Which thing the booke of truth,
doth teach in writing plaine:
Shee doth present to thee
the same, ô worthie queene,
For that, that words doo flie,
but written doth remaine.

When the child had thus ended his speech, he reached his booke towards the queenes maiestie, which a little before Truth had let downe vnto him from the hill, which by sir John Parrat was receiued, and deliuered vnto the queene. But shee as soone as she had receiued the booke, kissed it, and with both hir hands held vp the same, and so laid it vpon hir brest, with great thanks to the citie therefore: and so went forward towards Paules churchyard. The former matter which was rehearsed vnto the queenes maiestie, was written in two tables, on either side the pageant eight verses, and in the middest, these in Latine:

The queene receiueth Verbum Dei, kisseth it, and laieth it in hir lap.

Ille, vides falcem læua qui sustinet vncam,
Tempus is est, cui stat filia vera comes:
Hanc pater exsa deductam rupe reponit
In lucem, quam non viderat ante diu.
Qui sedet à læua cultu malè tristis inepto
Quem durus crescens cauti bus orbis obit,
Nos monet effigie quasit respublica, quando
Cerruit, at contra quando beata viget.
Ille docet iuuenis forma spectandus, amictu
Sctius, & æterna laurea fronde virens.

The sentences written in Latine and English vpon both the trees, declaring the causes of both estates, and first of a ruinous commonweale were these:

these: Want of Gods feare, disobedience to rulers, blindnesse of guides, briberie in magistrats, rebellion in subiects, ciuill discord, flattering of princes, vnmercifulnesse in rulers, vnthankefulnesse in subiects. Causes of a flourishing commonweale are these: Feare of God, a wise prince, learned rulers, obedience to officers, obedient subiects, louers of the commonweale, vertue rewarded, vice chastened.

The meaning in briefe of this pagent.

The matter of this pageant dependeth of them that went before. For as the first declared hir grace to come out of the house of vnitie, the second that she is placed in the seat of gouernement staid with vertues, to the suppression of vice; and therefore in the third, the eight blessings of almightie God might well be aplied vnto hir: so this fourth now is, to put hir grace in remembrance of the state of the commonweale, which Time with Truth his daughter doth reueale: which Truth also hir grace hath receiued, and therefore cannot but be mercifull and carefull for the good gouernement thereof. From thence, the quæenes maiestie passed toward Paules churchyard, and when she came ouer against Paules schole, a child appointed by the schoolemaister thereof, pronounced a certeine oration in Latine, and certeine verses, which also were there written as followeth:

A scholer of Paules vttereth an oration in Latine to the queene.

Philosophus ille diuinus Plato inter multa præclarè ac sapienter dicta, hoc posteris proditum reliquit; Rempublicam illam fæliciss. fore, cui princeps sophiæ studiosa, virtutibúsq; ornata contigerit. Quem si verè dixisse censeamus (vt quidem verissimè) cur non terra Britannica plauderet? cur non populus gaudium atque lætitiam agitaret? Immo, cur non hunc diem, albo (quod aiunt) lapillo notaret? Quo princeps talis nobis adest, qualē priores non viderunt, qualémq; posteritas haud facilè cernere poterit; dotibus quum animi, tum corporis vndiq; fæliciss. Casti quidem corporis dotes ita apertæ sunt, vt oratione non egeant. Animi verò tot tantæq;, vt ne verbis quidem exprimi possint. Hæc nempe regibus summis orta, morum atq; animi nobilitate genus exuperat. Huius pectus Christi religionis amore flagrat. Hæc gentem Britannicam virtutibus illustrabit, clypeóq; iustitiæ teget. Hæc literis Græcis & Latinis eximia, ingenióq; præpollens est. Hac imperante pietas vigebit, Anglia florebit, aurea sæcula redibunt. Vos igitur Angli tot commoda accepturi, Elisabetham reginam nostram celeberrimam ab ipso Christo huius regni imperio destinatam, honore debito prosequimini. Huius imperijs animo libentissimo subditi estote, vósq; tali principe dignos præbete. Et quoniam pueri non viribus sed precibus, officium præstare possunt, nos alumni huius scholæ ab ipso Coleto olim templi Paulini decano extructæ, teneras palmas ad cælum tendentes Christum Opt. Max. precaturi sumus, vt tuam celsitudinem annos Nestoreos summo cum honore Anglis imperitare faciat, matrémq; pignoribus charis beatam reddat: Amen.

Laus Elisabethæ regni iugum subeuntis.

Anglia nunc tandem plaudas, lætare, resulta,
Præsto iam vita est, præsidiúmq; tibi.
En tua spes venit, tua gloria, lux, decus omne
Venit iam, solidam qua tibi præstat opem.
Succurrétq; tuis rebus quæ pessum abiere,
Perdita quæ fuerant hæc reparare volet,
Omnia florebunt, redeunt nunc aurea sæcla,
In melius surgent quæ cecidere bona.
Debes ergo illi totam te reddere fidam,
Cuius in accessu commoda tot capies.

Quenam præstabit Elisabethæ suo regimine.

Salue igitur dicas, imo de pectore summo,
Elizabeth regni non dubitanda salus,
Virgo venit, veniátq; optes comitata deinceps,
Pignoribus charis, læta parens veniat.
Hoc Deus omnipotens ex alto donet olympo,
Qui cælum & terram condidit atq; regit.

Which the quéenes maiestie most attentiuelie hearkened vnto. And when the child had pronounced, he did kisse the oration which he had there faire written in paper, and deliuered it vnto the quéenes maiestie, which most gentlie receiued the same. And when the quæenes maiestie had heard all that was there offered to be spoken, then hir grace marched toward Ludgate, where she was receiued with a noise of instruments, the fore front of the gate being finelie trimmed vp against hir maiesties comming. From thence by the way as she went downe toward Flæt-bridge, one about hir grace noted the cities charge, that there was no cost spared. Hir grace answered, that she did well consider the same, and that it should be remembred. An honorable answer, worthie a noble prince, which may comfort all hir subiects, considering that there can be no point of gentlenesse, or obedient loue shewed towards hir grace, which she doth not most tenderlie accept, and gratiouslie weie. In this maner, the people on euerie side reioising, hir grace went forward towards the conduit in Flætstréet, where was the fift and last pageant erected in forme following.

The quéenes maiestie considered the cities charge.

From the conduit, which was beautified with painting, vnto the northside of the stréet was erected a stage, imbatteled with foure towers, and in the same a square plat rising with degrées; and vpon the vpermost degrée was placed a chaire, or seat roiall, and behind the same seat, in curious artificiall maner was erected a trée of reasonable heigth, and so farre aduanced aboue the seat, as it did well and semelie shadow the same, without indamaging the sight of anie part of the pageant: and the same trée was beautified with leaues as gréene as art could deuise, being of a conuenient greatnesse, and conteining thereupon the fruit of the date. And on the top of the same trée in a table was set the name thereof, which was a palme trée, and in the aforesaid seat or chaire was placed * a seemelie and meet personage richlie apparelled in parlement robes, with a scepter in hir hand, as a quæne, crowned with an open crowne, whose name and title was in a table fixed ouer hir head, in this sort: Debora the iudge and restorer of the house of Israell: Iudic. 4. And the other degrees on either side were furnished with six personages, two representing the nobilitie, two the clergie, & two the communaltie. And before these personages was written in a table: Debora with hir estats consulting for the good gouernment of Israell. At the feet of these, and the lowest part of the pageant was ordeined a conuenient rome for a child to open the meaning of the pageant. When the quéenes maiestie drew neare vnto this pageant, and perceiued, as in the other, the child readie to speake; hir grace required silence, and commanded hir chariot to be remoued nigher, that she might plainlie heare the child speake, which said as hereafter followeth:

A pagent in Flætstréet described.

* Alluding to the quéenes maiestie no doubt.

How willing the quæne was to heare the child speake.

Iabin of Canaan king, had long by force of armes
Opprest the Israelites, which for Gods people went:
But God minding at last for to redresse their harmes,
The worthie Debora
as iudge among them sent.
In warre she through Gods aid,
did put hir foes to flight,

And

And with the dint of sword
the band of bondage brast.
In peace she, through Gods aid,
did alwaie mainteine right,
And iudged Israell
till fortie yeares were past.
A worthie president,
ô worthie queene thou hast,
A worthie woman iudge,
a woman sent for staie:
And that the like to vs
indure alwaie thou maist,
Thy louing subiects will with true harts and toongs praie.

Which verses were written vpon the pageant, & the same in Latin also fixed in the face of the people:

Quando Dei populum Canaan, rex pressit Iaben,
Mittitur à magno Debora magna Deo:
Quæ populum eriperet, sanctum seruaret Iudan,
Milite quæ patrio frangeret hostis opes.
Hæc Domino mandante Deo lectissima fecit
Fœmina, & aduersos contudit ense viros.
Hæc quater denos populum correxerat annos
Iudicio, bello strenua, pace gravis:
Sic, ô sic populum bellóque & pace guberna,
Debora sis Anglis Elisabetha tuis.

The void places of this pageant were filled with prettie sentences concerning the same matter. The ground of this last pageant was, that for somuch as the next pageant before had set before hir graces eies the flourishing and desolate states of a commonweale, she might by this be put in remembrance to consult for the worthie gouernement of hir people, considering God oftentimes sent women noblie to rule among men, as Deborа, which gouerned Israell in peace the space of fortie yeares: and that it behoueth both men and women so ruling to vse aduise of good councell. When the quænes maiestie had passed this pageant, she marched toward Temple bar. But at S. Dunstans church, where the children of the hospitall were appointed to stand with their gouernors, hir grace perceiuing a child offered to make an oration vnto hir, staied hir chariot, and did cast vp hir eies to heauen, as who should saie; I here see this mercifull worke toward the poore, whome I must in the middest of my roialtie néeds remember: and so turned hir face toward the child, which in Latine pronounced an oration to this effect: That after the quænes highnesse had passed through the citie, and had seene so sumptuous, rich, and notable spectacles of the citizens, which declared their most hartie receiuing, and ioious welcomming of hir grace into the same: this one spectacle yet rested and remained, which was the euerlasting spectacle of mercie vnto the poore members of almightie God, furthered by that famous and most noble prince king Henrie the eight hir graces father, erected by the citie of London, & aduanced by the most godlie & vertuous prince king Edward the first, hir graces deare and louing brother, doubting nothing of the mercie of the quænes most gratious clemencie, by the which they may not onelie be relieued and helped, but also staied and defended: and therefore incessantlie they would praie and crie vnto almightie God, for the long life and reigne of hir highnesse, with most prosperous victorie against hir enimies.

The child after he had ended his oration, kissed the paper wherein the same was written, & reached it to the quænes maiestie, which receiued it gratiouslie, both with words and countenance, declaring hir gratious mind toward their relefe. From thence hir grace came to Temple bar, which was dressed finelie with the two images of Gogmagog the Albion, & Corineus the Briton, two giants, big in stature, furnished accordinglie, which held in their hands aboue the gate, a table, wherein was written in Latine verses the effect of all the pageant which the citie before had erected, which verses were these insuing:

Ecce sub aspectu iam contemplaberis vno
(O princeps populi sola columna tui)
Quicquid in immensa passim perspexeris vrbe,
Quæ cepere omnes vnus hic arcus habet.
Primus te solio regni donauit auiti,
Hæres quippe tui vera parentis eras.
Suppressis vitijs, domina virtute. Secundus,
Firmauit sedem regia virgo tuam.
Tertius ex omni posuit te parte beatam,
Si, qua cæpisti pergere velle, velis.
Quarto quid verum, respublica lapsa quid esset,
Quæ florens staret te docuere tui.
Quinto magna loco monuit te Debora, missam
Cœlitùs in regni gaudia longa tui.
Perge ergo regina, tuæ spes vnica gentis,
Hæc postrema vrbis suscipe vota tuæ.
Viue diu, regnáq; diu, virtutibus orna
Rem patriam, & populi spem tueare tui.
Sic ô sic petitur cœlum, sic itur in astra:
Hoc virtutis opus, cætera mortis erunt.

Quinque arcus quam significationem implicatam teneant.

Which verses were also written in English méeter, in a lesse table as hereafter plainelie followeth:

Behold here in one view,
thou maist see all that plaine,
O princesse vnto this thy people th'onlie staie:
What each where thou hast seene
in this wide towne, againe,
This one arch whatsoeuer
the rest conteind, doth saie.
The first arch as true heire vnto thy father deere,
Did set thee in thy throne
where thy grandfather sat.
The second did confirme thy seat as princesse heere, Vertues now bearing swaie,
and vices bet downe flat.
The third, if that thou wouldst go on as thou began,
Declared thee to be blessed on euerie side.
The fourth did open truth,
and also taught thee whan
The commonweale stood well, and when it did thence slide.
The fift, as Debora declard thee to be sent From heauen, a long comfort to vs thy subiects all.
Therefore go on ô queene,
on whom our hope is bent,
And take with thee this wish of thy towne as finall.
Liue long, and as long reigne,
adorning thy countrie
With vertues, and mainteine thy peoples hope of thee.
For thus, thus heauen is woone, thus must thou perse the skie,
This is by vertue wrought,
all other needs must die.

what the arches signifie.

On the southside was appointed by the citie a noise of singing children, and one child richlie attired as a poet, which gaue the quænes maiestie hir farewell in the name of the whole citie, by these swæt words:

As at thine entrance first,
ô prince of high renowne,
Thou wast presented with toongs and hearts for thy faier:

The cities farewell to the quæne going out at Temple barre.

So

The moral of the foresaid gent.

The children Christs spitall stand S. Dunst.

Temple barr dorned with Gogmagog, & her giants.

So now sith thou must needs depart out of this towne,
This citie sendeth thee
firme hope and earnest praier,
For all men hope in thee,
that all vertues shall raine,
For all men hope that thou
none error wilt support,
For all men hope that thou wilt truth restore againe,
And mend that is amisse,
to all good mens comfort.
And for this hope they praie,
thou maist continue long,
Our queene amongst vs here,
all vice for to supplant,
And for this hope they praie,
that God maie make thee strong,
As by his grace puissant,
So in his truth constant.
Farewell ô worthie queene,
and as our hope is sure,
That into errors place,
thou wilt now truth restore:
So trust we that thou wilt our souereigne queene endure,
And louing ladie stand,
from henseforth euermore.

The last words of the quéene to the citie by waie of promise.

While these words were in saieng, and certeine wishes therein repeated for maintenance of truth, and rooting out of errour, she now and then held vp hir hands towards heauen, and willed the people to saie, Amen. When the child had ended, shee said; Be ye well assured I shall stand your good quéene. At which saieng, hir grace departed forth through Templebarre toward Westminster, with no lesse showting and crieng of the people, than she entered the citie with a noise of ordinance which the tower shot off at hir graces enterance first into Towerstréet. The childs saieng was also in Latine verses written in a table verie faire which was hanged vp there;

Carmen valedictorium a puero recitatum.

O regina potens, quum primam vrbem ingredereris,
Dona tibi linguas fidáq; corda dedit.
Discedenti etiam tibi nunc duo munera mittit,
Omnia plena spei, votáq; plena precum.
Quippe tuis spes est in te, quòd prouida virtus
Rexerit, errore nec locus vllus erit.
Quippe tuis spes est, quòd tu verum omni reduces Solatura bonas, dum mala tollis, opes.
Hac spe freti orant, longum vt regina gubernes,
Et regni excindas crimina cuncta tui.
Hac spe freti orant, diuina vt gratia fortem
Et veræ fidei te velit esse basin.
Iam regina vale, & sicut nos spes tenet vna,
Quod vero inducto, perditus error erit:
Sic quóq; speramus quòd eris regina benigna
Nobis per regni tempora longa tui.

Thus the quænes highnesse passed through the citie, which without anie forreigne person, of it selfe beautified it selfe, and receiued hir grace at all places as hath bæne before mentioned, with most tender obedience and loue, due to so gratious a quæne and soueraigne a ladie. And hir grace likewise of hir side in all hir graces passage, shewed hir selfe generallie an image of a worthie ladie and gouernour. But priuatlie these especiall points were noted in hir grace, as signes of a most princelike courage, whereby hir louing subiects maie ground a sure hope for the rest of hir gratious doings hereafter.

Certein notes of the quænes ria esties great mercie,

About the nether end of Cornehill toward Cheape, one of the knights about hir grace had espied an ancient citizen, which wept, and turned his head backe, and therewith said this gentleman; Wonder is an alderman (for so he tearmed him) which wæpeth, and turneth his face backeward; how maie it be interpreted that he so doth, for sorrow, or for gladnesse? The quæns maiestie heard him, and said, I warrant you it is for gladnesse. A gratious interpretation of a noble courage, which would turne the doubtfull to the best. And yet it was well knowne, that as hir grace did confirme the same, the parties cheare was moued for verie pure gladnesse for the sight of hir maiesties person, at the beholding whereof he toke such comfort, that with teares he expressed the same.

clemencie, and wisdome vse in this passa

Of one that wept for ioy and inward gladnesse.

In Cheape side hir grace smiled, and being thereof demanded the cause, answered, for that she heard one saie; Remember old king Henrie the eight. A naturall child, which at the verie remembrance of hir fathers name, toke so great a ioy, that all men maie well thinke, that as she reioised at his name whome this realme doth hold of so worthie memorie: so in hir doings she will resemble the same.

When the cities charge without partialitie, and onelie the citie was mentioned vnto hir grace, shée said it should not be forgotten. Which saieng might moue all naturall Englishmen hartilie to shew due obedience and intiernesse to their so good a quæne, which will in no point forget anie parcell of dutie louinglie shewed vnto hir. The answer which hir grace made vnto maister recorder of London, as the hearers know it to be true, & with melting hearts heard the same: so maie the reader thereof conceiue what kind of stomach and courage pronounced the same.

The humblinesse of the quéene in receiuing verie trifles of hir poore subiects thankefullie.

What more famous thing do we read in ancient histories of old time, than that mightie princes haue gentlie receiued presents offered them by base and low personages. If that be to be wondered at (as it is passinglie) let me sée anie writer that in anie princes life is able to recount so manie presidents of this vertue, as hir grace shewed in that one passage thorough the citie.

How manie nosegaies did hir grace receiue at poore womens hands? How oftentimes staid she hir chariot, when she saw anie simple bodie offer to speake to hir grace? A branch of rosemarie giuen hir grace with a supplication by a poore woman about Flæt bridge, was séene in hir chariot till hir grace came to Westminster, not without the maruellous wondering of such as knew the presenter, and noted the quæns most gratious receiuing and kæping the same. What hope the poore and nédie maie loke for at hir graces hand, she as in all hir tournie continuallie, so in hir hearkening to the poore children of Christs hospitall * with eies cast vp into heauen, did fullie declare: as that neither the wealthier estate could stand without consideration had to the pouertie, neither the pouertie be dulie considered, vnlesse they were remembred, as commended vnto vs by Gods owne mouth.

*where hir mind then was no doubt in heauen vpon God.

As at hir first entrance she as it were declared hir selfe prepared to passe through a citie that most intierlie loued hir: so she at hir last departing as it were bound hir selfe by promise, to continue good ladie and gouernor vnto that citie, which by outward declaration did open their loue vnto their so louing and noble prince, in such wise, as she hir selfe wondered thereat. But because princes be set in their seat by Gods appointing, and therefore they must first and chiefelie tender the glorie of him, from whom their glorie issueth: it is to be noted in hir grace, that for somuch as God hath so wonderfullie placed hir in the seat of gouernement ouer this realme, she in all hir doings doth shew hir selfe most mindfull of his goodnesse & mercie shewed vnto hir. And among all other, two principall signes thereof were noted in this passage. First in the tower, where hir grace before she entred hir chariot, lifted vp hir eies to heauen, and said as followeth.

The quéns maiestie is forgetfull to glorifie God who glorifie hir.

The

The praier of queene Elisabeth as she went to hir coronation.

O Lord almightie and euerlasting God, I giue thee most hartie thanks, that thou hast bene so mercifull vnto me, as to spare me to behold this ioifull daie. And I acknowledge that thou hast delt as wonderfullie and as mercifullie with me, as thou diddest with thy true and faithfull seruant Daniell thy prophet; whome thou deliueredst out of the den from the crueltie of the greedie and raging lions: euen so was I ouerwhelmed, and onlie by thee deliuered. To thee therefore onlie be thankes, honor, and praise, for euer: Amen.

The second was the receiuing of the bible at the little conduit in Cheape. For when hir grace had learned that the bible in English should there be offered: she thanked the citie therefore, promised the reading thereof most diligentlie, and incontinent commanded that it should be brought. At the receipt whereof, how reuerendlie did she with both hir hands take it, kisse it, and late it vpon hir brest, to the great comfort of the lokers on? God will vndoubtedlie preserue so worthie a prince, which at his honor so reuerendlie taketh hir beginning. For this saieng is true, and written in the booke of truth; He that first seeketh the kingdome of God, shall haue all other things cast vnto him. Now therefore all English hearts, and hir naturall people must needs praise Gods mercie, which hath sent them so worthie a prince, and praie for hir graces long continuance amongst vs. On sundaie the fiue and twentith of Januarie, hir maiestie was with great solemnitie crowned at Westminster in the abbeie church there, by doctor Oglethorpe bishop of Carleill. She dined in Westminster hall, which was richlie hong, and euerie thing ordered in such roiall maner, as to such a regall and most solemne feast apperteined.

In the meane time, whilest hir grace sat at dinner, sir Edward Dimmocke knight, hir champion by office, came riding into the hall in faire complet armor, mounted vpon a beautifull courser, richlie trapped in cloth of gold, entred the hall, and in the midst thereof cast downe his gantlet: with offer to fight with him in hir quarell, that should denie hir to be the righteous and lawfull queene of this realme. The queene taking a cup of gold full of wine, dranke to him thereof, and sent it to him for his fee togither with the couer.

Now after this, at the seruing vp of the wafers; the lord maior of London went to the cupbord, and filling a cup of gold with ipocrasse, bare it to the queene: and kneeling before hir toke the assaie, and the receiuing it of him, and drinking of it, gaue the cup with the couer vnto the said lord maior for his fee, which cup and couer weied sixteene ounces Troie weight. Finallie, this feast being celebrated with all roiall ceremonies, and high solemnities, due and in like cases accustomed, toke end with great ioy and contentation to all the beholders. On wednesdaie the fiue and twentith of Januarie the parlement began, the queenes maiestie riding in hir parlement robes, from hir palace of Whitehall, vnto the abbeie church of Westminster, with the lords spirituall and temporall, attending hir likewise in their parlement robes. Doctor Cox sometime schoolemaister to king Edward the first, and now latelie returned from the parties of beyond the seas, where

As religious a princesse is queene Elisabeth as euer she was.

Hir coronation at westminster.

Sir Edward Dimmocke knight hir champion by office.

The lord maior of London seruieth the queene of ipocrasse.

parlement.

during the daies of queene Marie he had liued as a banished man, preached now before the estates there assembled in the beginning of the said parlement. In this parlement, the first fruits and tenths were restored to the crowne, & also the supreame gouernment ouer the state ecclesiasticall, which queene Marie had giuen to the pope. Likewise the booke of common praier and administration of the sacraments in our mother tong was restored. John Stow.

The first fruits and tenths restored to the crowne.

¶ But before this good worke was agreed vpon, there was much debating about matters touching religion, and great studie on both parties imploied, the one to reteine still, the other to impugne the doctrine and faction which before in queene Maries time had beene established. But speciallie here is to be noted, that though there lacked no industrie on the papists side, to hold fast that which they most cruellie from time to time had studied, and by all meanes practised to come by: yet notwithstanding, such was the prouidence of God at that time, that for lacke of the other bishops, whom the Lord had taken awaie by death a little before, the residue that there were left could do the lesse: and in verie deed, God be praised therefore, did nothing at all in effect; although yet notwithstanding there lacked in them neither will nor labor to do what they could, if their cruell abilities there might haue serued. But namelie amongst all others, not onelie the industrious courage of doctor Storie, but also his words in this parlement are worthie to be knowne of posteritie, who like a stout and furious champion of the popes side, to declare himselfe how lustie he was, and what he had and would do in his maisters quarell, shamed not openlie in the said parlement house to burst out into such impudent sort of words, as was wonder to all good eares to heare, and no lesse worthie of histor ie. Abr. Fl. ex Iohan. Foxi martyrologio.

Doctor Storie impudent and sawcie.

The summe of which his shameles talke was vttered to this effect. First beginning with himselfe, he declared, that whereas he was noted commonlie abroad, and much complained of, to haue beene a great doer, & a setter forth of such religion, orders, & procedings, as of his late souereigne that dead is queene Marie were set forth in this relme, he denied nothing the same: protesting moreouer that he had done nothing therein, but that both his conscience did lead him thereunto, and also his commission did as well then command him, as now also doth discharge him for the same: being no lesse readie now also to do the like, and more, in case he by this queene were authorised likewise, and commanded thereunto. Wherefore as I see (saith he) nothing to be ashamed of; so lesse I see to be sorie for: but rather said that he was sorie for this, because he had done no more than he did, and that in executing those lawes, they had not beene more vehement & seuere. Wherein he said, there was no default in him, but in them, whome he both oft and earnestlie had exhorted to the same; being therefore not a little grieued with them, for that they labored onelie about the yong and little sprigs and twigs, while they should haue stroken at the rot, and cleane haue roted it out: &c. And concerning his persecuting and burning them, he denied not, but that he was once at the burning of an earewig (for so he termed it) at Vrbridge, where he tost a fagot at his face as he was singing psalmes, and set a wine bush of thorns vnder his feet, a little to pricke him, with manie other words of like effect. In the which words he named moreouer sir Philip Hobbie, and an other knight of Kent, with such other of the richer and higher degree, whome his counsell was to plucke at, & to bring them vnder Coram; wherein (said he) if they had followed my aduise, then had they done well and wiselie. This or much like

The words of doctor Storie in the parlement house.

This martyr burnt at Vrbridge was maister Denleie.

was the effect of the shamelesse and tyrannicall excuse of himselfe, more meete to speake with the voice of a beast, than of a man. Although in this parlement some diuersitie there was of iudgement and opinion betweene parties: yet notwithstanding through the mercifull goodnesse of the Lord, the true cause of the gospell had the vpper hand, the papists hope was frustrat, and their rage abated: the order and proceedings of king Edwards time concerning religion was reuiued againe, the supremasie of the pope abolished, the articles and bloudie statutes of queene Marie repealed: briefly, the furious firebrands of cruell persecution, which had consumed so manie poore mens bodies, were now extinct and quenched.]

A motion made in the parlement house to the queene touching marriage, &c.

Moreouer in the time of this parlement, a motion was made by the common house, that the queenes maiestie might be sued vnto, to grant hir graces licence to the speaker, knights, citizens & burgesses, to haue accesse vnto hir graces presence: to declare vnto hir matter of great importance, concerning the state of this hir graces realme. The which petition being moued to hir grace, the most honorablie agreed and consented thereunto, and assigned a date of hearing. When the date came, the speaker & common house resorted vnto hir graces palace at Westminster called the White hall. And in the great gallerie there, hir grace most honorablie shewed hir selfe readie to heare their motion and petition. And when the speaker had solemnlie and eloquentlie set forth the message (the principall matter wherof most specially was to moue hir grace to marriage) whereby (to all our comforts) we might inioie (as Gods pleasure should be) the roiall issue of hir bodie to reigne ouer vs, &c. The queenes maiestie after a little pause made this answer following, as neere as I could beare the same awaie (saith Grafton.)

The queenes answer to the former motion of the parlement house.

Rich. Grafton.

AS I haue good cause, so doo I giue to you my hartie thanks for the good zeale and care that you seeme to haue as well toward me, as to the whole state of your countrie. Your petition I gather to be grounded on three causes, and mine answer to the same shall consist in two parts. And for the first I saie vnto you, that from my years of vnderstanding, knowing my selfe a seruitor of almightie God, I chose this kind of life, in which I doo yet liue, as a life most acceptable vnto him, wherin I thought I could best serue him, and with most quietnesse doo my duetie vnto him. From which my choise, if either ambition of high estate offered vnto me by marriages (whereof I haue records in this presence) the displeasure of the prince, the eschewing the danger of mine enimies, or the auoiding the perill of death (whose messenger the princes indignation was no little time continuallie present before mine eies, by whose meanes if I knew or doo iustlie suspect, I will not now vtter them, or if the whole cause were my sister hir selfe, I will not now charge the dead) could haue drawen or dissuaded me, I had not now remained in this virgins estate wherein you see me. But so constant haue I alwaies continued in this my determination (that although my words and youth maie seeme to some hardlie to agree togither) yet it is true, that to this daie I stand free from anie other meaning, that either I haue had in times past, or haue at this present. In which state and trade of liuing wherewith I am so throughlie acquainted, God hath so hitherto preserued me, and hath so watchfull an eie vpon me, and so hath guided me and led me by the hand, as my full trust is, he will not suffer me to go alone. The maner of your petition I doo like, and take in good part: for it is simple, and conteineth no limitation of place or person. If it had beene otherwise, I must haue misliked it verie much, and thought in you a verie great presumption, being vnfit and altogither vnmeet to require them that may command, or those appoint whose parts are to desire, or such to bind and limit whose duties are to obeie; or to take vpon you to draw my loue to your likings, or to frame my will to your fansies. A guerdon constreined, and a gift freelie giuen can neuer agree. Neuertheless, if anie of you be in suspect, that whensoeuer it maie please God to incline my hart to that kind of life, my meaning is to doo or determine anie thing wherwith the realme maie haue iust cause to be discontented; put that out of your heads. For I assure you (what credence my assurance maie haue with you I can not tell, but what credit it shall deserue to haue, the sequele shall declare) I will neuer in that matter conclude anie thing that shall be preiudiciall vnto the realme. For the weale and good safetie whereof, as a good mother of my countrie, I will neuer shun to spend my life. And whomsoeuer my choise maie light vpon, he shall be as carefull for the preseruation of the realme as you, I will not saie as my selfe: for I cannot so certeinlie promise of another, as I doo surelie know of my selfe, but as anie other can be. And albeit it doth please almightie God to continue me still in this mind, to liue out of the state of marriage: it is not to be feared, but he will so worke in my hart, and in your wisdoms, that as good prouision may be made in conuenient time, wherby the realme shall not remaine destitute of an heire that may be a fit gouernor, and peraduenture more beneficiall to the realme than such of spring as may come of me. For though I be neuer so carefull for your well doings, and mind euer so to be: yet may mine issue grow out of kind and become vngratious. And for me it shall be sufficient, that a marble stone declare that a queene, hauing reigned such a time, liued and died a virgine. To make an end, I take your comming to me in good part, and giue vnto you ecksons my hartie thanks, more yet for your zeale, good will, and good meaning, than for your message and petition.

A most excellent answer of a most excellent princesse.

The queenes maiestie esteemeth no life so glorious as to serue God.

The queenes maiestie hath no mind to marrie.

The queenes words touching an heir roiall the last part of their motion.

Manie that for feare of persecution in queene Maries daies were fled the realme, and liued in voluntarie exile, now that all persecution ceased by the gratious clemencie of this noble princesse queene Elisabeth, they returned with all conuenient speed home into their natiue countrie, giuing to almightie God most humble thanks for that his mercifull deliuerance, in sending them a gouernor, that not onelie permitted libertie of conscience, but also was readie to aduance religion, and command free exercise of common prater, preaching, and administration of the sacraments, according to the right institution of the primitiue churches. Fridaie the seauentéenth of Februarie, one of maister Hunnings seruants (that was also one of the takers of fresh fish for the prouision of the queenes house) was set on the pillorie in Cheapside in the fish market ouer against the kings head, hauing a bawdrike of smelts hanging about his necke, with a paper on his forehead written: For buieng smelts for twelue pence the hundred, and selling them againe for ten pence the quarter. He stood so likewise on the eightéenth and the twentith daie of the same moneth, euerie one of those three daies from nine of the clocke till twelue. The last daie he should haue had one of his eares slit, if

The returne of the protestants from exile.

One set on the pillorie; and what punishment the queene by hir owne mouth appointed him.

if by great sute made to the councell by the lord maior of London, he had not bene pardoned and released out of prison. This penance was assigned to him by the quenes owne appointment, when to hir grace his trespasse was reuealed. Whereby she gaue a tast to the people of a zealous mind to haue iustice dulie ministred, and faults accordinglie punished, namelie of those which vnder pretense of hir graces authoritie should go about to wrong and oppresse hir louing subiects.

Preachers at Spittle.

This yere in the Easter holidaies on the mondaie preached at the Spittle doctor Bill, on the tuesdaie doctor Cox, & on the wednesdaie doctor Horne: the first was hir maiesties chapleine, the other two had remained at Geneua, and in other places beyond the seas all quene Maries time. On lowsundaie maister Samson made the rehearsall sermon: but when the lord maior and aldermen came to their places in Paules churchyard, the pulpit doore was locked, & the kete could not be heard of. Whervpon the lord maior sent for a smith to open the locke, which was done; and when the preacher should enter the place, it was found verie filthie and vncleanlie. Moreouer, the verger that had the custodie of the kete, which opened the doore of the place where the prelats and other vse to stand at the sermon time, would not open the doore; but the gentlemen with a forme brake it open, and so came in to heare the sermon. This disorder chanced by reason that since Christmasse last past there was not a sermon preached at Paules crosse, by meanes of an inhibition sent from the councell vnto the bishop of London, that he should admit no preacher, because of the controuersie betwixt the bishops and other of the clergie that were now returned into the realme, from the parties of beyond the seas.

The pulpit at Paules crosse all bemied and rastlie.

A conference appointed concerning religion.

The last of March the parlement yet continuing, was a conference begun at Westminster concerning certeine articles of religion betwixt the bishops and other of the clergie on the one part, and certeine learned preachers of whome some had bene in dignitie in the church of England before that time on the other part. The declaration of the proceeding therin, and the cause of the breaking vp of the same conference by default and contempt of certeine bishops, parties of the said conference was published in a little treatise, and imprinted by Richard Iug and John Cawod, printers to the quenes maiestie, as here followeth. The quenes most excellent maiestie, hauing heard of diuersitie of opinions in certeine matters of religion amongst sundrie of hir louing subiects, and being verie desirous to haue the same reduced to some godlie & christian concord, thought it best by the aduise of the lords, and other of hir priuie councell, as well for the satisfaction of persons doubtfull, as also for the knowlege of the verie truth in certeine matter of difference, to haue a conuenient chosen number of the best learned of either part, & to confer togither their opinions and reasons, and thereby to come to some good and charitable agreement.

The best learned of ech side to be chosen by this conference.

And hervpon by hir maiesties commandement certeine of hir priuie councell declared this purpose to the archbishop of Yorke (being also one of the same priuie councell) & required him that he would impart the same to some of the bishops, and to make choise of eight, nine, or ten of them: and that there should be the like number named of the other part: and further also declared to him (as then was supposed) what the matters should be. And as for the time, it was thought meet to be as soone as possible might be agreed vpon. And then after certeine daies past, it was signified by the said archbishop, that there was appointed by such of the bishops, to whome he had imparted this matter, eight persons, that is to saie, foure bishops, and foure doctors, who were content at the quenes maiesties commandement to shew their opinions; and (as he termed it) render account of their faith in those matters which were mentioned, and that spectallie in writing, although he said they thought the same so determined, as there was no cause to dispute vpon them.

The persons chosen & the propositions so doo hereafter follow.

It was hervpon fullie resolued by the quenes maiestie, with the aduise aforesaid, that according to their desire, it should be in writing on both parts, for auoiding of much altercation in words; and that the said bishops should, bicause they were in authoritie and degree superiors, first declare their minds and opinions in the matter, with their reasons in writing: and the other number being also eight men of good degree in schooles, and some hauing bene in dignitie in the church of England, if they had anie thing to saie to the contrarie, should the same daie declare their opinions in like manner. And so ech of them should deliuer their writings to the other, to be considered what were to be improued therein, and the same to declare againe in writing at some other conuenient daie, and the like order to be kept in all the rest of the matters. All this was fullie agreed vpon with the archbishop of Yorke, and also signified to both parties. And immediatlie hervpon, diuerse of the nobilitie and states of the realme, vnderstanding that such a meeting and conference should be, and that in certeine matters, whervpon (the court of parlement consequentlie following) some lawes might be grounded: they made earnest meanes to hir maiestie, that the parties of this conference might put and read their assertions in the English tong, and that in the presence of them of the nobilitie, and others of the parlement house, for the better satisfaction and inabling of their owne iudgements, to treat and conclude of such lawes as might depend hervpon.

Order taken for quiet conference, and regard had of the bishops according to their dignitie.

This also being thought verie reasonable, was signified to both parties, and so fullie agreed vpon, and the daie appointed for the first meeting to be the fridaie in the forenoone, being the last of March at Westminster church, where both for good order, and for honour of the conference, by the quenes maiesties commandement, the lords and others of the priuie councell were present, and a great part of the nobilitie also. And notwithstanding the former order appointed, and consented vnto by both parts, yet the bishop of Winchester and his colleagues, alleging that they had mistaken that their assertions and reasons should be written, and so onelie recited out of the booke, said their booke was not readie then written: but they were prouided to argue and dispute, and therefore would for that time repeat in speech that which they had to saie vnto the first proposition. This variation from the order, and spectallie from that which themselues had by the said archbishop in writing before required, adding thereto the reason of the apostle, that to contend with words is profitable to nothing, but to subuersion of the hearer, seemed vnto the quenes maiesties councell somewhat strange: & yet was it permitted without anie great reprehension, bicause they excused themselues with mistaking the order, and agreed that they would not faile but put it in writing; and according to the former order, deliuer it to the other part. And so the said bishop of Winchester and his colleagues appointed doctor Cole deane of Paules, to be the vtterer of their minds, who partlie by speech onelie, and partlie by reading of authorities written, and at certeine times being informed of his colleagues what to saie, made a declaration of their meanings, & their reasons to their first proposition. Which being ended, they were asked by the priuie councell, if anie of them

The daie for the first meeting of this conference appointed.

The bishop of winchesters waie of proceeding misliked but yet the same followed notwithstanding the contrarie prouided.

The maner of their first entrance into this conference.

them had anie more to be said: and they said, No. So as then the other part was licenced to shew their minds, which they did according to the first order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded in a booke written, which after a praier & invocation made most humblie to almightie God, for the indowing of them with his holie spirit, and a protestation also to stand to the doctrine of the catholike church, builded upon the scriptures, and the doctrine of the prophets and the apostles, was distinctlie read by one Robert Horne bachellor in divinitie, late deane of Duresme.

*Afterwards bishop of Winchester.

And the same being ended with some likelihood, as it seemed that the same was much allowable to the audience: certeine of the bishops began to saie contrarie to their former answer, that they had now much more to saie to this matter. Wherein although they might have bene well reprehended for such maner of cauillation, yet for avoiding of any mistaking of orders in this colloquie or conference, and for that they should utter all that which they had to saie: it was both ordered, and thus openlie agreed upon of both parts in the full audience, that upon the mondaie following, the bishops should bring their minds and reasons in writing to the second assertion, and the last also if they could, and first read the same, and that done, the other part should bring likewise theirs to the same. And being read, ech of them should deliuer to other the same writings. And in the meane time the bishops should put in writing, not onelie all that which doctor Cole had that daie uttered: but all such other matters as they anie otherwise could thinke of for the same: and as soone as they might possiblie, to send the same booke touching that first assertion to the other part, and they should receiue of them that writing which master Horne had there read that daie, and upon mondaie it should be agreed what daie they should exhibit their answers touching the first proposition.

Another order taken for the next meeting to confer.

Thus both parts assented thereto, and the assemblie quietlie dismissed. And therefore upon mondaie, the like assemblie began againe at the place & houre appointed: and there (upon what finister or disordered meaning is not yet fullie knowne, though in some part it be understanded) the bishop of Winchester and his colleagues, and especiallie Lincolne, refused to exhibit or read, according to the former notorious order on fridaie, that which they had prepared for the second assertion. And thereupon by the lord keeper of the great seale, they being first gentlie and favourablie required to keepe the order appointed; and that taking no place, being secondlie as it behoued, pressed with more earnest request: they neither regarding the authoritie of that place, nor their owne reputation, nor the credit of the cause, utterlie refused that to do. And finallie being againe particularlie euerie of them apart, distinctlie by name, required to understand their opinions therein: they all sauing one (which was the abbat of Westminster, hauing some more consideration of order and his dutie of obedience than the other) utterlie and plainelie denied to haue their booke read, some of them more earnestlie than others, and some other more vndiscreetlie and vnreuerentlie than others.

Another assemblie on the mondaie according to appointment.

The stubburnesse of the aduerse part an occasion to dissolue this assemblie.

Whereupon giuing such example of disorder, stubbornesse and selfewill, as hath not bene seene and suffered in such an honourable assemblie, being of the two estates of this realme, the nobilitie and the commons, besides the presence of the quenes maiesties most honourable priuie councell, the same assemblie was dismissed, and the godlie and most christian purpose of the quens maiestie made frustrate. And afterwards for the contempt so notorious lie made, the bishops of Winchester and Lincolne, hauing most obstinatelie both disobeied common authoritie, and varied manifestlie from their owne order, and specially Lincolne (who shewed more follie than the other) were condignelie committed to the tower of London, and the rest (sauing the abbat of Westminster) stood bound to make dailie their personall appearance before the councell, and not to depart the citie of London and Westminster, untill further order were taken with them for their disobedience and contempt.

The three propositions whereupon conference was determined to haue beene at Westminster.

1 It is against the word of GOD, and the custome of the ancient church, to vse a tong vnknowne to the people, in common praier, and the administration of the sacraments.

2 Euerie church hath authoritie to appoint, take awaie, and change ceremonies and ecclesiasticall rites: so the same bee to edification.

3 It cannot be proued by the word of God, that there is in the masse offered vp a sacrifice propitiatorie for the quicke and the dead.

The names of such as had conference in the propositions aforesaid.

The B. of Winchester.	D. Scorie B. of Chiche.
The bishop of Lichfield.	Doctor Cox.
The bishop of Chester.	Master Whitehed.
The bishop of Caerleill.	Master Grindall.
The bishop of Lincolne.	Master Horne.
Doctor Cole.	Master doctor Sands.
Doctor Harpesfield.	Master Gest.
Doctor Langdall.	Master Elmer.
Doctor Chedsete.	Master Jewell.

The bishops and doctors sat on the one side of the quere at a table for them prepared, & the other learned men sat at another table on the other side of the same quere. And at the vpper end thereof at an other table sat the quenes maiesties councell, desirous to haue seene some good conclusion of the said conference, although (as ye may perceiue by that which is aboue recited) it came to small effect. In this meane time, a treatie of peace, which had bene in hand the last yeare, first at Lisle, and after at the abbeie of Tercampe, a three leagues from Dorlens, betwixt the two kings of Spaine and France, was now renewed againe, and the deputies were appointed to meet at Chasteau Cambresi, a six leagues distant from Cambraie. For the king of Spaine, the duke of Alua, the prince of Orange, the bishop of Arras, Rigomes de Silua earle of Mellito, monsieur Viglius Zwichem, knight and president of the priuie councell in the low countries, who neuertheless came not, bicause he was letted by sicknesse. For the French king there came the cardinall of Lorraine the conestable, the marshall of saint Andrew, the bishop of Orleans, and Claude de Aubespine, the said kings secretarie. For the quene of England, the bishop of Elie, the lord William Howard baron of Effingham lord chamberleine to the said quene, doctor Nicholas Wotton deane of Canterburie and Yorke.

A treatie for peace betwixt the kings of Spaine and France.

The deputies or commissioners appointed for the princes.

For the duke of Sauoie, there were the earle of Stropiana, & the president of Asti. And as a meane or mediatrix betweene the parties, there was Christierna dutchesse of Lorraine, with hir sonne the yong duke, which dutchesse, as well here, as before at Tercampe, campe, trauelled most earnestlie to doo good betwixt the parties, and to bring them to a finall accord, whose endeuor therein was to the great good liking & contentation of all the said parties. After that this treatie had continued a long time, and now rested nothing to staie them frō concluding a generall peace, but onelie the article touching Calis, at length that matter was also accorded by a speciall treatie betwixt the quēnes maiestie of England, & the French king, Guido Caualcanti a gentleman of Florence being the meane to bring the same to effect. The substance of which articles was, that Calis should rest in the Frenchmens hands, for the terme of eight yeares, and at the end of that terme, they couenanted to render the same: or else for default, to forfeit vnto the quēnes highnesse the summe of fiue hundred thousand crownes; and for suertie hereof, to deliuer foure hostages, such as hir maiestie should thinke sufficient. And in case the towne were not deliuered at the end of the said eight yeares, though the monie were paid according to the couenants: yet notwithstanding the right and title to the said towne and countrie adioining, should alwaies remaine and be reserued vnto the crowne and realme of England. It was further concluded also, that a peace should be firmed and had betwixt the realmes of England and Scotland, such fortresses to be rased as had bēn built and made by the Scots and French on the borders towards England, as Haimouth and others.

Ludouico Guicciardine. The articles of the peace betwixt the quēnes maiestie and the French king.

Sir John Mason knight, secretarie for the French tong, was sent ouer in post with instructions vnto the English commissioners, after whose comming, within two or three daies, a generall peace was concluded betwixt all the parties, the articles thereof not touching England, we haue of purpose omitted. But now after the conclusion of this peace, the said sir John Mason returned in post with the same: and so thereupon, the seuenth of Aprill, the said peace was proclamed; to wit, betwixt the quēnes maiestie on the one part, and the French king on the other, their realmes, dominions, and subiects; and likewise betwixt hir said maiestie and the king Dolphin and quēne of Scots his wife, their realmes, dominions, and subiects. This proclamation was made by Garter Norreie king at armes, accompanied with three other heralds, & fiue trumpettors: the lord maior of London & the aldermen in their scarlet gowns being also present, & riding in companie of the said heralds.

Sir John Mason knight.

A generall peace betwixt the kings of France and Spaine.

The peace proclamed.

The same time also was another proclamation made vnder the quēnes hand in writing, inhibiting, that from thenceforth no plaies nor interludes should be exercised, till Allhallowes tide next insuing. Vpon saturdaie the two and twentith of Aprill, the lord Wentworth, late deputie of Calis, was arreigned at Westminster, vpon an indictment of treason found against him, in the late quēne Maries daies, for the losse of Calis: but he was acquited by his peeres, the lord marquesse of Northampton sitting that daie as chefe steward of England, vnder the cloth of estate. The eight of Maie, the parlement brake vp; in which parlement, beside other things before recited, concluded, and passed in the same; a subsidie was granted to the quēnes highnesse, of two shillings eight pence the pound of moueable goods, and foure shillings of lands, to be paid at two seuerall paiments, of euerie person spirituall and temporall, towards the better furnishing of hir maiestie with monie, for the necessarie charges which she was presentlie occasioned to sustein, finding the treasure of the realme greatlie consumed, and the reuenues of the crowne sore diminished, and the same crowne much indebted, by taking vp of notable summes of monie by waie of loane vpon interest, as well in the daies of hir brother K. Edward, as hir sister quēne Marie. The fourteenth of Maie being Whitsundaie, the seruice in churches began according to the booke of cōmon praier, set forth and established in this last parlement, correspondent to that which was vsed in the daies of hir brother king Edward. Vpon sundaie the second of Julie, the citizens of London set forth a muster before the quēnes maiestie at Greenwich in the parke there, of the number of 1400 men, whereof 800 were pikes, armed in fine corselets, foure hundred shot in shirts of male, with morians, & two hundred halbarders armed in Almaine riuets: these were furnished forth by the crafts and companies of the citie. To euerie hundred two willers were assigned, richlie appointed and apparelled for the purpose. There were also twelue wardens of the best companies mounted on horsebacke in coats of blacke veluet, to conduct them, with drums and fifes, and sir ensignes, all in ierkins of white sattin of Bridges, cut and lined with blacke sarsenet, and caps, hosen, and scarfs according. The sergeant Maior, capteine Constable, and capteine Sanders, brought them in order before the quēnes presence, placing them in battell arraie, euen as they should haue fought; so as the shew was verie faire, the emperours and the French kings ambassadors being present.

Plaies and interludes forbidden for time.

The lord Wentworth reigned and equited.

A subsidie granted of moueables and vnmoueables.

John Stow. A muster at Greenwich by the citizens of London in presence of the quēne.

In this moneth also, the archbishop of Yorke, the bishops of Elie, London, and others, to the number of thirteene or foureteene, being called before the quēnes councell, and refusing to receiue the oth touching hir maiesties supremasie, and other articles, were depriued from their bishopricks: in whose roomes and places, first for cardinall Pole, succeeded doctor Matthew Parker, archbishop of Canturburie. In the place of Heth, succeeded doctor Young. In stead of Boner, Edmund Grindall was bishop of London. For Hopton, Thurlbie, Cunstall, Pates, Christoferson, Peto, Coats, Morgan, Feasie, White, Oglethorpe, &c: were placed doctor John Parkhurst in Norwich, D. Cox in Elie, Jewell in Salisburie, Pilkenton in Duresme, doctor Sands in Worcester, master Downam in Westchester, Bentam in Couentrie and Lichfield, Dauid in S. Danies, Allie in Exceter, Horne in Winchester, Scorie in Hereford, Best in Carleill, Bullingham in Lincolne, Scamler in Peterburie, Bartlet in Bath, Gest in Rochester, Barlow in Chichester, &c. In like maner, were diuerse deans, archdeacons, parsons, & vicars, remoued from their benefices, and some of them committed to prison in the Tower, Fleet, Marshalsea, and kings bench.

Bishops depriued and others succeeding. Iohn Fox.

Moreouer, about the same time were commissioners appointed to visit in euerie dioceese within the relme, for the establishment of religion, according to the order appointed by act and statute, passed and confirmed in the last parlement. For London were appointed sir Richard Sackuill knight, Robert Horne doctor of diuinitie, doctor Huic a ciuilian, and maister Sauage; who calling before them diuerse persons of euerie parish, sware them to inquire and make presentment accordinglie, vpon certeine instructions drawne and deuised, for the better accomplishment and execution of that which they had in charge. Furthermore, about the same time, by vertue of an act established in parlement, all such religious houses as were againe erected and set vp, were now suppressed, as the abbeies of Westminster, the houses of the nuns and brethren of the Sion and Shene, the blacke friers of Grenwich, &c. And on the twelfe of August being saturdaie, the high altar in Paules church, with the rood & the images of Marie and John, standing in the rood lofft, were taken downe, & the prebendaries and petie canons commanded to weare no more their graie amises, but to vse onelie a surplice in seruice time. This was done by commandement Commissioners sent abrode for establishing of religion.

Religious houses suppressed.

Images taken downe and burned in the streats.

dement of doctor Grindall, newlie elect bishop of London, doctor Mate, then also newlie elected deane of Paules, and other the commissioners then appointed. Also on the euen of saint Bartholomew, the day and morrow after, were burned in Paules churchyard, Cheapeside, and diuerse other places of the citie of London, all the rods and other images of churches: and in some places, the copes, vestiments, and altar clothes, bookes, banners, sepulchers, and rood lofts, were likewise committed to the fier, and so consumed to ashes.

Diuerse popish reliks consumed to ashes.

¶ The fift of September about midnight, fell a great tempest at London, in the end wherof, a great lightning, with a terrible clap of thunder strake the spire (being stone) of the steeple of Alhallowes church in Bredstreet, about a ten foot beneath the top, out of the which fell a stone that slue a dog, and ouerthrew a man plaieng with the same dog, and the spire of the steeple was so perished, that not long after the same was taken downe with lesse charges to the parish, than the reparing would haue cost. And at the same instant, by the same tempest, one of the southdores of S. Dionise church in Fenchurchstreet, with the dore of the vestrie of the same church, were both striken through and broken.]

Ex I. S. 1113. Churches in London striken & broken by tempest.

Upon Friday the eight of September, was kept in Paules church of London a solemne obsequie for Henrie, the second of that name, king of France, who departed this life, about the tenth of Julie last past, of a wound receiued the 29 of June, in running at tilt in a solemne iusts holden at Paris, in honor of the marriage celebrated betwixt his sister the ladie Margaret of France, and Philibert duke of Sauoie. He was striken on the viser with a lance, as he ran against the counte de Montgomerie: the splits entring by the sight of his headpeece, & persing through his eie into his head, so perished his braine, that there was no meane to saue his life.

An obsequie for the French king, Henrie the second, in whose time Calis was lost.

The obsequie for him was kept in verie solemne wise, with a rich hearse, made like an imperiall crowne, sustained with great pillers, and couered with blacke veluet, with a valence fringed with gold and richlie hanged with scutchions, pennons, and banners of the French kings armes, without anie lights. And on the beere was laid a rich pall of cloth of gold, with a coat armor of the armes of France, and a crest, with an imperiall crowne standing vpon the beere: doctor Parker archbishop of Canturburie elect, doctor Barlow bishop of Chichester elect, and doctor Scorie bishop of Hereford elect, executing at the dirge of this euening song in English, they sitting in the bishop of Londons seat, in the vper quere, in surplices, with doctors hods about their shoulders. The cheefe mourner was the marquesse of Winchester, lord treasuror, assisted with ten other lords mourners, with all the heralds in blacke, and their coat armours vppermost.

The maner of the obsequie

The cheefe mourners at this obsequie.

On the morrow being saturdaie, & ninth of September, a sermon was preached by doctor Scorie, in place of doctor Grindall bishop of London, who being appointed to preach that sermon, was letted by sickenesse. After the sermon, six of the lords mourners receiued the communion with the bishops, which bishops were in copes and surplices, onelie at the ministration of the said communion. Which being finished, there was a great dinner kept in the bishop of Londons palace by Paules, where the mourners apparelled them, and so ended the solemnitie of the said exequies. The bishops had blacke gownes giuen them, and eight blacke coats a peece for their seruants, at the queenes charges.

Six bishops receiue the communion.

¶ About the last of September, John duke of Finland, second sonne to Gustabus king of Swethen, was sent by his father to treat a marriage for his eldest brother Ericus, with the queenes maiestie of England: he arriued at Harwich in Esser, and was there honorablie receiued and interteined by the erle of Orford, which said earle, and the lord Robert Dudleie, with a goodlie band of gentlemen and yeomen, conueied him to London, where he was receiued of diuerse knights and gentlemen of the court, on the fift of October, and was with his traine of about the number of fiftie persons well horsed, conueied to the bishop of Winchesters place in Southworke, where he was lodged during his abode here, and remoued from thence two daies before Easter homewards, and sped on his message as may appeare by that which followeth, taken out of Iohannes Lewenclaij comment. de bellis Moscorum.

Ex I. S. pa. 1114. Embassador from Swethen then receiued into England.

Ericus king of Swethen, sonne of Gustabus late king of the said kingdome, hauing committed to prison his brother Iohn duke of Finland, whom a little before he had imploied into England on an ambassage to the queenes maiestie, whom he sued to for marriage, and had his suite reiected: againe the second time solicited hir maiestie in the same suite notwithstanding, to his great dishonor, and (as it fell out) his iust disgrace. He attempted the same matter with the yongest daughter of Philip Lantgraue Hanhessen, at whose hand (hauing the second time beene reiected of hir maiestie heere) the matter being knowne there, he also not onelie receiued a denial, but the ladie was by hir father bestowed vpon Adolfe duke Van Holst, vncle of Frederike king of Denmarke, then enimie of the said Ericus. Thus farre Iohannes Lewenclaij.]

The queenes maiestie sued vnto out of Denmarke about marriage.

Iohannes Lewenclaij.

¶ Cuthbert Tunstall was translated from London to Durham, after the death of cardinall Wolsele, of whome (besides that which Holinshed in this booke reporteth) I will saie a little, he being so reuerend a prelat; as the managing of the princes affaires by him doth well witnesse, and this present age can yet well remember. This man (being of a mild condition) was borne at Hachaford in Richmondshire, and (as Leland hath left in writing that he heard) the base sonne of one Tunstall an ancient gentleman: whose ancestors (as I haue read) came into England with the conquerour, attending on him as his barbar, for which cause he beareth in his armes three combes as a note to posteritie of the originall of his gentrie. Which bishop although he is supposed to haue beene base borne (as manie noble capteins and other the valiant persons of the world haue beene, whereof six hundred examples as hath the prouerbe might be produced) yet was he not base in lerning, eloquence, grauitie, and honorable calling both in spirituall & temporall affaires: both in seruice of the prince and in charge of his church. For (besides manie other offices that he exercised) he was maister of the rols: sundrie time ambassador to forreine princes, bishop of London, and from thence (by vertue of Clement the seuenth his bulles to K. Henrie the eight in the yeare 1530, the fiue & twentith of March) aduanced to the see of Durham, and (by the kings letters) elected thereunto the yeare before said. In the which function he behaued himselfe, as the worthinesse of the estate required, and as the doctrine of the church in those daies would permit; of which I meane not to intreat, neither of his fall or rising: but will onlie meddle with mere temporall accidents, as one that hath not beene accustomed to die his pen in the blood of mens consciences, nor in the opinions of religion.

Fr. Thin. Description and commendation of bishop Tunstall

The armes of Tunstall.

Tunstall bare office.

Wherefore to omit all such things, I saie of this bishop, that he was a man singularlie learned (& as Caius tearmeth him Literatissimus) in the Hebrue, Greeke, and Latine tongs; and did not onelie erect sumptuous buildings for the mind and inward man (in furnishing when he was bishop of London a librarie

brarie in Cambridge, with manie notable both written and printed bookes: compiling also manie other bookes, aswell of diuinitie as of other sciences, wherof at this daie his arithmetike is of great estimation through Europe) but did also for the flesh & outward man build from the ground a most beautifull porch or gatehouse (with a chapell annexed thereunto) of faire stone in the castell of Durham, withall adding vnto the said castell certeine gates with iron bars and portcullices supported with strong walles of stone on each part for the more strength against the enimie: not forgetting to make a water-conduit for the ease of washing (and to serue the other offices in the house) on the left side of the entrance into the said castell. To which these sumptuous deeds (for they are verie heroicall) may be added the gatehouse built at Alnewike, and the tolbooth in the market of Durham all of stone, with the rest of the houses of office next vnto the hinder part of the said tolbooth, which afterward (with other great liberalities) he gaue to the citizens of Durham.

Buildings founded by Tunstall, &c.

Lastlie (at his owne charge) he new repared with stoneworke the third part of Tinbridge, which his predecessour Thomas Langleis recouered against the manor of Newcastell: and which, others his predecessors (as occasion was offered therefore) did from time to time most statelie repare. In the end about the latter reigne of Edward the first (being by Kinian or Ninian, Nexuile or Nenille, accused, for that he somewhat fauoured the Romane religion, and was not so forward in furthering of the gospell as that time required) he was for that cause deprived from his bishoprike, from all other ecclesiasticall gouernment, and committed to the tower: where he remained all the time of K. Edward. Afterward (by the benefit of quéene Marie) in the first yeare of hir reigne, he was reinuested into his sée of Durham, which he possessed all the time of hir gouernement: during which he was not so seuere an executor of the Romane canons against the protestants, as the other bishops of England were.

Tunstall deprived from his bishoprike.

Tunstall restored.

But she not continuing long (such are the inconstancies of our estates & vncerteinties of our troubles) he was againe (by the noble quéene Elisabeth) deprived of his bishoprike, after disputation and conference had at Westminster: in which he defended the Roman religion, in the first yeare of the said Elisabeth, about the truth of Christs gospell: and was committed to Matthew Parker bishop of Canturburie, who vsed him verie honourablie, both for the grauitie, learning and age of the said Tunstall. But he not long remaining vnder the ward of the said bishop, did shortlie after the eightéenth of Nouember in the yeare 1559 depart this life at Lambeth, where he first receiued his consecration, being a man of such age, as that he atteined to the number of fourescore & fiue years when he died. He was buried in the quére of the church of Lambeth, whose funerall sermon was done by Alexander Nowell, then (& now in the yeare 1586) deane of Poules. Who taking this theame to intreat vpon, Blessed are they which die in the Lord, did there deliuer such liberall & singular commendation of this man for his vertuous life, lerning, grauitie, and good seruice done to manie princes of England, that more could not be said of anie man, being spoken trulie. Such force hath vertue, that we ought to commend it euen in our enimies, ouer whose dead carcase in the said church of Lambeth is laid a faire marble, in which is ingrauen this epitaph of his, deuised by doctor Walter Haddon:

Tunstalls death.

Mat. Par. in act. epis. Cant. ca. Wil. Warham.

Anglia Cutbertum Tunstallum mœsta requirit,
Cuius summa domi laus erat atq; foris:
Rhetor, arithmeticus, iuris consultus & æqui,
Legatúsq; fuit, denique præsul erat.
Annorum satur, & magnorum plenus honorum,
Vertitur in cineres aureus iste senex.

This man was (as it should appeare in storie) full of contumacie and selfe will, vntractable he was and of nature rebellious. For saith maister Fox in the reigne of king Edward, being cast into the tower for his disobedience, where he kept his Christmasse three peares togither, more worthie of some other place without the tower, if it had pleased God otherwise not to haue meant a further plague to this realme by that man. Howbeit he was indued with such excellencie of lerning, and that of sundrie sutes, that of the learned he is noted for a mirror of that age wherein he liued: and albeit a papist, yet not depriuable of the praise which it pleased God to prouide for him (being an enimie vnto the truth, perhaps through feare as manie more) by those rare and manifold good meanes wherewith he was adorned. Insomuch that Leland, a man of a cleare iudgement and great insight to discerne betweene substantiallie and superficiallie learned, comparing this bishop Tunstall with profound Budeus, saith as followeth:

John Fox.

Collatio Budæi & Cuberti Tunstalli.

Quis te nostra canet Tunstalle Britannia laude?
An qua Budæum Gallia docta suum?
Candidus ille studet Græcam celebrare Mineruam,
Græcorum celebras tu monumenta patrum.
Ille colit veteres intento pectore leges,
Sunt study leges cura diserta tui.
Ille rudes asses docuit cognoscere partes,
Tu numeros primus verba Latina loqui.
Gallia causidicum tecum dignare Britannum
Conferri, niueis dignus vtérq; notis.]

In this meane time, through controuersie raised betwixt the Scotish nobilitie, and the quæne dowager of Scotland, which chanced especiallie about matters of religion, certeine of the lords there minding a reformation therein; and the quéene resisting them to hir power, in purpose to mainteine the old popish religion, which some name catholike; diuerse companies of souldiers and men of war were sent out of France into Scotland to aid the said quéene, where they were placed in diuerse townes and forts, to the high displeasure of the more part of the Scotish nobilitie: who lothing to be oppressed with strangers in that sort, were forced to sue vnto the quéene of England for aid to expell the French, who sought to subuert the ancient state of that realme, and to annex the same vnto the crowne of France.

Anno Reg. 2. Trouble in Scotland.

Frenchmen sent into Scotland.

The Scots sue to the quéens maiestie of England for aid against the French.

Their sute was the better liked of, for that it was doubted, least the Frenchmen (vnder pretense of bringing an armie into Scotland to appease the Scots) might attempt some inuasion here in England, considering that by procurement (as was thought) of the duke of Guise, vncle to the quéene of France and Scotland, a title should seeme to be pretended by his néece, the foresaid quéene, as might be gathered by manifest coniectures of the vsurping of armes, and so forth. The names of the lords of Scotland that made sute for aid against the Frenchmen at this season, were these: the duke of Chateau le reault, the earle of Arraine his sonne, the lord James prior of saint Andrews, the earle of Argile, the earle of Glencarne, the earle of Rothouse, the earle of Southerland, the earle of Mounteith, the earle of Huntleie, the earle of Cathnes, the earle of Erroll, the earle Marshall, the earle of Morton, the earle of Cassils, the earle of Eglenton, the earle of Montros, the lord Ruthuen, the lord Boid, the lord Ogletrée, the lord Erskin, the lord Dromond, the lord Hume, the lord Rose, the lord Chreighton, the lord Leuingston, the lord Somerwell, the maister of Lindseie, the maister of Marwell.

The lords of Scotland that were confederat togither against the French.

The quéenes maiestie, with aduise of hir graces counceli, considering of this weightie businesse, and withall withall forseeing the malicious purpose of hir aduersaries, and how the queene of Scots was in France married and gouerned, so as she was not able to vse the libertie of hir crowne, did thinke it best to preuent such mischiefs as might insue, if timelie remedie were not vsed, to displace such dangerous neighbours the Frenchmen, that began to nestle themselues thus stronglie so nere at hand for no good purpose, as easilie might be ghessed. Herevpon was a power raised and sent forth both by sea & land, the duke of Norffolke being appointed generall, and sent into the north, for the direction thereof. And first maister William Winter, appointed viceadmerall of the quéns naule northwards, made saile toward Scotland, and watting alongst the coast in Januarie, came into the Forth, & so to the road of Leith, and there cast anchor, as well to impeach the landing of such Frenchmen, as might haplie be sent forth of France, to the aid of the French there, against the Scotish lords, named of the congregation; as also to keepe them that laie in Inskeith from vittels: and likewise to see that none of the Frenchmen by water should passe to or from Leith: but to watch them so, as they shuld not inioy any commoditie that might come to either place by the same water.

The quéenes maiestie determineth to aid the Scots.

Sir William Winter viceadmerall.

1560

Moreouer, after that the armie by land was come togither into the north parts, and had sojourned at Berwike and thereabouts, the lord Grete of Wilton being appointed generall of the said armie, departed with the same out of the bounds of Berwike, and marched to Coldingham, where they incamped that night. Saturdaie the thirteenth of March, sir James Croft, and sir George Howard departed Berwike to the armie, with all the lances and light horssemen, conteining the number of twelue hundred and fiftie horsses. The number of the footmen amounted to aboue six thousand in all. The chiefe gouernours of which armie were these: the lord Grete of Wilton lieutenant generall, sir James Croft assistant with him in that charge, the lord Scrope lord marshall; sir George Howard generall of the men at armes and demilances, maister Barnabie Fitz Patrike his lieutenant, sir Henrie Persie generall of the light horssemen, Thomas Hugghens esquier prouost marshall, Thomas Gower maister of the ordinance, maister William Pelham capteine of the pioners, Edward Randoll esquier, sergeant Maior, maister Thomas Burrough, maister Cutbert Vaughan, maister Williams, and maister Cornewall corporals.

The lord Grey generall of the armie.

Sir James Croft.

The number of horssemen and footmen in the armie.

The chiefest in charge of this armie.

This saturdaie at night the armie incamping at Dunglas, the horssemen lodged in sundrie villages nere about. Sir James Croft laie that night at Coberspeth, in the land of Whitlaies house. Sundaie the last of March, the armie remoued from Dunglas, and marching by Dunbar, there issued out of the towne certeine horssemen and footmen, offering a skirmish: towards whome certeine of the English lances and pistoliers, with certeine harquebutters, made forwards: but they kept themselues within their strength. Yet some of the English horssemen approched them so nere, that in skirmish two of the enimies horssemen, and one footman were slaine. The Englishmen receiued little damage, sauing that Peter Hince, one of their horssmen was hurt there. This done, the armie marched on to Linton bigs, where the footmen incamped that night. The horssemen laie at Hadington, and in diuerse other small townes: and sir James Croft laie at Clarkington, west of Hadington, at the land of Cockburns house.

Dunglasse.

A skirmish at Dunbar.

Two horssmen & one footman slaine.

Linton bigs.

Mondaie the first of Aprill, the campe remoued from Linton bigs vnto salt Preston, and there incamped. This euening sir James Croft, with diuers of the capteins in his companie, met with the earle of Arraine, the lord James prior of saint Andrews, the master of Marwell, sir William Kirkaudie laird of Grange, and diuerse other of the Scotish nobilitie with three hundred horsse in their traine. After they were met and had saluted each other, they rode altogither vnto salt Preston, where at the end of the towne, my lord Grete lord lieutenant met them, and imbraced them, & so they lighted from their horsses, and entered into communication for the space of an houre, and after toke leaue each of other, and so departed for that night.

Salt Preston.

The earle of Arraine accompanied with other of the Scotish nobilitie.

Tuesdaie the second of Aprill, my lord Grete, sir James Croft, my lord Scrope, sir George Howard, with diuerse of the capteins, rode to Muskleburgh church, and there taried the comming of the duke of Chateau le rault, for the space of full two houres: at length he came accompanied with his sonne, the earle of Arraine, the earles of Argile, Glencarne, Southerland, Menteith, and Rothus, the lord James prior of saint Andrews, the lord Ruthuen alias Riuen, the lord Ogletrée, the lord Boid, the master of Marwell, the lard of Ormerton, the master of Lindseie, the bishop of Gallowaie, the abbat of saint Colmes inch, the abbat of Culros, the lard of Pettirrow, the lard of Cunninghame head, the lard of Grange, and diuerse others. They were two hundred horsse in traine.

The duke of Chateau le rault and his companie.

Upon the dukes approch, they all lighted on foot, as well on the one part as the other: and after courteous embracings, and gentle salutations, they entred into the house of one William Atkinson, nere to Undreske church, and sat there in councell the space of two houres, & then departed for that night. The armie laie still in campe at salt Preston, from mondaie, till saturdaie, Palmesundaie euen. On wednesdaie, the third of Aprill, my lord Grete, sir James Croft, and my lord Scrope, sir George Howard, sir Henrie Persie, and diuerse other capteins and gentlemen, rode vnto Pinkeie, a house of the abbat of Dunferns, distant a mile and a halfe from the campe, where the earle of Arraine, and the lord James Steward, with diuerse other noble men of Scotland meeting them, did conduct them into the said house, where they had long conference togither, which ended, they went to dinner, and after dinner, they returned with my lord lieutenant to salt Preston, and viewed the English campe. Thursdaie the fourth of Aprill, fiue yong gentlemen, appointed to passe into England for pledges, & bound thither by sea, through contrarie winds were forced to come on land at salt Pannes. Their names were as follow.

The English and Scotish gentlemen meet, embrace, and consult.

The Scotish pledges appointed to passe into England.

The lord Claud Hamilton fourth sonne vnto the duke of Chateau le rault, Robert Douglas halfe brother to the lord James Steward, Archebald Campbell lord of Loughennell, George Gream second sonne to the earle of Monteith. James Coningham sonne to the earle of Glencarne: they were brought vp to salt Preston, and remained there that night. Saturdaie the first of Aprill, being Palmesundaie euen, the campe raised from salt Preston, and marched forwards. Halfe a mile from Lesterike, beneath a crag, called Arthurs seat, the duke of Chateau le rault, the earle of Arraine, the earle of Argile, the lord James prior of saint Andrews, and the rest of the noble men of Scotland, accompanied with two hundred horssemen, or thereabouts, and fiue hundred footmen, staied for the comming of the English armie. Wherevpon the lord Grete, sir James Croft, the lord Scrope, sir George Howard, and sir Henrie Persie, repaired to them, and had conference there with the duke, and other of the Scotish lords that were in his companie. In the meane while the armie staied; but yet at length, the horssemen, horsemen, the vantgard and battell, were commanded to march forth, who accordinglie passing forward alongst by the place where the duke & Scotish lords stood, held vpon their waie, till they approched nere to Lesterike.

A crag called Arthurs seat.

Conference betweene the English and Scotish.

At their comming thither, Trombull, the quæns regents trumpet, came to my lord lieutenant, and brought with him a safe conduct, giuen vnder hir hand & seale, for the safe repaire of sir James Croft, sir George Howard, and six others to accompanie them. Whereupon they preparing themselues to go to hir (after they had talked with my lord lieutenant, and the duke Chateau le reault) they departed towards Edenburgh, where the said quæne as then laie within the castell. There went with them maister Summerset, maister Pelham, and foure other gentlemen. Whilest they were in conference with the quæne, although an abstinence of all hostilitie by appointment taken betwixt my lord Greie and the said quæne ought to haue ceassed, the Frenchmen to the number of nine hundred, or a thousand shot, backed with fiue hundred corselets and pikes, & about fiftie horsemen, were come forth of Leith, vnder the conduction of monsieur Dossell, and the counte Martigues, coronell of the French footmen. My lord Greie vnderstanding thereof, came vp to the hill, appointed an officer at armes called Rouge Crosse, to go vnto them, with commandement from him, that they should retire their forces forth of the field into the towne of Leith: for if it were not for the promise which he had made to the quæne Dowager, he would cause them to depart, not much to their ease.

Sir James Croft, and sir George Howard, went to talke with the quæne.

My lord Greis message sent to the Frenchmen.

The herald doing his message, receiued answer, that they were vpon their maister and mistresse ground, and therefore meant not to remoue from it. Rouge Crosse returning with this answer, was sent againe from my lord lieutenant, to command them eftsoons to go their way backe to Leith: for if they did not, he would suerlie send them awaie with a mischiefe. But scarse had the herald done this second message, when the Frenchmen stepping forth, discharged a whole volee of their shot into the field against my lord Greie and his companie. Herevpon, the Englishmen and they fell in skirmish, which continued for the space of foure houres and more, so hot & earnestlie mainteined on both parts, that the like had not lightlie beene seene manie a day before. Yet at length, the Englishmen droue the French footmen ouer the hill, wan the crag from them, and put them from a chappell, where they had stood a great while, vsing it for a couert and safegard for them against the Englishmens shot.

A sharpe and along skirmish betweene both parts. The Frenchmen repelled by the Englishmen.

Then the enimies that were in Leith shot off diuerse peeces of their great artillerie out of the towne against the Englishmen, who on the other part brought forth two field peeces, and couered them with a troupe of horsemen; and hauing planted them to some aduantage, discharged the same among the enimies: who perceiuing that, gaue place, & suddenlie the English demilances gaue a charge, brake in amongst them, and slue diuerse. To conclude, they were put from their ground, and forced to retire backe into Leith, being followed welneere to the verie gates of that towne. There were slaine in this skirmish of the French, about a seuen score, and amongst them twelue men of name, beside some of them that remained prisoners. Of the Englishmen, there were also diuerse slaine, and manie hurt. But if the ground had bin knowen to the Englishmen, and what aduantage was offered to them by that presumptuous comming of the enimies so far from their hold, it was thought their whole power might easilie haue beene cut off, and vtterlie distressed. After that this skirmish was ended, and the Frenchmen driuen into Leith, the armie incamped at Lesterike. The same date the Scotish hostages were imbarked to passe into England. Towards euening, sir James Croft, and sir George Howard, returned from the quæne regent, after they had spent a long time in talke with hir.

T. Churchyard. The number of the English and French slaine.

The Frenchmen driuen into Leith.

On sundaie the seuenth of Aprill, a new trench was cast beside the crag, and thereon two peeces of ordinance planted. The same daie, sir James Croft, sir George Howard, and sir Henrie Persie, went againe vpon assurance, to talke with the quæne Dowager. Mondaie the eight of Aprill, the Frenchmen shot at the English campe verie sore out of S. Nicholas steeple, where there were two great peeces placed for to annoie them, although they did no great hurt. But the same night, the Englishmen cast a trench beyond the crag, and placed in the same trench certeine small peeces of artillerie, which went off the next daie against the enimies: and they likewise shot off againe at the Englishmen; and so likewise on wednesdaie the tenth of Aprill, on which daie, a great part of the carriages for the great ordinance, and diuerse bullets for the same, were landed, and much thereof remoued, and brought to the innermost trench. Thursdaie the eleuenth of Aprill, the great ordinance was landed, and two peeces thereof mounted into their carriages.

Saint Nicholas Steeple planted with two great hot peeces.

Ordinance landed.

The twelfe of Aprill being good fridaie, a bullet of a great peece of ordinance, being shot out of Leith earlie in the morning, did light in the campe, and slue three men. The same night, they were answered againe with foure or fiue canons, and demicanons. Saturdaie was spent in warding the trenches, and mounting the great artillerie. Sundaie the fourteenth of Aprill, being Easter daie, the Englishmen shot off in the morning all their great ordinance, and the Frenchmen answered them againe, and so they continued most part of that day, in shooting one at another. The footmen also skirmished so, that diuerse were hurt on both parts. The same day, the pile of Blackenesse was surrendred to maister Winter, vpon sight of the canon. There were within it eightene Frenchmen, who were brought awaie prisoners, and the house deliuered to maister James Hamilton. The same daie, nine Frenchmen apparelled like women, came forth of Leith, and counterfeiting some like demeanor to the apparell wherein they were disguised, trained one of the English skouts within their danger, whome they tooke, and chopped off his head, which they set vpon the top of one of their church steeples.

Good fridaie to some bad fridaie.

Warre maketh no difference of time.

The pile of Blackenesse surrendred.

Nine Frenchmen in Womens apparell.

Mondaie the fifteenth of Aprill about none, there issued out of Leith a fiftie horsemen, and about fiue hundred harquebusiers: who making to the new trenches, were vpon the Englishmen that warded in such wise vpon the sudden, before they could be brought into anie order; that so entring the trenches, they slue and wounded no small number: and possessing the trenches a while, stoped and cloied the touch holes of three peeces of the artillerie, tooke maister Maurice Barkelete prisoner, and his ensigne. Brian Fitz Williams was sore wounded, and a foule fright there was. The alarum being brought to the campe, sir James Croft and other repaired toward the trench with all expedition, and perceiuing the Frenchmen to be maisters of one of the trenches, he called to capteine Vaughan, commanding him with his band to enter the trench, and to relieue those that were hardlie beset of the Frenchmen.

Blacke monedaie.

The Frenchmen with the trench.

Maister Barkelete taken prisoner.

This was done with great manhood shewed by the said Vaughan and others, who entring the trench, repelled the enimies, and slue sixteene of them that were in the trench. Capteine Summerset and capteine

The Frenchmen repelled, and some of them slaine.

teine Read with their bands followed them also, as they retired, and maister Arthur Greie, with certeine of his demilances, of whome he had the conduction, suddenlie came vpon them, and charging them with great courage, draue them into the towne, and made no small slaughter of them. In which charge maister Arthur Greie was shot through the shoulder. The great artillerie in Leith was not idle, during this skirmish, discharging to the number of an hundred shot, greatlie to the annoiance of the English, and hinderance of the seruice, which else might by them haue bene atchiued. This night the Englishmen drew backe their ordinance, which the Frenchmen had cloied with nailes and wiers in the touch-holes, but the same were planted againe before daie. Moreouer, our pioners cast a new trench along by the old chapell.

Maister Arthur Greie hurt in the shoulder.

A new supplie commeth to the armie, the capteines names.

Tuesdaie the sixteenth of Aprill, a supplie of two thousand & two hundred footmen came to the campe, ouer whome were capteins, sir Andrew Corbet, sir Rowland Stanleie, sir Thomas Hesketh, sir Arthur Manwering, sir Laurence Smith, maister Francis Tunstall, maister Edward Littleton, capteine Carnell, Philip Sturleie, and Dauid Morris. They were garded with fiue hundred horsemen: sir Rafe Sadler, sir Francis Leake, sir John Forster, and sir Nicholas Strange hauing charge to see them safelie conducted: who after they had brought them past all danger of enimies, left them in safetie by the waie, & were come a daie or two before them to the campe.

An hot alarum of an houres continuance.

Wednesdaie the seuenteenth of Aprill, it rained sore the more part of the daie; but yet the same night maister Winter caused diuerse of the shipbotes, being verie well manned, to giue a great alarum at the side of the towne towards the water, discharging manie basses and harquebusiers of Croke into the towne: the alarum was verie hot for the space of an houre. During this businesse there was a right pitifull crie made by the women and children within the towne. The pioners being applied in worke to make trenches, on fridaie all daie at night they placed certeine peeces of the ordinance in the trenches beside the chapell.

Ordinance planted in trenches.

Saturdaie the twentith of Aprill, manie peeces were shot off out of the trenches into the towne. There issued notwithstanding out at the gates an hundred shot, which placed themselues in the holes of the bankes, to hault such of the Englishmen as came forth to offer the skirmish. All this daie also the pioners, both Scots and English were occupied in making of a new trench neere to the towne. Sir Gerats Clifton & capteine Read with their bands garded them, and two hundred lances. The same daie the residue of the great ordinance with armour was brought on land. Sundaie the one and twentith of Aprill, the bishop of Valence named Monluc, accompanied with sir Henrie Persie, and three hundred light horsemen came to Lesterike: the lord lieutenant, sir James Crosse, the lord Scrope, and sir Rafe Sadler met him at the further end of the ward that was set, of purpose for his entring into the campe. After they had received him with salutations according vnto the manner, he was conducted by Rouge Croste the officer of armes from the campe into Edenburgh, and so went vp to the castell to conferre with the queene Dowager. He was no soner entred into the castell, but that there issued forth of Leith the number of two hundred Frenchmen about twelue of the clocke, and began a hot skirmish, which continued two houres, at the which diuerse were slaine on both parts.

The bishop of Valence and his companie.

A skirmish of two houres continuance.

More ordinance planted.

The same night the lord lieutenant caused nine peeces of the great ordinance to be planted in the new trench: so that the nert daie being mondaie, the same peeces were shot off verie earlie, directlie towards the steeple of saint Anthonies church. And although those peeces laie a quarter of a mile off, the peeces of ordinance that laie in the same steeple were dismounted by them; and likewise those that laie in the steeple of saint Nicholas church, at the which diuerse peeces were leuied, and within six or seuen tire the peeces that laie in that steeple were also displaced, and a gunner slaine that stood at one of them, the peece and the gunner comming tumbling downe both togither. In this church (as was reported) their store of vittels and munition was laid, so that batterie was made against the same all that daie, and a great peece of the church wall beaten downe, and the steeple defaced. The bishop of Valence, after he had talked with the queene Dowager, returned to commune with the lords of the congregation.

The enimies ordinance displaced.

Tuesdaie the three and twentith of Aprill, being saint Georges daie, the pioners Scotish and English were busilie applied in worke, about the casting of trenches to make a fort; and still the artillerie went off against the towne. Wednesdaie the foure and twentith of Aprill about three of the clocke in the after none, there issued out of Leith seauenténe horsemen, who offered the skirmish: and vnder the place called little London, where they were busie in fortifieng all that daie, three or foure hundred of their shot were placed readie to breake out, if occasion serued. At length certeine of the English lances gaue a charge vpon their horsemen, who therewith retiring, drew the Englishmen within danger of their shot. But although the Frenchmen that daie shewed themselues verie valiant in skirmishing euen in the face of the English artillerie: yet being now egerlie pursued by those lances, they were forced to retire without anie great hurt done to the Englishmen, although the skirmish continued neere hand two houres. In this last charge yong maister Browne was hurt.

A fort raised.

A skirmish.

The French repelled.

Thursdaie the fiue and twentith of Aprill, the pioners laboured sore for the most part of the daie in finishing the new fort named Montpelham: to the gard whereof capteine Vaughan was appointed gouernor, with twelue hundred soldiors. This fort was raised on the south side of the towne, the plot whereof was cast square, with foure bulworks at euerie corner, and twelue battering peeces planted in places conuenient within the same. This thursdaie also, about fiue of the clocke in the after none, there issued out of Leith on the east side seauentie or eightie horsemen, and two hundred harquebusiers, offering the skirmish, towards whome certeine of the English light horsemen roundlie made, and charging them, droue them backe to their footmen, who with their shot receiued the light horsemen so sharplie, that they were forced to retire. In which retire James Hamilton a Scottishman was taken prisoner, for the rescue of whome the horsemen made forward againe: but the enimies shot was so hot, that they were not able to recouer him; but yet they slue two of the French horsemen in sight.

The new fort called Montpelham.

Another skirmish.

James Hamilton taken prisoner.

During the time of this skirmish, there was great shooting off with the great ordinance on both sides, & much hurt done as well to the English as French. This daie capteine Perith, and capteine Hales, hauing charge of a troope of light horsemen vnder sir Henrie Persie, and the lord of Grange were taken prisoners before Dunbar; and to the number of twentie or thirtie others were likewise taken or slaine the same time. The same night also, two thousand footmen with the pioners were sent to the other side of the towne, beyond the canon milles, where the pioners cast a trench for the safe lodging of the Prisoners taken and slaine.

The French

the armie, which remoued the next day being fridaie, and the six and twentith of Aprill from Lesserike downe into the vallie by the said canon milles called the red Braes, neere to the riuer side on the south part of the towne of Leith. As the armie was thus remouing from Lesserike towards the said place called the red Braes, the Frenchmen within Leith shot off manie of their great peeces of artillerie, but without doing anie great hurt. As the armie was incamping, certeine of the enimies horsemen and footmen skirmished with the English lances and light horsemen a long time; there were two Frenchmen slaine and their horses also. In the time of this skirmish two canons were conueied and planted in the new trench, which discharged diuerse shots at the enimies.

The armie remoueth from Lesserike to the red Braes.

A skirmish, and what was done in the same.

Saturdaie the seauen and twentith of Aprill, the great artillerie was planted aloft on the hill aboue the campe, within lesse than a curriers shot of the towne walles, and the pioners were set a worke to cast new trenches from the place where the same ordinance was lodged vnto Montpelham, drawing so neere vnto Leith, as the harquebus might reach them that watched and warded within the greene bulworke. There issued out of Leith vnder the west bulworke certeine of the Frenchmen, the which were chased into the towne by the lard of Grange and others. The French kept the same daie a trench which they had made without the towne, continuallie shotting at the Englishmen in the campe: but the same night the Englishmen wan that trench from them, slue diuerse of them therein, togither with their scout. And this done, they gaue a great alarum to the towne both by land and water, the shipbotes shooting off against the towne verie hotlie, and they within the towne likewise at the Englishmen. The same night was the great ordinance planted, and maister Markham hurt. On sundaie the eight and twentith of Aprill the said great ordinance went off, and shot continuallie the more part of that daie. The bishop of Valence departed the same daie towards Berwike: and this night sir George Howard that had beene sent backe to Berwike, to signifie to the duke of Norffolke the state of the siege, returned with sir Richard Lee, being conducted with fiue hundred horsemen.

The planting of the great artillerie.

A trench won from the enimies.

Great ordinance planted and discharged.

Mondaie the nine and twentith of Aprill, the peeces of the great artillerie were occupied in shooting off verie hotlie, and the French likewise shot off theirs, and comming forth of the towne skirmished with the Englishmen. This night the pioners made new trenches toward the south bulworke. Tuesdaie the last of Aprill was spent in shooting off the great artillerie into the towne. About fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, a sudden fire was raised within the towne, which hugelie increased and continued the most part of that night. At the beginning when it first appeared, the English ordinance was shot off to the place where the fire was, which shot togither with helpe of the wind, and being verie great at that present, did maruellouslie augment the same fire: yet neuertheless the French at that present time offered a skirmish, and continued the same neere hand for the space of two houres, manned their walles, and made the best prouision they might for doubt of some assault. It was indeed appointed, that certeine bands should make an alarum to the towne: in so much that capteine Vaughan with diuerse of the soldiors of Montpelham entred the ditch, and approching the walles, discouered the height of them. And notwithstanding that the French did what they could to annoie them in the diches with currier shot, yet did capteine Vaughan staie in the ditch a prettie while, and retired with his men without receiuing anie great hurt.

A skirmish.

A fire in Leith, and augmented with shot of ordinance and windie weather.

Capteine Vaughan.

Wednesdaie the first of Maie, the Frenchmen set vp verie earlie in the morning their Maie poles in certeine bulworks, and fourteene ensignes: the which being discouered of them in the campe, they saluted them with a peale of great ordinance, and likewise the Frenchmen answered them againe, and so continued the most part of that daie. The same daie John Brian lieutenant to capteine Capell, wan a trench frō the French at the west side of the towne, and in despite of them kept it all that daie with the losse onelie of one man. Thursdaie the second of Maie, the pioners made the trenches for the artillerie to be planted in batterie. The night following they remoued and placed the same artillerie in the new trench: and the next morning being fridaie and the third of Maie, about foure of the clocke, the same batterie went off, and continued all that daie. In the after none of the same daie certeine Frenchmen issued out of the west bulworke, and skirmishing with the Englishmen on that side the water, returned without anie great hurt.

Maie poles set vp in Leith on Maie daie.

A trench won from the French.

The night insuing the pioners made a new trench by the citadell wherein they might lodge some shot, and capteine Vaughan with diuerse of the bands in Monkpelham gaue two false assaults to the towne, entred the ditches, and viewed the flankers: whereupon the French shot off the same flankers, and manning their walles, shot off two or three volees of their small artillerie, slaieng and hurting to the number of twentie of the Englishmen. Among other, little Morton lost his life that night, and so at length the residue returned. Saturdaie the fourth of Maie, there were three ensigns appointed to gard the new trenches, and towards night, when the ward should be releeued, and the watch set, the Frenchmen that were in the trench vnder the citadell, made a sallie vpon the sudden. Whereupon the Englishmen that garded the said trench were constreined to abandon a great part thereof for a time: but yet the Englishmen eftsoons taking courage, laid to them afresh, repelled them againe, & draue them backe into their owne trenches, slue foure of them in sight, and hurt manie others. This was the lot of warre, to be ouerthrowne by force of the enimie, as the poet saith:

Qui Martem experti, per vim subiguntur ab hoste.

Capteine Vaughan diuerteth the enimies flankers.

The French repelled by the English.

Whilest this was in doing, the French had stuffed their bulworks and rampiers with curriers and harquebusiers of Croke, as thicke as was possible, which went off without ceasing at the Englishmen, for the space of an houre and more. The English artillerie planted in the trenches did answer them againe continuallie, and the great peeces did much hurt among them, in sight of them that watched in the same trenches. The same night the Englishmen conueied two culuerings ouer the water to scowre the mils: and before the breake of the daie they had burnt one of the same mils. Sundaie the fift of Maie earlie in the morning at the releeuing of the watch, and entring of the ward, foure souldiors that belonged to the great ordinance issued out, and set fier on the other mill, which burnt verie outragiouslie without ceasing, for the space of an houre or more. The French began to assemble towards the mill, in hope to haue quenched the fire, but they were deceiued: for suddenlie the Englishmen cut two holes through their trenches, & placing in the same the two demiculuerings, shot them off at the Frenchmen, so that they were driuen to forsake the mill, and in their retire some of them were slaine.

The mils burnt by the English and the French driuen from thense.

This daie also, as foure French gentlemen came forth to discouer the English trenches, capteine Read commanded one of his souldiors to shot at them, but through mishap his peece burst, and a shiuer thereof thereof flue out, and brake the arme of his said capteine. Mondaie the first of Maie, the armie lieng quiet all the morning, in the afternoone the English ordinance on the further side the water began to shot off against the enimies verie hotlie, so continuing till night. This daie the earle of Argile, and diuerse other noble men of Scotland, came to Edenburgh with two thousand horsemen and footmen, who shewed themselues in order of a muster, on the hill underneth the castell. Which being perceiued of the French within Leith, they shot off three great peeces of artillerie at them, but (as God would haue it) without hurt, for two of the bullets lighted short, and the third did fall in a garden within the towne of Edenburgh. The night insuing, the great ordinance in the Englishmens trenches and bulworks continued shoting on euerie side. And herewith commandement was giuen by the lord lieutenant, and the councell, that the whole armie should be readie armed with their weapon and furniture according by midnight.

Capteine Reades armie broken.

The earle of Argile with his armie commeth to Edenburgh.

The assault giuen to Leith the seauenth of Maie.

In the morning by two of the clocke the seuenth of Maie being tuesdaie, diuerse bands passed forth towards the towne, and entring the ditches offered the scale: other capteins with their men approched the bulworks, and other there were appointed to enter beside the mils. Beside the English bands commanded thus to giue the assault, there were a thousand Scots ioined with them, whereof fiue hundred with capteine Vaughan, and such other capteins as were commanded to attempt the bulworke next to Montpelham, and other fiue hundred went with such of the English capteins as were commanded to assault the breach beyond the water. Moreouer, as well the lances as light horsemen were assigned to gard the fields; sir George Howard with the lances keeping betwixt the fort of Montpelham and the sea westward, and sir Henrie Persie with the light horsemen betwixt the campe and the sea eastward. The rest of the footmen that went not to the assault, were also apointed to gard the trenches and field, in such wise as was thought expedient. So that perfect direction was giuen in euerie behalfe by the lord lieutenant, and other of the councell. And vpon warning giuen by capteine Randall sergeant maior, such as had béene commanded to giue the assault in their seuerall appointed places, preased forward with courage inough, and boldlie aduentured to clime the wals, & enter at the breaches, but yet their attempt wanted the wished successe: for what through the Frenchmens policie in stopping the currant of the riuer that night, and other deuises for their owne safegard, and the annoiance of the assailants: and what by reason of the vnfitnesse of the ladders, being too short by two yards and more, the assailants were repelled. For during the whole time of the assault, which continued for the space of an houre and a halfe, the French shot off their flankers, and mainteined their shot from the wals so thicke, that it seemed a verie hell for the time.

The horsmen appointed to gard the field.

The English men repelled by the policies and deuises of the French.

They also hurled downe ouer the wals vpon the assailants heads, great plentie of stones, logs, and mightie peeces of timber, which did much hurt to the Englishmen and Scots, that forced themselues to clime vp. But yet neuertheless, manie there were that entred the towne in sundrie places, of the which some came backe againe, although others were beaten downe and slaine. To conclude, at length all that escaped with life, were forced to retire with the losse of seauen or eight score Englishmen, some haue said two hundred, which were slaine outright, beside those that were wounded, being in number at the least two or three hundred: and amongst other, there were diuerse capteins and gentlemen that were hurt, as sir Thomas Hesketh, master Sutton, master Newport, master Conweie, capteine Wood, Thomas Fitton, with others. Vpon the repulse thus giuen to our men by the French, they aduanced and set vp foure téene ensignes presentlie about the towne, and continued otherwise quiet all that daie. Wednesdaie the eight of Maie in the afternoone, sir George Howard, and sir Richard Lée departed towards Barwike with certeine companies of horsmen for their safe conduction. Thursdaie the ninth of Maie, the Frenchmen wrought verie earnestlie within the towne, to fortifie the necessarie places, and repare the breaches, euen in the face of the English ordinance, which went off diuerse times, and did them much hurt.

The number slaine & hurt at the assault.

Sir George Howard and sir Richard Lée.

The same daie also the French had manned to the sea wards a bote fraught with fiftie harquebusiers, meaning to conueie them ouer to Insketh: but the English ships discouering them, prepared certeine botes to encounter them, whereof they being aware, returned. Fridaie the tenth of Maie, master Inglebie, capteine Pickman, and capteine Browne, came to the campe from Barwike, with a supplie of foure hundred and fiftie souldiors. The same daie about ten of the clocke at night, there chanced a brall to fall out among the Scots that watched in the trenches nèrest vnto the towne of Leith on the west side, insomuch that one of them fell to and killed another: which disorder being perceiued of the French within Leith, they issued out, and meant to haue vsed the vantage: but the Englishmen that watched nère vnto the Scots staied the fraie, and did not onelie bring them to quiet, but also put the Frenchmen to flight. On sundaie the twelfe of Maie, about midnight the Frenchmen, to the number of two hundred, sallied forth of the towne, minding to giue a camisado to the Englishmen, who kept watch that night in the trenches at the west side of Montpelham; but they were descried, and certeine of them killed, and so had the repulse. Wednesdaie the fiftéenth of Maie, sir Francis Leake came to the campe with a supplie of fiue hundred men from Barwike.

A supplie frõ Barwike of foure hundred and fiftie soldiors.

Sir Francis Leake bringeth a supplie to the campe.

Thursdaie the sirtenth of Maie towards night, the Frenchmen to the number of one hundred footmen, and thirtie horsemen, came abroad and shewed themselues verie braue, skirmishing with the Englishmen at the west end of their towne. Tuesdaie the one and twentith of Maie, about seauen of the clocke at night, there issued forth of Leith sir horsemen, and one hundred footmen harquebusiers, marching toward Montpelham to offer skirmish. Whereupon capteine Vaughan went forth to them verie orderlie, and skirmished with them a prettie while: and in the meane time, off went the great ordinance on both sides. In the end the Frenchmen were driuen to retire into the towne, for the Englishmen shewed themselues verie egre, and valiantlie charged their enimies, put them to retire, and chased them in at their gates, to the which they followed them right hardilie.

A skirmish betweene the English and French.

The Frenchmen chased.

The same night, maister Francis Summerset and other capteins were apointed to kéepe a fort built aboue the campe; and now finished, toke name of him being capteine thereof, and was after called Summersets mount. The same daie a souldiour of capteine Diuries band was hanged for going to Edenburgh, contrarie to a proclamation, inhibiting anie souldiour so to do without speciall licence. Wednesdaie the two and twentith of Maie, sir Peter Carew came to the campe, being sent from the court. Thursdaie the foure and twentith of Maie at seuen of the clocke at night, the French sallied forth to the number of two hundred footmen, and twentie horse-

Summerset mount.

Sir Peter Carew sent from the court.

horssemen, at the releese of the warders when the watch should be set, meaning (as it appeared) to haue wonne the trenches from the Englishmen. Wherevpon a sore skirmish followed, diuerse slaine, and manie hurt on both parties: yet in the end the Frenchmen were driuen home by plaine force. This was at the west side of the towne, where they had fortified towards the sea.

A sore skirmish, wherein the French are discomfited.

The same daie the Frenchmen of Dunbar toke an English hoie laden with double beere, beefe, oren, and flitches of bacon. Saturdaie the eight of June, sir John Neuill with three hundred men, capteine Bridges, and capteine Drurie, with other three hundred, set from Barwike towards the campe, where they arriued on mondaie the tenth of June, on which daie the quæne Dowager departed this life. The thirteenth of June, sir William Cicill, principall secretarie to the quænes maiestie, and doctor Wotton deane of Canturburie and Yorke came to Barwike, appointed commissioners on hir said maiesties behalfe, to treat of an accord with the conte de Randon, and the bishop of Valence, commissioners sent for that purpose from the French king, and his wife Marie quæne of Scotland. The foureteenth of June being fridaie, a certeine number of Frenchmen came forth of Leith to gather cockles on the sands towards Montpelham: which the Englishmen perceiuing, set vpon them, slue three score and ten, and toke sixteene of them prisoners.

In English hoie taken.

The quæne Dowager departeth this life.

The French gather cockles to their hinderance.

On sundaie the sixteenth of June, the fore remembred commissioners came to Edenburgh: and as master secretarie and doctor Wotton passed the English forts and campe, they were saluted with a gallant peale of the harquebusiers that shot off their harquebusies verie liuelie. Mondaie the seuenteenth of June about eight of the clocke, an abstinence of warre was concluded, warning being giuen by the discharging of two peeces of the great artillerie out of the castell; and then the Frenchmen shewed and aduanced themselues vpon their rampiers. Saturdaie the two and twentith of June, the abstinence was broken off, which till then had beene trulie kept and obserued. Thursdaie the fourth of Julie, about three of the clocke in the after noone, the French came out of Leith, according to their accustomed maner to gather cockles. Wherevpon the lord lieutenant being at that present in Montpelham, sent a drum vnto monsieur Doisell to signifie to him that his souldiours had gone further without their bounds than they might do by the order taken by the commissioners of both parts. Doisell answered, that they were no souldiours, but poore people which went to gather cockles for their releefe and sustenance. The drum said, that if they kept not themselues within their appointed limits, my lord lieutenant meant to send them backe not greatlie to their ease: whereunto Doisell replied, that if he so did, he would do the best he could to aid them. Herevpon the English horsemen and footmen out of Montpelham gaue a charge vpon them, and slue of them to the number of fiftie, and toke certeine of the residue prisoners. Fridaie the first of June, about six of the clocke in the afternoone, issued out of Leith foureteene horssemen, and an hundred footmen, which offered the skirmish: but vpon the shoting off the great artillerie from Montpelham, they retired home againe into the towne.

Sir William Cicill and doctor Wotton come to Edenburgh.

Frenchmen skirmish beaten as they gathered cockles.

The night following about twelue a clocke, one Scattergood an Englishman that was a gunner, & had feined himselfe to flee from the English campe for manslaughter into Leith, and was receiued of the Frenchmen, beleeuing that he had meant no deceit, came out of the towne, after he had remained there about seauen daies; in which meane while he had vnderstood fullie the state of the towne, and now vpon his returne made relation therof as he knew. On saturdaie the first of June, the lord Greie lord lieutenant, master secretarie Cicill, and sir Rafe Sadler, betwixt three and foure of the clocke in the afternoone, gaue order that there should no peece be shot, nor shew of hostilitie made till seauen of the clocke the same night: and herewith sent sir Gerueis Clifton vnto all the souldiors that warded in the trenches and bulworks on the west side of Leith, to command them to obserue the like order. And sir John Neuill was sent with like commandement vnto the souldiors that late in Summersets mount. The peace now in the meane time being concluded, on the morrow being sundaie, and seauenth of June, sir Francis Leake, and sir Gerueis Clifton, accompanied with two French gentlemen, were sent to the towne of Leith, to signifie vnto monsieur Doisell, the bishop of Amiens, la Brosse, Martigues, and other the French lords and capteins, that they were come thither by commandement from the commissioners, to cause the peace alreadie concluded to be proclamed: which accordinglie was done in maner as followeth.

Scattergood a gunners deuise deceiuing the Frenchmen.

Order taken for the restreining of all signes of hostilitie.

The peace concluded and word sent to the French that it should be proclamed.

The forme of proclaming the foresaid peace betweene the parties at hostilitie.

THe most mightie princesse, Elizabeth by the grace of God, quæne of England, France, & Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: and the most christian king, Francis and Marie, by the same grace of God king and quæne of France and Scotland: haue accorded vpon a reconciliation of a peace and amitie to be inuiolablie kept, betwixt them, their subiects, kingdomes and countries. And therfore in their names it is strictlie commanded to all maner of persons borne vnder their obeisances, or being in their seruice, to forbeare all hostilitie either by sea or land, & to keepe good peace each with other from this time forwards, as they will answer therevnto at their vttermost perils.

Immediatlie after this proclamation was ended, sir Francis Leake and sir Gerueis Clifton were brought to monsieur Doisels lodging; where was prepared for them a great banket of thirtie or fortie dishes: and yet not one either of flesh or fish, sauing one of the flesh of a powdred horsse, as a certeine person hath written that tasted thereof, as he himselfe auoucheth. ¶ Heere then we see the course of war, the end whereof of necessitie must be peace. For when both parts are either wearied, weakened, slaughtered, or so discomfited, as that they be constreined to surceasse, least they be slaine euerie mothers sonne: then peace is sought, and hard conditions receiued rather than it shall be refused. O that it were Gods will (saith Schardus writing of the accidents happening in the yeare 1570, which all men counted a fortunate and blessed yeare, albeit famine, the Turkish warre, the pestilence, and most cruell ouerflowings of waters did then outragiouslie take on: bicause three verie greeuous warres, namelie the first of the Polanders against the Muscouits, the second of France within it selfe by ciuill dissention, & the third betweene the Sweueners and the Danes, were then finished) O that it were Gods will (saith he) that Sir Francis Leake and sir Gerueis Clifton banketted by monsieur Doisell.

Schardius in rebus gestis sub imperatore Maximiliano secundo.

kings and princes would be admonished by examples in due time to consult of peace, and to make much thereof, rather than after manie calamities sustained and taken, to thinke how beneficiall and pretious it is. Then should they without seeking or sweating inioy those things which to obteine they vndertake great voiages, and yet nothing neere their purpose without much bloudshed, slaughter, and wastfulnesse; as sometime verie wiselie said Cyneas to Pyrrhus, disuading him from the Italish warre: and as one both learnedlie and fitlie writeth, saieng:

Hic est perpetuus sæclorum lusus & vsus,
Iudendi vt faciat consumpta pecunia finem:
Sic vbi vastatæ gentes lachrymantur & vrbes,
Aurea tum demum feruntur fœdera pacis.
Heu quanto satius foret hæc præuertere damna!
Atque animos hominum saluis coalescere rebus!]

while this historiographer is so large in the description of this siege of Leith.

Thus haue I beene more large in this matter concerning the siege of Leith, than may be thought peraduenture necessarie, sith the thing is yet fresh in memorie: but because there came to my hands certeine notes of one or two persons that were there present, and for helpe of their owne memories wrote the same, I haue thought it not impertinent to insert the effect of them, that the same may serue to further those that hereafter shall write the historie of this time more at large, sith my purpose is not to continue the same otherwise than I find things noted in the abridgements of John Stow and Richard Grafton: except in some recitall of expeditions and iournies made, as this, and other into Scotland, and that same of the right honourable the earle of Warwike into Normandie, which I haue thought good to inlarge, according to such notes as haue come to my hand, beseeching the readers to accept the same in good part: and if anie thing be omitted, either in this place or anie other, that were as necessarie to be spoken of, as those points which I haue touched, or afterwards may touch, to impute the fault to the want of good instructions, and not to anie negligence or lacke of good will in me to aduance euerie mans worthie doings according to his merits.

The articles of the peace at the siege of Leith.

But now concerning the articles of the peace, being about thirteene in all, the chiefest may seeme to rest heerein, that the French souldiours and men of warre should depart out of the realme of Scotland within a short time limited of twentie daies, as Ludouico Guiciardini hath noted; six score of them onlie excepted, as three score to abide in Insketh, and three score in the castell of Dunbar, they to be answered their wages at the hands of the estates of Scotland, and to be subiect vnto the lawes and ordinances of that realme. That the fortifications about Leith should be razed and demolished: and likewise the fort which had beene built and raised before the castell of Dunbar by the French, for a strength thereto. That the Frenchmen should not conueie into Scotland anie men of warre, or munitions without consent of the parlement assembled of three estates of that realme. That the king and queene of France & Scotland should not ô thenseforth beare the armes of England, sith the same appertained onelie to the queens maiestie of England and to no other person.

The end of this peace thus concluded.

See more hereof in Scotlãd pag. 374.

These and other articles were compriséd and established in the conclusion of this peace, as well to the honour and suertie of the queenes maiestie of England, hir realmes, dominions, and subiects, as also for the wealth and preseruation of the realme of Scotland, the nobles and other subiects of that realme. After that this peace then was fullie established, agréed, and concluded, the Frenchmen were imbarked at Leith in English vessels; those onelie excepted that were appointed to remaine as pledges with the Englishmen till the ships came backe againe, and a few other that were permitted to passe through England into their countrie. Thus were the French forces remoued out of Scotland, a matter so much importing to the confirmation of peace betwixt vs and that realme, and also to the auoiding of further perils, that this iournie ended with so honorable and profitable a peace, concluded by the high industrie and prudent policie of our queenes maiesties commissioners afore mentioned, may be accompted one of the most necessarie expeditions, and most beneficiall seruices that had beene made and put in practise in manie yeares before. For the queenes maiestie (as some haue trulie written) had not onlie hir chiefe desire, by remouing of the French hir dangerous neighbors, that were about to nestle themselues so neare hir elbow: but also a perfect peace with the Scots was therby procured, like to continue manie yeares (if the said Scots shall not seeke their owne woe) being full vnable to aduantage themselues by warres against vs, as to the wiser and best sort of them I trust is not vnknowne.

The commendation of the foresaid concluded peace.

T. Churchyard.

The queenes meaning in remouing the French out of Scotland.

But to leaue the further consideration of the benefit that may grow herof to this realme, vnto their iudgements that haue riper heads to vnderstand the same: I will proceed, and herewith make an end of this matter, concerning the siege of Leith. After that the Frenchmen were departed, and the forts about Leith and Dunbar razed and demolished, according to the couenants of peace, the queenes maiestie called backe hir armie without reteining anie peece within Scotland to hir owne vse. In which honorable and vpright dealing, she wan more fame and estimation, than if she had seized and kept in hir possession halfe the realme of Scotland: specially regarding the perplexed state of the people by war, which she redressed by the establishment of peace, a thing which she alwaies loued, as the contrarie she mortallie hated: as one hath noted of hir grace, saieng:

Virgo pacis amans, quæ stat contraria bellis.

The queenes armie reuoked out of Scotland.

The queenes maiestie by the aduise of hir most honorable councell, meaning to abolish all corrupt, base, and copper monies then currant in this realme of England, coined in the times and reignes of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the first, to the great hinderance and decaie of the commonwealth of this realme, and therewith to restore vnto all hir subiects fine and pure sterling monies, both of gold and siluer, to the great honor and benefit of the whole realme: published a proclamation on Michaelmasse euen before none, that the teston coined for twelue pence, and in the reigne of king Edward embased by proclamation to six pence, should now forthwith (that of the best sort marked with the portculeis) be currant for foure pence halfepenie: the second marked with the grehound for two pence farthing: the third and worst sort not marked as afore, not to be currant at all, nor receiued for anie value. The grote to be currant for two pence, the former péece of two pence for a penie, &c.

John Stow. A fall of base monie & making of new coines.

It was not long after this, but that hir grace restoring to hir subiects fine sterling monie, called all the said base and corrupt coines into hir maiesties mint, allowing to them therefore after the rate before mentioned, so much of the said fine monies as they brought in of the said base monies. About the same time, hir grace also finding this realme greatlie vnfurnished of armour, munitions, and powder, for the defense thereof in time of necessitie, did so largelie and plentifullie prepare and cause to be brought into the same, such sufficient furniture of armour and weapons, as England hath iust cause to praise and giue thanks to God and hir maiestie; for that it is certeine, that the realme was neuer so amplie stored nor prouided of all maner of kinds of

Anno Reg. 3.

1560

Additions to Lanquet.

The queene furnisheth hir land with armour and munition.

conuenient

convenient armor and weapons, as it is at this present. The one and twentith of March a notable Grammar schole was founded by the maister, wardens, and assistants of the right worshipfull companie of the merchant tailors of London, in the parish of S. Laurence Pontneie in the same citie, the right worshipfull Emanuell Lucar, Robert Rose, William Perike, John Sparke, & Robert Duckington then maister and wardens of that companie.

The merchat tailors free schole.

The tenth of Aprill was one William Geffreie whipped, from the Marshalsea in Southwarke, to Bedlem without Bishops gate of London, for that he professed one John Moore to be Christ our saviour: on his head was set a paper, wherein was written as followeth: William Geffreie a most blasphemous heretike, denieng Christ our sauiour in heauen. The said Geffreie being staied at Bedlem gate, John Moore was brought forth, before whome William Geffreie was whiped, till he confessed Christ to be in heauen. Then the said John Moore being examined, and answering ouerthwartlie, was commanded to put off his cote, doublet, and shirt; which he seemed to do verie willinglie, and after being tied to the cart, was whiped an arrowes shot from Bedlem, where at the last he also confessed Christ to be in heauen, and himselfe to be a sinfull man. Then was John Moore sent againe into Bedlem, and Geffreie to the Marshalsea, where they had laine prisoners nigh a yeere and a halfe, the one for professing himselfe to be Christ, the other a disciple of the same Christ. On wednesdaie the 4 of June, betweene foure & fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, the steeple of Paules in London being fired by lightning, brast forth (as it seemed to the beholders) two or three yards beneath the fot of the crosse, and from thence burnt downe the spire to the stoneworke and bels, so terriblie, that within the space of foure houres the same steeple with the roofes of the church, so much as was timber or otherwise combustible, were consumed, which was a lamentable sight and pitifull remembrance to the beholders therof. After this mischance, the quæns maiestie being much greeued for the losse of so beautifull a monument, directed hir highnesse letters to the maior of the citie of London, willing him to assemble the cittizens to take some order for speciall aid and helpe for the reparing againe of the said monument. And she of hir most gratious disposition, to giue a comfort to others for the furtherance thereof, did presentlie giue and deliuer in gold one thousand markes, and a warrant for a thousand lode of timber, to be taken out of hir maiesties woods or elsewhere: and the cittizens of London granted one benevolence, and three fifteens to be forthwith paied. The clergie vnder the prouince of Canturburie granted the fortith part of the value of their benefices charged with first fruits, & not charged with first fruits the thirtith part. The clergie of the diocesse of London granted the thirtith part of their benefices in first fruits, and the twentith part out of first fruits. Now immediatlie by commandement of the quænes highnesse, hir priuie councell toke order that six cittizens of London, and two of the cleargie of the church of Paules, had charge and commandement to ouersee and set forward this worke, who made such expedition, that within one moneth next following the burning thereof, the whole church, that is to saie, all the foure great roofes of the same were couered with boords and lead, after the maner of a false roofe. And the greatnesse of the worke dispatched in so short time could scarselie be credited of anie, but of such as saw and knew the same. And the cause of this great hast was for feare of raine, which might haue perished the vawtes, to the destruction of the whole church, & the people that were therein. And before the said yeere was fullie ended, all the said iles of the said church were made & framed of new & maine timber, & couered with lead, & fullie finished. And the same yeare also, the great roofe of the west end was framed, and made of new & great timber in Yorkeshire, & brought to London by sea, and set vp & couered with lead, and fullie finished. And in like maner within the said yeare, the whole roofe and frame of the east end of the said church was made in Yorkeshire, & brought by sea to London, and there laid readie to be raised when the season of the yeare serued. This one thing resteth to be told, that by estimation of wise men, 10000 pounds more than is yet granted vnto it, will not perfect & finish the church and steeple in such sort as it was before the burning thereof.

1561

William Geffreie whipped.

A false Christ whipped till he changed his song.

Paules steeple on fire by lightening.

All the iles of Paules made and framed of new timber.

Ten thousand pounds insufficient to repare Paules as it was at the first.

In this meane time also, by reason of the quænes maiesties letters directed to the maior and his brethren of the citie of London about the burning of Paules, there were certeine aldermen and commoners of the said citie named and called togither by the authoritie of the maior, to deuise some good order and spedie remedie for the releife and comfort of the said citie, whensoeuer anie chance of fire hereafter should happen (as God forbid) within the said citie or liberties thereof. And the persons so called after sundrie meetings, and with good aduisement and deliberation, agreed and penned a certeine order for the spedie remedie thereof, as well for the readie knowledge of the place, whereseuer the same fire should happen, and for the sudden extinguishment & suppressing of the same, as also for the safe keeping of the goods of such persons in whose house anie fire should chance. Which orders and rules vndoubtedlie would be to the great comfort & safetie of the citie and cittizens of the same, if they were published and made knowen in time, and executed accordinglie. But what should I saie? I can but lament, not onelie for this, but also for manie such painefull and profitable labors, which for good gouernement of this citie had beene taken. For as soone as the talking thereof is done, and the bookes framed and deliuered, so soone is it put in oblivion, and nothing at all thought vpon, vntill an houre after the mischiefe be past.

Ouerséers appointed to preferre the reparing of Paules.

The quéne is greeued with the losse of Paules steeple & prouideth means to repare it.

The quænes benevolence to excite others.

Good orders nothing worth if they be not put in execution.

This yeare was chosen lord maior of London a worthie cittizen named William Harper, one of the companie of the merchant tailors. This man wishing in his life time to benefit his countrie, founded a free schole in the towne of Bedford where he was borne, and now lieth buried, prouiding a competent stipend and liuing for a scholemaister, there to traine vp and instruct children in vertue and learning for euer. The fiftenth of November, the quænes maiestie published proclamation, wherein she restored to the realme diuerse small peces of siluer monie, as the pece of six pence, foure pence, three pence, two pence, and a penie, three halfe pence, and three farthings. She also forbad all forren coines to be currant within the same realme, as well gold as siluer, calling them to hir maiesties mints, except two sorts of crownes of gold, the one the French crowne, the other the Flemmish crowne. ¶ Thus did hir maiestie in all hir actions directed to common vtilitie shot at a certeine perfection, pureneſſe, and soundneſſe, as here in hir new stamps and coines of all sorts; so also in Gods religion, setting the materiall churches of hir dominions free from all popish trash: which one hath aptlie noted by waie of comparison, saieng:

Free schole in Bedford towne founded by William Harper maior of London elect.

New coines of small peces as six pence, &c.

Eiectis paleis purgatur vt area multo
Vsque laborantis ferui sudore, reuulsis
Vt nitet ampla domus, quas struxit aranea telis:
Sic priùs idolis confractis, templa fricantur
Cuncta scopis, quicquid fuit, abradentibus vncis
Dentibus obscœnum, spurcum, verboue repugnans
Sacro, relligióque erectis cultior ibat

Iam pelilus, Christúsque Dei cognoscitur agnus,
Offensas delens mundi, peccatáque tollens
Vánalis populo non indulgentia papæ.]

Anno Reg. 4.

Monstruous births in diuerse places of England.

1562

This yeare in England were manie monstruous births. In March a mare brought forth a foale with one bodie and two heads, and as it were a long taile growing out betweene the two heads. Also a sow farrowed a pig with foure legs like to the armes of a manchild with armes and fingers, &c. In Aprill a sow farrowed a pig with two bodies, eight feet, and but one head: manie calues and lambs were monstruous, some with collars of skin growing about their necks, like to the double ruffes of shirts and neckerchers then vsed. The foure and twentith of Maie, a manchild was borne at Chichester in Sussex, the head armes, & legs whereof were like to an anatomie, the breast and bellie monstruous big, from the naull as it were a long string hanging: about the necke a great coll of flesh and skin growing like the ruffe of a shirt or neckercher, comming vp aboue the eares pleited and folded, &c.

France at diuision in it selfe by ciuill warres.

The realme of France being in great trouble about this season, by the means of ciuill dissention and warres that rose betwixt the house of Guise and other of that faction vpon the one side, and the prince of Conde and other that toke part with him on the contrarie side: the quéenes maiestie informed how that the duke of Guise and his partakers hauing got into their possession the person of the yong king, vnder pretext of his authoritie, sought the subuersion of manie noble men and good subiects of the crowne of France, namelie such as were knowne or suspected to be zealous for a reformation to be had in matters of religion: hir maiestie ther vpon considering, that if their purpose might be brought to effect, it was to be doubted that they would not so rest, but séeke to set things in broile also within this hir realme of England, and other countries nére to them adioining: first as one that had euer wished quietnesse, rather than the troubles of warre, sent ouer sir Henrie Sidneie at that present lord president of Wales (a man of such estimation as his word ought to haue deserued credit) to trie if he might do anie good to bring the parties to some attonement. But such wilfull headinesse séemed to rest in some that were chiefe of the one faction, that their desire séemed altogither bent to enter into wars. Hir maiestie yet hoping the best, appointed to send another honourable ambassage, which by their wisedoms and good aduise might persuade the parties vnto concord, whereby all due authoritie, honor, & dignitie might be restored to the king, and euerie other degrée keepe their roomes and places as to them apertеined, but all in vaine. For this motion of a pacification to be had could take no place, neither might the will of the yong king, or of his timorous mother, as it then séemed, be regarded, otherwise than as stood with the pleasure & appointment of those that were knowne to be the chiefe authors and furtherers of all those troubles.

Sir Henrie Sidneie sent ambassador into France.

In other ambassage in Julie directed into France.

Whilest the quéenes maiestie therefore did thus trauell in respect of the suertie which hir grace bare to hir welbeloued brother the said king, and to the commoditie and quietnesse of both the factions, an open iniurie was offered to hir maiestie: so as it might appeare what minds they bare towards hir, that had thus excluded and refused all offers & meanes to grow to some good and indifferent conclusion of peace. For whereas manie merchants, as well of London as of Excester, and other the west parts of hir realme, were sojourning for cause of traffike, in diuerse ports and hauens of Britaine; and hauing dispatched their businesse, and got their lading aboord, their ships were readie to hoise vp sailes, and to returne each one towards the place from whence hée came, they were suddenlie arested, their goods seized vpon, and they themselues cast in prison: and some that in reuenge of such offered iniurie attempted to make resistance, were cruellie slaine, their ships conueied awaie, their goods confiscat, without other pretense, but onelie that it was said to them that they were Huguenots. Neither was this done by priuat persons, but by open violence of the gouernors & magistrats of those places where the same disorder was executed: so that it appeared from whence they had their commission to vse such wrongfull dealing, and how farre the same would extend, if they might once haue time and occasion to accomplish their purposed intentions.

Ships of London, Excester, & Falmouth, spoiled by the French in Britaine, the thirtith of Julie, and nineteenth of August.

Moreouer, when complaint of such iniuries was made vnto the lawfull magistrats there, they found no redres at all. For what might the poore merchants profit by their plaints, when the packets of the ambassadors leters, directed to hir maiestie, were taken from the bearer, & no punishment had against those that committed so vnciuill an outrage? A thing that offended hir maiestie so much more, for that as she toke the matter, there wanted no good will, either in the king, or his mother, or in the king of Nauarre, the kings generall lieutenant, to sée such a presumptuous and vnrulie part punished of their people: but rather that there lacked in them authoritie to haue it redressed. Furthermore, it greatlie grieued hir, that the yong French king, hir déere brother was brought to such a streict, that he was nether able to defend the libertie of his people, nor the authoritie of his lawes, nor to deale vprightlie with other princes and potentats accordinglie, as by the bonds of leagues and of couenanted alliances had bene requisite. Neither did such disorder in gouernement of the kingdome of France touch anie so much and particularlie, as the queens maiestie of England.

Letters taken from the quéens ambassadors seruants.

The French troubles touch most ye quéene of England.

She therefore lamenting that the king and quéene mother should be thus in the hands of them that procured all these troubles, and led vp and downe at their pleasures, and driuen to behold the spoile and sacking of diuerse his cities, and miserable slaughter of his subiects: and againe hir grace thinking it expedient to preuent that such as were knowne to beare no good will, either to hir or hir realme, should not get into their possessions such townes and hauens as laie against the sea coasts of hir said realme, whereby they stuffing the same with garrisons and numbers of men of warre, might easilie vpon occasions séeke to make inuasions into this hir said realme, to the great annoiance of hir and hir louing subiects; at the request of the French themselues, thought it expedient to put in armor a certeine number of hir subiects, to passe ouer into Normandie, vnto such hauens as nére approched vnto this hir realme of England, as well for the safegard of the same, as also for the relefe and preseruation of the inhabitants there: and other that professed the gospell, liuing in continuall danger to be murthered and oppressed, and therefore craning hir aid to saue and deliuer them out of the bloudie hands of their cruell aduersaries, that sought their hastie destruction.

The chiefe causes that moued the quéenes maiestie to send a power into France.

For the conduction therefore of such forces as she meant to send ouer at that present, she ordeined the lord Ambrose Dudleie earle of Warwike to be hir principall lieutenant, capteine generall, chiefe leader and gouernor of hir said subiects, that should in such wise passe ouer into Normandie. Herevpon, the said erle the seuentеenth of October, in this fourth yeare of hir maiesties reigne, toke shipping at Portesmouth in the hauen there, at one a clocke in the after noone, being aboord himselfe in the quéens ship, called the New barke, and setting forward, sailed all that after noone, and the night following, directlie towards wards Newhauen, but in the morning about eight a clocke, when his lordship was within twentie miles of the town of Newhauen, the wind suddenlie changed cleane contrarie to his course: so that being driuen to returne about the nert midnight, he arriued in the downes, and there remained at anchor, till about eight of the clocke in the nert morning being mondaie, and then was set on land by bote at Sandon castell besides Deale, and the same daie at night came to Douer, & there late till fridaie at three of the clocke at after noone; and then taking ship againe, sailed forth: but finding the wind nothing prosperous for his course, after he had lien all that night & the daie following, tolling & tumbling on the seas, he was constreined to come backe againe, and arriued in the hauen of Douer, about ten of the clocke on saturdaie at night, and so remained there till tuesdaie nert insuing at three of the clocke in the after noone, and then went to shipbord againe in the said ship called the New barke: and directing his course forwards, on thursdaie morning about eight of the clocke, his lordship landed at Newhauen, where he was most ioyfullie receiued with a great peale of artillerie.

The earle of Warwike sent into Normandie with an armie.

The earle of warwike landeth at Newhauen.

Light horsemen Scots.

The nert daie, being fridaie, & the thirtith of October, there came to Newhauen from Diepe, fiftie light horsemen Scots, brought by one of maister Killigrues seruants. On saturdaie the last of October, the earle of Warwiks commission was proclamed in Latine, English, and French, by Blewmantell, pursenant at armes: which being ended, his lordship went into the church, and there sir Adrian Poinings knight marshall gaue him his oth, and then my lord gaue the said sir Adrian his oth. And after him were sworne Cutbert Vaughan controllor, John Fisher knight porter, William Bromfield maister of the ordinance, William Robinson water bailise, and capteine Thomas Wod clearke of the councell. On mondaie the second of Nouember, the earle of Warwike, with the knight marshall, and the controllor, rode out of Newhauen to Hauteuille, and so towards Mondeuille, accompanied with all the horsemen English and Scotish, and a thousand footmen. The Scotishmen & Montgomeries band pased forth, and skirmished with them of Mondeuille, and the Scots brought awaie with them a bottie of three hundred sheepe: but in the morning, they were returned backe againe by commandement of the earle of Warwike.

An oth receiued by the lord lieutenant, and other officers.

A skirmish betweene the Scotishmen and them of Mondeuille.

Maister controllors souldiors went as far as Harflue, and there skirmished with them of that garrison, but without anie hurt to either parte. My lord lieutenant riding all about the hils, viewed the countrie, and at night returned. On wednesdaie the fourth of Nouember, a barke of Newhauen, belonging to Francis Clearke, brought into the hauen of the same towne, foure Britons laden with wines, to the quantitie of two hundred tuns of good Gascoigne wines, which they ment to haue brought to the enimies: but being thus taken as a good prise, it was discharged in Newhauen, and stood the Englishmen and others of that towne in good stead. On fridaie the first of Nouember, about nine of the clocke in the morning, a great alarum rose in the said towne of Newhauen: for vpon the hils on the north side of the towne, the Reingraue, and the sonne of the viceadmerall of France, shewed themselues, accompanied with two thousand footmen, and fiue hundred horsemen. And herewith, the Reingraue sent a trumpetor to the towne, to aduertise the lord lieutenant, that he was on the hils there at hand; and that vnderstanding his lordship was come into the countrie, and entred into Newhauen, if it would please him to promise vpon his honor, and by the faith of a gentleman, that he might come, and returne in safetie, he would be glad to come & see him. Wherevpon the lord lieutenant, taking with him certeine capteins and gentlemen, rode forth of the towne, and sent before him sir Adrian Poinings the marshall, with Stephan Medcalfe hir maiesties trumpetor vnto the Reingraue, who talking with him, returned, and met with the lord lieutenant: who therewith pased forward, and meeting with the Reingraue, they imbraced each other, and conferred togither as they had occasion. And the Reingraue told the lord lieutenant (among other talke) that he was come to be his neighbor, and so with such merie speech they communed togither: and after taking their leaue either of other, they returned vnto their homes.

Stephan Medcalfe trumpetor.

The earle of Warwike and the Reingraue talke togither.

The counte Montgomerie and monsieur Beauuois had some talke also with the Reingraue, casting out bitter and sharpe words in reproch of the duke of Guise, and others that were of his faction. The Reingraue comming backe to his armie the same afternoone, forraied all the countrie, and droue awaie the most part of all the cattell that they might meet with: and comming to the church of Hauteuille, where an hundred and fiftie of Montgomeries band late, they skirmished with them, and in the end Montgomeries souldiors were forced to retire, and abandon the place, leauing it to the enimies; and comming awaie, withdrew the same night into Newhauen. The Almans the same euening, diuiding their armie into two parts, the one halfe of them went and lodged at Mondeuille, and the other halfe at Harflue. The morrow after, the Frenchmen that had abandoned the church of Hauteuille the night before, went thither againe, tooke and kept it against the enimies, in like manner as they held it before.

The church of Hauteuille recouered.

The eleuenth of Nouember, a proclamation was made in the name of the lord lieutenant, by the officer at armes Blewmantell, as well for good orders to be kept by the souldiors against the French inhabitants of the towne, & reforming of certeine greuances, whereof the French had made complaint: as also for their comming to church to heare common praier and preaching at due times, for the auoiding of vnlawfull games, whordome, wicked othes, and other blasphemies; and likewise concerning diuerse other good orders to be obserued, and disorders to be eschewed, as was thought necessarie to giue warning of, with condigne paines apointed for punishment of such as should transgresse in the same.

A proclamation for good orders to be kept by the souldiors.

On thursdaie the twelfe of Nouember, there went out of the towne of Newhauen towards Harflue, three bands of Frenchmen, conteining about fiue hundred footmen, and suddenlie they were beset by the Almans and Frenchmen of the garrison of Harflue: so that the French protestants were driuen to take a village called Graville, where they maintained the skirmish for the space of two houres, till the lord lieutenant, hearing of the perill in which they stood, sent forth with the controllor the number of a thousand footmen, and all the English and Scotish horsemen, and monsieur Beauuois with diuerse French horsemen: who comming before Harflue, fell in skirmish with the enimies, to whose succor there issued forth of Harflue a great number of the Almans, both horsemen and footmen. But the Englishmen behaued themselues so valiantlie, that they beat them out of the field, and droue them in the end to the verie gates of their towne, with such lionlike courage, as was wonderfull: chosing rather to die in battell (if hap had so cut their cards) in an honest cause, than in their sicke beds: as moued by the poets reason not anuile for a souldior to

A skirmish before Harflue.

A prise of wines to the quantitie of two hundred tuns.

An alarum in the towne of Newhauen.

remember and resolutelie to rest vpon, to wit:

Absumpti longis animam cruciatibus edunt
Languentes morbis: in bello pulchra paratur
Mors, homo momento pugnans extinguitur horæ,
Euolat in tenues lætus cito spiritus auras.

This skirmish was stoutlie mainteined and continued for the space of three long houres. Their great artillerie was shot off freshlie from the wals and bulworks. At length, when the night drew on, the retire was sounded, and the Englishmen came their waie backe to Newhauen with honor, hauing lost not past eight of their souldiors, that were slaine and six other hurt: whereas there was one of the enimies capteins slain in sight, with twentie souldiors, and another of their capteins, with diuerse others of their numbers greeuouslie wounded. Monsieur Beauuois shewed himselfe that daie verie forward and valiant, & so likewise did the Scotishmen. The thirteenth of Nouember, a pinnesse of the Frenchmen that belonged to Newhauen, being gone forth the night before, brought into the hauen a ship laden with Rochell wines, fiue and twentie tuns, that was bound to passe vp to the enimies, and so esteemed a good prise. On the fourteenth of Nouember, another ship fraught with twentie tuns of Gascoigne wines was brought in as a prise, likewise taken by a barke of Newhauen, that belonged to a Frenchman, called Jehan de Bois, an earnest aduersarie to the papists.

The seuenth of Nouember, a proclamation was made by Blewmantell, concerning orders taken and passed by the lord lieutenant, that no Englishman nor Frenchman should shot off anie harquebuse within the towne; nor that anie Frenchman, except monsieur Beauuois, or monsieur Bricquemault, or their companies, should be out of their lodgings after nine of the clocke at night till the nert morning on paine of death: except in cases of alarums. The twelfe of Nouember, about six of the clocke at night, one of the mils without the gate was set on fire by some of the papists (as was thought) whereof rose a great alarum. The thirteenth of Nouember, the Reingraue was seene on the north hils of the towne, with foure score horsemen: whereupon the Scotish horsemen, and three bands of footmen issued out, marching vp towards the same hils, in hope to meet with their enimies, but they were retired towards Mondeuille, and so nothing was done. It was reported for a certeine truth, that the duke Daumale was there at that present with the Reingraue.

On wednesdaie, the fiue and twentith of Nouember, one of capteine Cocksons souldiors was hanged in the market place: and an other that was brought thither likewise to be executed had his pardon, at the suit of certeine French gentlemen. And herewith was proclamation made, that where it had beene proclamed afore, that none should take anie thing forceablie from the French on paine of death, for breach whereof, such execution was presentlie done: the lord lieutenant did by this proclamation eftsoons charge and command, that none vpon like paine should breake or spoile anie house or ship: or take anie timber, wood, or anie other thing from the French, without their good will, consent, and agreement. The same afternoone came into the hauen hoies and botes laden with wine, cider, perrie, wheate, beefe, bisquet, meale, and other prouision of vittels. Two French shallops of Newhauen had taken them besides Hunflue, and beaten backe a shallop of the enimies, taieng ten or twelue Frenchmen that came forth of Hunflue to haue succored the hoies. The fiue and twentith of Nouember, there landed at Newhauen six hundred souldiors Essex men, vnder the leading of Auerie Darsie, Reginald Higate, and William Twedie, each of them hauing his appointed number of two hundred to his ensigne. arriue at Newhauen.

Moreouer, where as well diuerse prentises, as other Englishmen were come ouer, since the placing of the garrison in that towne of Newhauen, not offering their seruice anie waie, other than by straggling abroad to seeke pillage, whereby they fell oftentimes into the hands of the enimies, both to the dishonor of their countrie, & losse of their owne liues. For reformation hereof proclamation was made the last of Nouember, that all Englishmen within the said towne, aboue the age of sixteene yeares, and vnder three score, being not reteined in the queens maiesties paie, should at one of the clocke that present daie repaire to the bulworke called the bulworke of saint Andreses, there to present his name & person to the comptrollor, that order might be taken how to employe them in some certeintie of seruice, vpon paine to euerie one failing hereof to suffer ten daies imprisonment, & also to be banished the towne. A proclamation for the assembling of souldiors at saint Andreses.

The same daie the queenes ship called the Hare, comming from Portsmouth, arriued at Newhauen; and in hir came sir John Portinarie, whose ripe skill, deepe iudgement, and great experience in matters of fortification had bred in him such knowledge, as he may worthilie be called a maister in that science. They were by the waie assailed by a French ship of foure score and ten tuns and better: but they that were aboord in the Hare, so manfullie acquited themselues, that they vanquished the enimies, tooke the same ship, & brought hir with them being laden with wines, which they meant to haue conueied to the aduersaries in some garrison. The same daie sir John More landed at Newhauen, bringing ouer with him fiue hundred souldiors out of Denshire, for a supplie of the garrison there. He himselfe returned backe into England, but the souldiors were appointed to the leading of other capteins: so that Francis Summerset, brother to the earle of Worcester had three hundred of them; Oliuer Manners an hundred, and Edward Grimsbie the other hundred. On tuesdaie the eight of December monsieur de Beauuois, capteine Francis Summerset, and capteine Edward Horsete, with diuerse other capteins, officers and gentlemen, rode to the Reingraue, lieng at a faire house not farre from Mondeuille, where they dined with him, had great and hartie cheere, and after returned againe to Newhauen. The same daie the Reingraue sent for a present vnto my lord of Warwike, a great horse, verie faire, with saddle and bridle; esteemed to be well worth an hundred pounds. Sir John Portinarie a Florentine, and an excellent engiuer. Sir John More bringeth a supplie of souldiors to Newhauen out of Denonshire. A present sent by the Reingraue to the earle of Warwike.

Moreouer, the same daie at night, the Double Rose with certeine other botes and French shallops, passed forth of the hauen: Edward Dudleie, and capteine John Ward being aboord in the said Double Rose, with diuerse other Englishmen & Frenchmen, to the number of a hundred good souldiors, who sailing downe the riuer landed beside Tankeruille, and laie close all that night in the wood. And in the morning about nine of the clocke monsieur Bimar, ensignebearer to the counte Montgomerie, with six or seauen Frenchmen vnarmed went to the castell gate, and there fell in talke with monsieur Dimenè, who was capteine of that fortresse, hauing with him about ten souldiors that were appointed to remaine with him vpon the gard of the same castell. Whilest they were thus in talke, the Englishmen and other Frenchmen comming forth of the wood that was there at hand, reared vp their ladders, which they had brought with them for that purpose, at the breach which was made the summer before by the duke Daumale; Edward Dudleie. The castell of Tankeruille woone by the Englishmen

Pr. Reg.

Pr. French

Pr. Parliam.

Pr. death of Edward Grene

Pr. proclamatio. for ordering of ye

Pr. Parliam.

Daumale; and entring by the same, came downe into the base court. Which thing when the French soldiors that kept talke with them within at the castell gate perceiued, they began to laugh. The capteine of the castell therwith turning his face, & beholding as good as three score armed men within the castell at his backe, he suddenlie said: Ha, ie suis vostre, I am yours sirs, and so yelded with his ten soldiors. And in this sort was the castell taken, & the capteine brought prisoner to Newhauen.

A hote recouered which the French had taken.

On the twelfe of December, at ten of the clocke in the morning, the earle of Warwike, monsieur de Beauuois, and monsieur de Bricquemault, with all their horsemen & three thousand footmen, passed forth of Newhauen vnto Harflue, out of which towne there issued seauen hundred Reisters of the retinue of the counte Reingraue, and three hundred footmen, who fell in skirmish with the French and Englishmen verie hotlie: but at length the Englishmen draue them to the verie gates of Harflue, and slue them euen at the same gates, and vpon the walles of the towne; insomuch that they were constreined to shut their gates, and off went the ordinance from the gates and bulworks, discharging bullets amongst the English soldiors frælie. But yet there were not slaine past seuen of the English part, albeit diuerse were hurt and wounded, & amongst other was monsieur de Beauuois shot into the side of the necke through his gorget, and capteine Antwisell through the arme. Moreouer, whereas they carried forth with them foure barrels of gunpolwder to mainteine the skirmish, through negligence by setting fire in the same, there were to the number of twentie grieuoulie burned. Of the enimies were slaine that daie aboue thirtie, and hurt aboue fiftie. Manie of their horsses were also slaine in this skirmish, which continued aboue three houres. As the Englishmen were returning backe, the Reingraue with two hundred horsses, and a certeine number of footmen, was laid fast by in an ambush, thinking to haue cut off part of their men: but he failed of his purpose. For the lord lieutenant marching with his men in battell araie, brought them home in safetie, without other impeachment. The seauentéenth of December, the counte Montgomerie, and sir Hugh Paulet arriued at Newhauen in one of the quænes ships called the Aid.

A skirmish before Harflue.

The French men beaten into Harflue.

Monsieur Beauuois & capteine Antwisell hurt.

A proclamation for obseruing of orders.

The nineteenth of December a proclamation was made for orders to be obserued, concerning the imbarking of such soldiors as were licenced to depart by passeport or otherwise: and likewise prohibiting the taking into ante vessell ante drie fish, wine, sugar, or ante houshold stuffe without speciall licence of the lord lieutenant. Whilest things passed thus in Normandie at Newhauen & thereabouts, where the earle of Warwike & other valiant capteines were readie to make proofe of their high prowesse in time & place as occasion might serue, there ended his life at home that honorable baron, and right famous capteine in his daies William lord Greie of Wilton, knight of the most noble order of the garter, and at that present gouernor of Berwike, and warden of the east marches against Scotland. He deceased the fiue and twentith of December, in the yeare 1562, at Chelhunt in Hertfordshire, then the house of Henrie Denie esquier that had married mistresse Honor Greie, the said lord Greies onelie daughter. ¶ The six and twentith of December the counte de Montgomerie take shiping at Newhauen rode, accompanied with foure hundred harquebutters Frenchmen, and sailed to Dæpe, there to be gouernor of that towne. He went in an English barke belonging to Nicholas Malbie secretarie to the earle of Warwike lord lieutenant.

The death of the lord Greie of Wilton.

The third of Januarie a shallop that was sent the same morning from Newhauen, laden with beere and other vittels to passe vnto Tankeruille, was assailed about Harflue, by a shallop of Harflue, which drone the hoie to the shore: so as the Englishmen forsoke their hoie, and came running to Newhauen, to declare what had happened. Hereupon the lord lieutenant sent forth foure French shallops by water, and the horssemen with six hundred footmen passed forth by land, and vsed such diligence, that they came euen as the Frenchmen were haling vp the hoie towards Harflue: and skirmishing with the Frenchmen (being foure score good harquebutters) for the space of a long houre, at length recouered the hoie, and toke three of their shallops with their ordinance, which they brought to Newhauen, with the losse of one onelie man, an harquebutter of capteine Couches band. The fourth of Januarie in the morning, the English scout, being thirtie good harquebutters, were set vpon by the enimies that drone them vnto the verie gates. They shot also with their harquebusses into the towne, and ouer the mount rotall among the English soldiors. They hurt at that present three of the scouts; but when they perceiued the Englishmen were in a readinesse to approch them, they departed, being in number three hundred horssemen and a thousand footmen, soldiors of Mondeuille and Harflue. The six of Januarie were apprehended capteine Blondell, capteine Moucombell, monsieur Dimenæ, and Vitanna with others, for some conspiracie or traitorous practise which they went about, and had maliciouslie contriued. The same daie capteine Edward Horseie with his two hundred soldiors, & capteine Francis Blunt with his hundred toke shipping at Newhauen rode, and sailed to Dæpe, there to remaine with the counte Montgomerie, whose wife the countesse Montgomerie went also with them to hir husband the same time.

Certeine apprehended for conspiracie.

On the saturdaie following, the twelfe daie after Christmasse, being the ninth of Januarie, a great tempest of wind and thunder happened in the towne of Leicester, which vncouered two and fortie baies of houses, and ouerthrew manie, renting and tearing them in peeces, in a strange and maruellous maner. The people that were assembled that daie in the market place to buie and sell their vsuall chafer, wares, and commodities, were sore amazed and astonied with the hidiousnesse of that most outragious & violent tempest. On thursdaie the 14 of Januarie at one of the clocke in the morning, there issued forth of Newhauen three score horssemen, and a thousand footmen, all English; & comming to Mondeuille, where the Reingraue laie, gaue to them within an alarum, but neither the Reisters, nor the Almane footmen, nor French that were within that towne would come forth: and therefore after the Englishmen had tarried there the space of foure houres, they returned backe againe to Newhauen.

A great tempest in Leicester.

An alarum giuen to Mondeuille.

The fiftéenth of Januarie, at one of the clocke in the afternoone, there issued forth of Newhauen three score horssemen, and fiftéene hundred footmen, which comming to Harflue, gaue a like alarum to that towne; but none of the garrison there would come forth: whereupon the Englishmen returned home againe to Newhauen. The sixteenth of Januarie, the castell of Tankeruille was surrendred to the Reingraue, after he had laine about it eight daies, with two thousand horssemen and footmen. It was now yelded by composition (after it had beene kept by the space of thirtie eight daies) that those within should depart with bag and baggage, the gallie being sent from Newhauen to fetch them awaie. There were no more within it at that time when it was An alarum giuen to Harflue.

The castell of Tankeruille deliuered to the Reingraue.

was thus deliuered: but capteine John Ward, capteine Edward Dudleie, and capteine Saule, his lieutenant Rileie, with seuentie English souldiers, & thirtie French. The 19 of Januarie, there landed at Newhauen capteine Tremaine, with 50 horssemen verie well appointed to serue the quéenes maiestie there. The foure and twentith of Januarie, Francis Clerke Frenchman arriued at Newhauen, with two tall ships of his owne, right well appointed for the wars, bringing with him thrée rich prises, valued at about fiftie thousand crownes, one of them was a mightie great hulke, laden with wood & allume. The 26 of Januarie, capteine Tremaine with all his horssemen, & capteine Clerke with his Scotish horsmen, and 600 footmen, went forth of Newhauen towards Mondeuille, & by the waie in a little village, there was a French capteine came forth of Mondeuille, named monsieur Emerie, hauing with him thirtie souldiers, where falling in hand to spoile the same village, the pezzants about gathered themselues togither, and set vpon him and his souldiers. Now whilest they were thus in fight, the Scotish horssemen came suddenlie vpon them, tooke the said capteine sore wounded, slue twelue of his soldiers, & tooke fouretéene other of them prisoners, whome with their capteine wounded (as he was) they brought home the same night vnto Newhauen.

Tremaine.

Francis Clerke Frenchman.

Prises taken by him of about 50000 crownes value.

Capteine Emerie taken by the Scotish horsmen.

The thrée and twentith of Januarie, a proclamation was made for orders to be obserued by the souldiers, and other resiants within the towne of Newhauen, concerning politike gouernement thereof, as well for the better defense against the enimies without, as the quiet demeanor of the men of warre and inhabitants within. The fift of Februarie, two ships of Britons laden with Gascoigne wines, butter, bakon, lard, salt, and other victels, were brought into Newhauen by a shallop of Billebeuf, that was resiant with other Frenchmen in Newhauen, seruing against the papists, and had taken those two vessels, as they were going to victell the enimies.

A proclamation for the obseruing of orders.

A prise brought to Newhauen.

The first of Februarie thrée faire mightie ships of warre, belonging to Francis Clerke, brought into Newhauen thrée rich prises, laden with sackes, bastards, sugar, orenges, graines, and other merchandizes. This Clerke had not béene forth past six weeks at this time, and yet he had got aboue eightéene prises, well worth by iust valuation the summe of fiftie thousand pounds. On saturdaie the first of Februarie, a souldier of capteine Apleyards band was executed in the market place; for that contrarie to order taken and published afore that time by proclamation, he had not onelie drawen his weapon against another souldier, but also maimed him, and plaied other lewd parts in contempt of the lord lieutenants commandements. There was another also condemned to die, and two others adiudged to lose their hands: but the lord lieutenant of his mercifull clemencie granted to those thrée his pardon, for their passed offenses. On sundaie the seuenth of Februarie, was Hunflue summoned by an herald, sent from the French admerall, monsieur de Chatillon. On mondaie the eight of that moneth, the said admerall came before Hunflue, with six thousand horssemen Reisters, and other of his owne retinues, beside footmen, and a thousand horssmen of the countries thereabout. And about six of the clocke at night there was a great peale of ordinance shot off at Newhauen for a welcome to the said admerall.

A souldier executed for fighting contrarie to the orders in that case giuen.

Thrée other pardoned.

The admerall of France summoneth Hunflue.

The twelfe of Februarie, the French gallies of Newhauen passing forth, and walking about Hunflue to séeke aduentures, in hope of suertie, by reason the lord admerall of France laie therby at Touque, rode at an anchor: whilest some of them that were aboord in hir went on land, to gaine somwhat of the enimies. But they within Hunflue perceiuing this, made out their great gallies, with fiftie good mariners and souldiers, who comming vpon the gallies of Newhauen lieng at anchor, put hir in great danger of taking. For there were but fiftéene men left aboord in hir at that present, whereof thrée of them were Englishmen, who perceiuing in what danger they stood, waied anchor with all spéed, and drew towards the shore, to take in the rest of their companie; and getting them aboord vnto them, they manfullie stood to their defense, being in all but foure and twentie men. Neuertheless, they so behaued themselues, that continuing in fight aboue a long houre, at length they ouercame their enimies, slue seuen of them outright, wounded seuen and thirtie, tooke their gallie and brought hir to Newhauen, with thirtéene bels, diuerse copes, and church ornaments, chéepe, and other spoiles, which they had got abroad in the countrie, togither with thrée and fortie good prisoners, and the artillerie which was found aboord in the foresaid great gallie, wherewith she was verie well appointed and furnished.

The great gallie of Hunflue taken.

Of the French protestants there were but thrée slaine and six hurt, and one of the thrée Englishmen was also hurt. As it hath béene crediblie reported, the French protestants might thanke those thrée Englishmen that were with them in their gallies, for that their good hap: for if they had not manfullie stood to it at the first, and bestowed such artillerie as they had aboord with them freshlie against the enimies, the French had yeelded. But by Gods good helpe, and their worthie courage, the victorie remained on their side. The fouretéenth of Februarie there came from the lord admerall of France, lieng then at Touque, monsieur de Rohen, and monsieur de Grandemont, a knight of the order, monsieur Delegnie the admerals sonne in law, and diuerse other French gentlemen, to confer with the lord lieutenant, who receiued them right gladlie, and made them great cheere. They remained in Newhauen till the eightéenth of Februarie, and then departed and went to Caen, whither the said lord admerall was remoued, & had entred the towne, & laie within it, preparing with all spéed to besiege the castell.

The French beholden to the English.

Noble men sent from the admerall of France to the earle of Warwike.

The same daie that the French lords departed from Newhauen towards Caen, monsieur Briquemault, and sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight arriued at Newhauen in one of the quéenes ships called the Aid. The admerall Chatillon being got into the towne of Caen, kept the castell besieged, within the which was inclosed the marquesse Dalbeuf. There were sent to him from Newhauen the fiue & twentith of Februarie, seuen canons, two demie culuerings, & one minion. On the morrow following being fridaie, and six and twentith of Februarie, sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight, monsieur Briquemault, and monsieur Beauuois, with a thousand souldiers French, and as manie English, to wit, capteine Zouch, capteine Twedie, capteine Yigate, each of them with two hundred: capteine John Ward, capteine Parkinson, capteine Saule, maister Wheeler, and capteine Fisher with his band, each of them with his hundred, and capteine Pelham with the labourers were imbarked in the rode at Newhauen, and sailed forth towards Caen, to come to the siege which the admerall of France had laid to the castell there.

Sir Nicholas Throckmorton arriueth at Newhauen.

Caen castell besieged.

The marques Dalbeuf brother to the duke of Guise.

Aid sent to the siege of Caen.

The same daie as the counte Montgomerie had imbarked at the hauen of Diepe in an English vessell, and was comming towards Newhauen, there came out from Fescampe thrée shallops, by the appointment of the Reingraue (as was said) which made towards Montgomerie, whose meaning when he perceiued, he set vpon the strongest of the same shallops,

The counte Mõtgomerie taketh a French shallop.

shallops, so that there followed a sharpe conflict betwixt them, but in the end the victorie fell to Montgomerie, the shallop being taken, the capteine and maister slaine, and three English victuellers rescued, which the said shallops had taken. Montgomerie herewith arriuing at Newhauen, and bringing his prise with him was ioifullie receiued, and after he had talked a while with the lord lieutenant and the councell, he went aboord againe and sailed to Caen, there to confer with the admerall.

Mõtgomerie goeth to Caen to speake with the admerall.

The first of March in the morning they began to batter the castell of Caen, in such wise that about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, they within began to parlee, but it toke none effect: and then went off the artillerie againe till night, and in the morning the batterie eftsones began. And before that two tires of the said artillerie had gone off, they within offered to parlee againe, and finallie agreed by composition to yeeld; and so on that tuesdaie by ten of the clocke, the castell was surrendred into the hands of the French admerall, and the marquesse Malbeuf, and other that had the place in keeping, departed in safetie. On wednesdaie the third of March, the towne of Baieulx was also yelded vnto the lord admerall of France, and on the morrow following Faleise, and afterwards S. Lo, with diuerse other townes and castels, yelded likewise vnto him. The tenth of March the great gallie and the foists were sent awaie from Newhauen, with a canon and shot and powder vnto Hunflue, where they met with monsieur de Monie, that came thither with a faire companie of horsemen and diuerse footmen French, and of Englishmen, capteine Tuttie with his two hundred, and capteine Fisher with his hundred.

The castell of Caen battered.

It is rendred to the admerall.

Baieulx, Faleise, and S. Lo, yelded to the admerall.

The canon laid to the castell of Hunflue.

The canon which came from Newhauen was immediatlie planted, and about ten of the clocke in the forenoone it was shot off, and after it had beene six times discharged, they within began to parlee, and in the end they agreed to yeld vp the castell vnto monsieur de Monie, with condition, that their souldiers and men of warre might depart onelie with their rapiers and daggers, leauing all the residue of their moueables behind them. And according to this capitulation, capteine Lion with his hundred souldiers, and capteine Nicholas with his hundred, and fiftie other souldiers which were within departed, and left the castell vnto monsieur de Monie, whereby his souldiers, as well English as others, gained greatlie by the spoile.

It is yelded.

A proclamation vpon paine of death.

The twelfe of March proclamation was made in name of the lord lieutenant, that no souldier should draw weapon to do hurt therewith vnto anie of the French within the towne of Newhauen, or limits of the same, nor to molest them, nor to spoile nor take anie thing violentlie awaie from anie of them, nor to breake downe their houses, nor to carrie awaie their timber on paine of death. There was also a proclamation made in the name of the king & admerall, that no capteine, burgesse, souldier, mariner, or other of the French nation within the towne or without, should draw anie weapon, nor picke anie quarrell, nor vse anie iniurious words against anie man to moue them to wrath, specially against the Englishmen on paine of death: nor that anie burgesse or inhabitant, of what qualitie or condition soeuer, except capteins, gentlemen, and souldiers, receiuing paie, should beare anie weapon on the like paine.

A proclamation in the Frẽch kings name.

Sir Adrian Poinings.

The fiue and twentith of March, sir Adrian Poinings knight, marshall of Newhauen departed from thence, and returning into England, remained there still. Whereas monsieur de Beauuois had by the admerall Chatillons commandement, charged by publike proclamation, all strangers, forreners,

The French appointed to depart out of Newhauen.

and French souldiers to depart the towne, by the 23 of March last past, and that all other hauing their wiues and families should depart with them, within foure daies after the same proclamation, to giue aid for the conseruation and keeping of the townes of Hunflue, Caen, Baieulx, Faleise, S. Lo, and other places, latelie brought into the obedience of the king, vnder the authoritie of the prince of Conde, vnder paine for making default, to be taken as good prisoners of warre to those that should apprehend them. Proclamation was also thereupon made in the lord lieutenants name, the six and twentith of March, being fridaie, that it should be lawfull to the queenes maiesties subiects and frends, to apprehend and take as their good and lawfull prisoners, all such as contrarie to the former proclamation, should remaine in the towne of Newhauen, after fiue of the clocke after none of the daie then next following being saturdaie; those persons onelie excepted, whose names had beene presented and inrolled in bils remaining with the lord lieutenants secretarie.

Proclamation for the lawfull taking of prisoners.

Prouided, that no person seizing vpon the bodie of anie such offendor, should by vertue or colour thereof spoile anie of their houses, meddle with their goods or moueables, without order and meane of iustice vpon paine of death. On the sundaie yet being the eight and twentith of March, another proclamation was made, to giue respit to the said strangers, forreners, and French souldiers, vntill foure of the clocke in the afternoone of the same daie. And further there was another proclamation published this sundaie, that none should seize vpon anie of those strangers, forreners, or French souldiers, by colour of the two former proclamations, vntill the lord lieutenants pleasure should more fullie be knowen therein.

Another proclamation in the behalfe of strangers.

The thirtith of March being tuesdaie, proclamation was eftsones made, that whereas all forreners, being not anie of the burgesses, or proper inhabitants of the said towne of Newhauen, nor of the garrison or armie of the Englishmen in the same towne, had beene warned by seuerall proclamations to depart the towne; and yet the same proclamations notwithstanding, a great number made their abode still in the towne, in contempt of those proclamations: the lord lieutenant by this proclamation gaue full power and authoritie to the said prouost marshall of the garrison of the Englishmen in that towne, to apprehend and take as good and lawfull prisoners, all such forreners, as well souldiers, and mariners, as other without exception, which should be found in the towne at anie time after fiue of the clocke in the afternoone on saturdaie then next comming: monsieur Beauuois and his familie, and all ministers then being within the towne, being neuertheless clerelie excepted; and diuerse prouisions also included in this selfesame proclamation, for the mitigating of extremities, by wrong interpreting thereof, in behalfe of them that were to depart, as also that the gaine that should come by euerie particular prisoner so arrested by the prouost marshall, should returne to anie of the queenes maiesties subiects, by whose meane and procurement the same prisoner was detected, and caused to be apprehended.

Another proclamation for the lawfull apprehending of prisoners.

Exceptions against the foresaid proclamation.

On mondaie the fift of April, the Reingraue with foure hundred horsemen, and about fiue hundred footmen, came downe the hill, betwixt saint Addresses & Englefield, where sir Hugh Paulet knight met with him, by appointment of the lord lieutenant accompanied with fortie horsemen, and a thousand English footmen: and after they had talked togither by the space of an houre, they departed the one from the other; maister Paulet returning to Newhauen, and the Reingraue to Mondeuille, the place where he

The Reingraue with his horsemen.

he vsuallie remained. On Easter euen, two souldiers that had serued vnder capteine Parkinson were hanged in the market place of Newhauen, for running awaie to the Reingraue and vnto Diepe. Another also that serued vnder capteine Turner was condemned for the like offense, but pardoned through the great clemencie of the lord lieutenant.

Execution on Easter euen.

A proclamation to be packing out of Newhauen.

The eight and twentith of Aprill, proclamation was made, that all the papists, and the wiues and children of all them that were departed forth of Newhauen, and made their abode at that present in Monstreuilliers, Harflue, or elsewhere abroad in the countrie, and likewise all other, whome the last proclamation for their auoiding out of the towne in anie wise touched, should depart on saturdaie then next insuing, on paine to haue their bodies arrested as prisoners, and their goods to be confiscate. Other articles were conteined in the same proclamation, as well for the forreners that should come forth of the countrie to the market, as for the behauiour and demeanor of the French inhabitants of the towne, with promise of reward to such as should discouer and apprehend anie espiall, either dwelling in the towne, or comming and going to or from it. The first of Maie, Garter principall king of armes arriued at Newhauen, bringing with him the garter to the lord lieutenant, chosen on S. Georges daie last past to be one of the confréers of that most honorable order. The fourth of Maie proclamation was made, that all the French burgesses & others should bring and deliuer all their armour and weapon into the towne hall of Newhauen, which commandement was incontinentlie obeied and accomplished.

Garter king of armes bringeth the garter to the lord lieutenant.

A proclamation for auoiding.

The seauenth of Maie, proclamation was made for the auoiding of all such, whome the former proclamations had in anie wise touched, for their departure forth of the towne, that they should depart by tuesdaie next (the ministers of the church excepted) and that none should enter into the towne, of what condition or estate soeuer he should be, without licence of the lord lieutenant, except he were a burgesse of the towne, and of the number of those that had their names inrolled, as by the rols lastlie made it might appeare, on paine to be apprehended as good and lawfull prisoners. The twelfe of Maie it was prohibited by proclamation to all burgesses, inhabitants, and others, not to go vnto Harflue, or Montreuilliers, or elsewhere out of sight of the towne of Newhauen, on paine to be taken as lawfull prisoners. The fifteenth of Maie, a marriner of the great gallie suffered in the market place of Newhauen, for robbing and pilfering of ships there in the hauen, and three other that were condemned for the like offense had their pardons.

Ministers excepted.

Places forbidden by proclamation to be resorted vnto.

Execution for pilfering.

A proclamation for the auoiding of the French out of Newhauen.

The sixteenth of Maie was proclamation made, that all Frenchmen, being within the towne of Newhauen, otherwise called Haure de Grace, as well men, women, as children, should depart the towne, betwixt that present time and six of the clocke at night on the next daie being mondaie, except surgians, apothecaries, bakers, butchers, smiths, masons, locksmiths, carpenters, and other such artificers, vpon paine to be attached as good and lawfull prisoners, and their goods to be confiscat. By the tenor of these seuerall proclamations it maie appeare, that the lord lieutenant proceeded nothing rigorouslie against the French, in remouing them forth of the towne; although it maie be, that some which had to deale therein, dealt hardlie inough with them. But in such cases there must of necessitie be some diligent heedfulnesse vsed, for otherwise in such packing away, some might peraduenture carie with them too much, & others too little. But howsoeuer this mater was handled, true it is, that it was thought expedient to auoid the French out of the towne. For after the duke of Guise was slaine before Dieppe, and that the parties were agréed, as by edict of the pacification published in March last past it maie appeare, the whole deuises as well of them of the one religion as the other tended to this end, how to recouer the towne of Newhauen out of the Englishmens hands, either by practise or open force. And such intelligence was vsed betwixt the French within that towne, and the enimies without to bring this to passe, that the English could assure themselues no more of the one than of the other, and so were driuen for their owne safeties, to rid the towne of so doubtfull partakers.

The Englishmen for their owne suerties were forced to double their watch nightly

The seuen and twentith of Maie, proclamation was made, that all maner of furniture and apparell, apperteining to ships within the garrison, hauen, or rode of the towne of Newhauen, should be brought in: or a note to be giuen therof in writing to the lord lieutenant and councell there, before twelue of the clocke the next day. Saturdaie the two and twentith of Maie, about one of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue with fiue hundred horsmen, and twentie two ensignes of footmen, came downe to the village called Lheure, neere vnto the new fort, which by order of the lord lieutenant was latelie before begun to be built, sir John Portinarie being chiefe deuiser of the fortifications about the same. The enimies meaning was, to haue taken the same fort by a sudden assault: but the English scouts loking well to their charge, gaue intelligence to the lord lieutenant thereof, who incontinentlie going to the bulworke royall, set out by the posterne capteine John Ward with his hundred souldiers, and capteins Parkinson with his hundred, to passe to the fort, there to be an aid and defense to them that laie in the same.

The Reingraue with his forces.

About three of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue suddenlie with his bands of horsemen and footmen gaue them in the fort an hot alarum; and immediatlie the earle of Warwike gaue in charge to these capteins, Read, Apleyard, Tuttie, Zouch, Antwisell, Ward, Morton, and Parkinson, hauing with them a thousand footmen, and twentie horsmen, to set vpon the enimies in the village of Lheure, neere adioining to the said new fort, where the valiant English souldiers shewed well the wonted valure of their worthie ancestors, giuing such an hardie onset vpon their aduersaries, that greater manhood had not lightlie appeared in any incounter, than was vsed by those martiall capteins, and their warlike bands at that present, to the high honor of their countrie: insomuch that they beat backe their enimies, slue and tooke of them to the number of foure hundred, beside thirtie faire horses, and an ensigne, which one Eastwike lieutenant to capteine Antwisell got.

An alarum giuen to the new fort by the Reingraue.

The hardie onset of the Englishmen made vpon their aduersaries.

Amongst the numbers of them that were slaine, there were found aboue thirtie handsome gentlemen and verie well appointed. To conclude, the Englishmen behaued themselues so manfullie on each side, that by plaine force of armes they droue the enimies quite out of the village, & after set it on fire, bicause the enimies should not come to incampe therein, as their purpose was to haue done at that present. The six and twentith of Maie, the Frenchmen in number about three thousand horsemen and footmen came downe towards the windmils, neere to the bulworke called saint Andrewes, against whom the English horsemen and footmen issued forth of the towne, giuing them a right hot skirmish, which continued for the space of two houres, insomuch that there were slaine of the French to the number of 200; beside an hundred and aboue that were hurt. On the English side that daie were lost about a dozen

The Almans put to flight.

Another skirmish.

The lord lieutenants proceeding to be gathered by his proclamations.

ten or thirtéene persons, and amongst others, was capteine Tremaine slaine, and manie hurt. To conclude, the Englishmen like hardie and worthie souldiers wan and kept the field, so as the Frenchmen in the end were driuen to retire, and besides other losses which they receiued, they had aboue fiftie of their horsses killed and hurt.

The Frenchmen driuen to retire.

In this skirmish, being one of the notablest that had béene lightlie séene manie a daie before, capteine Horsey shewed worthie proofe of his most valiant courage, winning to himselfe such commendation, as the same will not be forgotten, whilest anie shall remaine aliue that beheld his manfull dealings: being such at that present, as deserue to be registred in the booke of fame, & to continue with posteritie for euer. On saturdaie the fift of June at seuen of the clocke at night, the Reinsgraue hauing laid in the village of Lheure an ambush of six hundred horsemen, and fiftéene hundred footmen, there came downe also betwéene the abbeie and the village called Englefield towards the towne, the number of a thousand footmen, which began a verie hot skirmish, first at the new fort, comming euen hard to the ditches, where the Englishmen manfullie incountered them. Herewith also the Reinsgraue appointed other to come downe, and approch the bulworks of saint Adresses, saint Francis, & saint Michaell, and to (conclude) round about the towne: so that there were of them to the number of six thousand that were imploied in this skirmish, which was maintained right fercelie for the space of two hours, with verie sharpe and cruell fight: in the end the enimies were forced to giue place, with the losse of fiue hundred of their men, Almans, Frenchmen, Gascoignes, and Spaniards.

Capteine Horsies valiancie.

Another skirmish.

The number which the French lost in this skirmish.

The Englishmen verelie in this seruice shewed, that they were nothing degenerat from the ancient race of their noble progenitors. Besides those that were slaine on the French part, amongst whom was one of their capteins of good account amongst them, they tooke also Ballompére an Almane, colonell ouer ten ensignes of footmen. The presence of the lord lieutenant was not wanting that daie, both to incourage his worthie souldiers, and also to sée them aplied with weapon and munition, so as they should not be vnprouided of anie thing that was needfull for seruice. Of Englishmen there was hurt capteine Gilbert, and capteine Pelham, and about fiftéene other hurt and slaine. The seuenth of June capteine Edward Dudleie arriued at Newhauen, with an hundred souldiers. The morrow after, the first canon shot light within the towne of Newhauen, nére to the bulworke of saint Addresses, striking into the house where capteine Wheler was lodged, which shot being brought to my lord of Warwike by Blewmantell pursuant at armes, his honor beholding it, reioised thereat, and said, by Gods grace he would answer them againe.

Ballompére.

Capteine Gilbert and capteine Pelham hurt.

Edward Dudleie.

The ninth of June arriued at Newhauen three capteins with their bands, of an hundred a péce, being of the garrison of Berwike: to wit, capteine Tremaine, capteine Cornewall, & capteine Carew. Edward Randoll also landed there the same daie, appointed to be knight marshall. For ye must vnderstand, that sir Adrian Poinings, being knight marshall vpon his returne into England, was otherwise emploid, and went not backe againe: and then was sir Thomas Finch of Kent appointed to go ouer to supplie the roome of knight marshall: who making his prouision readie, sent ouer his brother Erasmus Finch to haue charge of his band; and his kinsman Thomas Finch to be his prouost marshall, whilest staieng till he had euerie thing in a readinesse to passe ouer himselfe. At last, he imbarked in one of the queenes maiesties ships called the Greiehound, hauing there aboord with him, beside threescore and six of his owne retinue, fourtéene other gentlemen, two of them being brethren to the lord Wentworth, James Wentworth, and John Wentworth, with diuerse others, who in the whole (accounting the mariners) amounted vnto the number of 200 persons and vpward. And as they were on the furthest coast toward Newhauen, they were by contrarie wind and foule weather driuen backe toward the coast of England; and plieng towards Rie, they forced the capteine of the ship, a verie cunning seaman named William Maline, and also the maister and mariners, to thrust into the hauen before the tide, and so they all perished, seuen of the meaner sort onlie excepted, where of three died shortlie after they came to land.

A new supplie of Berwike souldiers.

Capteine Randoll appointed knight marshall.

Sir Thomas Finch.

Sir Thomas Finch drowned.

The dead bodie of sir Thomas Finch amongst others was cast on shore, & being knowne, was conueied home to his house, and there buried in his parish church. After this mischance, and losse of that worthie gentleman, the said Edward Randoll was appointed knight marshall, who ordeined a right sufficient personage, capteine John Shute, to be his prouost marshall. The fiftéenth of June, capteine Richard Sanders, and capteine William Saule, with their bands of an hundred souldiers a péce, and capteine Drurie, with two hundred, arriued at Newhauen: and the morrow after arriued capteine Roberts with another hundred of souldiers. And on the seuentéenth of June, being thursdaie, sir Francis Knolles, vicechamberleine of the quéenes maiesties house landed there, béeing sent ouer by hir maiestie and hir councell, to view the state of the towne.

Edward Randoll prouost marshall.

A supplie of souldiers arriue at Newhauen.

Sir Francis Knolles arriuall.

On fridaie the eightéenth of June, a sergeant of capteine Blunts band, and a souldior of capteine Darcies band, were executed in the market place of Newhauen, for drawing their weapons against their capteins, and forsaking their appointed places of warding, and such other lewd parts which they had committed. The fiue and twentith of June, proclamation was made, that no souldior of the new fort should resort to the towne of Newhauen, without licence of his capteine, or some of his principall officers, on paine of death: or that anie man should presume to passe the limits of the said new fort, except vpon occasion of seruice, in companie of his capteine or lieutenant, on like paine. And this order was taken, because diuerse straggling abroad, had béene taken prisoners, and slaine by the enimies, to their owne reproch, & hinderance of the princes seruice. The eight and twentith of June, the Frenchmen came downe to the village of Lheure, & there verie nére to the fort began to skirmish with the Englishmen. There were of them ten ensignes of footmen, and two hundred horsemen. This skirmish lasted three houres, and yet there were not past foure slaine. The night following, they placed fiue canons betwixt the towne and the brickehils, and likewise they placed other péces of their artillerie at the foresaid village of Lheure, so that they shot both into the towne and fort.

Execution of souldiors for drawing vpon their capteins.

A proclamation forbidding resort of souldiors to Newhauen without licence.

A long skirmish without anie great hurt.

Canons placed to beats the towne.

The first of Julie about midnight, they issued forth of their trenches, and skirmished with the English scouts, droue them vnder the bulworke of saint Addresses, and there perceiuing that the Englishmen had a priuie sallie out, after a long skirmish they retired. They had meant to haue set the mils belonging to the towne on fire: but they had such plaie made them, that about three of the clocke in the morning, they became to be quiet, and left the Englishmen in rest, hauing done to them little or no hurt at all. The great ordinance on both sides was not idle, whilest this skirmish was in hand. The second

Six hundred out of Northfolke, and three hundred out of Suffolke.

cond and third of Julie, there landed nine hundred souldiers that came forth of Northfolke and Suffolke, yellow clokes and blew clokes verie well appointed, hauing to their capteins Ferdinando Liggens, Philip Sturleie, John Highfield, and Edward Driuer. Also there came the same time fiftie carpenters, sixtéene sawyers, and eight smiths in hir workes. Moreouer, on the third date of Julie, about ten of the clocke at night, the French gaue a great alarum to the towne, beat in the scouts: but incontinentlie issued forth fiue hundred souldiers out at the salleng place, vnder the greene bulworke, and beat the Frenchmen backe into their trenches, and kept them waking all that night.

Capteine Sanders hurt and dieth.

The same time, capteine Sanders was hurt with a shot in the leg, whereof he shortlie after died: other losse at that time the Englishmen receiued not. The sixt of Julie, a proclamation was made for souldiers to resort in time of alarums, vnto that part & quarter, which was assigned to their capteins, and not to absent themselues from their ensignes, whether it were at alarums, watch, ward, or other seruice. The first of Julie, about three of the clocke in the morning, the enimies planted three canons, and three culuerings, discharging that morning to the number of foure score and ten shots: but perceiuing they did little hurt, they staied their shoting, sauing that now and then they shot into the bulworke, and ouer it into the towne: they also leuelled a péece, and shot it off towards the new gallie, slue therein two men, and hurt three or foure other. The same date, a canon and a culuering were sent forth of the towne to the new fort. The twelfe of Julie, about foure of the clocke in the morning, the French laid batterie to the bulworke of saint Addreses, continuing the same all that date. They also dismounted the same date the ordinance in the steeple of Newhauen, and beat downe the great bell, cleane defacing the steeple. They discharged that date against the towne (as was gathered by due estimation) to the number of twelue hundred canon shot.

Ordinance planted and discharged in great numbers.

The ordinance in the steeple dismounted.

William Robinson killed.

William Bromfield hurt.

The same euening was William Robinson esquier, waterbailife of the towne of Newhauen slaine with a shot; and also William Bromfield maister of the ordinance hurt with the same, and being conueied ouer into England, he shortlie after died of that hurt. The fourtéenth of Julie, sir Hugh Paulet knight landed at Newhauen, bringing with him eight hundred souldiers out of Wiltshire and Glocestershire. The same date came the Frenchmen downe to the number of three thousand, euen hard to the gates of the towne, beating the Englishmen out of their trenches: but yet in the end, they were forced to retire, and of Englishmen there were not past twentie slaine, and about an hundred hurt. But the Frenchmen (as was estéemed) lost aboue foure hundred horsemen and fotemen, albeit they toke from the Englishmen at that present a culuering, which was set forth to annois them. But their force at that time was such, as they preuailed, & so retired with that peece, though they well paied for it. The same date also in the after none, the little galeasse called the For, went out of the hauen, fraught with fiftie men, to flanke alongst the shore, and to beate the Frenchmen with hir shot; but as she was shoting off at them, a linnen stocke fell into a barrell of powder and set it on fire togither with the vessell, so that she suddenlie sanke, and all that were aboord in hir were lost, sauing fiftéene that saued themselues by swimming.

A new supplie of wiltshire and Glocestershire men.

The galeasse burnt by casualtie.

The one and twentith of Julie, the constable of France, accompanied with the marshals Montmorancie and Burdillon, and manie other lords and knights of the order, came to the abbeie of Grauille, where the marshall Brissacke was lodged, who had the generall charge in the armie, before the comming of the said constable. They dined togither there in the said Brissacks lodging, and after dinner they sat in councell togither how to proceed in the siege. Fridaie the three and twentith of Julie, the constable came into the trench that was cast ouer against the bulworke of saint Andreslie, alongst by the sea side, and sent his trumpet to summon the towne. The lord lieutenant appointed sir Hugh Paulet to go forth, & make the answer in his name: which was in effect, that the queenes maiestie of England had appointed him and others to keepe that towne; and therefore they meant not to deliuer it to anie other person, without hir graces especiall commandement. In the meane time, there were diuerse of the English capteins and gentlemen, which accompanied the said sir Hugh, offered the wine which they had brought out of the towne with them in flagons of siluer and guilt, vnto such capteins and gentlemen as accompanied the trumpet by commandement of the constable, to surueie the state of the trenches, and Palisad, as the French writers themselues confesse. Amongst others, there was capteine Montnes the lieutenant of one of the ensignes coronels of monsieur Dandelot, with whom capteine Leighton, being of acquaintance, had some talke.

The constable of France commeth to the siege.

The constable summoneth the towne.

Sir Hugh Paulets answer to the constable.

Capteine Montnes.

Capteine Leighton.

The Englishmen and Frenchmen were no sooner departed, they to their trenches, and the Englishmen into the towne, but that the enimies hauing planted that morning eight canons in batterie against the castell, and the bulworke of the hauen, caused the same to be shot off, continuing the same till wednesdaie at none, being the eight and twentith of Julie. There were six other canons also planted by them in the meane space, which likewise made batterie to the castell, and to the townegate. In this meane time also, Cutbert Vaughan comptroller, departed out of this life, a skilfull man of warre, and no lesse circumspect than hardie, both to preserue those which he had vnder his conduction, and to incourage them to do manfullie, when time thereto serued. Saturdaie, the foure & twentith of Julie, the batterie still continuing as before, certeine peeces were bent also to beat and trauerse the hauen. The Englishmen therefore setting fire on two windmils that stood there, abandoned a trench which they kept: and the Palisad, capteine Poiet, lieutenant of an other of the ensignes coronels of the French fotmen vnder monsieur Dandelot, entred with his band, and toke possession of a tower that stood at the end of the said Palisad. The French yet had hot abiding there, notwithstanding all the diligence and policie which they could vse to lodge there in safetie. Among others, capteine Richlieu maister of the campe, was hurt in the shoulder with an harquebuse shot.

The castell battered.

Cutbert Vaughan departeth this life, his worthie praise.

windmils set on fire.

Richlieu maister of the campe hurt.

The marshall Montmorancie caused a platforme to be raised, ioining to the Palisad, where about euening the same date he planted foure peeces of artillerie. On sundaie the fiue and twentith of Julie, monsieur de Estrée, great maister of the artillerie, accompanied with the seneschall of Agenois, vsed all diligence that might be to place the artillerie for batterie: wherevnto also, monsieur de Caillac applied himselfe by the constables commandement, who had compounded a matter in variance betwixt him and monsieur de Estrée. This sundaie and mondaie following, they were verie busie to bring their purpose in that behalfe to passe, & likewise to aduance their trench vnto the side of the breach. The marshall de Burdelon abode in the trench there all sundaie, and lost two of his gentlemen. The marshall

Monsieur de Estrée.

Monsieur de Caillac.

The marshall Montmorencie.

shall Montmorencie, accompanied with diuerse lords & knights of the order, remained all mondaie in the trenches, to prepare things readie for the batterie, not without some danger of his person. For the stones that were beaten with the bullets comming out of the towne flew verie fast about his eares, of the which there was one that lent him a blow on the shoulder, an other of them philiped him on the fingers, and lighting also in other parts of his bodie, if his armor had not defended him the better, he had not escaped without further harme. The same daie,

The prince of Conde and the duke of Montpensier.

the prince of Conde and the duke of Montpensier came to the campe, and alighting at the conestables lodging, went from thence to the trenches, to relieue the marshall Montmorencie, and to supplie his rome, whilest he might in the meane time go to sup with his father, and so take his rest. Monsieur Destrée, and the other that had charge about the planting and ordering of the artillerie, vsed such diligence, and were so earnestlie called vpon and incouraged by the prince of Conde, continuallie remaining in the trenches, that on tuesdaie in the morning, the artillerie began to batter the bulworke of saint Adzelles, and other places.

The bulworke of saint Adzelles batered.

This was done not without great danger of the pioners and men of war that garded them, for as the French desperatlie made their approch, so they were made by English gunners to tast the bitter fruit that the canon & culuerings yéelded. But such was the multitude of the Frenchmen that were now assembled togither, in hope to recouer that towne,

Thus we see things in opinion vnpossible, by industrie possible.

which being possessed by the English, cut off all traffike from Rouen and Paris, and so consequentlie from the chéefe parts of the whole realme of France, that with their generall aid, and drawing the water downe to the sea, the marishes were made passable and firme ground, which to men of great experience was thought a thing vnpossible. The castell, the walles, and other defenses of the towne were battered, breaches made, and the trench which before the comming of the conestable, was but brought to the point ouer against the bulworke of saint Adzelles, was now within foure daies aduanced neere hand the space of two miles, vpon the causeie or breach which was all of stone, without anie earth to couer them: so that they were driuen to make the best shift they could with woolsacks, sandbags, baskets and fagots. Yet all this had neuer come to passe, nor could haue bene wrought without infinit slaughter, and far more losse of French blood, that necessarilie should haue bene spilt, if the great mortalitie of pestilence which entred the towne about the beginning of the summer, throgh a malicious infection, had not so greatlie increased, that it slue & tooke awaie dailie great numbers of men, beside those that being sicke thereof, escaped with life; but were yet so feeble and weake, that they were not able to helpe themselues, nor to do anie seruice auailable at all.

The great infection of pestilence in Newhauen.

There died so manie dailie through the vehemencie of the infection, that the streets laie euen full of dead corpses, not able to be remoued or buried, by reason of the multitude that perished. Herewith they were grieuouslie annoied for want of fresh vittels; but cheefe of fresh waters, which the enimie by long siege had cut off. And now the shot of the canon, lieng within fir and twentie pases of the towne, was so terrible, as the like had not lightlie bene heard of: and sundrie breaches therewith were alreadie made, namelie two verie great and easie for the enimies to enter. All these dangers and miseries notwithstanding, the worthie earle of Warwike with his capteins and soldiors in courageous order stood at those seuerall breaches, readie to defend the same, if the enimies had presumed to haue giuen the assault, nothing afraid of death nor bloudie woounds; before which he preferred the seruice of his prince. And albeit the aduenture was great, yet by his owne example he incoraged other to cast awaie all dread of danger, and to shew themselues bold, which to a soldior in battell is a whetstone to set him on edge. And surelie in this point he was warriorlike minded, if a man may allow the poets words in the like sense:

Additions to Lanquet.

The high valiancie of the earle of Warwike.

Res magnæ non absque graui discrimine sunt,
In dubijs prodest generosa audacia rebus.

Which when the conestable perceiued, he caused a trumpet to sound the blast of imparlé, that talke might be had for the concluding of a composition betwixt both the parties. This offer, considering that sore contagious mortalitie wherwith the towne was most greeuouslie infected, hauing so greatlie infeebled the English forces within the same, was thought not vnmeet to be receiued. Herevpon, after a sallie made by the Englishmen, and a faire skirmish betwixt them and the Frenchmen that laie afore the fort de Lheure, on the tuesdaie the seauen and twentith of Julie maister William Pelham capteine of the fort, with another gentleman and a trumpetter, went forth by appointment, and was receiued first by monsieur de Losses, who brought him to the marshall Montmorencie, and after by his appointment went with him by the Reingraues campe to the conestable: and till his returne a truce was accorded on that side of the fort. After that maister Pelham had talked a space with the conestable, the matter was put ouer till the nert daie, and so he returned.

Capteine Pelham went forth to talke with the commissioners.

The commissioners appointed to talke with the conestable.

The morrow after being wednesdaie, and the eight and twentith of Julie, the conestable about seauen of the clocke came to the end of the trenches nert to the towne, where sir Maurice Denis treasuror of the towne, sir Hugh Paulet, capteine Horseie, capteine Pelham, capteine John Shute prouost marshall, and Nicholas Malbie secretarie to my lord lieutenant came forth, and passed ouer the hauen to commune with him. And during the parlæ betwixt them, a truce was accorded and assented to by both parts: the which neuertheless was broken two seuerall times through the vnrulie insolencie of certeine harquebutters. And though by the good diligence of the capteins they were incontinentlie quieted and staied: yet the valiant earle of Warwike, standing at a breach in his hose and dublet in sight of his enimies, was by a lewd soldior of the French (contrarie to the law of armes) shot through the thigh with an harquebuse. The conestable and the English commissioners appointed, had long conference togither; and before they concluded, the marshals Montmorencie and Burdellion (and at length the marshall Brissac also) came to the place where they were thus in parlæ: but the conestable tooke vpon him to haue onelie authoritie to accept or refuse such conditions as should be offered, or agreed vnto by the English commissioners in this treatie. And so at length they passed certeine articles in forme as followeth.

Additions to Lanquet. The earle of Warwike hurt.

The conestable tooke vpon him to be chiefe in authoritie on the French part.

The articles of agreement touching the surrender of Newhauen.

First, that the earle of Warwike should render againe the towne of Newhauen into the hands of the said conestable of France, with all the artillerie and munitions of war then being in that towne, and belonging to the French king and his subiects.

2 Item, that he should leaue the ships that were in the said towne at that present, belonging either to the king or his subiects, with all their furniture: and generallie, all such merchandize and other things, being likewise at that present within that towne, as either belonged to the king or his subiects.

3 Item, for the more suertie of the premisses, the said earle should presentlie deliuer into the hands of the said constable, the great tower of the said hauen, so that the soldiors which were placed therin enter not into the towne: and that the said earle of Warwike should cause the gates there towards the towne to be warded, till it were in the possession of the said constable, without planting anie ensigns on the said tower, according to the said agréement; and also that the said earle should deliuer foure such hostages as the said constable should name.

4 Item, that the nert daie, by eight of the clocke in the morning, the said earle should withdraw his soldiors which are in the fort, to deliuer it immediatlie into the hands of the said constable, or such as should be by him appointed to receiue the same at the said houre.

5 Item, that all prisoners which haue béene taken before the said hauen, should be deliuered on either side, without paieng anie ransome.

6 Item, that the constable should for his part suffer the said earle of Warwike, and all those that are in garrison in the said Newhauen to depart with all things whatsoeuer that belonged to the quéene of England and hir subiects.

7 Item, that for the departure as well of the said earle, as the remouing of his soldiors, and other things before rehearsed, the said constable agréed to giue them six whole daies, beginning the morrow then nert following; to wit, the nine and twentith of Julie: during which six daies, they might frankelie and frélie take and carrie awaie all the said things. And if wind or foule weather should hinder, that their passage could not be made within the said terme, in this case the said constable should grant them such further time of delaie, as might be thought reasonable.

8 Item, the said constable did likewise permit, that all the ships and English vessels, and all other that should be appointed for the portage and conueieng awaie of the said things, should safelie and frélie passe into and fro the said hauen, without anie staie or impeachment, either by the French armie or anie other. The said foure hostages were appointed to be maister Oliuer Paners, brother to the earle of Rutland, capteine Pelham, capteine Horsete, and capteine Leighton. In witnesse wherof, the said lords, the constable of France, & the earle of Warwike signed these articles the eight and twentith of Julie, 1563.

Additions to Lanquet.

The earle of Warwike commended.

Thus the earle of Warwike, as he had (during the whole time of his abode there in that towne of Newhauen) shewed himselfe a right hardie & valiant capteine; so now in the end he proued himselfe to be both prudent and politike. For by accepting of these honorable conditions to go with all armor, munition, ships, goods, bag and baggage, in anie wise apertaining or belonging either to the quénes maiestie, or to anie of hir graces subiects, he saued the liues of a great number, which otherwise scaping the scourge of the infectiue plague, must néeds haue fallen vnder the edge of the sword. The constable, during the time of the parlée, sent his yongest sonne monsieur de Thorre to the king and quéene mother, to aduertise them of the treatie of this peace. And after it was once concluded and signed by the erle of Warwike, he sent his eldest sonne the marshall Montmorencie, to present the same vnto them at Criquetot, halfe waie betweene Newhauen and Fescampe, who were right ioifull of the news: and the nert daie they came to the campe, shewing great signes of their conceiued gladnesse, for the recouering of that towne thus out of the Englishmens hands.

The French king commeth to the campe before Newhauen.

On saturdaie the most part of the Englishmen toke ship and departed homewards: for glad might he thinke himselfe that could get soonest out of that vnwholsome and most vnsauorie aire. Manie sicke persons yet were left behind, impotent and not able to helpe themselues. The miserie whereof Edward Randoll esquire high marshall of the towne (who was appointed to tarrie and sée the vttermost of the composition accomplished) perceiuing, moued with naturall pitie of his countrimen relinquished without comfort, caused the said sicke persons to be caried abord, not sparing his owne shoulders, at that time feéble and full of the plague, himselfe and his men still bearing & helping the poore creatures on shipbord. A rare fact worthie reward, and no doubt in remembrance with God, the true recorder of mercifull deserts. Thus was the towne of Newhauen reduced againe into the hands of the French, more vndoubtedlie through the extreme mortalitie that so outragiouslie afflicted the soldiors and men of warre within the same, than by the enimies inforcements, although the same was great, and aduanced to the vttermost of the aduersaries power.

John Stow. Maister Edward Randoll full of pitie and commiseration.

Besides the meaner sort of those that died of the pestilence during the siege, these I do find noted as chiefe: Cutbert Vaughan comptrollor of the towne, Francis Summerset cosine to the earle of Worcester, Auerie Darcie brother to the lord Darcie, John Zouch brother to the lord Zouch, Edward Dymesbie, Thomas Dymrie alias Polgnard, Richard Croker, John Cockson, Thomas Kemish, John Proud, William Saule, Wilfred Antwisell. Besides these being capteins in chiefe dieng there in that towne, or else sickening there and dieng vpon their returne into England, there were diuerse other gentlemen, and such as had charge, which likewise ended their liues by force of that cruell and most grieuous pestilent infection. There were diuerse also that were slaine, as well by canon shot, as otherwise in the field in skirmish, as both the Tremains brethren of one birth, Nicholas and Andrew, capteine Richard Sanders, with master Robinson, and master Bromfield, of which two before ye haue heard: also one Leighton a gentleman, & diuerse mo whose names I know not, worthie neuertheless to be remembred & placed in ranke with such worthie men, as in their countries cause haue lost their liues, and are therfore by writers registred to liue by fame for euer.

Chiefe personages that died of the plague at Newhauen.

Diuerse of name by canon shot, &c. slaine.

But now to passe to other matters at home. As ye haue heard, the plague of pestilence being in the towne of Newhauen, thorough the number of soldiors that returned into England the infection therof spread into diuerse parts of this realme: but especiallie the citie of London was so infected, that in the same whole yeare, that is to saie, from the first of Januarie 1562, vntill the last of December, in 1563, there died in the citie and liberties thereof (conteining one hundred & eight parishes) of all diseases twentie thousand, three hundred, three score and twelue: and of the plague being part of the number afore said, seuentéene thousand, foure hundred, and foure persons. And in the outparishes adioining to the same citie, being eleuen parishes, died of all diseases in the whole yeare, three thousand, two hundred, foure score and eight persons: and of them, of the plague two thousand, seuen hundred, thirtie and two. So that the whole number of all that died of all diseases, as well within the citie and liberties, as in the outparishes, was twentie three thousand six hundred and three score: and of them there died of the plague, twentie thousand one hundred thirtie and six.

John Stow. Pestilence transported from Newhauen to London.

One hundred and eight parishes in London, besides eleuen in the suburbs.

The eight of Julie in the morning, happned a great tempest of lightning and thunder, where thorough a woman and three kine were slaine, in the Tempest of London by lightning and thunder.

Couent

Couent garden nére to Charingtrosse. At the same time in Esser a man was torne all to péces as he was carteng haie, his barne was borne downe, and his haie burned: both stones and trées were rent in manie places. The councell of king Philip at Bruxels commanded proclamation to be made in Antwerpe and other places, that no English ship with anie cloths, should come into anie places of the low countries: their colour was (as they said) the danger of the plague, which was at that time in London, & other places of England. Neuertheless they would gladlie haue gotten our woolles, but the quénes maiestie thorough sute of our merchant aduenturers caused the woll flæt to be discharged, and our cloth flét was sent to Emden in east Frisland, about Easter next following, in the yeare of our Lord 1564. Forsomuch as the plague of pestilence was so hot in the citie of London, there was no tearme kept at Michaelmasse. To be short, the more citizens of London were this yeare plagued with a threefold plague, pestilence, scarsitie of monie, and dearth of vittels, the miserie whereof were to long here to write: no doubt the more remember it, the rich by flight into the countries made shift for themselues, &c.

King Philips proclamation at Bruxels.

Threefold plague to the more citizens of London.

An earthquake was in the moneth of September in diuerse places of this realme, specially in Lincolne & Northamptonshires. After the election of the maior of London by the councels letters, the quéns maiesties pleasure was signified vnto sir Thomas Lodge then maior, that forsomuch as the plague was so great in the citie, the new maior elected should kéepe no feast at the Guildhall, for doubt that thorough bringing together such a multitude, the infection might increase. For that wéke there died within the citie and out parishes, more than two thousand: wherefore sir John Whight, the new maior, toke his oth at the vttermost gate of the tower of London. From the first daie of December, till the twelfe, was such continuall lightning and thunder, especiallie the same twelfe daie at night, that the like had not béene séene nor heard by anie man then liuing.

An earthquake in diuerse places of England.

No maiors feast kept at the Guildhall.

Anno Reg. 6.

Lightning & thunder in December.

In the moneth of December was driuen on the shore at Grimsbie in Lincolnshire a monstrous fish, in length ninetéene yards, his taile fiftéene foot broad, and six yards betwéene his eies, twelue men stood vpright in his mouth to get the oile. For that the plague was not fullie ceassed in London, Hilarie tearme was kept at Hertford castell beside Ware. This yeare the thirtéenth of Aprill, an honorable and ioifull peace was concluded, betwixt the quéenes maiestie and the French king, their realmes dominions and subiects: and the same peace was proclamed with sound of trumpet, before hir maiestie in hir castell of Windsor, then being present the French ambassadors. And shortlie after, the quéenes grace sent the right honourable sir Henrie Carele lord of Hunnesdon, now lord chamberleine (of whose honourable and noble descent it is thus written

A monstrous fish driuen to shore.

1564

Terme kept at Hertford. Rich. Grafton.

A peace betwéene England and France.

The noble descent of the lord of Hunnesdon.

——cuius fuerat matertera pulchra Reginæ genitrix Henrici nobilis vxor) accompanied with the lord Strange, beside diuerse knights and gentlemen, vnto the French king, with the noble order of the garter, who finding him at the citie of Lions, being in those parties in progresse, he there presented vnto him the said noble order: and Garter king at armes inuested him therewith, obseruing the ceremonies in that behalfe due and requisit. The plague (thanks be to God) being cleane ceassed in London, both Easter and Midsummer tearmes were kept at Westminster. ¶ And here by the waie to note the infection of this plague to haue béene dispersed into other countries besides England, it is read in Schardius In epitome rerum gestarum sub Ferdinando primo imperatore, that the pestilence did so rage in Germanie, and poisoned such peopled places, namelie Norimberge, Francford, Magdburge, Danske, Hamburgh, and their borders, that by estimation (saith he) there died of that contagion to the number of three hundred thousand. A grieuous scourge of God (saith mine author) howbeit verie few thereby so terrified, that they reformed their wicked liues. Which plague in Germanie I therefore doo here repeat, bicause by all likelihoods it is to be gathered, that as it raged in the same yeare both there and here; so the cause maie be all one that bred so venemous an effect.]

A. F.

The plague in Germanie whereof three hundred thousand died.

There was on the vigill of S. Peter a watch in the citie of London, which did onelie stand in the highest streets of Cheape, Cornehill, and so forth to Algate: which watch was to the commons of the same citie as chargeable, as when in times past it had béene commendablie done. The first of August, the quénes maiestie in hir progresse came to the vniuersitie of Cambridge, and was of all the students (being inuested according to their degrées taken in the schooles) honourablie and ioifullie receiued in the Kings college, where she did lie during hir continuance in Cambridge. The daies of hir abode were passed in scholasticall exercises of philosophie, physicke, and diuinitie: the nights in comedies, and tragedies, set forth partlie by the whole vniuersitie, and partlie by the students of the Kings college, to recreat and delight hir maiestie, who both heard them attentiuelie, and beheld them chéerefullie.

Watch on S. Peters night.

Abraham Hartwell in regina literata.

The quénes progresse thorough Cambridge.

At the breaking vp of the diuinitie act, being on wednesdaie the ninth of August (on the which daie she rode thorough the towne, and viewed the colleges, those goodlie and ancient monuments of kings of England hir noble predecessors) she made within saint Maries church a notable oration in Latine, in the presence of the whole learned vniuersitie, to the students great comfort. ¶ A copie whereof I haue set downe, as I receiued it in writing at the hands of one that then was present, and noted the same as hir maiestie vttered it. Whose words vnto me in a letter, wherewith the same oration was sent, I doo here set downe Bona fide. This hir maiesties extemporall oration (saith he) lieng among my papers these twentie yeares and more, I thought good now to send to you, that if anie occasion be fitlie offered in the discourse of hir highnesse reigne, you maie (if you please) insert it. In truth, I my selfe neuer elsewhere read it, which hath made me euen religiouslie to preserue it. Master Abraham Hartwell in his Regina literata, dwelling vpon this onelie argument of hir comming and doings at Cambridge, glanceth in a distich or twaine at the effect hereof. But this is the thing it selfe, as I my selfe (as most vnworthie) being both an eare and also an eie witnesse, can testifie.

A. F.

Tho. Newton.

Serenissimæ reginæ Elisabethæ oratio, publicè Cantabrigiæ habita, coram vniuerso academiæ cœtu, anno 1564: & regni sui sexto.

ETsi fœminilis iste meus pudor (subditi fidelissimi & academia charissima) in tanta doctorum turba illaboratum hunc sermonem et orationem me narrare apud vos impediat: tamen nobilium virorũ intercessus & erga academiam beneuolẽtia me aliquid proferre inuitat. Duobus ad hanc rem stimulis moueor. Primus est, bonarum literarum propagatio: alter est, vestra omnium expecta-

Duo stimuli quibus mouebatur regia maiestas vt in Academicorum cœtu nonnihil eloqueretur.

tio. Quod ad propagationem spectat, vnum illud apud Demosthenem memini: Superiorum verba apud inferiores librorum locum habent, & principum dicta legum authoritatem apud subditos retinent. Hoc igitur vos omnes in memoria tenere velim: quòd semita nulla præstantior est, siue ad bona fortunæ acquirenda, siue ad principum gratiam conciliandam, quàm vt gnauiter (vt cæpistis) studijs vestris exhibeatis operam: quod vt faciatis, vos omnes oro obsecróque. De secundo stimulo, vestra nimirùm expectatione, hoc vnum dico, me nihil lubenter prætermissuram esse, quod vestræ de me animæ beneuolæ concipiunt cogitationes.

Regia maiestas pollicetur se aliquod monumentum in academia relicturam.

Iam ad academiam venio. Tempore antemeridiano vidi ego ædificia vestra sumptuosa, à meis maioribus, clarissimis principibus literarum causa extructa. Et inter videndum, dolor artus meos occupauit, atque ea mentis suspiria, quæ Alexandrum quondam tenuisse feruntur. Qui cum legisset multa à principibus posita monumenta, conuersus ad familiarem seu potiùs ad consiliarium, multùm doluit se nihil tale fecisse. Hæc tamen vulgaris sententia me aliquantùm recreauit, quæ etsi non auferre, tamen minuere potest dolorem. Quæ quidem sententia hæc est: Romam non vno ædificatam fuisse die: tamen non est ita senilis mea ætas, nec tam diu fuit, ex quo regnare cœpi, quin ante redditionem debiti naturæ (si non nimis citò Atropos lineam vitæ meæ amputauerit) aliquod opus faciam: & quandiu vita hos regit artus, nunquam à proposito deflectam.

Si non ante saltem post mortem profitetur se præstituram quod pollicetur.

Et si contingat (quàm citò futurum sit, nescio) me mori oportere, priusquam hoc ipsum quod polliceor complere possim: aliquod tamen egregium opus post mortem relinquam, quo & memoria mea in posterum celebris fiat, & alios excitem exemplo meo, & vos omnes alacriores faciam ad studia vestra. Sed iam videtis quantum interfit inter doctrinam lectam, & disciplinam animo non retentam. Quorum alterius sunt complures satis sufficientes testes: alterius autem vos omnes nimis quidem inconsyderatè testes hoc tempore effeci, quæ meo barbaro orationis genere tam diu doctas vestras aures detinuerim. Dixi.

Outcrier and Weiman for the daie.

The next daie, she went forward on hir progresse to Finchinbrooke by Huntington. The thirtith daie of August was enacted by a common councell of the citie of London, that all such citizens as from thence forth should be constreined to sell their houshold stuffe, leases of houses, or such like, should first cause the same to be cried through the citie by a man with a bell, and then to be sold by the common outcrier appointed for that purpose, and he to reteine one farthing vpon the shilling for his paines. The twentith of September arose great flouds in the riuer of Thames, where through the marshes néere adioining were ouerflowed, and manie cattell drowned.

Great flouds in the Thames.

Ex I.S. pa. 1123

Creation of a baron namelie sir Robert Dudleie baron of Denbigh.

¶ The creation of sir Robert Sutton alias Dudleie knight of the garter, and maister of the horsse, to the quœnes maiestie, who was created baron of Denbigh, and after earle of Leicester on Michaelmasse daie at saint James, with the gift of the manour of Killingworth, and other things there to him and his heires, to the yearlie value of foure and twentie pounds & better. First, the said lord attended on the quœnes highnesse, to the chappell, and from the chappell to seruice, and when he was returned to the chamber of presence, the said lord with other departed to the lord chamberleins chamber, and shifted them: the said lord Robert in his surcot with the hood, his mantle borne before him by the lord Hunsdon, and led by the lord Clinton lord admerall by the right hand, and the lord Strange on the left hand, in their parlement robes, Garter bearing the patent, & before him the officers of armes, and so proceeded into the chamber of presence, where the quœnes highnesse sat vnder the cloth of estate with the noblemen on eth side of hir, the ambassador of France was also present with another stranger an Italian.

The state attendance at this creation.

And when the said lord with the other came in the quœnes sight, they made their obeisance three times, the said lord knéeled downe: after the which Garter presented the letters patents to the lord chamberleine, and he presented the same to the quœnes highnesse, who gaue it to sir William Cecill secretarie, who read the same with a lowd voice, & at the words of Creauimus, the lord of Hunsdon presented the mantle to the quœns maiestie, who put on the same, wherby he was created baron of Denbigh for him and his heires. Then the patent was read out to the end, after the which he deliuered it to the quœne againe, and hir highnesse gaue it to the said lord, who gaue hir maiestie most humble thanks, and he rose vp and departed to the chamber they came from, the trumpets sounding before him.

The execution of the ceremonies & orders at this creatiõ

When he shifted him of those robes, and put on the robes of estate of an earle, and being led by the earle of Sussex on the right hand, and the erle of Huntington on his left hand, the earle of Warwike bearing his sword the pomell vpward, and the girdle about the same, all in their robes of estate, the lord Clinton lord admerall in his parlement robes, bearing his cap with the coronall, Garter before him bearing his patent, and the other officers of armes before him, they proceeded as afore into the chamber of presence, where, after they had made their obeisance, the said earle knéeled downe, and Garter deliuered his patent to the lord chamberleine, who gaue the same to the quœnes maiestie, & hir highnesse gaue the same to sir William Cecill secretarie to read, who read the same. And at the words Cincturam gladij, the earle of Warwike presented the sword to the quœnes highnesse, who girt the same about the necke of the said new earle, putting the point vnder his left arme, and after hir maiestie put on his cap with the coronall. Then his patent was read out to the end, and then the said secretarie deliuered it againe to the quœne, and hir highnesse gaue it to the said new erle of Leicester, who gaue hir humble thanks for it.

Creation of an earle, and namelie the earle of Leicester.

The quœne hir selfe girteth the sword and girdle about the earles necke.

And then he arose and went into the councell chamber to dinner, the trumpets sounding before, and at dinner he sat in his kirtle, and there accompanied him the foresaid ambassador of France, and the said Italian, with diuerse other erles and lords. And after the second course, Garter with the other officers of armes, proclamed the quœnes maiesties stile, and after, the stile of the said earle, for the which they had fifteene pounds, to wit, for his baronie fiue pounds, & for his earledome ten pounds, and Garter had his gowne of blacke veluet garded with three gards of the same, laid on with lace, lined through with blacke taffata, and garded on the inner side with the same, and on the sleeues eight and thirtie paire of aglets of gold. The earles stile was as followeth: Du tresnoble & puissant seigneur Robert conte de Leicestre, baron de Denbigh, chenalier du tresnoble ordre de la iarretierre, & grand esquier de la royne nostre souuereigne. On whose scutchion, conteining sundrie cotes, inuironed with the cognisances of both orders, as well S. Michaels as S. Georges, with other ornaments, were made these verses, now common to be read:

The officers fees fifteene pounds at this creation.

Quot clypeos atauûm clypeo coniungis in vno,
Tot tibi virtutes atauûm sunt pectore iunctæ:

In clypeum gentilitium comitis Leicestriæ.

Somerij

Somerij pietas, vis imperterrita Greij,
Intemerata fides Hastingi, nobile pectus
Ferrarij, Quinci probitas, bonitásque Boghani,
Martia Talbotti virtus, fidissima dextra
Beauchampi, Herculei mens inconcussa Guidonis,
Barklæi vigor, & generosa modestia Lisli.]

The second of October in the afternoone, and on the morrow in the forenoone, was a solemne obsequie at Paules church in London, for Ferdinando late emperor departed. ¶ Of this emperor it is said, that lieng sicke, and so sicke that Zichard a preacher of his court then present could not hold him vp: howbeit comming at last to himselfe and somewhat in recouerie, he said to the standers by; You thought that I would neuer come againe, naie mine houre is not so sone: I do certeinlie know that I shall not die before Whitsuntide. Now when he had liued till that date, and eight daies after, as hauing the verie time of his departure told him by secret reuelation, (and satisfied at full touching the request that Dauid made to God about the length of his life, saieng:

Da mihi nosse meæ quæ sint stata tempora vitæ, Et quando vltima sint fata futura mihi)

he said to them that were about him: It is the holie ghosts pleasure that I should not die before saint James tide, that as he was a pilgrime among vs, so I with him should passe my pilgrimage out of this my native countrie. After which words spoken, his disease grew to greater force and sharpnesse, insomuch that at last, euen at the verie time prefixed, namelie S. James daie, he departed this life, after he had liued sixtie yeares, nine moneths, and od daies. He gouerned the empire aboue the space of seauen yeares, & had to wife Anne quæne of Hungarie and Boheme, by whom he had fifteene children, some male; namelie, Maximilian, Ferdinand, John and Charles: also eleuen females; to wit, Elisabeth married to Sigismund king of Poland, Anne, Marie, Mawdline, Catharine, Elenor, Margarite, Barbare, Vrsule, Helen, and Jone. He is commended for his carefulnesse, his watchfulnesse, his bountifulnesse, his gentlenesse, his vprightnesse, his discretnesse, his peaceablenesse, and other qualities, wherin he had a kind of singularitie. And thus much of him by waie of praise, as I found it readie to my hand.]

Ex Schardio.

Ferdinand foretelleth the verie vttermost date of his owne death.

Lord let me know mine end and the number of my daies, that I may be certified how long I haue to liue.

The goodlie issue male and female that God gaue Ferdinand.

The seauenth of October at night, from eight a clocke till after nine of the clocke, all the north parts of the element seemed to be couered with flames of fire, proceeding from the northeast and northwest, toward the middest of the firmament, where after it had staied nigh one houre, it descended west: and all the same night (being the next after the change of the mone) seemed nigh as light as it had beene faire daie. The twentith of Nouember in the morning, through negligence of a maiden with a candell, the snuffe falling in an hundred pounds weight of gunpowder, three houses in Bucklersburie were sore shaken, and the maid died two daies after. The one and twentith of December began a frost, which continued so extremlie, that on Newyeares euen, people went ouer and alongst the Thames on the ise from London bridge to Westminster. Some plaied at the football as boldlie there, as if it had beene on the drie land: diuerse of the court being then at Westminster, shot dailie at picks set vpon the Thames: and the people both men and women went on the Thames in greater numbers, than in anie street of the citie of London. On the third daie of Januarie at night it began to thaw, and on the fift daie was no ise to be seene betweene London bridge and Lambeth, which sudden thaw caused great flods and high waters, that bare downe bridges and houses, and drowned manie people in England: especiallie in Yorkshire, Dwes bridge was borne awaie with others.

Fierie impressions.

Anno Reg. 7.

Houses shattered with gunpowder.

The Thames frozen ouer.

Dwes bridge borne downe.

The third daie of Februarie, Henrie Stuart lord Darleie, about the age of nineteene yeares, eldest sonne to Matthew earle of Lineur (who went into Scotland at Whitsuntide before) hauing obteined licence of the quænes maiestie, toke his iourneie towards Scotland, accompanied with fiue of his fathers men, where when he came, he was honorablie receiued, & lodged in the kings lodgings; and in the summer following, he maried Marie quæn of Scotland. About this time, for the quænes maiestie were chosen and sent commissioners to Bruges, the lord Montacute knight of the honourable order of the garter, doctor Wotton one of hir maiesties honourable councell, doctor Haddon one of the masters of requests to hir highnesse, with others: master doctor Aubreie was for the merchant aduenturers of England: they came to Bruges in Lent, Anno 1565, and continued there till Michaelmasse following, and then was the diet prolonged till March in the yeare 1566, and the commissioners returned into England.

Henrie Stuart married the quæne of Scots.

Commissioners chosen to go to Bruges

1565

The two and twentith of Aprill, the ladie Margarite countesse of Lineur, was commanded to keepe hir chamber at the Whitehall, where she remained till the two and twentith of June, and then conueied by sir Francis Knolles and the gard to the tower of London by water. On S. Peters euen at night, was the like standing watch in London, as had beene on the same night twelue moneths past. The sixteenth of Julie, about nine of the clocke at night began a tempest of lightning and thunder, with showers of haile, which continued till three of the clocke in the next morning, so terriblie, that at Chelmesford in Esser 500 acres of corne was destroied, the glasse windowes on the east side of the towne, and of the west and south sides of the church were beaten downe, with the tiles of their houses also, besides diuerse barnes, chimneis, and the battlements of the church, which was ouerthrowne. The like harme was doone in manie other places, as at Leeds, Cranebroke, Douer, &c.

Ladie Lineur sent to the tower.

Standing watch at at midsummer in London.

Tempest at Chelmesford of lightning thunder and raine.

Christopher prince and margraue of Baden, with Cicilie his wife sister to the king of Swethland, after a long and dangerous iournie, wherein they had trauelled almost eleuen months sailing from Stockholme, crossing the seas ouer into Liseland, from whence by land they came about by Poland, Prussie, Pomerland, Mechelburgh, Friseland, and so to Antwerpe in Brabant, then to Calis, at the last in September landed at Douer, and the eleuenth daie of the same they came to London, and were lodged at the earle of Bedfords place nere to Iuie bridge, where within foure daies after, that is to saie, the fifteenth of September she trauelled in childbed, and was deliuered of a man child: which child the last of September was christened in the quænes maiesties chappell of White hall at Westminster, the quænes maiestie in hir owne person being godmother, the archbishop of Canturburie, and the duke of Norfolke godfathers. At the christening the quæne gaue the child to name Edwardus Fortunatus: for that God had so gratiouslie assisted his mother, in so long and dangerous a iournie, and brought hir safe to land in that place, which she most desired, and that in so short time before hir deliuerance.

The margraue or marques of Bade and his wife great with child come to London.

She is deliuered of a child.

The quæne giueth the name.

The eleuenth of Nouember, the right honorable Ambrose earle of Warwike maried Anne eldest daughter to the earle of Bedford. For the honor and celebration of which noble mariage, a goodlie chalenge was made and obserued at Westminster at the tilt, each one six courses: at the tornrie twelue strokes with the sword, three pushes with the punchion staffe: and twelue blowes with the sword at barriers, or twentie ikante were so disposed. At ten of the clocke at night the same daie a valiant seruiceable man called Robert Thomas, maister gunner of England, desirous also to honour the feast and mariage daie (in consideration the said earle of Warwike was generall of the ordinance within hir maiesties realmes and dominions) made three great traines of chambers, which terriblie pealed forth the nature of their voice, to the great astonishment of diuerse, who at the firing of the second was vnhappilie slaine by a péece of one of the chambers, to the great sorow and lamentation of manie.

Marriage of the earle of Warwike.

Robert Thomas maister gunner slaine by casualtie.

Anno Reg. 8.

The foure and twentith of December in the morning, there rose a great storme and tempest of wind, by whose rage the Thames and seas ouerwhelmed manie persons, and the great gates at the west end of S. Paules church in London (betweene the which standeth the brasen piller) were through the force of the wind, then in the westerne part of the world, blowne open. In Januarie monsieur Rambulet a knight of the order in France was sent ouer into England, by the French king Charles the ninth of that name, with the order: who at Windsore was stalled in the behalfe of the said French king, with the knighthood of the most honorable order of the garter. And the foure and twentith of Januarie, in the chappell of hir maiesties palace of Whitehall, the said monsieur Rambulet inuested Thomas duke of Norfolke, and Robert earle of Leicester, with the said order of S. Michaell.

Paules gate blowen open.

Order of saint Michaell. 1566

The marquesse of Baden and the ladie Cicilie his wife, sister to the king of Swethen, who came into this land in the moneth of September last past (as before is declared) being then by the quéenes especiall appointment at their arriuall honorablie receiued by the lord Cobham, an honorable baron of this realme, and the ladie his wife one of the quéenes maiesties priuie chamber, now in the moneth of Aprill 1566 departed the realme againe, the marquesse a few daies before his wife, being both conducted by a like personage the lord of Aburgauennie to Douer. Certeine houses in Cornehill, being first purchased by the citizens of London, were in the moneth of Februarie cried by a belman, and afterward sold to such persons as should take them downe, and carie them from thence: which was so done in the moneths of Aprill and Maie next following. And then the ground being made plaine at the charges also of the cittie, possession thereof was by certeine aldermen in the name of the whole cittizens, giuen to the right worshipfull sir Thomas Gresham knight, agent to the quéenes highnesse, there to build a place for merchants to assemble in, at his owne proper charges: who on the seuenth daie of June laid the first stone of the foundation (being bricke) and forthwith the workemen followed vpon the same with such diligence, that by the moneth of November, in An. 1567. the same was couered with slate. The commissioners before named, appointed for the matters of Flanders, keeping their diet at Bruges, agreed to refer the whole matter to the princes on both sides: and if they could not agrée, then the merchants to haue fortie daies to repare home with their merchandize, and in the meane time all things to stand as they were then. Our commissioners departed from Bruges about the six and twentith of June.

The marquesse of Baden returneth into his owne countrie.

Ground for the Burse in Cornehill first purchased.

The first stone of the Burse laid.

The one and thirtith of August, the quéenes maiestie in hir progresse came to the vniuersitie of Oxford, and was of all the students, which had looked for hir comming thither two yeares, so honorablie and ioifullie receiued, as either their loialnesse towards the quéenes maiestie, or the expectation of their frends did require. Concerning orders in disputations and other academicall exercises, they agreed much with those which the vniuersitie of Cambridge had vsed two yeares before. Comedies also and tragedies were plaied in Christs church, where the quéenes highnesse lodged. Among the which the comedie intituled Palemon and Arcit, made by maister Edwards of the quéenes chappell, had such tragicall successe, as was lamentable. For at that time by the fall of a wall and a paire of staires, and great presse of the multitude three men were slaine.

The queenes progresse to Oxford.

Whitsontuns at Oxford at the playeng of a tragedie.

The fift of September after disputations, the quéene at the humble suit of certeine hir nobilitie, and the B. of Spaines ambassador, made a briefe oration in Latine to the vniuersitie; but so wise and pithie, as England may reioise that it hath so learned a prince, and the vniuersitie may triumph that they haue so noble a patronesse. The sixt of September after dinner, hir grace comming from Christs church ouer Carfor, and so to S. Maries, the scholers standing in order according to their degrees euen to the east gate, certeine doctors of the vniuersitie did ride before in their scarlet gownes and hoods, & maisters of art in blacke gownes and hoods. The maior also with certeine of his brethren did ride before hir in scarlet to the end of Magdalen bridge, where their liberties ended: but the doctors and maisters went forward still to Shotouer, a mile and more out of Oxford, bicause their liberties extended so far: and there after orations made, hir highnes with thanks to the whole vniuersitie bad them farewell, and rode to Ricote.

The quéene maketh an oration to the vniuersitie.

Souldiers transported into Ireland to vanquish Shane Oneil.

The valiant capteine Edward Randoll esquier, lieutenant of the ordinance, and colonell of a thousand footmen, in September last past was with his band imbarked at Bristow, and within few daies after landed at Knockfergus in the north parts of Ireland; and from thence by water to a place called Derrie, by which passeth the riuer Longfoile. There the said colonell in short space fortified, to the great annoiance of Shane Oneil, and by great foresight and experience garded himselfe and his charge, till the said Oneil (to hinder and disturbe his aboad there) the twelfe of November arriued with a great armie of kerne Galowglasses and horsemen, with whome the said capteine Randoll incountered, and him there so discomfited, as after that conflict he durst neuer approch the quéenes power. And to his perpetuall fame, the said capteine by reason of his bold and hardie onset, that daie lost his life. Charles Iames the first of that name, son to Henrie Stuart lord of Darnlete and Marie king & quéene of Scots was borne in Edenburgh castell, the nineteenth of June last past: and the eightenth of December this yeare solemnlie christened at Sterling, whose godfathers at the christening were Charles K. of France, and Philibert duke of Sauoie, and the quéenes maiestie of England was the godmother, who gaue a font of gold curiouslie wrought and inameled, waieng three hundred three and thirtie ounces, amounting in value to the sumine of 1043 pounds, nineteene shillings.

Yong prince of Scots christened.

Anno Reg. 9.

The tenth of Februarie in the morning, Henrie Stuart lord of Darnlete before named K. of Scots, by Scots in Scotland was shamefullie murthered, the reuenge whereof remaineth in the mightie hand of God. The two and twentith of Februarie, the ladie Margaret Dowglas countesse of Lineux, mother to the said king of Scots, was discharged out of the tower of London. Within the space of ten moneths last past died seuen aldermen of London, the first Edward Bankes deceassed the ninth of Julie, An. 1566: Richard Chamberleine late shiriffe, sir Martin Bowes, sir Richard Malloric, sir William Hewet, and sir Thomas White late maiors, then Richard Lambert one of the shiriffes for that yeare, the fourth

K. of Scots murthered. 1567

The countesse of Lineux deliuered out of the tower.

Seuen aldermen deceassed in London.

fourth of Aprill 1567. The like mortalitie to haue happened among them about a ten or eleuen yeares before, you shall read in the historie of quæne Marie, in the fourth yeare of hir reigne.

* See before pag. 1132.

The towne of Osseltrie burnt thrise in thirtie yeares.

The two and twentith of Aprill by great misfortune of fire in the towne of Osseltrie in Wales, twelue miles from Shrewsburie, to the number of two hundred houses, to wit, seuen score within the wals, and three score without in the suburbs, besides cloth, corne, cattell, &c: were consumed, which fire began at two of the clocke in the after none, and ended at foure, to the great maruell of manie, that so great a spoile in so short a time should happen. Two long streets with great riches in that towne was burnt in the yeare 1542: and likewise or worse in the yeare 1564. The foure and twentith of Aprill the sergeants feast was kept at Greis inne nere vnto Holborne, and there were at that time made seuen new sergeants of the law. The seuentæenth of Maie in the towne of Milnall in Suffolke eight miles from Newmarket, thirtie seuen houses besides barnes, stables, and such like were consumed with fire in the space of two houres.

Sergeants feast.

Milnal in Suffolke burnt.

Shane Oneil, who had most traitorously rebelled against the quænes maiestie in Ireland, and had done manie great outrages in the parts of Ulster, was this yeare with his great losse manfullie repelled from the siege of Dundalke by the garrison therof: and afterward through the great valiancie and foresight of sir Henrie Sidneie knight of the order, and lord deputie of Ireland, he was so discomfited in sundrie conflicts, with the losse of three thousand fiue hundred of his men, that now foreséeing his declination to be imminent, he determined to put a collar about his necke, and disguising himselfe, to repaire to the lord deputie, and penitentlie to requite his pardon to haue his life. But Neil Mackeuer his secretarie, who had incited him to this rebellion, persuaded him first to trie & treat the freendship of certeine wild Scots, that then laie incamped in Clan Iboie, vnder the conducting of Alexander Oge, and Mac Gilliam Buske, whose father and vncle Shane Oneil had latelie killed in an ouerthrow giuen to the Scots. Neuertheless he well liking this persuasion, went to the said campe the second of June, where after a dissembled interteinement, & quaffing of wine, Gilliam Buske burning with desire of reuenge for his fathers and vncles death, and ministring quarrelling talke, issued out of the tent, and made a fraie vpon Oneils men, and then gathering togither his Scots in a throng, suddenlie entred the tent againe, who there with their slaughter swords hewed in pèces Shane Oneil, his secretarie, and all his companie, except a verie few which escaped by flight.

Shane Oneil discomfited. Statuta regni Hiberniæ. Edm. Cãpian.

Shane Oneil mangled and hackt in pèces.

On saint Johns euen at night was the like standing watch in London, as had bæne on saint Peters euen in the yeare last before mentioned. This yeare the emperour Maximilian the second of that name, being elected into the most honourable order of the garter, the right honourable Thomas earle of Sussex, &c: knight of the same most noble order, was appointed by the quænes maiestie to go vnto the said emperour, with the said order of the garter, according to his said election. Who being honorablie accompanied with the lord North, sir Thomas Wildmaie knight, Henrie Cobham esquier, one of the pensioners, and others, departed from London the fiue and twentith of June 1567, vnto Douer, and there imbarked, landed at Calis, and his traine at Dunkirke, and so passed through the low countries to Antwerpe in Brabant, where he was honourablie receiued by the English merchants and others, and being there went to visit madame de Parma, regent of the said countries, then resident within the same towne.

Standing watch at midsummer maintemed in London.

The emperor Maximilian inuested into the order of the garter.

The earle of Sussex visiteth madame de Parma.

From thence he passed vnto Colen, where as his lordship and traine mounted the riuer of Rhene, & by sundrie continuall dailes iourneies passed by the citie of Ments or Magunce, vnto Oppenham, & there taking his waie by land, passed through the countrie by the cities of Wormes and Spires till he came to Ulmes, standing on the riuer of Danow, where hee arriued the one and twentith of Julie: and the three and twentith his lordship rode in post to Auspurge, called in Latine Augusta Vindelicorum, nine Dutch miles from Ulmes. From thence he departed the fiue and twentith of Julie, and met with his traine at Donwert, being come thither vpon flotes downe by the said riuer of Danow. From thence he kept vpon his iourneie by Ingolstat, Reinspurge, in Latine Ratisbona, by Passaw and other townes, till hee came to Linz, where his lordship staied the first, second and third of August, by reason of the high waters.

The iournies of the earle of Sussex during his abode beyond the seas.

And departing from thence on the fourth of August, he passed by Stoan & Cremz, by the said riuer of Danow, and so arriued at the citie of Vienna the fift of August in this foresaid yeare 1567, where hee was receiued of the lord Smeckouites, hauing twelue horsses readie with their footclothes for his lordship, and the most respected of his traine, and so brought him to the presence of the emperour, at that present within his castell there in that citie, by whom he was right honourablie receiued, and afterwards conducted to his assigned lodging, where as all prouision was prepared and made at the emperours charges. Here his lordship continued till the fourtéenth of Januarie. In which meane time the emperour verie often (as time serued) had the said earle forth with him, vnto such pastimes of hunting the hart, boare, and such like, as the plentifulnesse of that countrie yéeldeth. Moreouer, during the time of his lordships abode there at Vienna, Charles archduke of Austria and Carinth arriued in that citie, whom my lord went to salute.

The emperor interteineth the earle of Sussex.

Charles duke of Austria & the earle of Sussex salute each other.

After this, vpon the quænes maiesties letters brought out of England by maister Henrie Brooke, alias Cobham, one of hir gentlemen pensioners, the said earle of Sussex vpon sundaie the fourth of Januarie in the after none, presented and deliuered vnto the emperours maiestie in his chamber of presence, the habiliments and ornaments of the most noble order of the garter, sir Gilbert Dethike knight alias Garter, principall king of armes, and officer for the said order, and William Dethike then Rougecrosse, also officer of armes, giuing their attendance in their cotes of armes. And the emperour at his inuesture of the said habiliments, gaue vnto the said Garter his short gowne and vnder garment, furred throughout with luzerns, and then proceeded thence into a great chamber, adorned in forme of a chapell, where as all the other ceremonies belonging vnto the said noble order were obserued and accomplished. And the same night the said earle supped with the emperours maiestie, both being in their robes of the said order.

1568

Now shortlie after, his lordship with certeine of his companie taking leaue of the emperour, departed from Vienna the fourtéenth of Januarie aforesaid vnto Newstat, and so through the countrie of Stire vnto Gratz the chiefe citie of Carinth, where he tooke also leaue of the said archduke Charles: and from thence returning, passed those parts of the Alpes vnto Saltzburgh, where he met with the other part of his traine, and so by continuing iourneies came againe into England to the quænes maiestie towards the latter end of March. After a drie summer followed an extreme sharpe winter, namelie the latter latter part therof, with such great scarsitie of fodder and haie, that in diuerse places the same was sold by weight, as in Yorkeshire, and in the Peake of Darbishire, where a stone of haie was sold for fiue pence. There followed also a great death of cattell, namelie of horsse and sheepe.

The earle of Sussex departeth from Vienna, &c.

John Stow. Anno Reg. 10. A sharpe winter following a drie summer.

Rich. Grafton. The quænes ships sent forth into the narrow seas.

This yeare in the moneth of Januarie, the quæns maiestie sent into the narrow seas three of hir ships, and one barke named the Anthelop, the Swallow, the Aid, and the Phenix, the which were manned with fiue hundred men. And hir highnesse appointed the charge of the said ships and men to hir trustie seruant William Holstocke of London esquier, comptroller of hir highnesse ships, who had commandement to staie the subiects of king Philip. And according to his dutie he vsed such diligence, as one hauing care vnto his charge, in garding as well the French as the English coasts, did the eleuenth date of March next following meet with eleuen saile of Flemmish hoies open vpon Bullongne, which came from Rone, and had in them foure hundred and od tuns of Gascoigne and French wines, which they intended to haue caried into Flanders: but the said Holstocke staid all the said eleuen hoies, and sent them to London, where they made their discharge, and the Flemmings disappointed of those wines.

Eleuen saile of Flemish hoies laden with wines surprised by admerall Holstocke.

Moreouer the eight and twentith daie of the foresaid moneth of March, the said William Holstocke serning in the Anthelop (at that present admerall) and in his compante being William Winter the yonger (at that time his viceadmerall) seruing in the Aid, and John Basing capteine of the Swallow, and Thomas Gouarlie capteine of the Phenix met in the narrow seas with foure tenne saile of great hulkes, which were come out of Portugall, and bound to Flanders: their chiefe lading being Portugall salt, and yet had good store of Spanish roials of plate, and also of good spices. The which fourteene hulkes did maintaine their fight for the space of two houres. And after that they did perceiue that they could not preuaile, hauing talked of the ordinance of the quens ships to their great hurt, as well in slaughter of their men, as also in spoile of their ships, the said Holstock and his companie toke eight of the said hulks, whereof sir were sent into the riuer of Thames. And the admerall and viceadmerall in the said hulks being two great ships (which the said Holstocke himselfe did take) were caried vnto Harwich, and there discharged.

Six Spanish hulks laden with diuerse things taken by the English.

The eightenth of March, through vehement rage and tempest of winds, manie vessels on the Thames with two tiltbotes before Grauesend, were sunke and drowned. The sir and twentith of June, deceased Thomas Yong archbishop of Yorke, at the manour of Sheffield, and was honourablie buried at Yorke.

John Stow. Great winds.

Archbishop of Yorke deceased.

The eleuenth of October were taken in Suffolke at Downam bridge, neere vnto Ipswich seuentene monstrous fishes, some of them conteining seuen and twentie foot in length, the other foure and twentie, or one and twentie foot at the least.

Monstrous fishes.

At the costs and charges of the citizens of London, a new conduit was built at Walbrooke corner neere to Dowgate, which was finished in the moneth of October, the water whereof is conueied out of the Thames.

New conduit at Walbrooke.

Anno Reg. 11. 1569

The seuen and twentith of Januarie, Philip Pestrell a Frenchman, and two Englishmen were drawne from Newgate to Tiburne, and there hanged, the Frenchman quartered, who had coined gold counterfeit; the Englishmen the one had clipped siluer, the other cast testons of tin. The eight and twentith of March, the pensioners well appointed in armor on horsbacke, mustered before the queenes maiestie in Hide parke beside Westminster. A great lotterie being holden at London in Poules church yard at the west dore, was begun to be drawne the eleuenth of Januarie, and continued date and night till the sixt of Maie, wherein the said drawing was fullie ended. Sir Thomas Ro lord maior of London, caused to be inclosed with a wall of bricke nigh one acre of ground, neere vnto Bedlem without Bishops gate, to be a place of buriall for the dead of such parishes in London as lacked conuenient ground within their said parishes.

2 Frenchmã & two Englishmen executed.

Muster of pensioners.

A lotterie at London.

Buriall for the dead prepared by sir Thomas Ro called ỹ New churchyard.

¶ On the southside whereof, ouer a folding gate this inscription is grauen in stone in great letters: Thomas Ro miles, cùm prætor esset Londinensis, hunc locum Reipublicæ, in vsum publicæ sepulturæ communem, suo sumptu dedicauit: Anno Domini 1569. Which writing I haue here recorded, for that in viewing the same, I saw some of the letters defaced and vtterlie made awaie: which in time might likewise befall to the residue, and so the memorie of the gentleman there fixed to so good an end vanish and die. He also of a godlie motion builded a conuenient rome in Pauls churchyard, on the southside of the crosse, to receiue a certeine number of hearers at the sermon time: as may appeare by some remembrances of his name there fixed. Howbeit, this gentleman thus well disposed, and like inough to haue proceeded in more such godlie actions, was called out of this life the next yeare immediatlie following, forgoing all the pompe of this life, with no lesse good will, than he was forward by death to passe to eternall rest. His bodie was buried in Hacknie church, in the southside of the chancell, where (besides a monument of himselfe and his wife) this epitaph remaineth to be read in faire great letters, as followeth:

A. F.

The inscription or writing ouer the south gate of the new churchyard.

An. 1570. Septemb. 2.

Sir Thomas Ro lieth buried heare,
Of London knight and alderman,
Who late was maior and rule did beare,
To right the cause of euerie man:
A merchant venturer was he,
Of merchant tailors companie:
A citizen by birth also,
And eke his wife dame Marie Ro.
In wedlocke one and thirtie yeare,
They did continue man and wife,
Eleuen children she did beare,
But fiue of them haue left this life:
And six aliue doo yet remaine,
Foure of them sons and daughters twaine;
His soule with God we hope is blest,
And doth remaine in Abrams brest.

The death of sir Thomas Ro knight and lord maior of London.

The epitaph of sir Thomas Ro, wherein his issue male and female is conteined.

A standing watch on S. Johns euen at Midsummer, and sir John White alderman rode the circuit, as the lord maior should haue done. The seuen and twentith of August, Andrew Gregorewich Sauin, ambassador from Muscouie, landed at the tower wharfe, and was there receiued by the lord maior of London, the aldermen and shirifes in scarlet, with the merchants aduenturers in cotes of blacke velvet, all on horssebacke, who conueied him riding through the citie to the Muscouie house in Seding lane, there to be lodged. The plague of pestilence somewhat raging in the citie of London, Michaelmas terme was first adiourned vnto the third of Nouember, and after to Hilarie terme next following. The eleuenth of October, Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke was brought from Burnam beside Windsore by land to Westminster, and from thence by water to the tower of London prisoner; sir Henrie Neuill being his keeper. This yeare the lord maior of London went by water to Westminster, and there toke his oth, as hath beene accustomed, but kept no feast at the Guildhall, least through comming together of so great a multitude, infection of the pestilence might haue increased. That woorke from Ambassadors from Muscouie land at tower wharfe.

Terme adiourned.

Duke of Norffolke sent to the tower.

No maiors feast at Guildhall.

from the one and twentith vnto the eight and twentith of October, there died in the citie and out parthes of all diseases one hundred fiftie and two, of the which, one and fiftie were accounted to die of the plague.

The earle of Northumberland and westmerland rebelled.

On thursdaie the ninth of Nouember, Thomas Persie erle of Northumberland receiued the queens maiesties letters to repaire to the court. And the same night, other conspirators perceiuing him to be wauering and vnconstant of promise made to them, caused a seruant of his, called Beckwith (after he was laid in his bed) to bustle in, and to knocke at his chamber doore, willing him in hast to arise, and shift for himselfe, for that his enimies (whome he termed to be sir Oswold Wilstrop, and maister Vaughan) were about the parke, and had beset him with great numbers of men. Wherevpon he arose, & conueied himselfe awaie to his keepers house. In the same instant they caused the bels of the towne to be rong backeward, and so raised as manie as they could to their purpose. The next night the earle departed thense to Branspith, where he met with Charls earle of Westmerland, and the other confederats. Then by sundrie proclamations, they abusing manie of the queens subiects, commanded them in hir highnesse name, to repaire to them in warlike maner, for the defense and suertie of hir maiesties person; sometimes affirming their doings to be with the aduise and consent of the nobilitie of this realme, who in deed were wholie bent (as manifestlie appeared) to spend their liues in dutifull obedience, against them and all other traitors, sometimes pretending for conscience sake to seeke to reforme religion: sometimes declaring that they were driuen to take this matter in hand, least otherwise forren princes might take it vpon them, to the great perill of this realme.

The earles abuse the queene and hir subiects.

Upon mondaie the thirteenth of Nouember, they went to Durham with their banners displaied. And to get the more credit among the fauorers of the old Romish religion, they had a crosse with a banner of the fiue wounds borne before them, sometime by old Norton, sometime by others. As sone as they entred Durham, they went to the minster, where they tare the bible, communion bookes, & other such as were there. The same night they went againe to Branspith. The fourteenth date of the same moneth, they went to Darington, and there had masse, which the earles and the rest heard with such lewd deuotion as they had. Then they sent their horssemen, to gather togither such numbers of men as they could. The fifteenth daie the earles parted; he of Northumbeland to Richmond, then to Northallerton, & so to Borowbridge; & he of Westmerland to Ripon, & after to Borowbridge, where they both met againe. On the eightenth daie they went to Wetherbie, and there tarted three or foure daies, and vpon Clifford more, nigh vnto Bramham more, they mustred themselues, at which time they were about two thousand horssemen, and fiue thousand footmen, which was the greatest number that euer they were. From which they intended to haue marched toward Yorke, but their minds being suddenlie altered, they returned.

Rebels rent the bible, communion bookes and behaue themselues like Spanish dozes.

Anno Reg. 12.

The number of rebels 2000 horssemen, and 5000 footmen.

The three and twentith of Nouember, they besieged Bernards castell, which castell was valiantlie defended by sir George Bowes, and Robert Bowes his brother, the space of eleuen daies, and then deliuered with composition to depart with armor, munition, bag and baggage. In which time the queens maiestie caused the said earles of Northumberland & Westmerland to be proclamed traitors, with all their adherents and fauourers, the foure and twentith of Nouember. The lord Scrope warden of the west marches, calling vnto him the earle of Cumberland and other gentlemen of the countrie, kept the citie of Carleill. The earle of Sussex the queens lieutenant generall in the north, published there the like proclamations (in effect) as had beene published by hir maiestie against the said rebels, and also sent out to all such gentlemen as he knew to be hir maiesties louing subiects vnder his rule, who came vnto him with such numbers of their friends, as he was able in fiue daies to make aboue fiue thousand horssemen and footmen. And so being accompanied with the erle of Rutland his lieutenant, the lord Hunsdon generall of the horssemen, sir Rafe Sadler treasuror, the lord William Euers, that was after appointed to lead the reareward, and diuerse other, that with their tenants and seruants were come to him, remaining as then within the citie of Yorke: he set forward from thense the fift of December being sundaie, and marched with his power which he had thus got togither towards the enimies.

Bernards castell besieged and defended.

The earles proclamed traitors.

The earle of Sussex went against the rebels.

The earle of Rutland and the lord Hunsdon, with others against the rebels.

Sir George Bowes hauing surrendred Bernards castell (as before ye haue heard) met the earle of Sussex thus marching forward with his armie at Sisate, from whence they kept forward to Northallerton: and resting two nights there, they marched on to Crostbridge, then to Akle, and so to Durham, and after to Newcastell. And the twentith of December they came to Yeram, from whence the rebels were gone the night before to Naworth, where they counselled with Edward Dacres concerning their owne weakenesse, & also how they were not onlie pursued by the earle of Sussex & others with him, hauing a power with them of seuen thousand men, being almost at their heeles; but also by the earle of Warwike, and the lord Clinton, high admerall of England with a far greater armie of twelue thousand men, raised by the queens maiesties commissioners out of the south and middle parts of the relme. In which armie beside the earle of Warwike, & the lord admerall, cheefe gouernors in the same, there was also Walter Deuereux vicount Hereford high marshall of the field, with the lord Willoughbie of Perham, maister Charles Howard, now lord Howard of Effingham, generall of the horssemen vnder the earle of Warwike, yong Henrie Knols eldest sonne to sir Francis Knols, his lieutenant, Edward Horsete capteine of the ile of Wight, with fiue hundred harquebusiers out of the same Ile, and capteine Leighton with other fiue hundred harquebusiers Londoners, and manie other worthie gentlemen and valiant capteins.

The rebels and Edward Dacres consult about their weakenesse.

The earle of Warwike and the lord admerall Clinton, sent against the rebels.

The comming forward of these forces caused the rebels so much to quaile in courage, that they durst not abide to trie the matter with dint of sword. For whereas the earle of Warwike, and the lord admerall, being aduanced forward to Darington, ment the next daie to haue sent Robert Glouer then Portculeis, and now Summerset herald (who in his iourneie attended on the lord admerall, as Norreie king of armes did vpon the earle of Warwike) vnto the rebels, vpon such message as for the time and state of things was thought conuenient: the same night aduertisements came from the earle of Sussex vnto the earle of Warwike, and to the lord admerall, that the two earles of Northumberland and Westmerland were fled, as the truth was they were indeed, first from Durham, whither the said Glouer should haue beene sent vnto them: and now vpon the earle of Sussex his comming vnto Erham, they shranke quite awaie, and fled into Scotland, without bidding their companie farewell. The earle of Warwike and his power marched on to Durham. But the earle of Sussex pursuing those other rebels that had not

The rebels dare not stand to the triall of battell.

The earles of Northumberland & Westmerland flie into Scotland.

not meane to flée out of the realme, apprehended no small number of them at his pleasure, without finding anie resistance among them at all.

1570 Rebeiles executed at Durham.

The fourth and fift of Januarie did suffer at Durham to the number of three score and six, constables and others, amongst whome the alderman of the towne and a priest called parson Plomtrée were the most notable. Then sir george Bowes being made marshall, finding manie to be sautors in the foresaid rebellion, did sée them executed in diuerse places of the countrie. The one and twentith of Januarie a prentise of London was hanged on a gibet at the north end of Finch lane in London (to the example of others) for that he the thirteenth of December had striken his maister with a knife whereof he died.

A prentise hanged in London for killing his maister.

Rich. Grafton. Lord Leonard Dacres rebelleth.

About the later end of Januarie, Leonard Dacres of Harlesele began to rebell, and procured the people of the north parts to assist him: so that he raised to the number of three thousand men. Of whose attempts when the lord Hunsdon lord warden of the east marches, and gouernor of Berwike heard, he prepared to go against him: and hauing with him sir John Forster lord warden of the middle marches, they set forward towards the place where they thought they should find him. They had with them 300 chosen soldiors of the garrison of Berwike, and twelue hundred borderers, and other of the garrisons there about the borders: so that they were in all fiftéene hundred footmen and horsemen. They marching therewith forth approched nére to a towne and castell called Naworth, which was in the kéeping of the said Leonard Dacres. And vpon a more, through the middle whereof a litle riuer called Chelt hath his course, the said Leonard Dacres the two and twentith of Februarie was readie with his power in order of battell, ranged & set in arrais after the forme of a triangle, compassed and inuironed about with horsemen. And now vpon the lord Hunsdons approch, the said Dacres with great and stout courage gaue an hardie onset vpon the said lord Hunsdon and his companie, nére vnto the foresaid riuer.

The lord Dacres readie with his power to set vpon the lord of Hunsdon.

The fight was sharpe and cruell, and the euent verie doubtfull for a while: the rebels were so stiffelie bent to do their vttermost indeuor in defense of their wicked quarrell. There were amongst them manie desperat women that gaue the aduenture of their liues, and fought right stoutlie. Manie therfore were slaine on both sides, to the number at the least of three hundred persons. But such was the forward valiancie of the lord Hunsdon, that his people incoraged by his example (whome they might see so noblie acquit himselfe, in aduenturing so farre as anie other of the whole troope) behaued themselues in such manfull wise, that the victorie in the end fell to him and his companie: and the said Leonard Dacres was forced to flée from his séelie slaine and miserable people, taking his waie into Scotland, so fast as his horsse might beare him. Captaine Reade and the other captains and soldiors of Berwike bare themselues right valiantlie, and shewed proofe of their skill and hardie manhood in this skirmish. After the which these holds and castels were taken and deliuered vnto the said lord Hunsdon: Nawoth which was committed vnto the képing of maister Scrope, Kelkwod, Greistocke and Rockleie, which were deliuered to the képing of diuerse of the duke of Norfolks officers.

Stout women among the rebels.

Leonard Dacres put to flight taketh his waie into Scotland.

On good fridaie the seauen and twentith of March Simon Digbie of Askue, John Fulthorpe of Isilbecke in the countie of Yorke esquiers, Robert Peneman of Stokesleie, Thomas Bishop the yonger of Poklinton in the same countie of Yorke, gentlemen, were drawne from the castell of Yorke to the place of execution called Knaues mire, halfe a mile without the citie of Yorke, and there hanged, headed, and quartered; their foure heads were set on foure principall gates of the citie, with foure of their quarters; the other in diuerse places of the countrie. Miclope Clesbe was with them drawne to the gallows, and returned againe to the castell. William earle of Penbroke baron of Cardiffe, knight of the garter, one of the priuie councell, and lord steward of the quénes maiesties household, deceased the eightéenth of Aprill, and was buried in saint Paules church at London. ¶ This noble man liued in great credit and estimation with king Henrie the eight, king Edward the first, quéne Marie, and quéne Elisabeth, and was by euerie of the said princes imploied in matters of great importance: and for his good and faithfull seruice greatlie honored, as apéereth in an epitaph fixed vpon his tome in the cathedrall church of saint Paule in London, which I thought good here to late downe.

John Stow. Rebelles executed at Yorke.

Knaues mire.

The earle of Penbroke deceased.

D. Powell in hist. Camb. pag. 399.

Perpetuæ pietati sacrum.

Gvlielmo Herberto Penbrochiæ comiti, equiti aurato prænobilis ordinis Anglici: Hen. viij. R. A cubiculis: Edoard. vi. R. equitum magistro: Walliæ præsidi. Tumultu occidentali cum Russello & Graio baronibus paribus auspicys summæ rerum præposito: Mariæ R. contra perduelles, ac expeditione ad Augustam Veromanduorum bis, totius exercitus duci: bis summo in agro Caletum, limitum præfecto: Elisab. R. officiorum seu Magno Regiæ magistro. Pariter & Dominæ Annæ ex vetusta Parrorum gente oriundæ, Sorori Catharinæ R. Henr. viij. R. vi. matrimonio coniunctæ, ac Marchionis Northamptonij: Prudentiss. fœminæ, pietatis, religionis, probitatis omnisque auitæ virtutis retinentiss. fidiss. Comitis coniugi: Henr. F. ac comes, Pp. chariss. sibi ac suis mœrens. P.

Obijt { ætatis / salutis } Ann. { 63. / 1569. } Liberis relictis exprimis. Henrico Pemb. Comite. Edoardo equite Aurato. Domina Anna Baroni Talbot nupta. } Secunda coniuge superstite, Georgio Salopiæ comite genita, insigni præter antiquum probitatis decus, virtute fœmina.]

The earle of Sussex, in reuenge of the euill demeanor of the Scots inhabiting nére to the English marches, as well in receiuing and succouring diuerse of the English rebels, as other naughtie practises, assembled such forces as he thought expedient in the night that followed the seauen and twentith of April, and hauing with him the lord Hunnesdon gouernour of Berwike and lord warden of the east marches, sir William Drurie marshall of the said armie and towne of Berwike, came to Warke, being twelue miles distant from the said towne of Berwike: & then the next daie being the eightéenth of the same moneth, they entered into Tiuidall in Scotland, where marching in warlike order, they burned, ouerthrew, wasted and spoiled all the castels, townes and villages, as they passed, till they came to a tower called the Holle tower, standing in a marish, and belonging to the lard of Buclewgh, which likewise was rased, ouerthrowne and burned: and so marching forward, wasted the whole countrie before them, vntill they came to a great towne called Crauling.

The earle of Sussex inuadeth Scotland.

The Holle tower.

The same daie sir John Forster warden of the middle marches, with all the garrisons and forces of the same, entered likewise into Tiuidall at Espelgate, distant sixteene miles from Warke, where in like order they burned and spoiled the countrie before them, till they came to a castell in the possession of Sir John Forster with his companie enter into Tiuidall.

of the lard of Fernitherst, being parcell of hir sons lands, which likewise was ouerthrowne, rased, and burned, with all other castels, piles, townes, and villages, all alongst the said countrie, till they came to Crauling, joining there with the lord lieutenants power. This towne was likewise burned and spoiled. Thus they passed the riuer of Tiuet, rasing, burning and spoiling the castels, piles, stone houses, townes, and villages alongst that riuer, vntill they came to Jedworth, where they lodged for that night, and were of the magistrats of that towne courteoullie receiued, who had made indifferent good prouision for the armie, both of vittels for men, and of haie and prouender for horsses. Whereupon proclamation was publikelie made in the name of the lord lieutenant, that no Englishman (vpon paine of death) should disturbe or wrongfullie take awaie anie thing from anie of the inhabitants of the same towne, without disbursing readie monie therefore. Which thing did so much content the Scots, that the next daie the lard of Selford, warden of the middle marches of Scotland, with all the principals of his alies and kinred, came in to the lord lieutenant, submitting themselues to him, and were receiued into assurance: for that neither he nor anie of them had at anie time receiued the English rebels, neither aided nor assisted them, neither yet made anie inuasion into England. And whereas some of their men, and tenants, without their knowledge had trespassed in such behalfe, they were contented to abide and stand vnto the erle of Sussex his order, for their said men and tenants. And herevpon neither they nor anie of theirs receiued anie hurt: but by his lordships commandement were preserued from sustaining anie damage either in bodie or goods: so glad he was of their submission, and no lesse glad to giue them occasion to be carefull in performance of obedience. Vnto which compassion God (no doubt) had inclined the noble mans hart, according to the poet words in this sense verie true:

They come to Jedworth and are interteined.

The lard of Selford with the principals of his alies submit themselues.

——mollia pectora reddit
Ad pietatis opus, flammis vt cera liquescens
In varias formas fictoris ducitur arte.

The nineteenth daie, the armie was diuided into two seuerall parts, whereof one passing ouer the riuer of Tiuet, burned the castell of Fernitherst, vtterlie spoiling the same, and all other castels & townes that belonged to the lards of Fernitherst, Hunthill, and Bedroll, and so passed to Minto, where both the armies meeting, joined togither againe, being not past a foure miles from Howike, whither they marched directlie, intending to lodge there that night, because the bailiffes of the towne had offered to receiue the whole armie, and to make prouision for the soldiours of all things necessarie, they paieng readie monie for the same, and the inhabitants to be assured not to be hurt in bodie or goods, as was promised. But the Scots breaking the couenant before the comming thither of the armie, had vncouered their houses, carried the thatch into the streets, and there set it on fire: and this done they fled their waies with most part of their goods. So that when the armie approched, there was such a thicke smoke, that no man might scarselie enter the towne: and so for that night the soldiours suffered great lacke of vittels, lodging, and prouision, as well for themselues as their horsses. But the fire which the Scots had of a malicious purpose and subtiltie thus begun, was by the diligent industrie of the Englishmen so increased: that both the thatch and timber of the whole towne was consumed to ashes, a stone house perteining to the lard of Drumlanerike onlie excepted, wherein the lord lieutenant late that night. And bicause the said Drumlanerike was a friend assured, the said house was spared, with all the goods and corne therein, whereof there was great plentie.

The castell of Fernitherst burned.

It Minto both the armies met.

The Scots of Howike their breach of couenant.

Why the lord of Drumlanerikes goods were saued from the fire, &c.

The twentith of Aprill, the armie marched toward a faire proper house, belonging to the lard of Buclewgh, which was blowne vp with powder and vtterlie ruinated. Here the armie was againe diuided as before by the said lord lieutenant his appointment, and marching by north the riuer of Tiuet towards England, they burnt and spoiled all such castels, piles, townes and villages, as were belonging to the said lards of Fernitherst and Buclewgh their kinsmen, alies, and adherents, & came that night againe to Jedworth, and there lodged. The one and twentith of Aprill, the armie diuiding it selfe againe, the one part vnder the leading of the marshall sir William Drurie, passed to the riuer of Bowbent, and there Tiuidale and Riddesdale men meeting him, all on both sides that riuer was burnt and spoiled. The other part of the armie marching by the riuer of Taile, wasted and burnt in like maner there all that was found on both sides that riuer, belonging wholie to the lard of Buclewgh, his kinsmen, alies and adherents.

In house of the lard of Buclewghs blowne vp with powder.

Nothing but wast & spoile by fire and sword.

This done, they returned againe nere to Kelseie, where the lord lieutenant lodged for that night, meaning to haue besieged Hume castell. For the accomplishment whereof, the same night the lord of Hunnesdon and his companie went to Warke, to bring from thence the daie next following the great artillerie. But bicause the cariage horsses were returned to Barwike, this could not be brought to passe, & so the lord lieutenant with the whole armie returning into England the two & twentith of Aprill, came that night to Barwike. In this iourneie there were rased, ouerthrowne and spoiled, aboue fiftie castels and piles, and more than three hundred townes and villages: so that there were verie few in Tiuidale and those parties there abouts, which had either receiued the English rebels, or by inuasion indamaged the English borders, and good subiects inhabiting vpon the same, that had left to them either castell, pile or house, for themselues, their frends, or tenants, beside the great losse of goods which were wasted, taken awaie or consumed by this armie vnder the lord lieutenant.

The lord lieutenants purpose to besiege Hume castell.

what castels & piles were ouerthrowne and spoiled in this voiage.

Now in the meane while that he with his power thus afflicted the aduersaries on that side, the lord Scrope warden of the west marches the eightenth of Aprill entered Scotland on that side, with such forces as he had assembled. And the first night they incamped at Eglesham, and in the morning at the dislodging of the campe, that towne was burnt; and passing forward through the countrie, they burnt and spoiled diuerse other townes, almost till they came to Dunfrise, and had diuerse conflicts with the enimies, gaue them sundrie ouerthrowes, tooke manie of them prisoners. And hauing accomplished his purpose, to his high praise and commendation, his lordship returned in safetie with his people into England; hauing burnt in that iourneie these places following: Hoddon, Trailebrow, old Cockpole, Sherington, Blackeshaw, Banke end, Rowell, Logher wood, Bride kirke, and others. During these inuasions thus made into Scotland in that season, the marches of England were so stronglie garded in all places by the lord Euers, sir George Bowes, and others; that the Scots durst not so much as once offer to make anie inuasion: so that in absence of the armies, there was not so much as an house burnt, or a cow driuen out of the English borders.

The lord Scrope with his power.

The marches of England garded against the enimie.

The six and twentith of Aprill, the earle of Sussex lord lieutenant, accompanied with the foresaid lord of Hunnesdon, master Drurie, and diuers other capteins and souldiours, to the number of three thousand or thereabouts, set from Barwike about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone towards Warke, where they arriued about nine of the clocke in the night: and continuing there till the next morning, in the meane time he put things in order necessarie for the assieging of Hume castell, the winning whereof his lordship seemed to haue vowed. About the breake of the date he sent forth master Drurie, with certeine horsemen and shot before, to inuiron that castell, and to chuse there such a plot of ground, where he might incampe best in safetie frō the shot of the same. Which the said master Drurie accordinglie performed, and there remained till the comming of the said lord lieutenant with the armie; who setting forward the footbands, cariage, and ordinance, made hast to follow. But yet yer he could passe the riuer of Twéed, and set ouer all the men, ordinance and carriage, it was almost ten of the clocke. Héere at this riuer, the lord lieutenant caused all the horssemen to stale and to take ouer the footmen.

Clocke

The marshall sent before to Hume castell.

The order taken by the earle of Sussex for the safetie of the armie.

This done, with good circumspection he appointed the demilances and other horssemen to remaine behind in the rereward, and put the footmen in the battell, for the more safegard of themselues, the ordinance and cariages. Then his lordship himselfe with his owne standard, and the lord of Hunnesdons guidon, marched forward towards Hume castell, commanding the rest of the armie with the ordinance to follow after, and so about one of the clocke in the afternoone, he came before the castell: out of the which the enimies shot at his standard verie hotlie; but (God be praised) without doing hurt either to man or horsse, and incamped vnder a rocke or crag (which the marshall had possessed) with his band of horssemen and certeine footmen, as in a place most apt from danger of shot out of the castell. Héerewith a companie of curriours and caliuers were put forward, and appointed to take an other rocke nérer to the castell, which shot at them in the said castell; and the defendants within it answered them againe verie roundlie, although without anie great hurt on either part.

Hume castell besieged.

The earle of Sussex vieweth the castell of Hume.

In the meane time the lord lieutenant himselfe, accompanied onelie with the marshall master Drurie, rode sundrie times round about the castell to view and suruele the same: at whome they within shot verie sore, both with their great artillerie and small shot; yet missing them, as God would, though verie narrowlie. About six of the clocke in the euening came the whole battell, ordinance and cariages, with ensignes spread, shewing themselues verie brauelie; at whome also the castell shot lustilie: but as God would haue it, without hurting either man or boie. They lodged vnder another rocke nære adioining vnto the lord lieutenant vpon the west side, where there were appointed more small shot to go to the trench, which shadowed themselues vnder the old wals of the houses, which the Scots had burnt before the comming of the Englishmen, and occupied them so within the said castell, that one of them could not so sone looke out at a lope, but three or foure were readie to salute him: and kéeping them in such sort, that they durst not well shew their heads; the captéine of the pioners the same night by commandement of the lord lieutenant, raised a mount vpon the northeast side of the castell, wherevpon the pieces of artillerie might be planted in batterie.

A Mount raised at the lord lieutenants commandement.

Batterie made against Hume castell.

This worke was so well applied, and with so great diligence aduanced, that by fiue of the clocke in the nert morning it was finished. The eight and twentith of Aprill, the marshall master Drurie verie earlie rode about the castell, to suruele and view euerie thing: which done, the great ordinance was brought to the appointed place, and bent against the castell, to wit, three canons, and two falcons. Héerewith also the lord lieutenant caused summons to be giuen vnto them within to yéeld. And about seauen of the clocke the same morning, the whole tire began to go off, and a great showt was made by the armie, to the great terrour of the defendants, and of all the countrie nære adioining. The foresaid pieces continued shooting till two of the clocke in the afternoone, discharging within that space a three score shots. During the time of this batterie, there was no great store of shot discharged by the great pieces within the castell, bicause their master gunner within, after he had first shot off a piece, and done no hurt therewith, as he was about to shoot againe, the master gunner of the two English falcons hauing espied him, tooke his leuell so right, that discharging therewith one of the falcons, he displaced the enimies piece, and stroke the gunners leg off, whereby their great ordinance within ceassed, which was an happie turne for the Englishmen.

The master gunner within the castell hurt.

About two of the clocke they within sent forth a trumpet vnto the lord lieutenant, requiring a respit that they might talke with the marshall master Drurie, and to send a messenger to the lord Hume their master, to know his further pleasure: for that being put in trust by him with the kéeping of that forstresse, they could not giue it vp without his consent. And then vpon the returns of the messenger, they trusted to giue his lordship contented answer. The marshall master Drurie talked with them twise, and the lord lieutenant was contented to grant vnto William Trotter, and Gilbert Greie the lord Humes wiues brother (being principall capteins appointed to the kéeping of the said castell) three houres respit: with condition, that they should not vse therein anie subtiltie, or for the delaieng of time: swearing by his honour, that if they so did, he would not depart the field till he had wone it by force: and further, that there should not one of them escape with life.

The Scots sue for a respit of war.

The capteins within Hume castell.

The lord lieutenant sweareth.

They being brought in doubt of their owne safeties hereby, sent one in post togither with a seruant of master Druries the marshall, to the lord Hume. And presentlie hérevpon they shewed themselues vpon the walles and rampires of the said castell: but immediatlie the lord lieutenant sent to them a commandement, strictlie inhibiting them, that not one of them should once on paine of death looke ouer the wals or rampires, to the end to view the breach of the batterie, forsomuch as in the time of parlée it was against the law of armes so to do. But now the messenger that was thus sent to the lord Hume, comming to him, declared in what case his house and people stood, who being (as was supposed) not so farre off, but that he might heare how lustilie the English canons did canuasse and batter his Hunnish castell walles, did now agrée to méet the marshall master Drurie two miles distant from the said castell, and there to commune further with him in that matter.

The lord lieutenants commandement on paine of death.

Upon the comming backe of the messenger with this answer, the lord lieutenant thought good to send the said master Drurie vnto the place appointed: who comming thither met with the said lord Hume. And after they had debated the matter togither, at length the lord Hume was contented that the castell should be surrendered into the hands of the lord lieutenant; with condition, that his people therein might depart with life: which the lord lieutenant was contented to grant, so that there were no English men among them. Hérevpon about eight of the clocke in the euening, the gates were opened, and the keies deliuered to the marshall, who presented them to the lord lieutenant: and then the lord Hunnesdon, the said marshall, and diuerse other gentlemen entered into the castell, and by & by tooke possession thereof in the quéne of Englands name, pulled downe their banner of defiance, and in place thereof set vp the English banners, against all those in Scotland that would saie the contrarie.

The castell of Hume deliuered to the marshall.

possession

The Scots that were within it, being in number an hundred three score and eight persons, were put out in their common wearing apparell, without armour, weapon, or anie baggage. They comming to the lord lieutenant that was then at the place of the batterie on horssebacke, presented themselues to him: who according to his word and promise of honour, caused them to be safelie conducted through the watch and scouts, to such place as they required. Amongst them there were two Englishmen, the one of them named Hillard, the earle of Northumberlands man, the other was a vagarant person, or a roge (as we may call him) named William God saue his alias Lions, which both were caried to Barwike, & there executed the thirteenth of Maie next insuing. In all this siege there were but foure persons slaine on both parts, two Scots, & two Englishmen: but there were manie hurt as well on the one part as the other. The castell of Hume being thus wone, the lord lieutenant the morow after placed therein to kéepe the house to the quéenes maiesties vse, capteine Wood, and capteine Pikman, with two hundred souldiours. This done, his lordship returned towards England and came to Barwike. During this siege there were diuerse townes and villages, situate within three or foure miles of the campe, set on fire by the Englishmen, and vtterlie spoiled. The lord lieutenant vpon his returne to Barwike, stated there for a time verie euill at ease, hauing in trauell about the siege taken such cold, as therewith he was brought into an extreame ague.

Two Englishmen staied and after executed.

Capteine Wod and capteine Pikman.

The lord lieutenant sicke of an ague.

The fourth of Maie, his lordship sent maister William Drurie the marshall of Barwike, accompanied with diuerse gentlemen and capteins, hauing with them about two thousand souldiours, to take Fast castell: the which vpon the first summons was deliuered into his hands, who receiuing the keies being presented to him, entered the hold, and tooke possession thereof, in the quœnes maiesties name: and expelling the Scots, being about the number of halfe a score (who according to couenant were suffered to depart with their liues saued) he put ten, or (as some haue) foure téene Englishmen into that castell, which were thought able and number sufficient enough to kéepe it against all the power of Scotland, the situation thereof is so strong.

John Stow. Englishmen put into the castell to kéepe it.

In this meane time the troubles increasing among the Scots, by reason of the murther committed in the person of the earle of Murreie the late gouernour, the duke of Chatellerault, and other his partakers gathered a power of three thousand men, and comming to Lithquo, midwaie betwixt Sterling and Edenburgh, remained there for a time, and afterwards came to Edenburgh, in purpose to make warre against the lords of the kings part, who hauing sent to the earle of Lennor, then remaining in England, earnestlie requested him to repaire into Scotland. Wherevpon he by the quœnes maiesties licence, tooke his iourneie thitherwards, and came to Barwike, where he was also visited with sickenesse, and so remained certeine daies in that towne. And vnderstanding that the said duke of Chatelleraults power was such, that the lords of the kings side were not able to come togither, nor he to go to them without the quéne of Englands aid, he humblie sued vnto hir maiestie by letters to haue some power by hir appointment to conduct him into Scotland, and there to aid him and the other lords of that side against their aduersaries the duke and his complices. Hérevpon by hir maiesties commandement, the earle of Sussex, as yet not fullie recouered of his sickenesse, ordeined maister William Drurie the marshall of Barwike, with such forces as were thought conuenient to go with the said earle of Lennor, for the execution of such exploits in seruice as séemed most expedient. And about the same time, to wit the first of Maie, the lord Scrope lord warden of the west marches, made a rode into Scotland, incamping the first night on the hither side of the water of Annan, and the next daie marched towards the water of Milke, burning and spoiling all on that side of Annandale, namelie the lard Johnsons lands, finding small resistance, sauing that the forreie was a little troubled with a fortie or fiftie Scots horssemen, and so hauing done his pleasure, he quietlie returned, without receiuing other impeachment: notwithstanding the lord Herries was in Dunfrise, hauing gathered a great power in purpose to hinder his enterprise.

The earle of Chatellerault his complices purpose war against the kings part.

Master william Drurie goeth with the earle of Lennox against the earle of Chatellerault, &c.

But now to returne to the earle of Sussex, who hauing instituted sir William Drurie generall of those bands that should passe with the earle of Lennor into Scotland: bicause each gentleman, souldior, and seuerall bands should dutifullie obeie the said sir William their new ordeined generall in all points of warlike order, the said earle made an oration in such pithie forme and manner, as throughlie expressed the whole substance of the seruice, the vnsuertie of the season, the strange and malicious dealing of diuerse aduersaries: which points he so cunninglie handled, as the excellencie of a perfect orator appeared fullie in his speach. At whose eloquence the herers rather séemed astonied than vnsatisfied in anie point or parcell of those matters: for he opened the verie bowels of rebellion, the practises of enimies, and suborning of traitors: and therefore persuaded euerie honest mind to haue a dutifull consideration of his prince and countrie, in the defense and libertie whereof, both life, lands, and goods, are alwaies to be offered.

The lord lieutenants oration implieng obedience of the souldiors to their new generall.

After which oration in respect of further aduancement as the custome is (for seruice past, and incouragement to proceed in the like worthie doings) he made these knights: Sir William Drurie, sir Thomas Manners, sir George Careie, and sir Robert Constable, and placing the said sir William Drurie the appointed generall in full authoritie, he committed them to God, and the good conduct of their chéefeteine. Now hauing heard the lord lieutenant thus speake, and séeing the means that he vsed to incourage them against the enimie; how could they one with another but vow in mind, euen with the hazzard of their hearts, to performe to their power no lesse than he in speech implied? How could they (I saie) but venture life and lim, hauing so often séene the perillous enterprises which he himselfe vndertooke against forren hostilitie, as to his owne danger so to the high praise of his heroicall prowesse: and not without desert, as one verie well noteth, saieng;

Knights made by the earle of Sussex.

——satrapas præclarus fortis & audax,
Elisabetha tui speciosi corporis acer
Et fidus custos, discrimen adire paratus
Quodlibet, inuicto Mauortis pectore campo.]

Comes Sussexius Camerarius.

The same daie being the eleuenth of Maie, diuerse foot bands with shot and armed pikes were set forward into Scotland, with certeine péeces of artillerie, powder, and munition in good quantitie. First capteine Bicklwell with his ensignes departed the towne, and then the companies of capteine Read, capteine Caruell, capteine Game, capteine Lamberd, and capteine Crington. These old bands of Barwike conteined fiue hundred souldiours.

After them followed the companie of sir Robert Constable, their sergeant maior of three hundred shot, and the companie of sir Thomas Maners of two hundred shot. Laslie marched forth capteine John Constable, and capteine Barwike with two hundred armed men. These twelue hundred footmen with fiue ensignes marched that night to Coldingham. Also for the better assurance of couenants and promises made on the behalfe of such lords of Scotland, as had made suite for this aid to be sent into their countrie for their assistance against them of the contrarie faction, there were certeine hostages sent into England by the same lords as it was thought expedient, for doubt of double dealing. The twelfe of Maie, they marched forward, and the same daie sir William Drurie, the earle of Lennor, and the other new made knights, with the horsemen, departed from Barwike, and at the peece nere to Dunglas they ouertooke the footmen, and the same night all the horsemen and footmen came and incamped togither at Dunbar, being in all not past sixteene hundred men. They had foure field peeces with them, & good store of powder. The next day being the thirteenth of Maie, and Whitsun euen, they made such speed in their march, that they came vnto Edenburgh, where they found the earles of Morton, Mar, Glencarne, the lords Kithwen, Lindseie, Simple, Glames, Methuen, Ogiltre, and Catcart, with diuerse other gentlemen.

Hostages deliuered by the Scotish lords on the kings side.

The horsmen and footmen incampe at Dunbar.

Scotish lords of the kings side.

Heere also they vnderstood that the duke of Chatellerault and his partakers were departed from Lithquo, whither they were retired backe againe from Edenburgh, on knowledge had that the Englishmen were comming forwards towards them. The fouretenth and fiftenth day they laie still in Edenburgh, and the morrow after being the sixtenth of that moneth, they marched forwards to Lithquo, and lodged in that towne that night, where they receiued aduertisements that the said duke of Chatellerault had broken vp his campe, after he had vpon his departure from the said towne of Lithquo attempted the winning of the castell of Glasco, & missing his purpose there, was driuen to retire with dishonour. The next morning being wednesdaie, the armie marched forwards, and the footmen laie that night at a place called Faukirke, a six miles from Lithquo: but the generall with the horsemen rode six miles further vnto Sterling, where they saw the yong king. The nert daie being the eightenth of Maie, sir Robert Constable, Sargent Maior, with the rest of the capteins of the twelue hundred English footmen, & two hundred Scots footmen, the which were most part shot, marched a long iourneie, and came to lodge that night at Glasco, and the generall sir William Drurie came to them with the horsemen, and the most part of the noble men of Scotland that were on the kings side, which entred the towne and lodged in the same, with manie horsemen and footmen.

The duke of Chatellerault breaketh vp his campe.

The yong king at Sterling.

The duke of Chatellerault (as ye haue heard) had bene there, and besieged the castell that belonged to the king, but hearing of the Englishmens comming two daies before their approching thither, he raised his siege, and departed thence, with the losse of nine and twentie of his men. The nineteenth of Maie, sir William Drurie generall of the English power, being determined aforehand on a iourneie towards Dunbreton, sent forth that morning before certeine vantcurrours on horsebacke, to staie all such as they found vpon the waie. This done, he toke with him certeine gentlemen, and some shot, and rode forth towards Dunbreton, to view the straits and situation of that castell, within the which were at that present the lord Fleming, that toke vpon him as capteine thereof, the archbishop of saint Andrewes, and other their adherents, frends to the duke of Chatellerault, and enimies to the lords that were about the king.

The generall goeth to view Dunbreton,

After sir William Drurie had viewed the castell, and taken the plot of the situation thereof, he sent his trumpetor to know who were within it, and to whose vse they kept it. They within the castell required to know what he was that sent to know the same. It was answered that it was the quéene of Englands generall of hir forces there in Scotland that made the demand. Whereunto answer was returned, that they knew well he was not so ignorant as he séemed (as in deed he was not) but that he did well know that this castell was, and of long time had béene kept by the lord Fleming: and that accordinglie by him, his frends and seruants it was now mainteined. Which answer being reported to the generall, he sent againe his trumpetor, to know if the lord Fleming would come forth and parlée vpon assurance of honour to returne safelie. Whereunto the lord Fleming consented, although not meaning so to do: but by a subtill practise (as was thought) intended to wind him within danger. For there were some harquebusiers secretlie couched in couert, within whose reach when the generall was come himselfe alone on horsebacke, most dishonestlie (his trumpetor not yet being returned) they shot at him with great despite, meaning to haue killed him, without anie regard to the law of armes, or feare of God. But through the goodnes of the Lord almightie, that wicked practise missed the pretensed effect: for that worthie English knight receiued no bodilie hurt, but perceiuing their dealings, with a bold courage he bestowed his pistols as fréelie at them as they did their harquebuse shot at him, and so returned to his companie backe againe in safetie, yéelding to God due honour and thanks for his mercifull deliuerance from such a murtherous practise of his deadlie foes.

The generall sendeth to know who was within the castell, &c.

Lord Fleming is required to come to parlee with the generall.

The dishonorable dealing of the lord Fleming.

Upon a new occasion to vnderstand the certeintie of that, whereof he had some inkling, the one and twentith of Maie, sir William Drurie accompanied with the said gentlemen and horsemen, went againe towards Dunbreton, to parlee with the lord Fleming vpon his further promise, that he would meet him three miles from the said castell. Whervpon the said sir William Drurie sent an Englishman and a Scotishman to view the ground, which should be appointed forth for their meeting, which they found to be so neere to the castell, as was subiect to all their shot both great and small, and cleane contrarie to the promise: and so they declared to the capteine named John Fleming, that was sent forth of the castell to apoint the same, how it was neither indifferent nor meet for such a purpose. The capteine answered, that his maister was a man of honour, and stood vpon the same, and therefore would not hazard himselfe among horsemen wholie without the danger of the peece. Whereto the messengers replied, that the lord Fleming for his late euill dealing, was not to be credited in this case; neither comparable to the generall of the English armie, for he was there for the queene of England. And further they said, that forsomuch as they had of late dealt so vniustlie contrarie to promise and the law of armes, and therby so greatlie cracked their credits, stained their honesties and honour: they could not but wish that their generall should be well aduised, yer he did hazard himselfe anie more within their danger vpon their sliperie promises, except they would appoint some other place of parlee, as might be thought indifferent, according to their former offers, which would not be granted, and so they departed. Immediatlie whereupon, to shew some peece of their double dealings, and vnfaithfull practises towards the Englishmen: the Scots within the castell presentlie sent after the messengers

Sir William Drurie goeth againe towards Dunbreton.

He sendeth to view the ground where he should meet with the lord Fleming.

This is a common fault in the Scots.

Scotish honestie.

sengers a culuering shot for a farewell. Thus did they by practise iustifie the opinion that strangers to them haue long conceiued of their dealing: and which he saw full well (perhaps also proued in some part) that said of the Scotish nations vntrustinesse, &c:

grane pectus abundat
Fraudibus ingenijs & non eget arte magistra.

The lord Flemings double dealing.

Sir William Drurie then perceiuing that the meaning of the lord Fleming was not to deale simplie in this matter, touching a conference to be had betwixt them, returned to Glasco, where sir George Careie being maruellouslie inflamed with that vnhonest dealing of the lord Fleming, made earnest suite to the generall that he might send to him and offer him the combat in triall of this quarrell, sith it was more requisit that a gentleman souldier should stand in those questions than a generall, consydering his calling and office. The generall thanked sir George verie courteouslie, but yet said, that it stood him vpon to search out these matters to the vttermost (as he would haue done in deed) were not his commission and charge (as was well knowne) to be otherwise implored: Yet (quoth he) sith your suite is so reasonable (and the whole companie and lawes of armes alloweth of it) I grant your request, and therein do as best shall seeme to your birth and estimation. Herevpon sir George Careie streightwaies deuised a letter of challenge, and deliuered it to an herald to beare from him vnto the said lord Fleming, the tenour whereof here insueth.

Sir George Careis suite.

T. Churchyard.

A letter of challenge sent to the lord Fleming.

A copie of sir George Careis foresaid letter to the lord Fleming.

LOrd Fleming, if either your birth or bringing vp had wrought in you a noble mind, or estimation of credit, hardlie would you haue so much forgotten and stained your honour, as in a parlée of late with our generall you did. At whom vilelie and vnhonorablie shooting, you falsed that assurance of warre which souldiers submit themselues vnto: and trained him to your treason vnder truse, a thing heretofore not accustomed, nor presentlie to be allowed of. Ye assuredlie pretending your owne and your frends good, commoditie to your countrie, and quietnesse to the state, twise abased and submitted himselfe, comming to confer with you thereof: but your pride ioined with a harmefull meaning, to those that you professe best vnto, and selfe wilfull vaineglorie, without cause why, refused that which reason and honour commanded you to haue done. Therfore, because his calling is presentlie with his charge better than yours, and mine not inferior; I summon you reasonablie to excuse that fault supposed to be yours, or else to maintaine that traitorous act with your person against mine in fight, when, where, or how you dare. Otherwise I will baffull your good name, sound with the trumpet your dishonour, and paint your picture with the heels vpward, and beare it in despite of your selfe. In the meane time I attend your answer. From Glasco, the 22 of Maie 1570.

The lord Flemings double dealing.

With pride, harmefull meaning and vaineglorie.

The lord Flemings dissemb-

Subscribed George Careie.

The copie of the lord Flemings answer.

GEorge Careie, I haue receiued your vaineles letter, making mention of my false and treasonable dealing against your generall, in shooting vnder truse, so vilelie against my honour and truth, traitorouslie trained him vnder my truse: which is altogither false and vntrue. And howbeit your generall came by the house of Dunglas by my appointment, which I suffered, and I appointed one place of méeting, sir men of either partie which he refused, and he departed, and certeine of his companie came bragging vp the riuers side towards the house, viewing the same and the ground thereabouts, shoting your harquebusses against the same: I could do no lesse but present you with such as I had. Whereas you write of your generals calling to be presentlie better than mine, and yours not inferiour; when your generall challengeth me therof, I shall giue answer. And as for you, I will not be inferiour to a better than you, or anie souldier vnder your generals charge. Whereas you summon me (as you call it) reasonablie to excuse that fault supposed to be mine owne, or else to maintaine that traitorous act with my person against yours: you shall wit, I haue gentlemen of honour, seruant souldiers to me, as ye are to your generall, which may be your fellowes, shall defend the same against you and your false and vntrue inuented writing: and were not the charge I present, or how soone I can be relieued of the same, I should lowlie my person to méet you sir English miles, or anie other person. Howbeit ye be but one souldier, assure your selfe from this date forth, I will not receiue no such inuented message, for I haue little to do with Englishmen, ye may raile vpon my honorable name as ye please. You shall haue as honorable gentlemen as your selfe against you fighting. Take this for answer,

Iohn lord Fleming.

Lord Fleming excuse against the charge of treacherie.

Lord Fleming beareth him bold of his gentrie.

The replie of sir George Careie vpon the lord Flemings answer.

LOrd Fleming, often the Flemings after nowne answer smelleth more of wine than wit. But as to that common crime, the custome of their countrie yeeldeth them part of pardon; so your common acquaintance with the same condition, knowne to be verie great, shall to me somewhat excuse your witlesse writing, wherein first you disalow my right recitall of your traitorous dealing, by tearming it false and vntrue. For answer, know this, the truth my pen hath written, by the witnesse of a number; and my hand I vow shall maintaine the same before the world at all times. But you in denieng it, haue both falslie and vnfaithfullie lied in your throte, and dare neither defend nor disproue that in deeds, which in words you haue done. Whereas you write, that our generall passed Dunglas, by your appointment which you suffered, therein you do manifestlie saie vnhonorablie and vntrulie; for that you had no knowledge of our first comming, but saluted vs with your shot: and we likewise skirmished with your men euen at their owne strength, vntill we viewed the ground about at our pleasure. And touching the appointment of sir of either part, easilie that maie be knowne to be a plaine lie: séeing we had neither parlée nor conference with you before, to appoint place or méeting. But whereas you saie, you could do no lesse but present vs with such as you had, therein you confesse and acknowledge the dishonour and treason that I charged you withall, taking vpon your selfe that fault, which I supposed to haue bin of your seruants, for our generall retired his companie farre from him. And his trumpet being with you, approched himselfe alone to haue parled, when vnder truse you discharged two harquebusses against him: an act rather séemelie for a cowardlie traitor, than one that professeth to be a souldier.

Sir George Carie boweth to maintaine no lesse than he hath written.

The lord Fleming in seeking to excuse accuseth himselfe the more manifestlie.

Finallie, whereas you let me wit, that you haue gentlemen of honour, seruant souldiers vnto you, that maie be my fellowes, which should defend the challenge that toucheth so neere your selfe, as with honor you should not haue refused it. For I thinke scorne to be anie waies inferior to you, though but a shoulder, so honourable a name for you, being better in birth, and vnstained with reproch as you haue beene. Secondlie, I haue more, and as good gentlemen vnder my conduct, as your selfe haue vnder your charge, which shall answer as many as you can bring it with number ye meane to combat, and will put them to that which you dare not do your selfe. But assure you, my quarell shall remaine euerlasting, except the proofe of your owne person against mine make end it: and when you shall dare come out of your crowes nest, I will be readie to ride an hundred Scottish miles, to meet with you in anie indifferent place. And vntill that time, I shall account you deuoid of honestie & honor, vnwoorthie to march vpon ground, or keepe companie with men. From Hamilton, the 29 of Maie 1570.

Sir George Careie his answer to the lord Flemings brag of his gentrie.

Oh valiant heart.

Subscribed George Careie.

Though manie waies were sought by message and otherwise, to moue the lord Fleming to defend with battell the fault and follie committed: yet it would not be; for he shifted off the matter, so as it well appered, it was but lost labor further to attempt him therein. The two and twentith of Maie, the earle of Lennox, accompanied with the earle of Glencarne, the lord Simple, and other his friends, feodaries & alies, mustered on the more before the towne of Glasco the number of foure thousand horssemen and footmen, that were there assembled to serue him, in presence of sir William Drurie, and other of the English captains. The three and twentith of Maie, sir William Drurie, the earle of Lennox, and other the Scotish lords, and the whole armie marched towards the castell of Hamilton, and sending a trumpetor, and one with him to parlee with the captaine named Andrew Hamilton, he agreed to come forth, and one other with him, to talke with sir William Drurie, and one other gentleman, such as he should thinke good to bring with him to a place somewhat distant, as well from the castell as the campe.

A master of Scotishmen to the number of 4000.

The armie goeth toward Hamilton.

Hereupon sir William Drurie with his sword and target, and sir George Careie with a case of pistols went forth to the appointed place, whither the captaine of the castell also with an halbert, and one other with him, hauing likewise a case of pistols, came according to appointment. But after they had talked togither, and that the captaine would not in anie wise consent to deliuer vp the castell, he with his associat returned to their hold againe, & the English generall, with sir George Careie, came backe to the campe, and thereupon the English ordinance was presentlie placed about the castell, and shot verie sore all that night: but did no great hurt, by reason they were but field peeces, and not fit for batterie. They in the castell likewise shot verie sore at the Englishmen, but did no great harme, sauing that there were three of the footmen hurt. In the palace which was a prettie house the duchesse of Chatellerault was at that time resident, to whom sir William Drurie did repaire, offering hir all the courtesie he might, with all that to hir appertained, willing hir not to feare anie thing: and for hir more assurance, he committed hir to the charge of sir Thomas Maners.

Sir William Drurie talketh with the captaine of Hamilton castell.

The English ordinance shooteth at the castell.

The duchesse of Chatelherault committed to the charge of an English knight.

The foure and twentith of Maie, the generall gaue summons vnto the castell. And because they within stoode stiffelie in denaill to make surrender thereof vnto him, he was driuen to send to Striueling for some great peeces of ordinance meet to make batterie. In the meane time, the earles of Lennox and Morton with the horssemen, and some shot, marched into the countrie to a verie faire house of the abbat of Kilwinnings neere adioining, whose name was Gawen Hamilton, which house they burnt and vtterlie defaced, spoiling it, and razing it downe to the earth. They burnt and spoiled also seuenteene houses more belonging to men of that surname, situate neere thereabouts, whereof one belonged vnto a lard that had married with the sister of James Hamilton of Woodwode haugh, which sine the regent. There were also burnt seuen other faire houses belonging to others that were not of that surname: but yet were of their friends and alies. Moreouer, there were diuerse other of their kinred and alies that came in with humble submission, and assured themselues, firmelie promising from thenceforth their obedience to the king.

Great ordinance sent for.

The earles of Lennox and Morton.

The abbeie of Kilwinnings burnt.

The fine and twentith of Maie sir William Drurie the generall retired his people vpon a policie from the castell, and left it without either watch or ward for that night. The next date he sent sir George Careie to the castell with a trumpetor, to know if they within would deliuer it vp, before the great ordinance should come, which the captaine vtterlie refused to do. Whereupon the small shot clapt lowdelie round about the house, and kept them within occupied, till that a whole culuerin & a demie culuerin came to them from Sterling, the which with foure of the English small field peeces were in the night following planted against the castell, and being shot off, a bullet of one of the great peeces passed through the walles into the castell.

The castell summoned.

The castell of Hamilton battered.

The seuen and twentith of Maie about foure of the clocke in the morning, the generall sent a trumpetor to giue summons againe to the castell: vnto whome the captaine answered, that he cared not for them, & so bad them do their worst, for he would not yeeld the place to them at anie hand. Whereupon immediatlie the whole fire began to plaie in such sort, that within foure volees both sides of the house were battered through: at the sight whereof the captaine was so dismaied, that forthwith he cried for parlee, and so the shot was staied. Now vpon humble sute the captaine was admitted to speake with the generall, and so comming to talke with him, at length he agreed to yeeld: whereupon, the provost marshall was sent into the castell to take possession thereof. The generall permitted them verie courteoulie to depart with their furniture, and other such stuffe as they could carie with them. There came out of the house nine and thirtie persons one and other, foure and thirtie men, three boies, and two women, and therewith was the castell blowne vp and rased, and the armie late that night in the towne, and in places about it.

The castell eftsoones summoned.

The captaine of the castell demandeth parlee.

The next date, being the eight and twentith of Maie they departed from thence: the earles of Lennox, Mar, and Glencarne, with other of the nobilitie of Scotland of the kings part taking their leaues, with their companie returned to Glasco: and sir George Careie with the horssemen came that night to Lithquo, where also the rest of the English forces met. A castell called Comberawld belonging to the lord Fleming was yeelded to the generals hands, who vpon bond of assurance that the house should remaine at the deuotion of the quæne of England, was contented to spare it from fire and spoile. But this was not the first nor last courtesie which the generall shewed in this iournie, vnto such as in anie respect were thought woorthie of his fauour. Amongst other the ladie of Lidington being great with child, mistrusting hir selfe (or hir husbands double dealing towards our countrie) in great feare began to flie. But sir William Drurie hearing thereof, sent hir word he came not to make warres with women, but rather to shew pitie to the weake and comfortlesse:

The ladie of Lidington.

lesse, and therevpon she staied, and had no further harme.

The nine and twentith of Maie, when the armie should dislodge from Lithquo, the generall called for the prouost of the towne, and commanded him to prepare with all expedition, to receiue a iust punishment and correction thorough the whole towne for treason, and vnpardonable offenses committed: and declaring that the inhabitants thereof had succoured and supported traitors to the realme of England, and likewise to their owne king, contrarie to the leagues and quietnesse of both the realmes of England and Scotland, for which cause he was fullie resolued to overthrow that town & receptacle of traitors. If therefore there were anie women in childbed or impotent people within that towne, he gaue warning thus aforehand to conuele them out of it: and herewith also commanding each capteine & souldier vnder his charge, to see due execution of that which he purposed in this behalfe to haue done, he willed the prouost to appoint a place conuenient, into the which the goods of the towne might be brought, to the end that the same should neither bee spoiled by the English souldiers, neither yet consumed thorough vehemencie of fire, but to be preserued all wholie to the Scotishmens vse. Further, he granted, that euerie noble mans lodging and capiteins house should be saued from fire.

Th. Church-yard.

The towne of Leith threatned to be burned.

But now the time being come for this determined execution, the earle of Horton, that still accompanied the English generall, offered himselfe as an intercessor to intreat and sue for a pardon, bringing afore the generall a multitude of wailing people, whose mournfull and most pitious cries were lamentable and verie importunat. The generall hearing their requests, made answer, that for manie causes the towne ought to be destroied, considering how diuerse enimies (whose insolent practises were not to be suffered) had alwaies there a common resort to conferre of their wicked deuises: and further (quoth he) the courtesie that is shewed to such places of repaire, hath imboldened the rest of Scotland to vse open violence and secret villanies, to the prejudice of Gods glorie, hinderance of the weale publike, and breach of good lawes and policies: and therefore it was fit and most meet for a warning to thousands in that case of extremitie, to raze out such monuments of mischiefe. But at length, notwithstanding these heauie words vttered by sir William Drurie, the people of all sorts so prealled about him, & made such pitifull cries and sorowfull noise, with children sucking of their mothers breasts, that he taking ruth of their miserable estates, at this their lamentable suit, and speciallie at the great instance of the earle of Horton, who came bareheaded to speake for them, the generall was contented to saue the towne and people therein: taking good band and assurance of the prouost and chiefest of the towne, that they should follow the campe, and at all times apeare when they were called for at Berwike, and there to submit themselues, their towne and goods, to the clemencie of the queens highnesse; and to such order as the earle of Sussex hir maiesties generall lieutenant should by consent thinke necessarie: to which band & conditions they of Lithquo agreed. And for that their regent was slaine, & none since instituted to whome they had giuen faith of allegiance; they confessed, that none might command them anie waie without licence of him, to whome they had made this band, sith to him both their promise and obligation was passed. And in this sort they continued bound to him for their good behauiors.

The earle of Horton, an intercessor for the towne of Lithquo.

Lithquo spared from deserued destruction.

The prouost and other enter bands.

The duke of Chatelle-raults palace burned.

belonging to the said duke, called Benile, distant from Lithquo about a mile or more, they likewise burned the same. Thus hauing done their pleasures at Lithquo, and in the countrie about that towne, they marched from thense to a proper house and castell, belonging to the lord Seton, called Neitherie, which the enimies had fortified. But yet when the ladie of that house came to the generall, and made humble petition on hir knees for his fauor, offering to him the keies of that place in most humble wise; she found such courtesie at his hands, that with condition that she & a baron with hir should enter bands for assurance, that the castell should euer afterwards remaine at the quéene of Englands pleasure, he toke hir the keies againe, leauing hir in possession of hir house and goods, without doing hir anie further displeasure.

Neitherie.

The ladie Seton.

This night the armie came to Edenburgh, where certeine of the companie that made hast to get thither somewhat before the rest, receiued some discourtesie: for they were spoiled in the streets of their furniture, & such other things as they had about them. But when the generall with the rest of the armie was come neere to the towne, and had knowledge of such foule disorder, he thought not good to enter the towne, without standing so sure on his gard, that he should not need to doubt any double dealing, or crooked measure. Which sure handling of the matter did not onelie shew the deuiser thereof to haue good conduct and experience: but in verie deed auoided no small inconuenience and mischiefe, that by the enimies was finelie contriued (thorough a fraie to be made in the suburbs) so that a great slaughter had burst out suddenlie, and no small bloudshed followed, if God and good guiding of the people had not staied and turned awaie that imminent danger. To be short, the generall sent sir Thomas Maners with two bands of souldiors, vnder one ensigne, to seize vpon the gates at their first arriuall, and so the pretensed conspiracie was happilie preuented; for the residue of the power was no soner entred the towne, but that keeping themselues in order to cleere the streets, and to command the inhabitants the better, they spent that night standing on their gard, as the case required. When the morning was come, sir William Drurie smelling out the couert practise, and naughtie meaning of some, demanded iustice and strict punishment of such offenses and things as he would truelie laie to the charges of some in that towne: and told them flatlie, if remedie were not the soner prouided, and satisfaction made for the follies and outrage committed, he would be quicklie reuenged, to the displeasure and shame of all the contriuers of that same mad and mischéeuous presumption.

Some of the English armie spoiled in Edenburgh.

T. Church-yard.

Sir Thomas Maners with his two bands vnder one ensigne.

Herevpon, not onelie such things as had bin taken from those few souldiors, which first entred the towne ouer night, were not onelie restored: but diuerse malefactors were also deliuered to the generall, to be executed and ordered by his discretion; who séeing their submission, mercifullie & franklie sent them awaie vnto their capteins: & so these broiles were pacified and things set in quiet. After they had rested in Edenburgh a two daies, the first of June they dislodged. The generall comming to Seton the chiefe castell & house of the lord Seton, the ladie was readie there also to present him the keies, with like humble submission as before: and therevpon receiued the like fauor for this house, as was shewed to hir for the other. That night they lodged at Hadington. It was determined that the pile of Anderwike should haue beene ouerthrowne: but vpon suite and bands taken of diuerse gentlemen, the place was spared, and the offendors receiued to mercie.

Restitution made of things taken awaie from the souldiors.

Seton castell spared at the suite of the ladie.

Anderwike saued from ruine by occasion.

And so the next daie, the generall with the horssemen came through to Berwike, a iournie of two and thirtie long miles.

The footbands lodged the same night at Coldingham with sir Robert Constable, who the next daie the third of June came with them vnto Berwike. And so ended this iournie, to the great commendation of the generall and captains: and consequentlie to all the gentlemen and souldiors that had béene forth in the same, as well for the good successe which it pleased God the author of all good and prosperous euents to grant to them, as also for their dutifull obedience to all warlike discipline, their painfull trauels sustained, their manlie forwardnesse and skilfull practise in martiall polices still shewed, as occasion of seruice was anie where offered. But now to returne to the doings at home. Whilest this iournie was made (as ye haue heard) into Scotland, the fiue & twentith of Maie in the morning was found hanging on the bishop of Londons palace gate in Pauls churchyard, a bull which latelie had béene sent from Rome, conteining diuerse horrible treasons against the quéens maiestie: for the which one John Felton was shortlie after apprehended, and committed to the tower of London. ¶ And because the said bull may appeare and shew it selfe in nature and kind, it is behoofull here to interlace some rotings of the same, as I haue gathered them out of one that I am sure had a conscience to tell the truth: which I therefore am the willinger to insert, that the world may iudge the heinousnesse of Feltons fact, in firing so pestilent a libell vpon a prelats gate in a place of common concourse, and against the quéens excellent maiestie.

The happie successe of the foresaid viage vndertaken by the English.

I. Stow. A bull from Rome hanged on the bishop of Londons gate.

A. F. Sée the view of a seditious bull ripped vp by Iohn Iewell late bishop of Salisburie printed 1582.

[a] Sententia declaratoria contra Elisabeth, &c.

[b] Pius [b] episcopus seruus seruorũ Dei, &c. [c] Missa sacrificiũ, preces, ieunia, ciborum delectum, cœlibatum illa (regina Elisabetha) abolenit. [d] Eadẽ occupato regno supremi ecclesiæ capitis locum in omni Anglia, eiusque præcipuã authoritatem atq; iurisdictionem monstrosè sibi vsurpans, regnum ipsum rursum in miserum exitium reuocauit. [e] Regium concilium ex Anglica nobilitate constatum diremit. [f] Hominibus obscuris compleuit. [g] Hominibus hæreticis compleuit. [h] Ad quam velut ad asylum omnium infestissimi perfugium inuenerunt, &c. [i] Declaramus prædictã Elisabetham, eiq; adhærentes in prædictis, anathematis sententiã incurrisse. [k] Quinetiã ipsam prætenso regni prædicti iure, necnon omni & quocunque dominio, dignitate, priuilegioque priuatam. [l] Præcipimus & interdicimus vniuersis & singulis proceribus, subditis, & populis, & alijs prædictis, ne illi eiusue monitis, mandatis & legibus audeant obedire: qui secus egerint, eos simili anathematis sententia innodamus. [m] Omnes qui illi quomodocunque iurauerunt, à iuramento huiusmodi ac omni prorsus dominij fidelitatis & obsequij debito perpetuò absolutos declaramus, &c.

[a] Pag. 3.
[b] Pag. 7.
[c] Pag. 23.
[d] Pag. 36.
[e] Pag. 42.
[f] Pag. 44.
[g] Pag. 49.
[h] Pag. 50.
[i] Pag. 63.
[k] Pag. 67.
[l] Pag. 74.
[m] Pag. 79.

[a] A sentence denounced against Elisabeth, &c.

PIus [b] bishop, seruant of Gods seruants, &c. [c] Shée (quéene Elisabeth) hath cleane put awaie the sacrifice of the masse, prayers, fastings, choise or difference of meats & single life. [d] Shee inuaded the kingdome, & by vsurping monstrouslie the place of the supreme head of the church in all England, and the cheefe authoritie & iurisdiction of the same, hath againe brought the said realme into miserable destruction. [e] Shee hath remoued the noble men of England from the kings councell. [f] She hath made hir councell of poore, darke, beggerlie fellows, and hath placed them ouer the people. [g] These councellors are not onlie poore & beggerlie, but also heretikes. [h] Vnto hir all such as are the worst of the people resort, and are by hir receiued into safe protection, &c. [i] We make it knowen, that Elisabeth aforesaid, & as manie as stand on hir side in the matters abouenamed, haue run into the danger of our curse. [k] We make it also knowen, that we haue depriued hir from that right shée pretended to haue in the kingdome aforesaid, and also from all and euerie hir authoritie, dignitie, and priuilege. [l] We charge and forbid all and euerie the nobles, and subiects, and people, and others aforesaid, that they be not so hardie as to obeie hir or hir will, or commandements, or laws, vpon paine of the like accurse vpon them. [m] We pronounce that all whosoeuer by anie occasion haue taken their oth vnto hir, are for euer discharged of such their oth, and also from all fealtie and seruice, which was due to hir by reason of hir gouernment, &c.

[a] Pag. 3.
[b] Pag. 7.
[c] Pag. 23.
[d] Pag. 36.
[e] Pag. 42.
[f] Pag. 44.
[g] Pag. 49.
[h] Pag. 50.
[i] Pag. 63.
[k] Pag. 67.
[l] Pag. 74.
[m] Pag. 79.

Héere hath euerie true subiect to sée whether Felton was not a frend to Pius Quintus, in so easilie being induced and drawne to prefer his proceed[ings] against the lords annointed; for whose sake if [he] had a thousand liues, true loialtie would haue [mo]ued him to the losse of them all, if occasion had so required; considering that hir maiestie hath alwaies deserued well of hir people, for whome she euer had a tender care, as one reporteth that saith he heard with his owne ears hir maiestie commending hir subiects to the carefull and wise gouernment of hir councell and iudges, when shée spake thus vnto them. Haue care ouer my people. You haue my place. Do you that which I ought to do. They are my people. Euerie man oppresseth them, and spoileth them without mercie. They cannot reuenge their quarell, nor help themselues. Sée vnto them, see vnto them, for they are my charge. I charge you euen as God hath charged me. I care not for my selfe, my life is not deare to me, my care is for my people. I praie God whosoeuer succeed me be as carefull as I am. They which might know what cares I beare, would not thinke I toke anie great ioie in wearing the crowne.

Sée the view of the seditious bull. pag. 72, 73.

The quéenes words.

Could a mother speake more tenderlie for hir infant, than this good quéene speaketh for hir people? And shall the people be so vngratious to a prince so gratious, as to attempt anie thing that should discontent hir highnesse? A mercifull hart shée hath alwaies had, before shee atteined the crowne, a mercifull hart shée hath now possessing the scepter: manie times remitting and pardoning offenses intended and practised against hir owne person: which C. O. noteth in his Eirenarchia siue Elisabetha, speaking of hir maiestie in this point verie truelie & vncontrollablie:

Nobilis & præstans est ignoscentia virtus,
Hæc quanquam potis est, si vult, excedere vi-
Mentis inest, iram strictis compescit habenis
Delictis mulctam grauibus quandoque remittens.
Hoc priuata prius nondum diademate sumpto
Fecerat, hoc facit & princeps diademate sublato.

Multiplex Elisabethæ virtus.

The seauen and twentith of Maie, Thomas Norton and Christopher Norton of Yorkshire, being both condemned of high treason for the late rebellion in the north, were drawen from the tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, headed, and quartered. In this yeare also conspired certeine gentlemen with other in the countie of Norffolke, whose purpose was on Midsummer daie at Harlestone faire, with sound of trumpet and drum to haue raised a number, and then to proclame their diuelish pretense against strangers and others. This matter was vttered by Thomas Ket one of the conspiracie vnto John Kensele, who forthwith sent the same Ket with a constable to the next iustice, before whome and o[ther]

The Nortons executed.

Conspiracie in Norffolke and whereupon it toke beginning.

ther iustices he opened the whole matter. Whereupon maister Doue Dorris immediatlie apprehended John Throckmorton, and after him manie gentlemen of the citie of Norwich, and the countie of Norffolke, who were all committed to prison, and at the nert sessions of goale deliuerie at the castell of Norwich, the seauententh of Julie before sir Robert Catlin knight lord cheefe iustice, Gilbert Gerard the quéenes attornie generall, and other iustices, ten of them were indicted of high treason, and some others of contempt. Diuerse of them were condemned, and had iudgement the one and twentith of August: and afterward three of them were hanged, bowelled, and quartered, which were John Throckmorton of Norwich gentleman, who stod mute at his arreignment, but at the gallows confessed himselfe to be the cheefe conspirator, and that none had deserued to die but he, for that he had procured them. With him was executed Thomas Bvoke of Kolsbie gentleman on the thirtith of August; and George Dedman of Cringleford gentleman was likewise executed the second of September.

The duke of Norffolke remoued. Felton arreigned with other offendors, and all condemned.

The fourth of August, the duke of Norffolke was remoued from the tower of London to the Charterhouse neere vnto Smithfield. The same daie was arreigned at the Guildhall of London, John Felton, for hanging the foresaid bull of pope Pius Quintus on the gate of the bishop of Londons palace: and also two yong men for coining & clipping of coine, who all were found guiltie of high treason, and had iudgement to be drawne, hanged, & quartered. The eight of August John Felton was drawen from Newgate into Paules churchyard, and there hanged on a gallows new set vp that morning before the bishops palace gate; and being cut downe aliue, he was bowelled and quartered. After this, the same morning the shiriffes returned to Newgate, and so to Tiborne with two yong men, which were there executed for coining and clipping, as is aforesaid.

Felton and others executed for treason.

A tournei into Scotland by the earle of Sussex.

The two and twentith of August the earle of Sussex, lord lieutenant generall for the queenes maiestie in the north, and the lord Scrope warden of the west marches, with diuerse others, marched from Carleill with the quéens armie and force of the north as well of horssemen as footmen into Scotland, passing ouer the riuers of Eske, Leuine & Sarke, which riuer of Sarke parteth England and Scotland, and so to Dornocke wood belonging to Edward Arone, the lord of Bonsholw, and then to Annan a strong house of the lord Harris, which they rased and ouerthrew with others thereabouts: from thense to Hodham, which they burnt and blew vp: from thense to Kennell, a towne belonging to the lord Cowhill, which they burnt: from thense to Donfrise, which they sacked and spoiled of such paltrie as the fugitiues had left, and also rased and ouerthrew a sumptuous house belonging to the quéene of Scots, in the keeping of the lord Harris. Then passing the riuer of Longher, they burnt and spoiled Cowhilles, and Powtracke, and returned to Donfrise, and so to the towne of Bankend, which they burnt, with another house pertaining to William Marwell of the Iles, and so to the castell of Carlauarocke standing in a marish, iust to an arme of the sea, which parteth Annerdale and Gallowaie; which castell they blew vp, and returned homeward, transporting their ordinance ouer quicksands and bogs, where neuer the like was done before, and so came to Dornocke wood.

Waste by fire and sword in Scotland.

Knights made by the earle of Sussex.

The right of August they marched towards Carleill, where (by the waie) they burnt and ouerthrew two houses, the one being Arthur Greames alias Carleill, the other rich George, two notable théeues. The same daie at night after the lord lieutenants comming to Carleill he made knights, sir Edward Hastings, sir Francis Russell, sir Valentine Browne, sir William Hilton, sir Robert Stapleton, sir Henrie Curwen, sir Simon Musgraue. This yéere the fift of October chanced a terrible tempest of wind and raine both by sea and land, by meanes whereof manie ships perished, & much hurt was done in diuerse parts of the realme, as by a little pamphlet set forth therof by Thomas Knell minister apéereth, the effect whereof insueth. About midnight the water ouerflowed so much, that men were faine to forsake their beds, & one woman drowned, where also were lost a great number of sheepe, oxen, kine, horsse, and other cattell. Among other there, one maister Cartwright gentleman, hauing his house inclosed round about, the water came in so much, that a cart being laden with thornes did swim about the ground. Hée lost by the same flood, sheepe, and other cattell, to the value of an hundred pounds. The same gentleman had a close gate by the high waies side, where the water ran ouer so extremelie, that at the fall thereof it made such an hole, that it was fortie foot déepe: so that no man could passe that waie without great danger. To the filling vp of the said hole or pit, was cast in by the men of the said towne fiue and twentie lodes of faggots, & twentie lodes of horsse dung, which said faggots and horsse dung filled not the hole. Also one maister Lée at the friers in Bedford, hauing a faire yard, wherein was great store of elme trées, whereof threescore were blowen downe, with the roots pulled cleane out of the ground. Also he had a close of cones that were cleane destroied.

Tempest by sea and land which did much hurt.

Tho. Knell. what hurt this tempest did in Bedfordshire.

A wonder of an hole made in the ground by a water-course.

The sea brake in betwixt Wisbich and Walsocken, and at the crosse keies drowning Tilneie, and old Lin, saint Marie Teding, saint Marie Tid, saint Johns Wauple, Walton & Walsocken, Enneie, Jarmans, and Stow bridge, all being the space of ten miles. At the crosse keies the goodman of the inne had built an house with a strong foundation ioining vnto an other house being old and not so strong, wherein were certeine ghests. And when the water came in so violentlie, the goodman of the house being in the stronger house, called the men out of the old house, and they would haue gone downe the stairs, but the water was so high that they could not come downe, wherefore they went backe againe, and brake an hole into the other house, where they went thorough, and the last man was no sooner in, but the old house fell downe. The walles of the houses were broken downe, and the horsses that were tied at the manger (which was made fast in the ground) did swim in the water, when the stable was cleane carried awaie, vntill the waters were asswaged, and were saued aliue, and the people were constreined to get vp to the highest parts of the house, and so to be carried awaie in botes.

what hurt this tempest did in the countie of Norffolke.

At Yarmouth a great part of the bridge was carried awaie. The house vpon the hauen called the hauen house, wherein was one Nicholas Iossellin the hauen man this son, with all their toles, were carried into the marishes six miles from the hauen, where it stod vpright, and where they abode long without meat or drinke. Also at Jermans Bridgestréet was verie much hurt done by the extreame flods that were there. Also one Thomas Smith of Yarmouth lost a ship, with seauen men and a bote in it. Also at Newarke by Yarmouth were lost twelue saile. Also a great hulke, laden with oile and pitch, was lost at Worete sand, and about twentie men lost therein, and thirtie saued by the hulke bote. These townes and villages were ouerflowne, that is to saie, Wisbich, Gutborne, Parlon Drone, and Hobhouse. This Hobhouse being an almes house (and the water breaking downe the wals of it) the wind blew the cloths off from the bed of a poore man & his wife: who what hurt this tempest did in the bishoprike of Elie.

A péece of Yarmouth bridge borne awaie with water.

who being cold, awaked, and suddenlie stept out of his bed to reach vp his cloths, and slipt vp to the belte in water, and then he thinking himselfe to be in danger (as he was in deed) and knowing the best waie to escape the danger of the water, he toke his wife on his necke, and carried hir awaie, and so were both saued.

At the same time in Wisbich was a garden, a tennise plaie, & a bowling allie walled about with bricke (which was worth twentie pounds by yeare to the owner) was quite destroied by the water. Pumbie chappell, the whole towne was lost, except three houses. A ship was driuen vpon an house, the sailers thinking they had béene vpon a rocke, committed themselues to God: and three of the marriners lept out of the ship, and chanced to take hold on the house top, and so saued themselues: and the wife of the same lieng in childbed, by climing vp into the top of the house, was also saued by the marriners, hir husband and child being both drowned. Likewise, the church was wholie ouerthrowne except the steeple. Betwéene Boston and Newcastell were threescore sea vessels, as small ships, craires, and such like, lost vpon the coasts of Boston, Hunerston, Marsh chappell, Tetnie, Stepneie, Mercots, Kelbie, & Grimsbie, where no ship can come in without a pilot, which were all lost, with goods, corne, & cattell, with all the salt cotes, where the chiefe and finest salt was made, were vtterlie destroied, to the vtter vndoing of manie a man, and great lamentation both of old and yong.

Wentford bridge, being verie strong, of eight arches in length, had three of the arches broken, and cleane carried awaie. Master Smith at the swan there had his house (being three stories high) ouerflowed vnto the third storie, and the wals of the stable were broken downe, and the horsses tied to the manger were all drowned. Manie men had great losse, as well of sheepe, kine, oxen, great mares, colts of the breed of the great horsses, and other cattell innumerable, of which the names manie of them shall here follow. Master Pelham lost eleuen hundred sheepe at Pumbie chappell. In Summercote were lost fiue hundred sheepe, that were of the inhabitants there. Also betwéene Humerston & Grimsbie were lost eleuen hundred sheepe of one master Spensers, whose sheepheard about middaie, comming to his wife, asked his dinner: and she being more bold than manerlie, said, he should haue none of hir. Then he chanced to looke toward the marishes where the sheepe were, and saw the water breake in so fiercelie, that the sheepe would be lost, if they were not brought from thense, said, that he was not a good sheepheard that would not venture his life for his sheepe, & so went streight to driue them from thense, but he & his sheepe were both drowned, and after the water being gone, he was found dead, standing vpright in a ditch.

Master Thimblebie lost two hundred and twentie sheepe, master Dimocke lost foure hundred sheepe, & master Warly fiue hundred, master Madison lost a ship, master William Askugh of Kelsele, sir Hugh Askugh, master Merin, master Fitz Williams of Maplethorpe, lost by estimation twentie thousand cattell, one and other. Borne was ouerflowne vnto the midwaie of the height of the church. Steeping was wholie carried awaie, where was a waine lode of willow tops, the bodie of the waine with the willowes carried one waie, and the axiltrée and wheeles an other waie. In the towne of saint Edes, the water flowed into the towne in such abundance, that it ran thorough the towne and church, being in the midest therof, hauing about the churchyard a bricke wall of two yards high, was so ouerflowne, that botes were rowed ouer it, without touching of the same. Also a little from Huntington, were three men riding vpon the causete, being then ouerflowne (the water on the causete being not deepe) and thinking no danger therein, chanced to come into a place where the water had galled awaie the earth, and the grauell, were carried awaie with the water: and willowes growing on both sides the waie, two of them caught hold on the willowes, and left their horsses, and saued themselues: and the third chanced to catch a verie little twig of willow betwéene his fingers, hauing verie little hold, and forsaking his horsse, which was carried a great waie from him, had much paine to keepe his hold on the twig, and hold his head aboue the water, and his horsse returning with force against the streame, came againe vnto him, and vnder him: by which meanes he set his feet vpon him, and gat better hold of the willow, and so saued himselfe, and the horsse was immediatlie carried awaie, that he neuer saw him after.

Also Holland, Leuerington, Newton chappell in the sea, long Stutton & Holbich were ouerflowne. And in this countrie also was great losse of cattell. In the low parts in Norfolke, in a little towne called Cliffield, there was a man, his wife, and a sucking child in hir armes ouerwhelmed and slaine by the violence of the waters, and of the boisterous winds. The water called Auen, that passeth by the towne called Stratford vpon Auen, did run with such violence, that méeting with the water called the Seuerne, drone it backe ten miles against the course, ouerflowing much ground, and drowning much cattell. In Newport panell were two houses ouerthrowne, and in one of them an old man and an old woman were ouerwhelmed and slaine. And in the same towne, on the backe side of the Saracens head, the water sprang out of the hard grauellie ground, and flowed so fast, that certeine merchants (sitting there at dinner) were faine to rise and depart from thense to saue themselues. Sir Henrie Leie knight (dwelling at Quarrington) lost by the floods the number of three thousand sheepe, besides horsses and other cattell, a great number.

In the Wish at Rie (a place so called) the water came in so suddenlie, and flowed so high about midnight, that it was eight or nine foot high in mens houses: insomuch that if one William White had not called them vp, some of them had like to haue béene drowned. And the same William White hauing a bote, fetcht a great companie of them out of their windowes, and carried them to drie land as fast as he could fetch them, which were in great danger and feare, and glad to escape with their liues. Moreouer, the water came in so vehementlie there, that it brake into the marishes, and made such waie, that where of late yeares, and now before this great flood came, a cockebote could not passe in at a low water, now a fisherman drawing six foot water and more maie come in at a low water, and at a full sea the greatest ship that the quéenes maiestie hath may come in, and haue good harborough there. The continuance of the same will not onelie be profitable to the most part of the inhabitants there, but also commodious vnto all the quéenes subiects trauelling by sea.

And whereas one of the owners of a great part of the same marishes had certeine poles set vp therein (and being verie meet and inconuenient place of the same marish) for the dreing of their fishing nets, and receiued monie perelie of those that dried their nets there sufficientlie inough: yet he caused his seruant to pull vp the poles, and late them in an house standing in the same marish: and also commanded his seruant to giue them warning, that they should no more

What hurt this tempest did in Lincolneshire.

Threescore sea vessels lost in this tempest.

Great losse of cattell both great and small.

Scripture abused.

What hurt this tempest did in Huntingtonshire.

A man wonderfullie preserued from drowning.

What hurt this tempest did in Staffordshire and Warwikeshire.

Hurt in Buckingham-shire by this tempest.

Hurt in Suffolke by this sudden inundation of waters.

A strange euent wrought by the inflowing of the water.

more hang their nets there, except they would come and compound with him for it. And the same night (by Gods prouidence) it came so to passe, that according to his saieng (though contrarie to his good will and mind) they are not like to hang their nets there anie more, because of the depth of the water is so great, and like to continue. In hope of continuance of the same new opened hauen, certeine men of the same towne haue begun to build faire barks to trauell the seas, the which in continuance of time will be a great furtherance to the maintenance of the quéenes nauie. At the blacke shore end, before the said flood, no bote could passe further than the shore end; and now a bote that draweth six foot water maie come in at a low water. Without the barre, the water is deeper than it was by two foot and more in the chanell.

A new hauen and the same like to continue.

Hart in Kent by the same tempest and breaking in of the streame.

At Plum hill marish, foure miles from Rie, the water came in so outragiouslie, that it brake downe the marish wals, one maister Burie being owner thereof, who lost by the same a thousand one hundred threescore and two of his sheepe, and it is thought that the marish is neuer like to be gotten againe. Also at Crith breach, a mariner riding by the marishes, seeing two maidens in the marishes, and perceiuing the waters breaking in so fast, that the maides were not like to escape, rode vnto them, and one of them gat vp behind him, & the other take hold on the horsse taile, and by that means were both saued from drowning. In the same marish were drowned a great number of sheepe. Also there in a marish land that was sowne, were two boies keeping crowes in the after none, & seeing the water breaking in so vehementlie, gat them into a cart that was not farre from them, where they were faine to tarrie vntill the nert tide, which came in so boisterouslie, that it had like to haue ouerthrowne both the cart & boies. And the one of them being more stronger than the other, kept the other in his armes, where he with cold, wet, and feare, died: so that he was faine to let him fall from him into the water, when he perceiued that he was past recouerie. A little from that place were also drowned a thousand sheepe, and also manie other cattell.

A boie drowned after he was dead.

Hurt in Esser.

From a towne called Rainam, vnto the towne named Maudon, all alongst by the water side were the marishes all ouerflowen, wherein were a great number of cattell drowned. In Claie were two ships laden with Danske ware which came to shore, with no man in them, nor anie man could tell of whence they were. In Claie the dwellers there lost a verie great parcell of salt and herrings barrelled, being housed in an house walled with bricke three foot thicke, and yet the wall was broken downe. Also, there was lost much saffron ground, with manie other things mo, to the great hinderance of manie a man. Also, in Walderswicke, Dunwich, and Blibrowe, was great losse of bord, planke, timber, and salt. A great part of the bridge by Magdalene college was borne cleane awaie, and manie trées were turned vp by the root.

Hurt done by this tempest in Suffolke and Oxford.

The three and twentith of Januarie, the quéenes maiestie, accompanied with hir nobilitie, came from hir house at the Strand, called Summerset place, and entered the citie of London by Temple bar, Fléetstréet, Cheape, and so by the north side of the Burse, to sir Thomas Greshams in Bishops gate street, where she dined. After dinner, hir grace returning through Cornehill, entred the Burse on the southside, and after hir highnesse had viewed euerie part thereof aboue ground, especiallie the Pawne, which was richlie furnished with all sorts of the finest wares in the citie, she caused the same Burse by an herald and a trumpet, to be proclamed the Royall exchange, so to be called from thenceforth, and not otherwise.

Anno Reg. 13.

The quéenes going to the Burse after it was finished.

She giueth it to name the Royall exchange.

The seuententh of Februarie at a place called Kinnaston, néere Marlech hill in the countie of Hereford, was séene the ground to open, and certeine rockes with a péece of ground remoued, and went forward the space of foure daies, making at the first a terrible noise as it went on the earth. It remoued it selfe betwéene six of the clocke in the euening, & seuen the nert morrow fortie pases, carrieng great trées and shéepecotes, some shéepecotes with threescore sheepe in them, some trées fell into the chinkes, other that grew on the same ground, grow now as firmelie on a hill; and some that stood east, stand west; and those that stood west, stand east. The depth of the hole where it first brake out is thirtie foot, the breadth of the breach is eight score yards, and in length aboue twentie score yards. It ouerthrew Kinnaston chapell. Also two high waies be remoued nigh one hundred yards, with the trées of the hedgerowes. The ground in all is six and twentie acres: and where tillage ground was, there is pasture left in place; and where was pasture, there is tillage ground gone vpon it. The ground as it remoued draue the earth before it, & at the lower part ouerwhelmed the ground, so that it is growen to a great hill of twelue fadams high. It remoued from saturdaie till mondaie at night following, and so staied.

A strange kind of earth mouing in the countie of Hereford.

Moreouer this yeare about Candelmas, sir Thomas Sackuille, baron of Buckhurst was sent in ambassage from the quéenes maiestie to Charles the ninth French king, as well to congratulate for his marriage with the daughter of the emperour Maximilian, as for other weightie affaires. And as his ambassage was great, so was his charge no lesse in furnishing himselfe and traine accordinglie, being both in number and furniture such in euerie point, as did apperteine; and his receiuing and interteinement in France by the king and others was agréable thereto, for he was receiued vpon the coast by the gouernours of the fortified townes right honorablie by order from the king. Among other the baron of Bournonsell was one, who being verie well mounted and appointed, left not his lordship before he came to the court, and from thense accompanied him backe vntill his imbarkement homewards.

Sir Thomas Sackuille ambassador to the French king.

His interteinement verie honorable.

In the maine countries he was accompanied with the gouernours and nobles of the places about. And in the good townes where he passed, he was presented by the chiefe magistrates, wherein their good wils were to be thankefullie accepted, though his lordships rewards far ouervalued their presents. At his approch néere to Paris he was incountred on the waie for courtesie sake, by two marquesses of Trans and Saluces; this being of the house of Sauoie, and the other of the worthie familie of Foir. These wanted not such as accompanied them, and the same euen of the best sort. At the lord ambassadors first audience, which was at the castell of Madrill, otherwise called Bullogne néere Paris (where the king then laie) the quénes Almane coches verie brauelie furnished were sent to Paris for him, in one of the which his lordship with the marquesse of Trans rode towards the court, verie narrowlie escaping from a shrewd turne and great mischance, by reason the same coch was ouerthrowen by the Dutch wagoners their negligence, who in a brauerie galloping the field made an ouer short turne, wherewith the marques was sore bruised.

The first place of the lord ambassadors audience.

The lord ambassadors liberalitie.

The lord ambassador at his arriuall at the place was right honorablie receiued, he was banketted by diuerse, and that verie sumptuouslie: which by him was not left vnrequited to the vttermost, and rather with the better. For his liberalitie vnto the French

was

was verie large, but his reward at the kings hands was onelie a chaine waieng a thousand French crownes. At that present there was a great dearth & scarsitie of vittels in France. The riuer of Saine that runneth through Paris was not passable with vessels, by reason of the great frosts: and thereby not onelie all kind of vittels, but also haie and wood hard to come by, and not to be had but at excessiue prices, the countrie thereabouts having before béene sore harried and spoiled by the ciuill tumults. By reason whereof, not onlie the lord of Buckhurst for the space he remained there, but also sir Henrie Norrice (now lord Norrice) and maister Francis Wallingham hir maiesties ambassadors, ligiers successiuelie, were driuen to an increase in expenses, paieng for euerie thing they bought an higher price than ordinarilie had béene accustomed.

The riuer of Saine not passable with vessels.

The ambassador returneth into Englād.

After that the lord Buckhurst had béene feasted and banketted by the king, and other of the French nobilitie, and had accomplished the points of his ambassage, he toke leaue of the king, & departed homewards, arriuing here in England a little before Easter. The second of Aprill a parlement began at Westminster, wherein was granted to the quéenes maiestie (toward hir great charges, in repressing the late rebellion in the north, and pursuing the said rebels and their fautors, which were fled into Scotland) by the cleargie a subsidie of six shillings in the pound; and by the temporaltie two fifteens, with a subsidie of two shillings and eight pence in the pound. The first, the second, and third of Maie was holden at Westminster before the quéenes maiestie a solemne iust at the tilt, tourneie and barriers. The chalengers were Edward earle of Orford, Charles Howard, sir Henrie Lée, and Christopher Hatton esquier, who all did verie valiantlie; but the chiefe honour was giuen to the earle of Orford. The first of June, John Storie a doctor of the canon law, who before had bæne condemned of high treason, was drawen from the towre of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered, his head was set on London bridge, and his quarters on the gates of the citie. Of this monster disguised in the likenesse of a man, it is verie materiall to record what maister Fox hath noted in his historie.

1571

A parlement at westminster.

A subsidie.

Iosts at Westminster at the tilt, tourneie and barriers.

Doctor Storie executed for high treason.

Abr. Fl. ex Iohan. Foxi martyrologio.

¶This doctor Storie (saith he) being an Englishman by birth, and from his infancie not onelie nuzled in papistrie, but also euen as it were by nature earnestlie affected to the same, & growing somewhat to riper yeares, in the daies of quéene Marie became a most bloudie tyrant, and cruell persecutor of Christ in his members, as all the stories of martyrs almost do declare. Thus he raging all the reigne of the foresaid quéene Marie, against the infallible truth of Christs gospell, and the true professors thereof, neuer ceased till he had consumed to ashes two or three hundred blessed martyrs, who willinglie gaue their liues for the testimonie of his truth. And thinking their punishment in fire not cruell inough, he went about to inuent new torments for the holie martyrs of Christ; such was his hatred to the truth of Christs gospell: but in the end the Lord looking vpon the affliction, and cruell bloudshedding of his seruants, toke awaie quéene Marie the great piller of papistrie. After whome succéeded ladie Elisabeth now queene of England, who staieng the bloudie sword of persecution from raging anie further, caused the same doctor Storie to be apprehended, and committed to ward with manie other his complices, sworne enimies to Christs glorious gospell.

Storie's education and birth.

Storie a bloudie persecutor.

Storie inuenting new torments for the martyrs.

Storie apprehended.

Storie conueied himselfe ouer the seas, where he continued a bloudie persecutor.

The said Storie hauing bæne a while detained in prison, at the last by what means I know not, brake forth of hold, and conueied himselfe ouer the seas, where he continued a most bloudie persecutor, still raging against Gods saints with fire and sword. Insomuch as he growing to be familiar and right dære to duke Dalua in Antwerpe, receiued a speciall commission from him to search all the ships for goods forfeited, and for English bookes and such like. And in this fauour and authoritie he continued there for a space, by the which meanes he did much hurt, and brought manie a good man and woman to trouble, and extreme perill of life through his bloudthirstie crueltie. But at the last the Lord (when the measure of his iniquitie was full) proceeded in iudgement against him, and cut him off from the face of the earth, according to the prayers of manie a good man, which came to passe in order as followeth.

Storie obteined a commission to search for English bookes.

It being certeinlie knowne (for the brute thereof was gone forth into all lands) that he not onelie intended the subuersion and ouerthrow of his natiue countrie of England by bringing in forren hostilitie, if by anie means he might compasse it; but also dailie and hourelie murthered Gods people: there was this platforme laid (by Gods prouidence no doubt) that one maister Parker a merchant should saile vnto Antwerpe, and by some means to conueie Storie into England. This Parker arriuing at Antwerpe, suborned certeine to repaire to doctor Storie, and to signifie vnto him, that there was an English ship come fraught with merchandize; and that if he would make search thereof himselfe, hée should find store of English bookes, and other things for his purpose. Storie hearing this and suspecting nothing, made hast towards the ship, thinking to make the same his preie; and comming aboord searched for English hereticall books (as he called them) & going downe vnder the hatches, bicause he would be sure to haue their blood if he could, they clapped downe the hatches, hoised vp their sailes, hauing (as God would) a good gale, and sailed awaie into England, where they arriuing presented this bloudie butcher and traitorous rebell Storie, to the no little reioising of manie an English heart.

Storie intendeth the ouerthrow of England.

A platforme laid to apprehend Storie.

Storie searched the English ships for bookes, and is apprehended and brought into England.

He being now committed to prison, continued there a good space: during all which time, he was laboured and solicited dailie by wise and learned fathers, to recant his diuelish & erroneous opinions, to conforme himselfe to the truth, and to acknowledge the quéenes maiesties supremacie. All which he vtterlie denied to the death, saieng that he was sworne subiect to the king of Spaine, and was no subiect to the quéene of England, nor hée his souereigne quéene. And therefore (as he well deserued) he was condemned (as a traitor to God, the quéenes maiestie, and the realme) to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, which was performed accordinglie, he being laid vpon an hurdle, and drawne from the towre along the streets to Tiburne, where he being hanged till he was halfe dead, was cut downe and striped. And (which is not to be forgot) when the executioner had cut off his priuie members, he rushing vp vpon a sudden gaue him a blow vpon the eare, to the great wonder of all that stood by. And thus ended this bloudie Nemrod his wretched life, whose iudgement I leaue to the Lord.]

Storie a traitor hanged, drawne and quartered.

The eightéenth of June, in Trinitie terme, there was a combat appointed to haue bæne fought for a certeine manour & demaine lands belonging thereunto, in the Ile of Hartie, adioining to the Ile of Shepeie in Kent. Simon Low & John Lime were plaintifs, and had brought a writ of right against Thomas Paramore, who offered to defend his right by battell. Wherevpon the plaintifs aforsaid accepted to answer his challenge, offering likewise to defend their right to the same manour and lands, and to proue by battell, that Paramore had no right nor good title to haue the same manour and lands. Herevpon

A combat appointed at Cuthill but not tried.

Thorne and Nailer combattants.

vpon the said Thomas Paramore brought before the iudges of the common plees at Westminster, one George Thorne, a big, broad, strong set fellow; & the plaintifs Henrie Nailer, maister of defense, and seruant to the right honourable the earle of Leicester, a proper slender man, & not so tall as the other. Thorne cast downe a gantlet, which Nailer toke vp, vpon the sundaie before the battell should be tried. On the next morow, the matter was staied, & the parties agreed, that Paramore being in possession shuld haue the land, & was bound in fiue hundred pounds to consider the plaintifs, as vpon hearing the matter the iudges should award. The quenes maiestie abhorring bloudshed, & (as the poet verie well saith) was the taker vp of the matter, in this wise. It was thought good, that for Paramores assurance, the order should be kept touching the combat, and that the plaintifs Low and Kime should make default of appearance; but that yet such as were suerties for Nailer their champions appearance, should bring him in; and likewise those that were suerties for Thorne, should bring in the same Thorne in discharge of their band: and that the court should sit in Tuthill fields, where was prepared one plot of ground, of one and twentie yards square, double railed for the combat. Without the west square a stage being set vp for the iudges, representing the court of the common plees.

The quarell of combat staied by the quenes maiestie.

(Tristia sanguinei deuitans prælia campi)

The maner of all things in readinesse for the combat.

All the compasse without the lists was set with scaffolds one aboue another, for people to stand and behold. There were behind the square where the iudges sat, two tents, the one for Nailer, the other for Thorne. Thorne was there in the morning timelie, Nailer about seauen of the clocke came thorough London, apparelled in a dublet, and gallie gascoine breeches all of crimsin sattin, cut and raised, a hat of blacke veluet, with a red feather and band, before him drums and fifes plaieng. The gantlet cast downe by George Thorne was borne before the said Nailer vpon a swords point, and his baston (a staffe of an ell long made taper wise tipt with horne) with his shield of hard leather was borne after him, by Askam a yeoman of the quenes gard. He came into the palace at Westminster, and staieng not long before the hall doore, came backe into the Kings street, and so along thorough the Sanctuarie and Tuthill street into the field, where he staied till past nine of the clocke, and then sir Jerome Bowes brought him to his tent: Thorne being in the tent with sir Henrie Cheinie long before.

Nailer prepareth himselfe for the incounter against Thorne.

About ten of the clocke, the court of common plees remoued, & came to the place prepared. When the lord chiefe iustice, with two other his associats were set, then Low was called solemnlie to come in, or else to lose his writ of right. Then after a certeine time, the suerties of Henrie Nailer were called to bring in the said Nailer, champion for Simon Low. And shortlie therevpon, sir Jerome Bowes, leading Nailer by the hand, entred with him the lists, bringing him downe that square by which he entred, being on the left hand of the iudges, and so about till he came to the next square, iust against the iudges, and there making courtesie, first with one leg and then with the other, passed forth till he came to the middle of the place, and then made the like obeisance, and so passing till they came to the barre, there he made the like courtesie, and his shield was held vp aloft ouer his head. Nailer put off his netherstocks, and so barefot and barelegged, saue his silke scaullones to the ankles, and his dublet slæues tied vp aboue the elbow, and bareheaded, came in, as is afore said. Then were the suerties of George Thorne called to bring in the same Thorne: and immediatlie sir Henrie Cheinie entering at the vper end on the right hand of the iudges, vsed the like order in comming about by his side, as Nailer had before on that other side: and so comming to the barre with like obeisance, held vp his shield. Proclamation was made that none should touch the barres, nor presume to come within the same, except such as were appointed.

The lord chiefe iustice rehearsing the maner of bringing the writ of right by Simon Low, of the answer made thereunto by Paramore, of the proceeding therein, and how Paramore had challenged to defend his right to the land by battell, by his champion Thomas Thorne, and of the accepting the triall that was by Low with his champion Henrie Nailer: & then for default of appearance in Low, he adiudged the land to Paramore, & dismissed the champion, acquiting the suerties of their bands. He also willed Henrie Nailer to render againe to George Thorne his gantlet. Whereto the said Nailer answered, that his lordship might command him anie thing, but willinglie he wold not render the said gantlet to Thorne except he could win it. And further he challenged the said Thorne to play with him halfe a score blowes, to shew some pastime to the lord chiefe iustice, & to the other there assembled. But Thorne answered, that he came to fight, & would not plaie. Then the lord chiefe iustice commending Nailer for his valiant courage, cõmanded them both quietlie to depart the field, &c.

The lord chiefe iustice toucheth the present cake.

Nailer challengeth Thorne at a few blowes.

On the sixteenth of Julie, Rebecca Chamber, late wife to Thomas Chamber of Yerietesham, was found culpable of poisoning the said Thomas Chamber hir husband, at the assises holden at Maidstone in the countie of Kent. For the which fact she (hauing well deserued) was there burnt on the next morow.

A woman burnt at Maidston for poisoning.

The seuenth of September, the duke of Norfolke was remoued from the Charterhouse, to the tower of London prisoner.

Duke of Norfolke sent to the tower.

The two and twentith of September deceassed John Jewell bishop of Salisburie, in his life a most eloquent and diligent preacher, but a far more painefull and studious writer, as his workes remaining do beare witnesse, wherby his fame shall neuer die.

Bishop of Salisburie deceassed.

The ninth of Nouember, a sermon was preached in Paules church at London, by maister William Foulks of Cambridge, to giue thanks to almightie God for the victorie, which of his mercifull clemencie it had pleased him to grant to the christians in the Leuant seas, against the common enimies of our faith, the Turks, the seuenth of October last past. His theame was taken out of the sixtenth psalme of Dauids psalter, the fourth verse.

A sermon in Paules church for victorie against the Turkes.

There were present at this sermon, the lord maior of London sir William Allen, with the aldermen and craftsmen in their liueries. And in the euening there were bonefiers made thorough the citie, with banketting and great reioising, as good cause there was, for a victorie of so great importance vnto the whole state of the christian common-wealth. In the which were taken one hundred and thirtie vessels,

The assemblie at this sermõ.

Contareno.

that is, one hundred and seuentéene gallies, and thirteene galleots, beside other vessels that were bonged, abandoned, and let go at large abroad in the seas, as gallies, foists, and galleots, to the number of foure score, or thereabouts. And of their chiefetteins slaine in that bloudie battell, these we find by name as principall: Halie Balla high admerall of the whole naute, Amar Beie capteine of the Janissaries, Allan Beie the sonne of Barbarossa, with his sonne Mehemet Beie gouernor of Mitellene, Gider Beie gouernour of Chio, Capsan Beie gouernour of the Rhodes, Peruis Aga gouernour of Affrica otherwise Mahomeda, Mustafa Scelubie high treasuror, Affis Cluega capteine of Gallipolie, Tramontana chiefe maister of the Turkish Principals among the Turkes slaine.

kish emperours owne gallie, Caracoza, and also manie others, whose names were too long to rehearse: but the whole number that were slaine of the Turks could not be perfectlie knowne, by reason that manie were drowned in the sea, which came not to fight.

The whole number of the slaine. Bizari. Contareno.

Some yet affirme, that there were slaine of them in all, to the number of one and twentie thousand, although other speake but of fifteene thousand. But Contareno writeth, that there were slaine and taken 29990. Of which number he reckoneth 3846 to have remained prisoners, and among them were these persons of name, Mahemet Beie, Sainus Beie, and Sirocho Beie. There escaped yet from this discomfiture, Partau, generall of all the men of warre and souldiors by land, Ochialie, Murate Raie with his sonne, and Hali Genouese, and with them about fortie gallies, foists, and fregats. Moreover, there were found in the Turkish gallies that came into the hands of the christians, one hundred and sixteene double canons, two hundred sixtie and fiue demie canons, and sixteene other great peeces of brasse. For it is to be remembred, that not onelie the Turkish gallies, but also the christians were throughlie armed, furnished, and appointed with men, munition, and ordinance in euerie behalfe.

Bizari.

Persons that escaped from this discomfiture.

Waties that fell into the christians hands.

In Halie Bassa his gallie there were aboord three hundred harquebusiers Janissaries, and an hundred archers. In the gallie of Don Giouan de Austria chiefe admerall of the christians, were foure hundred harquebusiers Spaniards, of the tierse of Sardigna, beside a great number of lords and gentlemen, and also beside the rowers: and in euerie other gallie were 200 fighting men at the least, beside the rowers, & in some 300, & other some 400 according to the mould of the vessels. The number of the christian gallies and galliots, were in all two hundred and two, besides six great galleasses. The Turks had their gallies, galliots, and foists, to the number of two hundred and fiftie, as appeareth by the account afore made, of those that were taken, abandoned, and escaped. There were deliuered and set at libertie, about twelue thousand, some say fourteene thousand christian captiues, whome the Turks kept for slaues, and had them chained there aboord with them in their gallies. But this victorie was not got without great losse of the christians, for beside Augustine Barbarigo, the principall procuditor of the Uenetians, there died seuenteene other gentlemen of Uenice, being men of good estimation, John Cardone, & Barnardine Cardone Spaniards, Virginio and Horatio Ursini Romans, Troilo, Sabello, Marco Molino, besides diuerse other nobles and gentlemen of name, as well Italians, as Spaniards, and Almans.

The number of the christian gallies & the Turkes.

Christian captiues set at libertie 14000.

Contareno. The number of christians that died. Bizari.

In all, there died of the christians to the number of seauen thousand six hundred fiftie and six, beside those that were hurt, being in like number to them that were slaine, among whom was don John de Austria, generall of all the christian armie there, Sebastian Uenier the Uenetians generall, & the counte de Santa Fiore with diuerse others. Moreouer, there were christian gallies bouged, three of the Uenetians, one of the popes, one belonging to the duke of Sauoie, and another to the knights of Malta. There was one also taken & led awaie by Ochialie, and his companie. Such was the successe of this battell, which continued for the space of six houres, in the end whereof the victorie remaining with the christians, caused no small reioising through all parties of christendome. For if this victorie had béene followed, with his gratious helpe and assistance that was the giuer thereof, the proud and loftie horne of the Ismaelite had béene so brused, as peraduenture his courage would haue quailed to put forth the same so Contareno.

The space how long the battell continued.

spedilie as he did. But such is the malice of the time, that the christians haue more pleasure to draw their weapons one against another, than against that common enimie of vs all, who regardeth neither protestant nor catholike (they may be sure) those of the Greekish church nor others, as if the mercifull prouidence of the Lord of hosts do not in time disappoint his proceedings, it will be too soone perceiued, though happilie too late to stop the breach, when the flood hath got head, and once woone passage through the banke.

A common fault among christians.

It were therfore to be wished of all those that tender the suertie of the christian commonwealth, that princes would permit their subiects to liue in libertie of conscience, concerning matters of faith: and that subiects againe would be readie in dutifull wise, to obeie their princes in matters of ciuill gouernment, so that compounding their controuersies among themselues, with tollerable conditions, they might employe their forces against the common enimie, to the benefit of the whole christian world, which (the more is the pitie) they haue so long exercised one against another, to each others destruction. And as for matters in variance about religion, rather to decide the same with the word, than with the sword, an instrument full vnfit for that purpose, and not lightlie vsed nor allowed of by the ancient fathers in time of the primitiue church. But sith this is rather to be wished than hoped for, by anie aparant likelihood, considering the strange contrarietie of humors now reigning among men in sundrie parts of christendome, let vs leaue the successe of our wish to the pleasure of God, the author of all good haps, who ruleth the harts of princes (as the poet saith verie trulie

God counsell if that faith be the faith of Christ & his true church.

——— & eius
In manibus sunt reg um animi; quocúnq; voluntas Fert sua, vertit eos)

and frameth the peoples minds as séemeth best to his diuine prouidence. And withall, let vs also humblie offer to him our praiers, instantlie beséeching him to spare vs in mercie, and not to reward vs after our iniquities: but rather by his omnipotent power to turne from vs the violence of our enimies, in abridging their forces, as it may séeme good to his mercifull fauour and great clemencie.

The thirtith of December Reinold Greie was by the quéenes maiestie restored earle of Kent. ¶ The thirteenth of Januarie deceassed sir William Peter knight, who for his iudgement and pregnant wit had béene secretarie and of the priuie councell to foure kings and quéenes of this realme, and seauen times ambassador abroad in forren lands: he augmented Exceter college in Oxford with lands, to the value of an hundred pounds by yeare: and also builded ten almes houses in the parish of Ingerstone for twentie poore people, ten within the house, and ten without the house, hauing euerie one two pence the daie, a winter gowne, and two load of wood, and among them séeding for six kine winter and summer, and a chapleine to saie them seruice dailie.]

Anno Reg. 14.

Reinold Grey earle of Kent. I St. pag. 1155.

Sir William Peter deceassed.

His charitable déeds.

1572

The thirteenth of Januarie the lord Thomas Howard duke of Norfolke was arreigned at Westminster hall, before George lord Talbot, earle of Shrewesburie, high steward of England for that daie, and there by his péeres found giltie of high treason, and had iudgement accordinglie. The eleuenth of Februarie Kenelme Barnete, and Edmund Mather were drawen from the tower of London, and Henrie Rolfe from the Marshalsea in Southwarke, all three to Tiburne and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered for treason; Barnete and Mather for conspiracie, and Rolfe for counterfeiting of the quéens maiesties hand.

Duke of Norfolke arreigned.

Mather, Barnete, and Rolfe executed.

¶ The quenes maiestie hearing crediblie by report, that certeine lewd persons, vnder pretense of

I.S. pag. 1155.

executing

Conuciers of bels, lead, and other church goods, are to be punished to the example of their two manie followers.

executing commissions for inquiries to be made for lands concealed, contrarie to hir maiesties meaning, chalenging lands, stocks of monie, plate, &c: letting not also to make pretense to the bels, led, and other such things belonging vnto parishchurches or chapels. Hir maiestie meaning spedilie to withstand such manner of vnlawfull practises, commanded, that all commissions then extant and not determined, for inquisition of anie manner of concealements, should be by Supersedias, out of hir excheker revoked. And also appointed spedie remedie to be had against such extorcioners, as more at large appeareth by proclamation, concluding thus. Finallie, hir maiestie would hir iustices of assise to haue some speciall care, not onelie to the premisses, but also to the reforming of certeine couetous & iniurious attempts, of diuerse that of late time by other colour than for hir maiesties vse, had taken awaie the led of churches and chapels; yea and bels also out of steeples, and other common goods belonging to parishes: an example not to be suffered vnpunished, nor vnreformed. And so hir maiestie exhorteth hir iustices of hir assise to prouide seuere remedie, both for punishment and reformation thereof. Dated at Westminster the thirteenth daie of Februarie, the fourteenth yeare of hir reigne.]

Sir William Paulet lord treasuror deceassed.

The tenth of March deceased sir William Paulet knight, lord saint John, earle of Wiltshire, marquesse of Winchester, knight of the honorable order of the garter, one of the quenes maiesties priuie councell, and lord high treasuror of England, at his manor of Basing. This worthie man was borne in the yeare of our Lord 1483, the first yeare of king Richard the third, and liued about the age of foure score and seauen yeares, in sir kings and quenes daies. He serued fiue kings and quenes, Henrie the seauenth, Henrie the eight, Edward the first, quene Marie, and quene Elisabeth. All these he serued faithfullie, and of them was greatlie fauoured. Himselfe did see the children of his childrens children, growing to the number of one hundred and three. A rare blessing giuen by God to men of his calling.

His ancient and honorable seruice.

On the fiue and twentith and six and twentith of March, by the commandement of the quenes maiestie hir councell, the citizens of London assembling at their seuerall halles; the maisters collected and chose out the most likelie and actiue persons of euerie their companies, to the number of three thousand, whome they appointed to be pikemen and shot. The pikemen were forthwith armed in faire corslets and other furniture according therunto; the gunners had euerie of them his caliuer with the furniture, and murrians on their heads. To these were appointed diuerse valiant capteins, who to traine them vp in warlike feats, mustered them thrise euerie weeke, sometimes in the artillerie yard, teaching the gunners to handle their peeces, sometimes at the Miles end, & in saint Georges field, teaching them to skirmish. In the which skirmish on the Miles end the tenth of Aprill, one of the gunners of the goldsmiths companie was shot in the side with a peece of a scouring sticke left in one of the caliuers, wherof he died, and was buried the twelfe of Aprill in Pauls churchyard; all the gunners marching from the Miles end in battell raie, shot off their caliuers at his graue.

Three thousand chosen persons for pikemen and gunners out of halles.

Training vp of yong soldiors in the field.

On Maie daie they mustered at Greenwich before the quenes maiestie, where they shewed manie warlike feats, but were much hindered by the weather, which was all daie showring, they returned that present night to London, and were discharged the next morrow. The fourth of Maie Walter Deuereux, lord Ferrers of Chartleie, and vicount of Hereford was created earle of Esser; and Edward Fines lord Clinton and Saie high admerall of England was created earle of Lincolne. The eight of Maie the parlement began at Westminster, and that same daie in the parlement by the quenes maiesties writs, sir Henrie Compton knight, lord of Compton in the Hole, sir Henrie Cheinie knight lord of Todington, sir William Paulet knight of Basing, & sir Henrie Norris knight lord of Ricot, were called barons into the higher house. In this parlement, for so much as the whole realme of England was exceedinglie pestered with roges, vagabunds, and sturdie beggers, by meanes whereof dailie happened diuerse horrible murthers, thefts, and other great outrages: it was enacted, that all persons aboue the age of foure teene yeres, being taken begging, vagarant, & wandering disorderlie, should be apprehended, whiped, and burned through the grissle of the right eare, with a hot iron of one inch compasse for the first time so taken.

Barons made.

Roges burnt through the eare.

The foure & twentith of Maie, Martine Bullocke was hanged on a gibet by the well with two buckets in Bishops gate street of London, for robbing, and most shamefullie murthering of a merchant named Arthur Hall, in the parsonage of S. Martine by the said well. This Martine had procured the said Arthur Hall to come to the said parsonage, to buie of him certeine plate. But after the said Arthur had well viewed the same, he said; This is none of your plate, it hath doctor Gardeners marke, and I know it to be his: That is true said Martine Bullocke, but he hath apointed me to sell it, &c. After this talke, whilest the said Arthur was weieng the plate, the same Martine fetcht out of the kitchin a thicke washing beetle, and comming behind him stroke the said Arthur on the head, that he felled him with the first stroke; and then strake him againe, and after toke the said Arthurs dagger, and sticked him, and with his knife cut his throte: and after would haue trussed him in a Danske chest, but the same was too short. Wherupon he tumbled him downe a paire of staires, and after thinking to haue buried him in the cellar, his legs being broken with the first fall, and stiffe, he could not draw him downe the cellar staires being winding. Wherfore he cut off his legs with an hatchet, and in the end trussed him with straw in a drie vat: and saieng it was his apparell and bookes, caused the same to be carried to the water side, and so shipped to Rie. But as God would haue it, there was suspicion gathered against the murtherer, whereby he was examined before alderman Branch then one of the shiriffes of London; but so small likelihood appeared that he should be guiltie, that there was an honest man dwelling in saint Laurence Pontneis named Robert Gee a clothworker, who supposing the offendor to be cleere in the matter, vndertoke for his forth comming. Whereupon Bullocke being suffered to go at libertie, slipt awaie, first to Westminster; and there taking bote, passed vp the riuer: and comming on land beyond Kingston, passed forth till he came to Okingham, in the forrest of Windsore, an eight miles beyond the towne of Windsore: and from thense (what moued him, I leaue to the secret iudgement of God) he came backe againe vnto London, lodging at the red lion in Holborne.

Martin Bullocke hanged at the well with two buckets.

Fellonie and murther combined.

The maner of the murther committed.

Ah mercilesse murtherer

The murtherer examined.

He hath libertie notwithstanding his offense.

In the meane time the forsaid Gee, vpon knowledge had that Bullocke was withdrawen out of the waie, was not onelie had in some suspicion, but also committed to ward: albeit so as he had libertie to take order to send abrode such as should make suite after Bullocke. And amongst other that went forth, one of his seruants was sent to Rie, whither the drie vat was conueied: and comming thither, the same drie vat was opened, wherein the mangled corps of Hall was found: whereby the truth of the matter

A muster at Greenewich before the queene.

Earles of Esser and Lincolne created.

The dye hat, wherein the murthered man was put to be transported, descried.

came to light, and by the good prouidence of God, the reuealer of such euill facts, Bullocke was at the verie same time discouered at the place in Holborne afore mentioned, and there apprehended, did receiue (as ye haue heard) due punishment for his heinous and most wicked offense.

Earle of Lincolne and other ambassadors into France.

The xv and twentith of Maie, the right honorable earle of Lincolne, departed from London towards France ambassador, being accompanied with the lord Dacres, the lord Rich, the lord Talbot, the lord Sands, and the lord Clinton, sir Arthur Chambernowne, sir Jerome Bowes, and sir Edward Hastings knights, with diuerse other gentlemen, who taking ship at Douer, cut ouer to Bullongne, where they were verie honorablie receiued, and conueied by iournies to Paris, where they were lodged in a house of the kings named le chasteau de Louure, being attended vpon of the kings officers. Fiue daies after they went to the king at a house called Madrill, where the king with his two brethren, the admerall, & the most part of the nobles of France met them a distance from the place, & brought them to the house: where they dined, and abode till sundaie following, from whence the king and his nobles with the nobles of England came to Paris. The king, his two brethren, & our ambassador riding in one coch togither, and the nobles of England and France being so placed also in coches, came to the said castell of Louure, and there dined. After dinner the king, our ambassador, with the nobilitie of both realmes, went to a church named saint Germane, where the French king, his brethren, and nobilitie heard euensong. The noblemen of England withdrawing them into a chappell till euensong was done, were then fetched thense by the nobles of France to the king and his brethren that awaited their comming, where was confirmed the league which had beene concluded at Blois the nintenth of Aprill, deputies being there for the French partie, Francis Montmorencie, Reinold Birago, Sebastian de Laubespine, and Paule de Foix: and for the quene of England, sir Thomas Smith, and maister Walsingham ambassadors.

The maner of the ambassadors interteinement.

League with France confirmed in France.

This being done, they departed without the wals of Paris, to a garden of pleasure, where they supped. After supper, the king departed to his place of Madrill, and the nobles of England vnto the castell of Louure. On mondaie, the admerall feasted the nobles of England: vpon tuesdaie, the duke of Anion the kings brother, and on wednesdaie the duke of Alanson his yonger brother, and so passed in feasting and banketting, with rich gifts on both parts. On fridaie, the nobles of England toke leaue of the king, and on sundaie came to saint Denis, and after to Bullongne, where they toke ship, and returned into England the fourth of Julie. The second of June in the morning, betweene the houres of seuen and eight, Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke, was beheaded on a scaffold newlie set vp on tower hill. ¶ This execution in a short time was spred abroad, for fame, which (as the poet saith in few words had sounded the same farre and neere: insomuch that in tract of time, as men had leasure to laie their collections togither, among other things this is recorded: euen of strangers. For the execution of an honorable personage must needs be so much the more notorious, as his misdeed is dishonorable. Touching the duke therefore this I find in Schardius (howsoeuer he came to the knowledge thereof) a moderne historien, and doctor of the lawes in Basill. The duke of Norffolke, who (as we haue said) was condemned for treason the xix daie of Januarie, was brought out of the tower of London, to a plaine hard by, which they call the hill; in the middest whereof a scaffold had beene builded manie yeares ago seruing for execution: which being old was both rotten and ruinous. For quene Elisabeth hauing with mercie gouerned hir commonwealth, there was no punishment inflicted there vpon anie for the space of fourteene yeares. Wherefore a new scaffold must needs be made. Which when the duke at seuen of the clocke in the morning had mounted, hauing on a silken doublet, & a long gowne of like fine stuffe, all blacke, earnestlie he beheld the people round about with his cap on his head. Now when he had stood still a prettie while, and cast his eies vpon the scaffold, he asked whereabouts he might best stand to speake vnto the people? For the scaffold was foure square, and the people came flocking from all places. Now when he was directed to the east side thereof, and the people had muttered and whispered diuerslie among themselues, maister Alexander Nowell deane of Paules besought them that were present to be silent and still. Then began the duke to speake to the people as followeth.

——— volat leuibus sublata per æthera pennis)

Schardius in reb. gest. sub Maximil. imperat. secundo pag. 2513.

Foren nations heare and write of the quenes vnbloudie gouernement.

The attire, behauiour, & gesture of the duke at his execution.

Maister Nowell deane of Paules the dukes ghostlie father.

The duke of Norffolkes vvords vttered on the scaffold at tower hill when he should be executed

IT is no rare thing (good people) to see a man come hither to die, albeit since this quens most blessed reigne I be the first, I praie God I be the last. The people said Amen. It is a hard matter for a man of my calling to vse long speech in such an audience, either for that audacitie serues me not, or for that comming to such an end as I do, the feare of death troubleth me: and therfore I beseech you all heartilie to beare with me, I will not be long, I will make a short speech and diuide my talke into three parts. And first concerning my offense towards my prince, wherein some thing I haue to confesse against my selfe, and in some thing to cleere my selfe. I come not to complaine against my peeres, I do acquit them, I haue deserued to die, it is not vnknowne. I haue dealt with the quene of Scots in verie great and high matters, without making my prince priuie thereunto, otherwise than I ought haue done.

The duke confesseth his offense against the quenes maiestie.

There is one thing, which greatlie grudgeth my conscience, that is: when I was first deliuered out of this place, I made a submission, & promised the Q. neuer to deale further in that matter; and yet contrarie to my promise I meant & did otherwise, I am sorie for it. It was reported I made a vow and toke a solemne oth, and receiued the communion vpon it, that is not true: the other was too much. It was reported also I went about to destroie the citie of London: I take God to my witnesse I neuer meant to hurt this citie. I haue dealt with suspected persons, and such as haue shewed themselues enimies to the state; especiallie one I will name, to wit one Radulpho, whome I neuer talked withall but once, and then I liked not his dealing, he shewed me two letters which he said came from the pope.

He is sorie for the violating of his promise made to the quene.

He maketh shew to cleere himselfe in diuerse points.

Then said one of the shiriffes of London, God my lord be short: he said, I will be short, I haue not much to saie, good gentlemen beare witnesse, I come not to cleere my selfe. I saw two letters, the one inciphered and the other discyphered. I was charged to confeder with the rebels, I take God to witnesse I did neuer. The secondarie interrupted him and said, I praie you my lord go not about to cleere your selfe, you haue beene tried as honourablie, as anie noble man hath euer beene in this land: I praie you make short, for the houre is past, it is vpon the perill of their liues (meaning the shiriffes) they can not suffer you.

Oh

He meaneth confession of his religion.

Oh I praie you giue me leaue a little, I do confesse my fault. This is my confession, I do confesse it, notwithstanding my religion. It hath bæn reported I haue bæne a papist, a confederer with papists, a friend to them and a mainteiner of them and of their religion: I take God to witnesse I am none, nor euer was a papist since I knew what religion ment. I haue had friends, yea familiar friends, yea peradventure seruants that haue bæne papists, with whom I haue borne: but I take God to witnesse I am none, I vtterlie defie the pope and his religion, and I hope to be saued onlie by my faith in Jesus Christ: and I vtterlie abhorre all mans traditions. And if at anie time I did giue countenance to anie papist, whereby anie godman or the church was offended, I aske them mercie: there is no man that allloweth better of this religion than I do. Then he was desired againe to be short. Now touching the goodnesse of the quænes maiestie, I am much bound to hir grace. I do thanke hir humblie for that she hath forgiuen all my offenses, and hath prolonged my life so long. You see how good she hath bæn to me, I haue bæne loked for here long before this time, God send hir long ouer you to reigne, she hath promised me to be gratious to my poore orphan children. God grant my death maie end all troubles. And if anie of you haue anie one faction, or two, or three, or mo, let him giue ouer & forsake it. Manie wish and desire diuerse things: but they know not what they wish. They seeke their owne destruction. If euerie man should haue his wish, God knoweth how manie would repent, whatsoeuer they are.

He confesseth himselfe much bound to the quænes maiestie.

He exhorteth to beware of factions.

The quæne hath promised in my death to forgiue all, and I praie God that she maie liue manie yeares. I remember well the words of that good father and holie martyr Latimer. He told the people, that for their wickednesse God would take awaie his blessing from them. I praie God the contrarie, that your good life maie be such, that God maie turne awaie those plagues that he hath thretned. He spake it in an honorable place, in the pulpit, before king Edward: yet let not this place discredit my words. I praie God preserue the quæns maiestie, and that she maie liue and reigne ouer you manie yeares: euen to the worlds end, which I beléeue that some one aliue shall see. Then he knéeled downe and praied, and master Nowell knéeled downe by him and wept, with manie others. His praier was vnto God for the continuance of the truth of his gospell; he praied also instantlie for the quænes most prosperous reigne, and knéeling vpon his knees he said two psalms, to wit Miserere and Domine ne in furore, and in the first psalme he praied to build the wals of Jerusalem, according to the psalme. Master Nowell said, That is meant of Christs church. I know that well (said he) I meane not the church of Rome, I abhorre it, but the church of England and of all the world whersoeuer it be.

He putteth the people in mind of Latimers words vttered before king Edward.

He prayeth and manie more with him: the effect of his praier.

I haue forgotten one thing, I thanke thée God that hast put me in mind of it. I forgiue all the world and I aske all the world forgiuenesse: and I protest before God, if I knew anie particular man I had offended, I would namelie aske him forgiuenesse. Then he read the other psalme, wherein adulterie is mentioned, and when he came to that point, he said: I would I were as cleare in euerie thing as in that, sauing for thought, and that is as euill. Then he said a collect, and in the end he said, In manus tuas Domine, &c. in Latine and English. And then he desired the people to praie for him while he liued, for (quoth he) I loke not to haue anie excuse after my death. Then he imbraced sir Henrie Leie, and after a few secret words betweene them, Master Nowell stood vp and said to the people, He doth desire you all with one voice to saie Lord haue mercie vpon him, and after to saie no more words, nor to make anie short or shritching for troubling of him in his last visitation. Then the duke knéeled downe, and master Nowell bowed himselfe towards him with manie imbracings, and toke there leaue each of other. Then the executioner desired him knéeling to forgiue him: and he toke him by the hand and forgaue him, and then requested sight of the axe; Master Nowell said, The sight will trouble you. He answered; No, let me see it: but he shewed it not, & then he laied his necke vpon the blocke. Then the executioner said; My lord your head lieth not well. I will make it lie well, saith he, & therewith licking vp his bodie he laid his necke euen vpon the blocke, which done it was cut cleane off at one stroke. This was the end of the duke of Northfolke, a man whose life God had limited, as also the estate wherein he sometimes flourished: both which (as all things else) in a short time vanished. Let all degrées therefore learne, both by precept and example to know God principallie, secondlie their souereigne Gods annointed, and finallie themselues to be subiects: forgetting their owne honour, which puffeth men vp manie times with the wind of vainglorie, euen to their owne ouerthrow, whilest they become insolent, and dreame that the transitorie aduancements of this world will make them princes, princes péeres; nale (O monstrous madnesse) gods, whereas all things are mutable and momentanie, and the higher that a man doth clime, the greater is his fall; as verie aptlie saith the poet in these words:

He knéeleth downe and submitteth himselfe to the axe.

Hoc fragili varijs voluuntur tasibus orbe
Omnia, cels a ruit turris grauiore ruina.

The discourse and catalog of all the dukes of England by creation or descent since the time of the conquest.

The collection of Francis Boteuille aliás Thin, in the yeare of Christ 1585.

TWo sentences, the one an Italian prouerbe, the other an old English bywoord haue moued me to make this collection (at the request of an other) of all the dukes of England. First the Italian said that France cannot abide anie treasurors, England anie dukes, nor Scotland anie kings, the truth whereof need no confirming examples to be set downe, sith (as saith the philosopher) things subiect to the sense need no further proose. Secondlie the English saieng hath bæn, that a Nag of fiue shillings shall beare all the dukes of England & Scotland, being spoken in no sense of disgrace to that honorable title: but onelie to shew that the time should come, wherein there should be no dukes in England or Scotland. How true the same is in England, and likelie againe to be in Scotland (being once before verified in that realme, for about fiue yeares past, there was no duke there also when the duke of Lineur was banished) euerie man doth well perceiue. For the death of this Thomas duke of Northfolke, being the last of that honour hath iustified the same in England. And the turmoils in Scotland may perhaps shortlie verifie the same in that countrie, in which there were neuer so few dukes, as that they cannot make the first and smallest number: for being but one in that countrie, and he verie yong (which is the duke of Lineur) if he should miscarie, the same would againe also be as true there as it is now heere. For which cause to perpetuat the memories of such antiquities and titles of honor, as age hath consumed with the persons which inioied such preheminences in England, I will from the first creation of anie duke since the conquest recite the creation, descent, and succession of all the dukes of England, shewing first the time of the creation of such dukes, & secondlie the descent of all such dukes as are lineallie issued out of that creation, which follow as they came in one line.

Edward the blacke prince, duke of Cornwall.

Edward (the eldest sonne of king Edward the third) being surnamed the blacke prince, was made duke of Cornewall the eleauenth of Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption 1337, when he was yet but yong. This yong prince was the first duke in England since the conquest, and Cornewall was by that creation the first place that was erected to a dukedome. Which duke, being the flower of chiualrie in his time, died about the fiftith yeere of king Edward the third; in the yeare of Christ 1376, and was buried at Canturburie.

Henrie Plantagenet duke of Lancaster.

Henrie Plantagenet alias Tort Colle (because his head leaned somewhat to one shoulder like the great Macedone king Alexander, whose valure in feats of armes this Henrie did also imitate) being sonne to Henrie of Monmouth earle of Lancaster, was in like sort earle of Lancaster by descent. After which he was created earle of Darbie, as some saie in the eleauenth yeare of Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1337, other saie in the foureteenth yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our saluation 1340. He was created duke of Lancaster as some haue in the six & twentith yeare of Edward the third, as other haue the seauen & twentith, and as the third sort haue the eight & twentith yeare of Edward the third. He was lord steward of England, & lieutenant of Guines. This man was wise, glorious in fortune, and full of honor in feates of armes, whilest he was yong: he died the fiue and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of Christ 1361, being one of the first knights which were made at the first institution of the honorable order of the garter, and the second duke that was made in England. He had issue two daughters & heires, Maud maried to William duke of Bauare, earle of Henalt, Zeland & Holand, which after became mad; & Blanch maried to John of Gant, fourth sonne to Edward the third.

John of Gant duke of Lancaster.

John Plantagenet, surnamed of Gant in Flanders, where he was borne, the fourth sonne to king Edward the third, was first by his father in the fiue and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of Christ 1361, made duke of Lancaster, so that he was duke of Lancaster, earle of Lincolne, Salisburie, Darbie and Leicester, king of Castile & Lirne, and steward of England. He married three wiues, the first was Blanch the daughter and heire of Henrie duke of Lancaster, earle of Leicester, Lincolne, Sarisburie & Darbie, in whose right he obteined all those titles of honor, whome he maried in the thirtith three yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our Lord 1359, and by hir had issue Henrie Plantagenet duke of Hereford: Philip married in the tenth yeare of Richard the second (in the yeare of Christ 1386, as some saie; or rather 1385, as others haue) to the king of Portingale: and Elisabeth married to John Holland erle of Huntington. His second wife was Constance eldest daughter to Peter king of Castile, whom he maried in the six & fortith yeare of Edward the third, being in the yeare of Christ 1372, by whome he had issue Margaret maried to the king of Castile, which Constance died in the yere of Christ 1394, as saith Ypodigma. His third wife was Katharine the widow of Otho Swinford, and daughter to sir Paien Ruet alias Guien king at armes, whom he maried in the nintéenth yeare of king Richard the second, being the yere of Christ 1395, or as some saie 1396, by this woman he had before mariage Thomas Beaufort, John Beaufort, Henrie Beaufort cardinall of Winchester, & Jane maried to Rafe Neuill earle of Westmerland, all which children were in the twentith of Richard the second, being in the yeare 1396, legitimated by parlement: at which time the said John of Gant gaue them the surname of Beaufort. This John of Gant was also earle of Richmond and constable of France in the time of Richard the second, who made him also duke of Aquitaine in the fourtéenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare 1390. This John of Gant died in the two & twentith yeare of Richard the second, in the yeare 1398, or as saith Ypodigma 1399, & was buried in the quére of saint Paules church of London, on the north side.

Henrie Plantagenet duke of Lancaster and Hereford, king of England.

Henrie Plantagenet alias Henrie of Bollinbroke so surnamed of the place of his birth, the eldest son of the said John, was by inheritance duke of Lancaster, earle of Leicester, Salisburie, Darbie, and Lincolne: he was created duke of Hereford by Richard the second, who made him earle of Darbie, in the ninth yeare of his reigne, in the yeare of Christ 1386, and after made him duke of Hereford in the 21 yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of Christ 1397. Which Henrie of Bollinbroke maried in the 9 yére of the reigne of Richard the second, in the yeare of Christ 1386 Marie the second daughter, & one of the heires of Humphrie Bohune earle of Hereford & Elser, and constable of England, which woman died in the yére of Christ 1394, about the eightéenth yére of Richard the second. This Henrie was after king of England by the name of Henrie the fourth.

Lionell Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

Lionell Plantagenet surnamed Lionell of Antwerpe in Brabant, because he was there borne, being the third son of king Edward the third, was erle of Ulster in Ireland by his wife, and created duke of Clarence in the 36 yére of Edward the third, in the yére of Christ 1462: but other saie he was made duke in the 33 yer of Edward the third. He had two wiues, the first Elisabeth, some saie Eleanor (but rightlie as I doo suppose) the daughter of William Burgh earle of Ulster, by whom he had issue Philip maried to Edmund earle of March: the second wife was Jelant or Uelant daughter to Galeas duke of Millane, to whom he was maried, as saith the English chronicle, in the two and fortith yére of Edward the third, in the yére of Christ 1368: which yére the Italians count 1367, by whom he had no issue. This Lionell was somtime regent of France, & died 1368.

Edmund Plantagenet duke of Yorke

Edmund of Langleie, fift son to Edward the third made earle of Cambridge about the six and thirtith yére of Edward the third, being the yere of Christ 1361, was made duke of Yorke in the eight, or (as some haue) the ninth yére of the said king Richard the second. He in the six and fortith yére of king Edward the third, in the yére that the word became flesh 1372, married Isabell one of the daughters of Peter king of Castile, and sister by the mother to Constance second wife to John of Gant duke of Lancaster, brother to this Edmund, who was about the twentith yére of Richard the second protector of England, while the king was in Ireland, which Isabell died in the yeare of Christ 1394, being about the eightéenth yére of Richard the second, & by the kings commandement was buried in the friers of Langleie. This Edmund had issue by his wife Isabell Edward earle of Rutland, and duke Albermerle, Richard earle of Cambridge, and one daughter called Constance married to Thomas lord Spenser: he died the second (as some haue) or rather the third (as others haue) of Henrie the 4, in the yére of Christ, as hath Ypodigma 1402, and was buried at Langleie.

Edward Plantagenet duke of Albermerle and Yorke.

Edward Plantagenet son and heire of Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke, was in the foureteenth of Richard the second created erle of Rutland in his fathers life, in the yére of Christ 1390, and in the twentith yeare of Richard the second, or rather the 21 of the same king, being the yeare of Christ 1397, he was made duke of Albermerle or Aumerle, and after his fathers death he was duke of Yorke: he was slaine at the battell of Agincourt, in the third yeare yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of Christ 1415, he married Margaret, or rather more truelie Philip the ladie Fitzwater, and widow to sir John Gollafer knight, bastard sonne to sir John Gollafer of Cercedone or Saresdone knight in Oxfordshire. And here because I haue mentioned the name of Gollafer, although it be digressing from my first purposes, onelie to treat of the dukes of England, I thinke it not amisse to sale somewhat of these two knights, of the Gollafers, sir John the father, and sir John the sonne. This sir John Gollafer the father being the sonne of John Gollafer esquier (whose ancestors as farre as I can learne had their first originall from Roger Gollafer of Cercedone in the time of king John, and was buried in Domo capitulari de Bruera in com. oxon.) married Anne the daughter and heire of sir Thomas Langleie lord of Langleie in Oxfordshire (now at this date in the yeare 1585, by grant of queene Elisabeth, in the possession of Robert Sutton or Dudleie earle of Leicester) which Anne died shortlie after without anie issue by him. After whose death this sir John Gollafer married Isabell the ladie of Missenden (dwelling at Missenden) and of Queintone in Buckinghamshire, she being daughter to sir Barnard Brocas. But this sir John Gollafer hauing no issue by the said Elisabeth, and desirous by some meanes or other to continue his name (which yet he could not make perpetuall nor of anie long continuance) made choise in the life of his wife Isabell of another woman, whome he vsed for procreations cause, and by hir had issue two bastards, one called Jennet Pulham after prioresse of Burneham by Windsore, and an other bastard called after the father John Gollafer, who in following time became a knight. Afterward this sir John the father died at Queintone in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, three hundred, seauentie and nine, falling partlie in the second and third yeare of Henrie the fourth, and was buried at the Graie friers in Oxford, whose wife Isabell was after buried in Missenden priorie.

After the death of this sir John the father, sir John Gollafer knight his base sonne being lord of Langleie, married Philip ladie Fitzwater, after maried to this duke of Yorke (as before is said) which sir John Gollafer died at Wallingford, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, three hundred, ninetie and six, being the twentith yeare of Richard the second, and was buried at Westminster, neere vnto the tome of Richard the second. Which ladie Philip died in the time of Henrie the sixt, and was buried at Westminster, neere vnto hir husband, whose statelie tome is yet extant, on the south side almost directlie oueragainst the tome of Richard the second. Thus this much for the name of Gollafer; and so againe to the dukes of England.

Thomas Plantagenet surnamed of Woodstocke duke of Gloucester.

Thomas Plantagenet, otherwise called Thomas of Woodstocke, sixt sonne to king Edward the third, was created earle of Buckingham, the first yeare of Richard the second, in the yeare one thousand, three hundred, seauentie and seauen, the daie of his coronation before dinner. This man was high constable of England, and created duke of Gloucester, in the eight yeare of Richard the second, of whom is more especiall mention made in the treatise of the constables of England, pag. 867.

Thomas Holland duke of Surreie.

Thomas Holland; brother by the mothers side to king Richard the second, and sonne to the lord Thomas Holland (earle of Kent, in the right of Jane, daughter and heire to Edmund Plantagenet, surnamed of Woodstocke earle of Kent) was aduanced to the title of duke of Surreie in the two and twentith yeare of king Richard the second, being the yeare of Christ one thousand, three hundred, ninetie and seauen, he maried Alice the daughter of Richard Fitzallen earle of Arundell. He had issue six daughters & heires; Margaret married to John Beaufort earle of Summerset, and marquesse Dorset; Alice maried to Thomas Montacute earle of Salisburie; Elisabeth, married to John lord Neuill sonne to Rafe Neuill the first earle of Westmerland, and after his death to Edward Chareleton lord Powis; Joane married to Edmund of Langleie duke of Yorke; and Bridget a nun at Barking. This man with others, at a parlement held the first yeare of Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, three hundred, ninetie and nine, was depriued of his name of duke, & of all honours, togither with the dignities belonging to a duke, & was after in the same yeare (rebelling against king Henrie the fourth) taken by the men of Circester, and beheaded in the same towne, after that he had caused the towne to be set on fire.

John Holland duke of Excester.

John Holland full brother to Thomas Holland, and halfe brother to Richard the second, was created earle of Huntington in the fourteenth yeare of king Richard the second, and made duke of Excester at a parlement holden in the one & twentith yeare of the same king, though some attribute that to the twentith yeare of king Richard. This man at a parlement held in the first of Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of Christ 1399, was disgraded from his title of dukedome, and was after taken at Pritewell in Essex in a mill, and beheaded at Plashie in the said shire, in the said first yeare of the said king Henrie the fourth, he married Elisabeth the daughter of John of Gant duke of Lancaster, and had issue John Holland earle of Huntington.

John Holland duke of Excester.

John Holland earle of Huntington was (as it seemeth) made by Henrie the fourth (after the death of the duke of Excester his father) & admitted to be duke of Excester, he married Anne the daughter of Edmund earle of Stafford, he had issue Henrie Holland duke of Excester, and Anne maried to sir John Neuill knight, brother of Rafe the third of that name erle of Westmerland, he died the six and twentith of king Henrie the sixt on the fift of August, being the yeare of Christ 1448, and was buried at S. Katharins nigh the tower of London. After which his first wife he maried Anne the daughter of John Montacute earle of Salisburie, by whome he had no issue.

Henrie Holland duke of Excester.

Henrie Holland sonne of John Holland was (after the death of his father) duke of Excester, he was disherited in the first of Edward the fourth at a parlement held then in the yeare 1461, he maried Anne daughter to Richard duke of Yorke, and sister to king Edward the fourth, which Anne at hir owne sute on the twelfe of November in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of Christ 1471, was diuorced from the said duke of Excester. Shortlie after which, in the yeare of Christ 1413, being in the thirteenth of Edward the fourth, this duke was found dead in the sea betweene Douer & Calis, but how he came there none could certenlie declare. He died without issue, leauing his sister Anne his heire, maried (as before) to John Neuill brother to Rafe earle of Westmerland.

Robert Vere duke of Irreland.

Robert Vere earle of Oxford and marquesse of Dubline was in the yeare of Christ 1386, in the tenth of Richard the second created duke of Ireland, he died without issue at Louaine in great penurie and veration of mind, as hath Ypodigma, in the yeare of Christ 1392, being about the sixteenth of king Richard the second, he maried the daughter of Ingerame de Coulie earle of Bedford, and after diuorced from hir he married Lancecrona one of meane parentage.

Margaret Segraue duchesse of Norffolke.

Margaret ladie Segraue the daughter and heire of Thomas Brotherton earle of Norffolke and marshall of England, was created duchesse of Norffolke in the one and twentith yeare of king Richard the second, she had two husbands, whereof the first was John lord Segraue; by whom she had issue Elisabeth married to John Powbrete the third of that name. Hir second husband was sir Walter Mannic knight of the order, by whome she had a daughter married to John lord Hastings erle of Penbroke. This duchesse Margaret died in the yeare of Christ 1399, being about the three and twentith of Richard the second, and was buried in the frier Minors of London.

Thomas lord Powbrete duke of Norffolke.

Thomas lord Powbrete second sonne of Elisabeth Segraue and John lord Powbrete hir husband was aduanced to the dukedome of Norffolke, in the one and twentith yeare of the reigne of Richard the second. Shortlie after which he was appeled by Henrie earle of Bullingbroke of treason, and caried to the castell of Windsore, where he was stronglie and safelie garded, hauing a time of combat granted to determine the cause betweene the two dukes the sirteenth date of September, in the two and twentith of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption 1398. But in the end the matter was so ordered, that this duke of Norffolke was banished for euer: whervpon taking his iourneie to Jerusalem, he died at Venice in his returne frō the said citie of Jerusalem in the first yeare of king Henrie the fourth, about the yeare of our redemption 1399. He maried Elisabeth one of the daughters and heires of Richard erle of Arundell Warren and Surreie, by whome he had issue John duke of Norffolke, and three daughters, Elisabeth maried to Michaell de la Pole the yonger earle of Suffolke, Margaret maried vnto sir Robert Howard knight, and Isabell maried to sir James Barkeleie.

John Powbrete duke of Norffolke.

John Powbrete earle of Notingham marshall of England and duke of Norffolke, baron Segraue and Bolwer, was buried in the Charterhouse within the ile of Erholme, he maried Katharine the daughter of Rafe the first earle of Westmerland, by whom he had issue John duke of Norffolke.

John Powbrete duke of Norffolke.

John lord Powbrete the first baron of the name of Powbrete, sonne to John duke of Norffolke, was after his father duke of Norffolke. This John was buried in Tetford priorie, who marieng Elenor the daughter of William lord Burchier earle of Ewe, had issue John duke of Norffolke.

John Powbrete duke of Norffolke.

John the last duke of Norffolke of the surname of Powbrete, the sonne of John the last before mentioned, was in his fathers life time created earle of Warren and Surreie by king Henrie the first, and after the death of his father was duke of Norffolke. This John the last duke died in his castell of Fremingham, in the yeare 1461, being the second yeare of king Edward the fourth. He maried Elisabeth daughter to John lord Talbot earle of Shrewesburie, by whome he had issue one onelie daughter and heire, maried to Richard duke of Yorke second son to Edward the fourth.

Th: Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

Thomas Plantagenet second sonne to Henrie the fourth, was created duke of Clarence in the eleuenth yeare of his father, being about the yeare of our redemption 1409, and was afterward in the 13 of the same king created earle of Aumerle, and high steward of England: he was slaine the two and twentith of March, in the ninth yeare of the reigne of the victorious king Henrie the fift, in the yeare of our redemption 1420, beginning the yeare of our Lord on the fiue and twentith date of March. He maried Margaret the daughter of Thomas Holland earle of Kent, and died without issue legitimat, hauing a base sonne called John the bastard of Clarence.

John Plantagenet duke of Bedford.

John Plantagenet third son to Henrie the fourth, was by his father created duke of Bedford, at the parlement of Leicester, in the yeare of Christ 1414, in the second of king Henrie the fift. Of this man is more large mention made in my discourse of the protectors of England.

Humfreie Plantagenet duke of Gloucester.

Humfreie Plantagenet fourth sonne of Henrie the fourth, was by his father created duke of Gloucester, who for the nobilitie of his mind and vertuous life, was made protector of England. Of whom is more spoken in my former discourse of the protectors of England.

See pag. 1069

John Beaufort duke of Summerset.

John Beaufort (which name of Beaufort was giuen by John of Gant to his children which he had by Katharine Swineford, when they were made legitimate by parlement, about the one and twentith yeare of king Richard the second as is before touched) was created marquesse Dorset by Henrie the fourth, and after aduanced to the honour of duke of Summerset, in the first yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1413. He maried Margaret the daughter of sir John Beauchampe lord of Powicke, he had issue Margaret maried to Edmund Haddam earle of Richmond father to king Henrie the seuenth: after the death of which Edmund she was maried to Thomas lord Stonleie, afterward by Henrie the seuenth created earle of Darbie, and after vnto Henrie sonne to Humfreie duke of Buckingham. This duke of Summerset died the two and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, and was buried at Winborne, in the yeare of Christ 1444. And his daughter the ladie Margaret died at Westminster on the nine and twentith of June, in the first yeare of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Christ a thousand fiue hundred and nine, about three score and fiue yeares after the death of hir father.

Thomas Beaufort duke of Excester.

Thomas Beaufort sonne to John of Gant duke of Lancaster and Katharine Swineford was created duke of Excester, in the fift yeare of K. Henrie the fift, of whome is mention made in my protectors.

Edmund Beaufort duke of Summerset.

Edmund Beaufort sonne of John Beaufort duke of Summerset, was created earle Morton in the seuenth yeare of K. Henrie the fift. He was created marquesse Dorset and duke of Summerset by king Henrie the first, he was made regent of Normandie, and lost the whole countrie to the French: for which after his comming out of Normandie in the nine and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, he was on the first of December the same yeare, being the yeare of our Lord 1450, apprehended and put vnder arrest, and his goods by the commons sowlie despoiled and caried awaie from the Blacke friers. He was slaine at the battell of S. Albons in Maie, the three and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the first, falling in the yeare of our Lord 1455, and was with Henrie Perste earle of Northumberland, and Thomas lord Clifford buried at S. Albons. He maried two wiues, the first was Elenor the daughter of Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike, & widow to Thomas lord Rosse, by whom he had issue Henrie duke of Summerset, Edmund duke of Summerset, John marques Dorset, Margaret maried to Humfreie duke of Buckingham, Elisabeth maried to sir Henrie Lewes knight, Elenor maried to James Butler earle of Wilshire, and after to sir Robert Spenser, Anne maried to sir William Paston knight, and Jone maried to the lord Hoth of Ireland. His second wife was Jone, who was after maried to Henrie Bromefield knight, of the which Edmund duke of Summerset, and the other lords buried at saint Albons, thus writeth the worthie poet Iohn Gower Gower with these same verses hereafter following:

Quos mors quos Martis sors sæua, suæq; sororis
Bella prostrarunt, villæ medióque necarunt,
Mors sic occisos tumulauerat hic simul ipsos,
Póstq; necem requiē causauit habere perennem
Et medium sine quo vult hic requiescere nemo,
Hic lis, hic pugna mors est qui terminat arma,
Mors sors & Mauors qui strauerunt dominos hos.

Herie Beaufort duke of Summerset.

Henrie Beaufort eldest sonne to Edmund duke of Summerset was after the death of his father erle Poxton, marquesse Dorset, and duke of Summerset, he was capteine of Calis; who with other nobles in the nine and thirtith of Henrie the first slue the duke of Yorke at the battell of Wakefield, in the yeare of our redemption 1460; according to the accompt of England. Shortlie after which, K. Henrie the first, whom this duke supported all that he could, was deposed, & Edward the fourth crowned. Touching which deposing of the one, & crowning of the other, although it be impertinent to the treatise of the dukes of England, hauing here so good place therfore, I will set downe such verses as I haue found in I. Whethamsted, adding further such other verses also as I find in him, concerning a battell fiercelie fought at Ferribrig in Yorkeshire, in this sort:

In the yeare of Christ 1460.

X. numero seni lapsi sunt circiter anni,
Postquam successit lex iuris, iuréue rexit,
Anglorum regnum vis non ius rexerat ipsum
Iam noua progenies, quia cœlo venit ab alto
Saturni soboles, quæ nomine dicitur altro
Edwardus quartus, Richardo sanguine iunctus
Creditur à multis, redeunt Saturnia nostris
Temporibus sæcla, lis vis q; nephas simul vna
Deperiunt, iura lex & pax sunt reditura.
Fraus etiámque dolus cessabunt, ac violentus
Raptus auaritiæ, subeunt verúmque fidésque:
Hæc spes plebis erat, cleri chorus hæc q; putabat.
Det ceu speratur regnum Deus vt statuatur,
Et plebs tranquillè viuat clerus at q; quietè.

Then of the time of that former recited warre, in which the northerne men were ouercome, there were these verses made, vpon the excesse and euill which they outragiouslie committed in the south parts of England, without regard of God, obedience to their naturall prince, reuerence to the church, loue to their native countrie, or benefite to themselues:

The battell of Ferribrig the thirteenth of March in the yeare 1461, according to the accompt of thē that begin the yeare at Januarie.

Aboue 20000 slaine, wherof most knights & gentlemen.

M. semel X. seno centum quater I. simul vno
In Martis mense terdena denique luce,
In patria Boreæ Ferrebrig propè iugera villæ,
Pugna fuit plebis acris nimis & satis atrox.
Vicerat Arcthos in bello Martius heros,
Iunior Edwardus Hector nouus alter Achilles
Prostrauit multos Austro tunc cesserat Arcthos,
Et doluit casum supra X. bis millia, quorum
Quamplures domini plures & erant generosi
Illius patriæ flos vt sors tunc cecidere.
Et meritò, quoniā spoliarūt nequiter Austrum.
Laus igitur Domino, sit honor, sit gloria Christo
Cessat nunc flatus grandis Boreæq; boatus,
Ing; Austrum redijt, Aeolus ventum variauit,
Est Boreas mordens, & valdè ventus adurens,
Est Auster iustus, vult morsu rodere morsus,
Et malè mordentes bene vires tollere eidem,
Est Zephyrus placidus, est suāuis frater & eius,
Hinc Boreás q; Aquilo pro nūc claudūtur in antro.

Furthermore, touching the title of the same king Edward the fourth to the gouernement of the kingdome of England, and of his right and truth thereunto were these following verses composed, to declare the deposition of king Henrie the first, as before said in the coronation of Edward the fourth, and how the same kingdome of England, with all the members thereof, did belong to Edward the fourth, as vnto the rightfull lineall heire to the same with his pedegrée, prouing the same also in this sort:

In sibi coniunctis [a] Edwardi semine natis
Ortus erat primò [b] Leonellus [c] Iohnque secundò,
Cedat lex regni vult iunior vt seniori.
Attamen [d] Henricus hæres genitúsque Iohannis
Per vim sceptrigerum regimen tulerátque coronam,
Et tenuit multis sed non sine viribus annis.
Illi succesit rex [e] qui si non caruisset
Iustitiæ titulo, non Hector dignior ipso:
Non iudex Eacus, non ore politus Vlysses.
Ipso defuncto succesit [f] filius in quo
Stirps ea cessauit. Hæres rectus remeauit Scilicet [g] Edwardus Leonelli proximus hæres,
Hic petijt regimen, [h] rex obstat, dátque negamen.
Res agitur belli, vicit sanguis Leonelli,
Et palmam tulerat [i] Henricus rex fugiebat
Bello finito, multo quóque sanguine fuso
Quum victor secum palmam ferrétque triumphum,
Vendicat hoc iterum, plebs applaudebat eidem
Clamabátque sibi [k] viuat fœlicior omni
Rege vel Augusto, melior regat Octauiano.
Hæc vox cunctorum, clamor fuit ac populorum.
Rex igitur factus, rex in solióque leuatus
Quod fractum fuerat iterum bene consolidabat,
Iuréque quo potuit, vim pressit, ius renouauit.
Sic vetus id dictum fuerat bene verificatum,
De malè quæsitis vix gaudet tertius hæres.
Stare diu nequit mala quanquam vis stabiliuit
Ius, nescítque mori, valeat licèt ense feriri,
Ex bene patratis bene crescit honos quoque virtus.
O rota versatilis nimis oh q; notabilis axis!
Sorte nouercante fatóq; modum variante,
Corruit [l] Henricus isto sub nomine sextus,
Et casum tulerat, titulus sibi deficiebat
Defecítq; bonus, heus pro moderamine sensus
Próq; bono campi cor defuit Herculis illi,
Matris non patris fuit ortus filius excors,
Martem non coluit nimis à [m] patre degenerauit
Quo melior miles non Teucer erat vel Atrides,
Siue timor Phrygijs Aiax robustus in armis.
Hic fuit in verbis rex mitis, rex pietatis, [n]
Attamen in factis nimiæ vir simplicitatis.
Hinc postquam triginta nouem rex præfuit annis,
Cæca manu fortuna rotam quasi fortis in armis
Volauerat, & regimen capiebat regis, eundem
Compulit ac subito sic dicere, Sum sine regno.
Oh sors prosperior, oh gratia sortéq; maior!
Qui diuturna nimis fuit expectatio plebis,
Sed mittendus erat, iam dante Deo veniebat
Hic Martis soboles, & nomine [o] Martius heros.
Marte triumphante, ius sceptri iúsq; coronæ,
Vt decuit sumpsit, vt debuit ac sibi iunxit,
Tunc bona spes fuerat, sors prospera quod reueniret,
Lætáque pro voto colere plebs secla sub ipso
Det Deus, ac faciat bona ne spes irrita fiat.

[a] King Edward the third.
[b] Lionell duke of Clarence third sonne to Edward the third.
[c] John of Gant fourth sonne to Edward the 3.
[d] Henrie the fourth.
[e] Henrie the fift.
[f] Henrie the first.
[g] Edward the fourth.
[h] Henrie the first.
[i] Henrie the first.
[k] Edward the fourth.

[l] King Henrie the first his disposition described.

[m] Henrie the fift.

[n] Henrie the first.

[o] Edward erle of March, after king Edward the fourth.

Thus after this long digression from the matter of the duke of Summerset, because I would set downe all the verses of Whethamsted, I must yet also ad other verses found in his register, mentioning some part of the doings of the northerne men before spoken of: which verses although they should haue gone before, yet I thinke better here than not at all to write them in this sort. Shortly after the forsaid battell of Wakefield wherin the duke of Yorke was slaine, and before the deposing of king Henrie the first, he had a battell at S. Albons, called the second battell of S. Albons with the northern men (following the quéene & this duke of Sūmersets faction) & now were come as far as S. Albons, on Shrouetuesdaie the seuentēnth daie of Februarie in the said said yeare of Christ 1460, where the king was put to flight, and fled to the quéene. Touching which battell also, thus writeth that learned abbat of saint Albons Iohn Whethamsted in his ancient register:

The 17 of Februarie after the account of such as begin the yeare at Januarie.

*Southerns men.

M. simul X. seno centum quater I. simul vno,
Quum lux septena fuerat mensis quóq; dena,
Numinis illius venerantur quod morientes,
Inter Solares pugnantes & Boreales,*
Magna cohors cecidit, duo millia plebs numerauit,
Sors apud Albani villam protomartyris almi,
Et pugnæ campum, cæsis dedit & tumulatum,
Quod dolet ac doluit annis multísq; dolebit,
Villicus ac monachus prope eos habitator & omnis,
Principio pugnæ potiores Marte fuere
Australes, tandem vicit Boreásque triumphum
Abstulerat secum, stat sors mox versa retrorsum,
Martis vt euentum fore scires sic dubiosum.
Vt veniunt cynephes, culices, brusique locustæ,
Vt vastant segetes: aliæ muscæ quóque multæ,
Sic aduenerunt similes illis Boreales,
Austri totius. His iudex sit Radamantus,
Et Minos Cretæ, coniunctus eis Eacúsque,
Atque modum pœnæ pensent seu demeruere,
Vix infernalis pro pœna sufficit ipsis,
Aut focus aut furiæ licent essent agmine mille,
Gens est Cerberea, gens Sphingia, gens Briarea,
Latratu, raptu, spolij prædaque voratu,
Laus hæc, laus Boreæ, laus est hæc laus sine laude.

Thus to returne to the duke of Summerset, we saie that afterward in the first yeare of king Edward the fourth, the said duke of Summerset fled to Yorke to king Henrie the first, and the quéene, who altogither fled from thense to Berwike, and so to Edenburgh. Whereupon by parlement in the first yeare of Edward the fourth 1461, this duke was atteinted, and his goods and lands seized for the king. But after that time king Edward the fourth besieging the castels of Bamburgh, Dunstenburgh, and Alnewike, this duke of Summerset and others yéelded those forts to the king on Christmas éeuen, in the third yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1463. For which cause this duke was taken againe into the kings fauour, who gaue him a thousand marks by yeare, whereof he was neuer paid. Notwithstanding all which, in the yeare following, being the fourth yeare of Edward the fourth, in Maie, in the yeare of Christ 1464, this duke with others raised an armie against the king, in which battell he was taken (with Robert erle of Hungerford) by Iohn Neuill earle of Northumberland, and beheaded. He died without lawfull issue, leauing behind him a base sonne called Charles Summerset, by king Henrie the eight created earle of Worcester.

Edmund Beaufort duke of Summerset.

Edmund Beaufort sonne of the foresaid Edmund, and brother and heire to this last Henrie duke of Summerset, was also duke of Summerset. This man in the eleuenth yeare of Edward the fourth, being the yeare of Christ 1471, fleeing into the church of Teukesburie at the battell of Teukesburie (which quéene Margaret the wife of Henrie the first and hir sonne prince Edward had against king Edward the fourth) lost then the field. After which this duke was taken out of the church, and was there beheaded in the said eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, and died without issue.

Richard Plãtagenet duke of Yorke.

Richard Plantagenet, sonne and heire to Richard earle of Cambridge, was created duke of Yorke by king Henrie the first: he was also earle of Cambridge, Vlster and March, lord of Wigmore and Clare, lieutenant of the realme of France and duchie of Normandie. Of this man sée more in the protectors of England.

George Plantagenet duke of Clarence.

George Plantagenet the second sonne to Richard duke of Yorke, was make duke of Clarence by his elder brother king Edward the fourth when he came to the crowne, in the yeare of Christ 1461, being the first yeare of his reigne. Of this George I haue somwhat intreated in my discourse of the constables of England, pag. 869, and in my discourse of the protectors of England.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Gloucester.

Richard Plantagenet, the third sonne of Richard duke of Yorke, and brother to George duke of Clarence, was made duke of Gloucester by king Edward the fourth, in the first yére of his reigne, being the yeare in which God toke on him the forme of a seruant 1461, of whome I haue discoursed in my constables of England, pag. 869, and in my collection of the protectors of England.

Henrie Beauchampe duke of Warwike.

Henrie Beauchampe, the sonne of Richard Beauchampe earle of Warwike by Isabell ladie Spenser his second wife, succeeded his father in all his inheritances the twentith of Maie, in the seuententh yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1439. For then the said Richard Beauchampe died at Rone in Normandie. This Henrie after that his inheritance had béene kept two years in the kings hands, was dismissed of his wardship, and restored to his liuings with great glorie. For he was crowned king of the Ile of Wight (as saith Iohn Stow) by the kings owne hand, and nominated chiefe earle of England, in the twentith yeare of the said king Henrie the first, being about the yeare of Christ 1442. Shortlie after, in the two and twentith yeare of the said king Henrie the first, in the yeare of our redemption 1444, he was created duke of Warwike, vnto whome the king gaue the castell of Brightlow or Bristow, with all the appurtenances which king Iohn kept in his hands, to which duke also the king gaue the Iles of Garnseie and Jerseie. About two years after which, on the foure and twentith of the same king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1446, died this duke of Warwike, whose stile was duke of Warwike chiefe earle of England, lord Spenser and Aburgauennie, king of the Ile of Wight, Garnseie and Jerseie, and lord of the castell of Bristow. He died without issue, and was buried at Teukesburie, whereby his inheritance came to his foure sisters, which were (by Elisabeth one of the daughters and heires of Thomas lord Barkeleie, Lisle and Tetes, first wife vnto his father) Margaret his eldest sister, maried to Iohn Talbot first earle of Shrewsburie of that name: Elenor the second sister, first maried to Thomas lord Rosse, and after to Edmund duke of Summerset, &c: Elisabeth the third sister, maried to George Neuill lord Latimer: whose other fourth sister (by Isabell the second wife vnto Richard earle Beauchampe, daughter to Thomas lord Spenser, and mother also to the aboue named Henrie duke of Warwike, who died without issue) was Anne, maried to Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie.

Humfreie Stafford duke of Buckingham.

Humfreie Stafford earle Stafford, created duke of Buckingham in the two and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1444, was slaine at the battell of Northampton. Of this man sée more in my discourse of the constables of England, pag. 868.

Henrie Stafford duke of Buckingham

Henrie sonne to the said Humfreie duke of Buckingham was beheaded in the first yeare of Richard the third, in the yeare of our redemption 1483. Of this man is more set downe in my discourse of the constables of England, pag. 869.

Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham.

Edward Stafford, sonne to the said Henrie, was duke of Buckingham, being beheaded in the thirteenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, which was the yere of our redemption 1521, of whom also I haue intreated in the said discourse of the constables stables of England, pag. 870.

William de la Pole duke of Suffolke.

William de la Pole earle of Suffolke created marques of Suffolke in the two & twentith of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1444, was shortlie after also created duke of Suffolke, & in the eight & twentith of the said king Henrie the first, falling in the yeare 1450, was banished the realme for five yeares, to pacifie the hard opinion which the commons had conceiued against him. He tooke ship to performe his banishment the third of Maie, and sailed towards France, but was on the sea incountered by a ship of the tower named the Nicholas, by which he was taken and beheaded, and his bodie cast vp at Douer sands, and buried in the charterhouse at Hull. He maried Alice the daughter and heire of Thomas Chaucer, son to that famous poet Geffreie Chaucer, by which wife the maner of Ewelme, commonlie called Newelme in Oxfordshire came to the Poles. This duke & his wife did there build a new parish church of Ewelme standing on a hill, and founded a prætie hospitall called Gods house, at the west end of Ewelme parish church, to which house he gaue the manours of Ramrige in Hamshire, Conocke in Wiltshire, and Perth in Buckinghamshire. He also founded an hospitall at Donnington castell. This Alice wife of duke William, surviuing hir husband, was after buried in the parish church of Ewelme, on the southside of the high altar, in a rich tome of alabaster, with an image in the habit of a dutchesse crowned, lieng on the same tome, and hauing this epitaph: Orate pro anima serenissimæ principissæ Aliciæ Sulfolchiæ huius ecclesiæ patronæ, quæ obyt 20 die mensis Maij, anno Domini 1475, litera dominicali A.

John de la Pole duke of Suffolke.

John de la Pole son to the said William de la Pole duke of Suffolke, was also duke of Suffolke after the death of his father. This man on the eighteenth of Aprill in the fifteenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1415, was knighted by the king. He married Elisabeth daughter to Richard duke of Yorke, and sister to Edward the fourth, by whom he had issue Edmund erle of Suffolke; John that by Edward the fourth was created earle of Lincolne, and Anne, who by procurement of king Richard the third was maried to the duke of Rothsele, eldest son to the king of Scots.

Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke.

Richard Plantagenet second sonne to king Edward the fourth, was by his father created duke of Yorke, in the 15 yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our Lord 1474, at a parlement in the said fifteenth yeare of Edward the fourth. This duke on the fifteenth of Januarie in the seauentéenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1477, was married to ladie Anne daughter and heire to John Mowbrete duke of Norffolke, and was in the first yeare of the reigne of the tyrant king Richard the third his vncle most vnnaturallie murthered in the tower, in the yeare of Christ 1483.

George Plantagenet duke of Bedford.

George Plantagenet third sonne to king Edward the fourth was created duke of Bedford by his father, in the yeare of our redemption 1470, and died without issue being verie yong.

John Howard duke of Norffolke.

John Howard lord Howard (the son of sir Robert Howard knight, and of Margaret his wife, one of the daughters and heires of Thomas lord Mowbrete duke of Norffolke, earle of Notingham, and marshall of England) was created duke of Norffolke, and marshall of England, in the first yeare of the vsurping king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1483. This man following the part of the said king Richard, was at the battell of Bosworth in Leicestershire (fought in the third yeare of the said king Richard, in the yeare of Christ 1485) slaine with the said king Richard. He had two wiues, Katharine the daughter of William lord Molins, by whome he had issue Thomas earle of Surreie, after made duke of Norffolke by king Henrie the eight; Anne married to sir Edmund Gorge knight; Isabell married to sir Roger Mortimer of Esser; Jane married to sir John Timperleie; and Margaret married to sir John Windham: his second wife was Margaret the daughter of sir John Chedworth knight, by whome he had Katharine married to sir John Bourchier lord Barns.

Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke.

Thomas Howard earle of Surreie sonne of the said John was created duke of Norffolke, in the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, being about the yeare of Christ 1514. Of him is more mention in my discourse of the lord treasurors of England.

Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke.

Thomas Howard created earle of Surreie in the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, being high admerall and lord treasuror of England, was duke of Norffolke, after the death of his father, which fell in the sirtéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption 1524. Of this man is also more intreated in my discourse of the lord treasurors.

Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke.

Thomas Howard the third duke of the name of Thomas, and the fourth of the name of Howard, was son to Henrie Howard earle of Surreie sonne to the last before recited Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke. This man, being the last duke that liued in England, & occasioned me to make this discourse of the dukes, was beheaded on tower hill the second daie of June, in the fourtéenth yeare of the now reigning prince Elisabeth, being the yeare of Christ 1572, and buried in the chappell of the tower. He maried three wiues; his first wife was Marie one of the daughters and heires of Henrie Fitzallen earle of Arundell, by whom he had issue Philip earle of Arundell; his second wife was Margaret daughter & onlie heire to Thomas Audleie knight, chancellor of England, and lord Audleie of Saffron Walden, the widow of the lord Henrie Dudleie yongest son to John Sutton of Dudlie duke of Northumberland, by which second wife this duke had issue Thomas, William, Elisabeth, & Margaret; his third wife was Elisabeth the daughter of sir James Leiborne knight, and widow of the lord Dacres of Gisleland, by whome he had no issue.

Henrie Teuther duke of Yorke.

Henrie the second son of king Henrie the seuenth was by his father created duke of Yorke at Westminster, in the eleuenth yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1495, or therabouts. This man was after king of England by the name of king Henrie the eight.

Jasper of Hatfield duke of Bedford.

Jasper of Hatfield the sonne of Owen Teuther esquier, by Katharine daughter to the French king, and widow to king Henrie the fift, was by king Henrie the first his brother on the mothers side created earle of Penbroke, in the yeare of Christ 1452, after which in the fiue and thirtith yeare of the said king he was made earle of Cambridge: and lastlie, in the first yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the seauenth he was created duke of Bedford on Simon and Judes daie, in the yeare of our redemption 1485, but died without issue the eightéenth daie of December, in the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the seauenth, in the yeare of Christ 1496, and was buried at Kensham.

Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke.

Charles Brandon the son of sir William Brandon knight, slaine on the part of king Henrie the seuenth at Bosworth field, was created vicount Lisle, and after on Candlemasse daie in the yeare of Christ 1413, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight he was created duke of Suffolke. He married three wiues; the first was Anne daughter of sir Anthonie Browne knight; the second Marie, second daughter of of king Henrie the seauenth, & widow to the king of France, by whom he had issue Henrie earle of Lincolne, and Francis married to Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke; his third wife was Katharine the daughter & onlie heire of William lord Willoughbie of Ersleie, by whome he had issue Henrie and Charles both dukes of Suffolke one after another, who both died within one houre of the sweat at Cambridge. This Charles the father died in the yeere of Christ 1545, and was buried at Windsore: & of the two dukes the sons thus writeth John Parkhurst sometime placed in the bishops see of Norwich:

Fratres Amyclæi Pollux cum Castore
Potuere sic cum morte depaciscier,
Vt cùm alter illorum esset mortuus, tamen
Alter superesset, & reuersus sortibus
Vicissim vtérque vtriúsque morte viueret.
Cur Parca nunc crudelior est, quàm olim fuit?
Fratres duos nuper ea, quales hactenus
Nec vidit vnquam, nec videbit Anglia
Lumina duo, duóque propugnacula
Fortissima virtutis, reique publicæ,
Crudelis ab vno perêmit funere.
Virtus nequaquam illam, nec egregia indoles
Mouit, nec Edwardi regis, nec optimæ
Matris, neque totius gemitus Britanniæ.
O dura dura mors! ô sæua numina!

Henrie Fitz Roie duke of Richmont.

Henrie Fitz Roie the base son to king Henrie the eight, begotten vpon Elisabeth Blunt the ladie Talboise, was by his father first created earle of Summerset and Northampton, and after duke of Richmont. This duke was verie forward in the knowledge of tongs, and also in knightlie actiuitie, as may apeere by due consideration of the historie in place where he is mentioned. He loued John Leland the reuerend antiquarie, who presented vnto the said duke a booke of copies, whereby he might learne to write Romane letters great & small, as apeereth by this heraistichon, which I find among the said John Lelands written epigrams in this maner set downe:

Ad illustrissimum Henricum ducem Richmontanum.

Quo Romana modo maiuscula littera pingi,
Pingi quo possit littera parua modo,
Hic liber ecce tibi signis monstrabit apertis
Princeps, Aonij spes & alumne gregis:
Qui tibi si placeat (quod certè spero futurum)
Maximà pro paruo munere dona dabis.]

He died without issue the two and twentith of Julie, in the eight and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, in the yeere of our redemption 1536, and was buried at Thetford in Norffolke, hauing maried Marie the daughter of Thomas Howard duke of Norffolke.

Edward Seimor duke of Summerset.

Edward Seimor knight (the son of sir John Seimor knight) was created vicount Beauchampe in Maie, the eight and twentith yeere of king Henrie the eight, being the yeere of our redemption 1536, & was after in the nine & twentith yeare of the same king on the eightéenth daie of October, in the yeere of Christ 1537 created earle of Hertford. Then king Henrie being dead, he in the first yeare of king Edward the first, which was the yeere of our redemption 1546, was made protector of England, and immediatlie thereupon created duke of Summerset, being vncle by the mothers side vnto the said king Edward the first. This man had manie honors and offices, as maie apeere by his stile, which he prefixed before a missiue persualorie sent to the Scots for the marriage of their yong queene Marie to our yong king Edward the first in this sort: Edward by the grace of God duke of Summerset, earle of Hertford, vicount Beauchampe lord Seimor, vncle to the kings highnesse of England, gouernor of his most roiall person, and protector of all his realmes, dominions, and subiects, lieutenant generall of his maiesties armies both by sea and land, treasuror and earle marshall of England, gouernor of the iles of Gerneseie and Iersеie, and knight of the most honorable order of the garter, &c. This stile he had, which I haue béene the more willing to set downe, because I do not remember that anie subiect did with like shew publish anie such stile before his time. Which honors he did not long inioie: for were it for malice of some of the nobilitie, disdaining such honors; or for cause in him offending the laws, or for his ouer careless good disposition, that suspected no such euill from his enimies: he was the second time on the first of October in the fift yeere of king Edward the first, being the yeare of Christ 1551 committed prisoner to the tower, and the two and twentith daie of Januarie following he was beheaded at tower hill, and buried in the tower chappell. He had two wiues, whereof the first was Katharine the daughter of sir William Filioll of Woodland knight, by whome he had a son called Edward: his second wife was Anne the daughter of sir Edward Stanhope, by whom he had issue Edward earle of Hertford, Henrie now liuing, and Edward, with Anne (married the third of June, in the fourth yeere of the reigne of king Edward the first, in the yeere one thousand fiue hundred and fiftie to John lord Dudleie, eldest sonne to John earle of Warwike and duke of Northumberland) Jone, Marie, Katharine, and Elisabeth.

Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke.

Henrie Greie marquesse Dorset, lord Ferrers of Grobie, Harrington, Boneuile and Asleie, was at Hampton court created duke of Suffolke, on the eleuenth of October, in the fift yeere of the reigne of king Edward the first, being the yeere of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one: who in the first yeere of queene Marie, being the yeere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and three, supposing that the queene would marrie a stranger, did flie into Leicester and Warwikeshires with a small companie, making proclamation against the queenes marriage with the prince of Spaine: but the people inclined not vnto him. Whereupon a companie being sent out after him, vnder the leading of the earle of Huntington, the first daie of Februarie proclamation was made at London, that the duke was discomfited and fled with his two brethren. After which the tenth of Februarie, the duke with his brother sir John Greie was brought from Conentrie (where he remained three daies after his taking, in the house and custodie of Christopher Warren alderman of that towne) by the earle of Huntington, & attended with three hundred men to the tower. Where remaining a certeine space, he was on the three and twentith of Februarie beheaded at tower hill; and buried in the chappell of the tower (as I haue heard.) He married Francis one of the daughters to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolke, by whom he had issue Jane, married to Gilford the sonne of John duke of Northumberland, and died without issue; Katharine and Marie.

John Sutton of Dudleie duke of Northumberland.

John Sutton of Dudleie created by king Henrie the eight vicount Lisle, being admerall, lord great chamberleine, lord great maister and earle of Warwike, was after on the eleuenth daie of October, the fift yeere of king Edward the first, being the yeere of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one, created duke of Northumberland. He, after the death of king Edward, tooke armes, and proclamed queene Jane, daughter to Henrie duke of Suffolke; meaning to exclude queene Marie. But shortlie after perceiuing queene Marie to be proclamed at London, this duke did also proclame hir at Cambridge. Notwithstanding all which he was arested in the kings college there by one maister Sleg sergeant at armes, and after a new arrested by the earle

earle of Arundell. Henrie Fitzallen (sent thither for that cause) who brought him to London, where this duke was the fiue and twentith of Julie, in the said first yeare of quéene Marie commited to the tower. Shortlie after which, he was the eightéenth of August following arreigned at Westminster, there condemned, and beheadded on tower hill the two and twentith of the same moneth: whose bodie with the head was buried in the tower, he being the last duke that was created in England. He maried Jane the daughter of sir Edward Gilford knight, the sister and heire to sir Henrie Gilford knight, of whose children I will not speake, bicause they are yet fresh in memorie. And thus farre Francis Thin, touching the creation and the succession in lineall descents of all the dukes of England since the conquest.

French ambassadors trō Charles the ninth came into England.

About the ninth of June, Francis duke of Montmorencie, chiefe marshall of France, gouernour and lieutenant of the Ile of France, generall to Charles the ninth king of France, and Paule de Foix of the priuie councell of the said king, and Bertrand de Saligners, lord de la Mothfenelon, knights of the order of S. Michaell, ambassadors for the same king, arriued at Douer. The fourtéenth daie they shot London bridge toward Summerset house at the Strand, where they were lodged. The fiftéenth daie being sundaie, the said ambassadors repaired to the White hall, where they were honourablie receiued of the quénes maiestie, with hir nobilitie: and there in hir graces chapell, about one of the clocke in the after noone, the articles of treatie, league or confederacie and sure friendship (concluded at Blois the nintéenth of Aprill as is afore shewed) betwixt the quénes maiestie, and the French king being read, the same was by hir maiestie and his ambassadors confirmed to be obserued and kept, without innouation or violation, &c. The rest of that daie, with great part of the night following, was spent in great triumph, with sumptuous banquets.

League with France confirmed at Westminster.

S. Georges feast at windsor.

The eightéenth of June, the feast of saint George was holden at Windsor, where the French ambassadors were rosallie feasted, & Francis duke of Montmorencie was stalled knight of the most honourable order of the garter. The eight and twentith daie of June, the forenamed ambassadors departed from London toward France. ¶ The fourtéenth of June, Thomas lord Wharton deceased in his house of Chanon row at Westminster. The thirtéenth daie of Julie, the quénes maiestie at Whitehall made sir William Cicill lord of Burghleie, lord high treasuror of England: lord William Howard, late lord chamberleine, lord priuie seale: the earle of Susser, lord chamberleine: sir Thomas Smith principall secretarie: and Christopher Hatton, esquier capteine of the gard.

Sir William Cicill lord treasuror, lord priuie seale, lord chamberleine, with other officers.

A treatise of the treasurors of England set downe out of ancient histories and records, as they succeeded in order of time and in the reigne of the kings.

Collected by Francis Thin in this yeare of Christ 1585.

THis adorning of sir William Cicill knight, lord Burghleie with the honour of lord treasuror of England, hath rowsed my enuied pen thorough the malicious barking of some (who suppose nothing well but what they doo themselues, whereby gaine maie rise vnto their posteritie) in this liberall sort to set downe the names and times of such treasurors as haue liued in England, as hereafter I will doo the chancellors, and that with as good authoritie as these secret backbiters can challenge anie cunning to themselues, who suppose euerie blast of their mouth to come forth of Trophonius den, and that they spake from the tri-

uet. As I will not arrogate anie thing to my selfe, for in truth I saie with Socrates, Hoc tantùm scio quòd nihil scio, or derogate from them that which their worthinesse maie merit: so shall I be glad (sith nothing is at the first so perfect, but that somewhat maie be either augmented or amended to and in it) that this maie whet those enuious persons to deliuer anie thing to the world, that maie in comptrolling my labours benefit their countrie, which if they will not doo, let them cease their euill spéeches: for Qui pergit dicere quæ libet, quæ non vult audiet. And truelie for mine owne part, I will Canere palinodiam, and yéeld them an honourable victorie, if anie better shall be produced: and be heartilie glad, that truth (which is all that I séeke) maie be brought to perfection. Now how well I haue done it, my selfe must not be iudge, desiring pardon of such as either with wise modestie can or ought to iudge, or with rare antiquities can or will correct what I haue done; if thorough ignorance we haue committed anie escapes or imperfections: further promising, that if hereafter we espie any of our owne error; or if anie other either friend for good will, or aduersarie for desire of reprehension shall open the same vnto me: I will not for defense of mine estimation, or of pride, or of contention by wranglings or quarrelling vpon authorities, histories and records, wilfullie persist in those faults: but be glad to heare of them, and in the whole and large discourse of the liues of the lord treasurors (almost perfected) corrected them. For (as I said) it is truth of antiquities that I séeke for, which being had (either by good intention of my wellwilling friends, or by occasion and reprehension of my enuious emulators) I greatlie estéeme not. And so to the matter.

Saint Dunstane (for I vse that name more for antiquities than denoutnesse cause) was treasuror to Eadred or Eldred king of England, who began his reigne in the yeare that the word became flesh, nine hundred fortie and six: of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker in his booke of the archbishops of Canturburie, in the life of Odo Seuerus the two and twentith bishop of that see: Edmundo (the king of England) defuncto, Eadredus corona regia ab Odone redimitus, & rem publicam administrans, Dunstanum (vt in eius vita plenius patebit) tam singulari amore prosequutus est, vt omnes regni thesauros illius custodiæ commendaret.

Saint Dunstane.

Hugoline was treasuror and chamberleine to Edward the confessor, he gaue Deane and Southbrigh to Westminster, which Edward the confessor did afterward confirme to that house.

Hugoline.

Odo halfe brother to William the conqueror erle of Kent bishop of Baieux and chiefe iustice of England, was treasuror in the time of the conqueror, who had at his death (as saith Anonymus M.S.) sixtie thousand pounds, Excepto auro, & gemmis, & vasis, & palys.

Odo bishop of Baieux.

Geffreie lord Clinton treasuror and chamberleine to Henrie the first, he about the thirteenth yeare of Henrie the first, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand, one hundred and twelue, did found the priorie of Kenelworth, and was after accused of treason in the one and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the said Henrie the first: but (as it séemed) restored (in short time after) to the kings fauour.

Geffreie lord Clinton.

Ranulph bishop of Durham, was treasuror to the king, whome Florentius Wigornienſis calleth Præcipuum regis placitatorem & regni exactorem, whose last word Exactor some men doo English treasuror. Of this man is more said in the chancellors of England.

Ranulph bishop of Durham.

Roger bishop of Sarisburie treasuror & chancellor of England, as appeareth by Leland, writing in this sort: Roger bishop of Sarum treasuror & chancellor to Henrie the first, made the castell of Vies such a costlie and so strong a fort, as was neuer before nor since Roger bishop of Sarisburie.

since set vp by anie bishop of England. The keepe or dungeon of it set vpon a hill cast by hand, is a peece of worke of incredible cost. There appeare in the gate of it six or seauen places for portculices, and much goodlie building was in it. It is now in ruine, and part of the front of the towers of the gate of the keepe, and the chappell in it, were carried full vnprofitablie to the building of master Beintons house at Bromham, scant three miles off. There remaine diuerse goodlie towers, yet in the vtter wall of the castell: but all going to ruine. The principall gate that leadeth into the towne is yet of great strength, and hath places of seauen or eight portculices. Thus much Leland in his commentaries of England, which I haue here set downe, partlie to proue Roger bishop of Salisburie to be treasuror, and partlie to commit to the world all such collections and notes as I can get of his. Besides which, to proue the same Roger treasuror at the latter end of the reigne of Henrie the first, togither with William de Pontlearch at the entering of king Stephan into England, thus writeth one Anonymall chronicle M.S. Stephanus cùm intrauit Angliam, Rogerũ Seresberiensem & Willielmum de Pontlearcus custodes thesaurorum ad se traduxit: which William de Pontlearch was a witnesse with William Stigill to a certeine charter which Ranulph bishop of Durham made to the monkes of Durham, commonlie called S. Cutberts monks, wherin he confirmed to them Blakestone, Standrop and Sandropshire, with the wood of Henworth on the east part of Warneburne, as farre as it goeth to the sea. This Roger bishop of Salisburie died in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, one hundred, thirtie and nine, being about the fourth yeare of king Stephan, of whome mention is made in the chancellors of England.

William de Pontlearch.

Nigellus bishop of Elie.

Nigellus the second, bishop of Elie, nephue to Roger bishop of Sarum, and treasuror to Henrie the first, was aduanced vnto that bishoprike of Elie, in the yeare of our redemption, one thousand, one hundred, thirtie and three, the fift calends of June, being the three and thirtith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the first, at whose going downe to be installed in the said bishoprike, he was receiued, with such ioie, that all the whole street of Elie thorough which he should passe, was hanged with curteins and carpets, with seats set on each side; and the monks, canons, and clerks, meeting him with procession with diuers other priests standing round about them. After his installation he returned to the dispatch of the affaires of the kingdome, committing the charge of his bishoprike to one Rafe sometime a monke of Glastenburie, and now become an apostata. Great contention was betweene this man and king Stephan. He bought the treasurorship for the summe of foure hundred marks of Henrie the second for his sonne Richard Filius Nigelli, or Fitz Nele, otherwise called Richard of Elie. He gouerned the bishoprike six and thirtie yeares, as most saie, and builded saint Johns college in Cambridge.

But touching the time of his death, and the years of his bishoprike, I cannot as yet set downe anie thing perfectlie; but onelie this contradiction found in the written booke of Elie, which I suppose to haue risen by the negligence of the transcriber: which is, that he gouerned the see of Elie six and thirtie years, and died in the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred sixtie and six, the third calends of June, the first houre of the first ferie or fridaie. Which by no account can fall to be true, accounting from the time of the first obteining of the bishoprike in the three and thirtith yeare of Henrie the first, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred thirtie and three. For if you adde the six and thirtie yeares of his gouernement to the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred thirtie and three, then must he die in the yeare of grace one thousand one hundred sixtie and nine. And if you will haue him to die in the yeare one thousand one hundred sixtie and six, then can he gouerne but three and thirtie yeares: which three and thirtie added to the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred thirtie and three, in which he began his gouernement, as all authors agree, make the value of one thousand one hundred sixtie and six years of our Lord. So that considering the discordancie of the time of his death found in the written booke of his life, we cannot (I saie) as yet set downe anie certeintie of his death. Though I suppose that to be the truest which I find in Triuet, who affirmeth that he died in the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred sixtie and nine, and the fifteenth of king Henrie the second, after that he had gouerned six and thirtie yeares. He was honorablie buried in the church of saint Ethelred of Elie before the altar dedicated to the holie crosse.

Richard de Elie or Fitzneale, sonne of the said Nigellus bishop of Elie, was made treasuror to K. Henrie the second, by the purchase of his father Nigellus, when the king went to the wars of Tolous. Of whom the historie of Elie writeth, that after the burtall of Nigellus his father, this Richard being also an enimie to the church of Elie, as his father had beene before, made hast to passe ouer the seas to king Henrie the second, fearing that some euill would be prepared against him, if the church should haue sent anie other thither before him. At whose comming to the king, he accused the monks of manie things, and did therewith so edge the king against them, that the king sending into England, charged by Wunnerus one of his chaplens, that the prior of Elie should be deposed, & the monks with all their goods to be proscribed and banished. This man being treasuror to king Henrie the second, the treasure of the said Henrie the second at his death came vnto one hundred thousand marks; notwithstanding the excessiue charges of the king manie waies. Which Richard being bishop of London, by the name of Richard the third, and the kings treasuror, was chosen to that see in the yeare of our redemption one thousand one hundred eightie and nine, being the first yeare of king Richard the first, and was consecrated bishop at Lambeth, by Baldwine archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of Christ 1190: he died the fourth ides of September, in the yeare of grace 1198, being the ninth yeare of king Richard the first.

Richard of Elie.

William of Elie.

William of Elie being of kin to the last Richard bishop of London, was treasuror to king Richard the first, and to king John. To which William then treasuror, Richard his kinsman the bishop of London An. Dom. 1196 being the seuenth yeare of the reigne of Richard the first, and the same number of yeares of the gouernment of the said Richard in the bishoprike of London, did giue all his houses in Westminster, which the said William did long after giue to the abbat and monks of Westminster, as by the charter therof appears by me in this sort abridged:

Vniuersis Christi fidelibus, ad quos præsens scriptum peruenerit, Gulielmus de Elie quondam regum Angliæ thesaurarius salutem. Nouerit vniuersitas vestra me dedisse, &c: Deo & monachis Westminster, &c: pro animabus Richardi & Iohannis regum Angliæ, & pro anima Richardi London episcopi, &c: domos meas, & curiam cum pertinentibus in villa Westminster, &c: quas habui ex dono Richardi episcopi London, & quæ sunt de feodo Westminster, &c: testis Eustachius Fauconbridge domini regis thesaurarius, &c. He died in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred twentie two, being the first yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, as noteth Matthew Paris and Westminster, who write that then obijt Gulielmus mus Elienſis Angliæ theſaurarius.

A deane of Paules treaſuror.

A deane of Paules was treaſuror to the king, as appeareth by Mat. Parker, in the life of Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie, writing after this maner: Eodem tempore (which was a time betweene the creating of Hubert archbiſhop of Canturburie in the yeere of Chriſt 1194, being the firſt yeare of Richard the firſt, and the death of the ſaid Richard the firſt, which fell in the yeare of Chriſt 1199) eccleſiæ Paulinæ decanus ararij regij cuſtos fuit, ſiue (vt vocant) theſaurarius: and ſo goeth on with a diſcourſe of his miſerable death.

Walter Grete biſhop of Worceſter.

Walter Grete biſhop of Worceſter, whom ſome call treaſuror, in the eleuenth of king John, whereunto I do not yet agree, leauing it to the iudgement of others, and to the finall receiuing or reiecting of him, in the large booke of the whole liues of the lord treaſurors of England.

Geffreie archdeacon of Norwich.

Geffreie archdeacon of Norwich, treaſuror to king John, who forſoke his maiſter the king excommunicat by the pope: as writeth Matthew Parker in the life of Stephan Langton archbiſhop of Canturburie, in theſe following words: Inter quos (meaning the biſhops, which durſt not openlie publiſh the excommunication of the king, but ſecretlie caſt libels about the high waies, which gaue notice therof) quum ad fiſcum regium Gaufridus Norwicenſis archidiaconus negotys regijs intendens ſediſſet, cœpit aſſidentibus exponere excommunicationis ſententiam, in regem iam latam, affirmauítque non eſſe tutum capellanis & eccleſiaſticis dignitatibus beneficiíſque affectis ſeruire regi amplius. Ideóque aulam deſerens, ad eccleſiaſtica beneficia (quæ regis ſeruicio acquiſierat) ſeceſſit. Rex hunc tam proditorie à ſe deficientẽ per Williel. Talbot militem prehendi & ad ſe reduci fecit, eúmque in publica cuſtodia ſeruatum (donec ſiue pœnæ ſiue conſcientiæ tædio pertæſus vitæ fuit, & expirauit) detinuit: whoſe maner of death is in this ſort ſet downe by Matth. Paris pag. 305, that he was committed to priſon, vbi poſt dies paucos, rege præfato (which was king John) iubente, capa indutus plumbea, tàm victualium penuria quàm ipſius capæ ponderoſitate cõpreſſus migrauit ad dominum. Much about which time (as I ſuppoſe) which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and nine, being about the eleuenth yeere of K. John, the checker was by the king remoued from London to Northampton (in hatred of the Londoners) vntill Chriſtmas.

John Ruthall

John Ruthall Cuſtos officij theſaurarij, as is proued out of the records of the exchequer, had that office in the third yeare of Henrie the third, in the yeere 1219.

Euſtace de Fauconbridge biſhop of London.

Euſtachius de Fauconbridge, a iuſtice to receiue fines, chancellor of the exchequer & treaſuror to Henrie the third, was by the biſhop of Rocheſter conſecrated biſhop of London, in the yere of our redemption one thouſand two hundred twentie & one, being the firſt yeare of king Henrie the third. Which Euſtachius in the yeere 1222, with the deane & chapter of London, had great ſutes againſt William abbat of Weſtminſter: he was treaſuror in the third yeare of king Henrie the third, being about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and nineteene: he died the daie before the kalends of November in the yeare of Chriſt 1228, being the thirteenth of king Henrie the third, and is buried on the ſouth ſide of the quéere of Paules (beſides Henrie Wengham) vnder a faire monument of marble, ouer whom on the wall is this inſcription: Hîc iacet Euſtachius de Fauconbridge quondam epiſcopus huius eccleſiæ, qui multa bona contulit miniſtris eccleſiæ ſancti Pauli.

John de Fontnes or Fountenes.

Ioannes de Fontibus, or John de Fontnes was biſhop of Elie and treaſuror in the ninth and eleuenth yeere of king Henrie the third, and before, as I take it. This man being abbat of Fontnes, and (as authors ſaie) vir ſimplex & iuſtus, ac recedens à malo, was at Weſtminſter made biſhop of Elie, in the yeare of Chriſt 1220: he died after that he had bin biſhop fiue yéeres & od moneths, in the yeare of Chriſt 1225, being the ninth yeere of Henrie the third, & was buried in the church of Elie, toward the altar of S. Andrew.

Walter Malclerke biſhop of Carleill.

Walter Malclerke or ſkilleſſe clerke, treaſuror of England, was made biſhop of Carleill, in the yeere of our Lord 1223, being about the ſeuenth yeare of Henrie the third, who in the yeare of Chriſt 1233, being the ſeuentéenth of the ſaid king, was by the counſell of Peter de Laroches biſhop of Wincheſter not onlie remoued from his office of treaſurorſhip, but alſo put to the fine of 100 marks, which he paied, with the loſſe of certeine holds, giuen him by charter, during his life. After which he would haue fled beyond the ſeas, but entring the ſhip at Douer, he & all his were ſtaied and euillie intreted by the kings ſeruants. This man, in the yeare of Chriſt 1246, being the thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, did on the daie of Peter and Paule at Oxenford enter into the habit of the frier preachers. After which, in the yeare of Chriſt 1248, being about the two & thirtith of Henrie the third, he ſurrendred his ſoule to God.

Randulph Briton.

Randulph Briton by ſome is made treaſuror of England, but vntrulie as I ſuppoſe: for in truth he was but treaſuror of the chamber, for anie thing I can learne, and remoued from that place in the ſixteenth yeare of king Henrie the third, in the yeare of Grace 1232, in whoſe place came Peter de Riuall. Of this Randulph is mention had in the chancellors. Beſides which, about this time I read, that Hubert of Borrow was treaſuror: for thus writeth Iohannes Londonienſis. Rex (about the yeare of our Lord 1232) fecit ipſum (which was Hubert of Borrow) ſum iuſticiarium principalem totius Angliæ, & poſtea theſaurarium.

Peter de Dziall.

Peter de Dziall, in Latine called Petrus de Riuallis, was treaſuror of the chamber, and treaſuror of the king, chamberleine of England and Ireland, gardian of all the forreſts of Englande, of all the eſcheats, of all the ports of the ſea, and of all the priſes of England and Ireland; being ſo déere to the king (as hath Matthew Weſtminſter) that Expulſis caſtrorũ cuſtodibus per totam ferè Angliam, rex omnia ſub ipſius Petri cuſtodia commendarat. This man was made treaſuror after Walter Malclerke, in the yéere of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie and three, being about the ſeuentéenth yeare of king Henrie the third, and in the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the third, who (as I gather) was togither with Peter biſhop of Wincheſter, Stephan de Segraue, & Robert Paſſelew, called to accounts, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred thirtie & foure, for the kings treaſure and ſeale euillie imploied & kept. Wherupon Peter de Riuallis hid himſelfe in the cathedrall church of Wincheſter. Which Peter biſhop of Wincheſter & Peter de Riuallis the king remoued by the perſuaſion of Edmund of Abindon biſhop of Canturburie, as they before had remoued Walter Malclerke. After which it ſéemeth that growing into fauor againe, this Petrus de Riuallis was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie & ſeuen, being the one & fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, made treaſuror of the chamber. For thus writeth Matthew Paris: Circa feſtum ſancti Michaelis (which was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred fiftie and ſeuen) mortuo Hurtaldo domini regis conciliario & clerico ſpeciali ac theſaurario de camera regis, ſubrogatur Petrus de Riuallis. Under this Peter de Riuallis did Robert Paſſelew kéepe the kings treaſure. Touching which Robert Paſſelew, whome ſome will haue onelie treaſuror of the chamber, ſome to be treaſuror of England, & ſome to be vndertreaſuror vnder Peter de Riuallis, I will ſet downe out of ſeuerall authors what I haue read therof, leauing to the reader to thinke thereof what he liſt at this time, ſith I determine

Robert Paſſelew whether treaſuror of England or no.

termine fullie hereafter (not hauing now leisure therefore) to define the same in my large volume of the lines of the lord treasurors. Thus therefore touching him writeth Matthew Parker. Quo etiam tempore (which was in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred fortie and foure, being about the eightéenth yeare of the reigne of Henrie the third) Robertus de Passelew, qui in thesauris regys custodiendis & augendis totus versatus est, eóque nomine regi charus, ab ecclesiæ cathedralis Cicestrensis canonicis, qui regi placere studuerant, Cicestrensis episcopus electus est. Quod Bonifacius Cantuariensis archiepisc. indignè tulit, & episcopis prouinciæ suæ cõuocatis, in difficilimis quibusdam & nodosis quæstionibus per Lincolniesem episcopum compositis seriò examinauit, deinde electione rescissa hunc Robertum repulit, & Richardum quendam de Wiz loco suo (incõsulto rege) substituit. Next writeth Matthew Westminster, that in the yeare of Christ 1233, being the seuentéenth of Henrie the third, the nobilitie accused manie of the kings councellors, amongst whome they placed Robertum Passelew thesaurarium. Againe a little after he saith: Et sic abscondit se iterum Robertus Passelew, qui post Walterum Carleolensem officium thesaurarij administrauerat. Of whose death Matthew Paris writeth thus: Eodem quoq; anno (which was 1252, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third) octauo idus Iuny, obyit apud Waltham Robertus Passelew archidiaconus Lewis, &c.: whome I will here leaue, although not in that place in which he should come, if I had once resolued with my selfe that he had beene treasuror of England. But because I had to speake of him with Peter de Rivallis, I thought here in one place to set downe what I had read of them both; and so to ioine them after their death, which were so fast ioined in offices during their liues.

Hugh Patesh. Hugh Patesh. Hugh Patesh.

saurariũ, quod factum est apud sanctũ Albanũ, procurante vt dicitur Iohanne Mansell amico Philippi speciali. This man was treasuror in the 35 and so vntill the 42 yeare of Henrie the third, & was in the same yeare deposed by the barons, he died at Hamesleie, in the yeare of Christ 1259, whose executors were Philip Louell & Robert de Percenton. But his goods after his death the king commanded to be confiscat. And heere before I go any further, I thinke it not amisse to note that some haue mistaken themselues in the accompt of the kings treasuror much about this time, making these persons Walter Brudell & Peter Catchporke or Chaceporke to be the kings treasuror, which by no accompt of yeares can be true, for they were the quænes and not the kings treasurors, as may appeere both by Mat. Paris and Mat. Westmin. whereof the first writeth thus: obijt & Walterus de Brudell eiusdem reginæ thesaurarius, which he placeth in the yere of Christ 1255, being the thirtie ninth yeare of king Henrie the third. Of the second person Chaceporke thus writeth Mat. West. in the yeare of Christ 1254: Veniens autem rex ad mare nec ventum habẽs prosperum, apud Boloniam moratus est inuitus, vbi obijt Petrus Chacepore natione Pictauensis, reginæ thesaurarius & regis clericus & conciliarius specialis. And thus this much by the waie of the two treasurors of the quæns, supposed by some (but not rightlie) to haue beene the kings.

John Crakehall. John Crakehall archdeacon of Bedford was treasuror in 42, 43, 44 yeare of Henrie the third, to whom the king in the fortie fourth of his reigne, being the yeare of Christ 1260, gaue a prebendarie, wherin being inuested, he was from thence remoued by a former collation therof made to one John le Gras. The said Crakehall after died the same yere at London.

John abbat of Peterborow. John abbat of Peterborow was by the barons in the 44 yeare of Henrie the third made treasuror, as the other officers of the king also were, Nicholas of Elie was then made chancellor, & Hugh de Spenser chiefe iustice, which office of treasurorship this John continued, in the 46 yeare of Henrie the firt, 1262.

Nicholas de Elie. Nicholas de Elie so called bicause he was archdeacon of Elie, was treasuror to the king in the seuen and fourtith of Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1263, whereof I haue seene this note of record. Memorandum quòd in crastino Paschæ, Anno 47 H. 3. In præsentia Rogeri le Bigot comite Norffolke & marischalli Angliæ, Hugo le Bigot, Arnoldi de Berkeley baron, de scaccario magistri, Iohannis de Chisull cancellar. regis, &c. Recepit magister Nicholaus archidiaconus Elienſis thesaurarius subscripta in thesauraria dom. regis, &c. This man as before appeereth had bin chancellor, of whom is mention made in my following tretise of the chancellors.

Thomas de Wimundham. Thomas Wimundham. This man being chiefe chanter of Lichfield, was by the barons in the yeare of Christ 1258, in the one and fourtith yeare of king Henrie the third, made treasuror (at the ercheker) of the seale or place where the writs be sealed with greene war, after which he was treasuror to the king in the 50, 51, & 52 yeares of king Henrie the third.

John Chisull. John Chisull sometime chancellor was treasuror in the foure & fiftith yeare of Henrie the third, being about the yeare of Christ a thousand two hundred three score and nine. He was deane of Paules, chosen bishop of London in the yeare of Christ a thousand two hundred seuentie and three, and consecrat to that place in the yeare of Christ a thousand two hundred seuentie & foure, in which place he continued about fiue yeares, and died in the yeare of our redemption 1279, being in the seuenth yeare of the reigne of the victorious prince king Edward the first of that name. See more of this Chisull in my following discourse of the chancellors.

Philip de Elie. Philip de Elie was treasuror (as appeareth by the records of the ercheker) in the 56 yeare of king Henrie the third, and in the first yeare of king Edward the first, partlie falling in the yeare of our redemption 1272, and 1273.

Joseph de Chancie. Joseph de Chancie, whom one anonymall author calleth John de Chancie, but not rightlie as I suppose, was treasuror in the second yere of the scourger of the Scots king Edward the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1274.

William bishop of Bath. William Gifford bishop of Bath and Welles was treasuror to Edward the first, he was remoued to Yorke in the yeare of Christ 1265, this man is by manie chronicles, and that perhaps most trulie called Walter Gifford. He died in the seuenth yeare of king Edward the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1279 as hath Nicholas Triuet. Of this man see more in the chancellors of England.

Robert Burnell. Robert Burnell bishop of Bath and Welles chancellor of England, and treasuror to king Edward the first, is by the Welsh historie pag. 328, called chiefe iustice of England. Leland reporteth that an abbat told him how that a bishop Burnell built the castell of Acton Burnell. Of this man shall be more spoken hereafter in the chancellors of England.

Joseph de Chancie. Joseph de Chancie the second time treasuror to king Edward the first, in the firt yeare of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption 1278, was also prior of S. Johns Jerusalem in Anglia, as I take it; and by an other name called the lord of S. Johns or of the knights of the Rhodes in England.

Thomas Becke. Thomas Becke archdeacon of Worcester, was treasuror in the seuenth yeare of king Edward the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1278, as some haue, but 1279 as other haue (by the witnesse of Leland, out of a monke of Glastenburie) in his booke De assertione Arthuri, reciting the words of the said monke in this sort.

Anno Domini 1267: Eaduardus rex Henrici tertij filius, venit cum regina sua Glasconiam. Die vero Martis proxima sequenti, fuit rex & tota curia accepta sumptibus monasterij. Quo die in crepusculo, fecit apperiri sepulchrum inclyti Arthuri, vbi in duabus cistis imaginibus & armis eorũ depictis, ossa dicti regis miræ grossitudinis separata inuenit. Imago quidem reginæ coronata, imaginis regiæ corona fuit prostrata, cum abscisione sinistræ auriculæ, & vestigijs plagæ vnde moriebatur: inuenta est scriptura super his singulis manifesta. In crastino, videlicet die Mercury rex ossa regis, regina ossa reginæ, pallijs pretiosis reuoluta, in suis cistis recludentes, & sigilla sua apponentes, præceperunt idem sepulchrum ante maius altare celeriter collocari, retentis externis capitibus propter populi deuotionem: appositâ huiusmodi scriptura: Hæc sunt ossa nobilissimi regis Arthury, quæ anno dominicæ incarnationis 1278, decimo tertio calendas Maij, per dominum Eaduardum regem Angliæ illustrem hîc fuerunt sic collocata, præsentibus Leonora serenissima eiusdem regis consorte, & filia domini Ferandi regis Hispaniæ, magistro William de Middleton nunc Norwicensi electo, magistro Thoma de Becke archidiacono Dorsitensi & prædicti regis thesaurario, domino Henrico de Lasciæ comite Lincolniæ, domino Amideo comite Subaudiæ, & multis magnatibus Angliæ. Thus farre the monke of Glastenburie.

Richard de Ware. Richard Warren or de Ware abbat of Westminster, was made abbat about the yeare of Christ 1260, being about the foure and fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, who was made treasuror, as hath John de Euersden, in the yeare of our redemption a thousand two hundred & foure score, being the eight yeare of king Edward the first: which yeare of Christ a thousand two hundred and foure score, some do falslie make to fall in the tenth, some in the eleuenth yeare of the said Edward the first, which contrarietie hath onelie risen by the default of the transcriber. But most certeine it is that he was treasuror in the ninth, eleuenth, and part of the twelfe of the said king Edward the first. This man going to Rome for his consecration, brought from thense certeine workemen and rich purphyrie stones, where of and by whom he made that rare pauement (conteining a discourse of the whole world) which is at this date most beautifull, and to be seene at Westminster before the communion table: a thing of that singularitie, curiousnesse, and rarenesse, that England hath not the like againe, in which pauement are circularie written in letters of brasse these ten verses following:

Si lector posita prudenter cuncta reuoluat,
Hic finem primi mobilis inueniet.
Sepes trina canes, & equos, homines superaddas,
Cervos, & cornix, aquilas, immania cete,
Mundum quòd sequens præcurrit triplicat annos,
Sphericus archetypus, globum hic monstrat microcosmum.
Christi milleno, bis centeno, duodeno,
Cum sexageno, subductis quatuor anno,
Tertius Henricus rex, urbs, Odoricus & abbas
Hos compegere porphyreos lapides.

Anno Domini 1268 Henricus tertius urbs Roma Odoricus cementator & abbas Richardus de Ware fecerunt id pauimentum.

The full explanation of which verses shall be at large set downe in the whole discourse of this abbats life, in my large booke of the liues of the lord treasurors. Which abbat with those workemen and those stones did also frame the shrine of Edward the confessor with these verses, carued out of stone and also gilded set about the same shrine or monument:

Anno milleno Domini, cum septuageno,
Et bis centeno, cum completo quasi deno,
Hoc opus est factum, quod Petrus duxit in actum,
Romanus ciuis. Homo, causam noscere si vis,
Rex fuit Henricus sancti præsentis amicus.

This abbat died the second date of December, in the yeare of our redemption a thousand two hundred fourte score and three, being the twelfe yeare of king Edward the first; after that he had gouerned the monasterie three and twentie yeares and more, and was buried there at Westminster, in the foresaid plaine pauement of purphyrie on the north side neere vnto the tombe (as is yet well to be seene) of Dooner sr Aimer de Valence earle of Penbroke, on which graue is ingrauen this breefe epitaph heere insuing:

Abbas Richardus de Ware qui requiescit
Hic portat lapides, quos hic portauit ab vrbe.

Walter Wenlocke abbat of Westminster, whom Matthew Westminster calleth William de Wenloke, was made abbat of Westminster after the death of Richard de Ware, & was treasuror to king Edward the first, as hath the register of the liues of the abbats of Westminster, and other records that I haue seene. Which office it seemeth that he had, meane betweene the twelfe and the fourtéenth yeare of the said king Edward the first, as I suppose. This man after that he had beene abbat six and twentie yeares lacking six daies, died the fiue and twentith of December on the Christmas date at night, in his manour of Pitesford in Glocestershire, in the first yeare of Edward the sonne of Edward (which was Edward the second) being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred and seuen, and was buried in the church of Westminster, besides the high altar then standing without the south doore of saint Edwards shrine before the presbiterie there, vnder a plaine pauement and a marble stone decentlie adorned with this epitaph to his high commendation:

Walter Wenlocke.

Abbas Walterus iacet hic sub marmore tectus,
Non fuit austerus, sed mitis, famine rectus.

A bishop of Couentrie (and Lichfield) was treasuror of England in the fourtéenth yéere of king Edward the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1286, in whose place in the same yeare came John Kirkbie.

Bishop of Couentrie.

John Kirkbie deane of Wimburne and archdeacon of Couentrie, & treasuror to king Edward the first, was on the seuenth calends of August in the yeare of our Lord 1286, being the fourtéenth yeare of the said Edward (then at Paris) made bishop of Elie, whome Leland (the refiner of all names doth in his cõment vpon his song of the swan in the word Winchelsega thus terme; Iohannes Cherchebius episcopus Anguillarinus regia thesauris. This man was treasuror in the sixtéenth, seuentéenth, & part of the eightéenth of Edward the first, in which yeare (as it séemeth) being part of the yeare of Christ 1290 this bishop died, the seuenth calends of Aprill, after that he had béene bishop three yeares some moneths and some daies, and was buried by Walepole bishop of Norwich in the church of Elie, on the north part of the quére before the altar of saint John Baptist.

John Kirkbie bishop of Elie.

William de Marchia or Gulielmus Martius was treasuror in Easter terme, in the eightéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the first, in which office he continued about fiue yeares, & was remoued from that place on the 23 yeare of the said king Edward the first, and Peter of Leicester baron of the exchéker, with the two chamberleins executed all functions of that office vntill a new treasuror was made. This William de Marchia was made bishop of Bath and Welles, in the yeare of Christ 1293, being the 22 yeare of king Edward the third, in which sée he remained almost ten yeares, and died in the yeare of our Lord 1302, being about the 32 yeare of the said king Edward the first, and was buried in the church of Welles in the wall, betwéene the doore of the cloister and the altar of saint Martine, at whose tombe in time past (as the nature of that credulous age did hastilie beléeue) were manie miracles done; as some haue left in memorie to the following posteritie.

William de Marchia.

Walter Langhstone bishop of Lichfield and Couentrie was made treasuror after William de Marchia, in the 23 yeare of king Edward the first, in which office he continued (as I gather) during the life of king Edward the first, which fell in the 35 yeare of his reigne, being the yéere of our redemption 1307, and was then remoued and imprisoned in the tower with two men onelie by Edward the second then comming to the crowne, because the said Walter Langhstone had caused king Edward the first to imprison, and as some haue to banish this new king Edward the second for breaking downe the parkes of the said bishop Walter Langhstone. During the time that this Peter de Willebie was vnder treasuror or lieutenant of the treasuror, for the words be Locum tenens thesaurarij, in the thirtith, one and thirtith, two and thirtith of Edward the first, this Walter was made bishop of Couentrie and Lichfield, in the yeare of our redemption 1295, being the three and twentith yeare of king Edward the first, and the same yeare that he was made treasuror. He died about the yeare of our redemption 1321, being about the fourtéenth yeare of king Edward the second, to which bishop the lord Cobham now liuing his heire, as being descended from Margaret the sister and heire of John Peuerell the cosine and heire to this Walter Langhstone, which Margaret was maried to sir William de la Pole of Asbie knight, frõ whom the lord Cobham is issued. And here sith I haue before made mention of the death of Edward the first, although it be somewhat impertinent to the treasurors; yet for that I do not remember that the same verses are set down in any of our late English chronicles, & for that I would haue a perpetuall memorie of them, I will here deliuer such epitaphicall verses as I haue found touching king Edward the first:

Walter Langhstone bishop of Lichfield.

Dum viguit (rex) & valuit tua magna potestas,
Fraus latuit, pax magna fuit, regnauit honestas,
Scotos Eadwardus, dum vixit, suppeditauit,
Tenuit, afflixit, depressit, dilaniauit.

Walter Reinolds scholemaster to Edw. 2. bishop of

Walter Reinolds

nolds bishop of worcester.

of Worcester, and after of Canturburie, and chancellor of England, was aduanced to the place of the lord treasuror of England, in the 1. Edw. 2. being the yeare of Christ 1307, after which in the yeare of our Lord 1308, he was made bishop of Worcester, he continued in the office of treasuror vntill some part of the fourth yeare of the said Edward the second, at what time came in his place John Sandall, who was lieutenant vnto the said Walter in place of the treasuror, as appeareth by manie writs directed vnto him by the name of John Sandall Locum tenenti W. episcopi Wigorniæ. Of him is more spoken in the chancellors of England. But here I cannot passe ouer some both skilfull in antiquitie, & persons of no small name by reason of their office, whereof the one in print, and the other in a booke of the nobilitie of England since the conquest vnprinted, do make Hugh Spenser the elder treasuror of England, which as yet I cannot find to be true, for that I doubt that king Edw. 2. louing him so entierlie would euer after remoue him, & for that the full succession of treasurors before set downe, being true and taken out of ancient and most certeine records, will not afford him anie place among them. But leauing that matter to others who can better defend the same, I will descend to the other treasurors.

Hugh Spenser the elder.

John de Sandall.

John de Sandall being clerke, Scutifer regis, chancellor of the exchéker, and chancellor of England, hauing béene before vnder treasuror or deputie for the high treasuror, came now in the fourth yeare of Edward the second to be made chiefe treasuror, & entered into that office in Easter terme about the beginning of the said fourth yeare of Edward the second. But in the yere following, which was the fift of Edward the second, he gaue place to another. He was chosen bishop of Winchester in the ninth yeare of Edward the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1316. Of whome thus writeth Anonymus M. S. Obierunt episcopus Winton & Eli viri sacra professione insigniti, quorum primo successit Iohannes de Sandall cancellarius Angliæ vir cunctis affabilis & necessarium communitati. Secundo successit Iohannes de Hothum scaccar. regis, vir siquidem scientiæ penitùs ignarus, qui statim episcopatus ascenso culmine, ad honorum pariter & officij thesaurarij rex ipsum in sui fauorem sublimauit. Of which John Sandall, and also of John Hothume, shall be more said hereafter.

Walter Norwich, knight, treasuror in the fift yeare of Edward the second, and afterward in Easter tearme in the eight yeare of king Edward the second, did on the third date of October in the said eight yeare of king Edward the second receiue the office of the treasurorship, and on the same date tooke a corporall oth before the barons and chamberleins of the exchéker, to behaue himselfe well and faithfullie in the same office, which he had receiued of king Edward the second, by his letters dated at Yorke the six and twentith date of September, in the eight yeare of the said king Edward the second, which he kept not long at that time.

walter Norwich.

John Sandall was the second time lord treasuror, in the six and seuenth yeare of king Edward the second. This man being bishop of Winchester, was treasuror. Of him sée more in the chancellors of England.

John Sandall.

Walter de Norwich being treasuror as before in the eight yeare of king Edward the second, did not long inioy the same, but as I suppose gaue place to John Drokensford.

Walter de Norwich.

John de Drokensford, the fourtéenth bishop of Bath & Welles, had (as I haue read) the great seale deliuered vnto him, and was also treasuror of England. But bicause I find not as yet in what yeare, although it were in the time of king Edward the second, I cannot set downe the certeintie. Of whome thus writeth the register of the bishops of Bath. Iohannes Drokensford thesaurarius 14, Bathon episcopus post Walterum Haselshawes, successit in episcopatum Bathon, annis 19, Ille episcopatum pluribus ædificijs insignauit, francheſias per reges episcopatui concessas non solùm literatorie renouauit sed etiam ampliauit. Et quo ad ditationem & exaltationem parentelæ suæ ferè fuit æqualis prædecessori suo Roberto Bornell. Et Welliæ sepelitur ante altare sancti Iohannis Baptistæ.

John Drokensford.

John Hothum Bishop of Elie (as is before noted out of one anonymall chronicle) obteined the place and honour of treasurorship, in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the second, which he did not long inioy. For in the Michaelmas tearme in the twelfe yere of king Edward the second, came William Walwaine. Of this John Hothum is mention made in the discourse of the chancellors hereafter.

John Hothum bishop of Elie.

William Walwaine treasuror of England in the twelfe yeare of king Edward the second, being about the yeare of our redemption 1318, was (as it should séeme) for his negligence and vnworthines of the place most worthlie remoued at the parlement at Yorke, in such sort that he possessed not that place (as I coniecture) aboue halfe a yere. For in the same twelfe yeare came the bishop of Winchester.

William Walwaine

John Stratford bishop of Winchester, vpon the remouing of Walwaine, was in the same twelfe yeare of king Edward the second admitted into the office of the treasurorship, vntill the king should otherwise determine. Which bishop found not in the treasurie aboue nine & twentie pounds seuentéene shillings and eight pence, which might well be the cause of the displacing of the said Walwaine, who had ouer prodigallie dispersed the kings treasure.

John Stratford bishop of Winchester.

Walter Stapleton bishop of Excester was treasuror in the thirteenth yeare of king Edward the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1319, in which I suppose he continued vntill the fiftéenth yeare of the said king, being about the yere of Christ 1321. Of this man doth more follow.

Walter Stapleton bishop of Excester.

Walter Norwich knight was the third time made treasuror, which place he inioied in the fiftéenth yeare of king Edward the second, being the yéere of our redemption 1321, or there abouts. Walsingham saith that in the second of Edward the third obijt William de Norwich.

walter Norwich.

Roger Northborow Scutifer or kéeper of the seale, being taken by the Scots at the battell of Bannockesburne about the seuenth yeare of Edward the second, in the yeare of our redemption 1313, was also clearke of the wardrobe, and treasuror in the sixteenth of king Edward the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1322. Of whom thus writeth one anonymall chronicle M.S. Anno Domini 1321 obijt Walterus de Langtone episcopus Cestren. cui successit in episcopatus honore per viã impressionis & ambitionis Rogerus de Northburgh, clericus, de regis garderobia, sibi regis in cunctis fauentibus auxilio & voluntate. I haue read of one Godfrete de Northburgh bishop of Chester that died in the three and thirtith of king Edward the third, being the yere of Christ 1359, which perhaps should be this Roger Northborow, Godfrete being by the transcriber placed in stéed of Roger. But I will not at this time define anie certeintie thereof, although I find an other note of one Roger Northborow consecrated bishop of Couentrie and Lichfield, in the yeare of Christ 1321, who sat in that sée eight and thirtie years, which eight and thirtie yeares added to the yeare of Christ, in which this Roger was made bishop, do make vp the number of the yeare of Christ 1359, in which it is said that Godfrete Northborow died.

Roger Northborow or Norberie.

Walter Stapleton bishop of Excester, the second time treasuror in the eightéenth yeare of king Edward the second, & before, was remoued in Easter tearme in the same yeare. In which Easter tearme was William bishop of Yorke also made treasuror, as is proued by the pell of Exitus, that terme being thus intituled, De termino Paschæ anno 18 *Ed.*2. tam tempore W. episcopi Exon. quàm W. archiepiscopi Eborum. This Walter being elected to the bishoprike of Ercester, in the yeare of our redemption 1307, did sit in that place twentie years, and was beheaded at the comming into England of quéene Isabell to depose Edward the second, in the twentith yere of the said king Edward the second, in the yére of our redemption 1326. The cause of whose beheading was, for that he had procured the banishment of the said quéene Isabell, and of hir sonne prince Edward.

Walter Stapleton bishop of Excester.

William Melton. William Melton archbishop of Yorke made lord treasuror in Easter terme, in the eightéenth yére of Edward the second, kept the same office vntill the deposition of himselfe from that place, & of his maister from his kingdome, in the twentith yeare of the reigne of the said Edward the second, and then gaue place to John Stratford.

John Stratford. John Stratford bishop of Winchester was the second time made treasuror of England, in the twentith yeare of the deposed king Edward, after the death of Walter Stapleton. This John the fourteenth daie of November, in the said twentith yeare of Edward the second, comming into the excheker, brought thither the kings patent, or open writ, or commandement, vnder the seale of Edward the kings eldest son, to witnes his election and creation to that place of treasuror: the tenor of which writ I haue thought good to set downe, because it was done by the son in the fathers name, and vnder the testé of the son, the father yet being king in shew; but the son indéed as gouernor of the realme: which title he inioied, vntill that he most vnnaturallie by the malice of his mother, the ambition of himselfe, and the flatterie of his followers had deposed his father. The tenor of which writ was in these words, as followeth.

EDwardus rex Angliæ, & dominus Hiberniæ, baronibus & camerarijs suis de scaccario suo salutem. Quùm pro eo quòd venerabilis pater W. archiepiscopus Eborum nuper thesaurarius scaccarij prædicti, circa diuersa negotia in partibus Borealibus est occupatus, quominùs intendere possit ad ea quæ ad officium illud in dicto scaccario pertinent exercenda: constituerimus venerabilem patrem Iohannem Wintonien sem episcopum, tenentem locum thesaurarij scaccarij prædicti, quousque de officio illo aliter duximus ordinandum. Percipiendo in eodem officio (dum illud sic tenuerit) feodum consuetum prout in literis nostris patentibus præfato episcopo inde confectis plenius continetur. Vobis mandamus, quod ipsum episcopum ad officium admittatis, & ei in his quæ ad officium prædictum pertineant intendatis in forma prædicta. Teste Edwardo filio nostro primogenito custode regni nostri. Apud Hereford sexto die Nouembris, anno regni nostri vicesimo.

Adam Tarleton. Adam Tarleton, or de Orleton borne in Herefordshire, being Decretorum doctor, was made bishop of Hereford by the pope at Auinion in the yeere one thousand three hundred and seauentéene, about the tenth or eleuenth yeere of the reigne of Edward the second, being he that made the sermon for the deposition of king Edward the second, and wrote the amphibologicall epistle for the death of the king, conteining these words, Regem occidere nolite timere bonum est, which hath by a comma or point made at Timere one sense, and by a comma made at Nolite another sense. Which Adam was made lord treasuror in the first yeere of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred twentie and sir, in which office he continued not long. For in the Easter terme of the said king came Henrie bishop of Lincolne. This man was made bishop of Winchester in the yére one thousand three hundred thirtie and fiue, being the ninth yeere of king Edward the third: in which seat he sate twelue yeares. The death of which Adam (who gaue Henningfield parsonage to the church of Hereford) sir Thomas de la More doth most plentifullie set forth.

Henrie Burwash or Burgesse bishop of Lincolne. Henrie Burwash bishop of Lincolne was lord treasuror in Easter terme, in the first yére of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred twentie and seauen, in which office he continued vntill the second yeere of Edward the third, and was afterward remoued.

Thomas bishop of Hereford. Thomas bishop of Hereford inioied the honorable place of the lord treasuror, in the third yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred twentie and nine: but in the yére following another came in place.

Robert Woodhouse. Robert Woodhouse possessed the roome of the high treasuror of England, in the fourth yére of the reigne of the said yong king Edward the third, being the yeere that the word became flesh one thousand three hundred and thirtie, and was also treasuror some part of Michaelmasse terme, in the fift yére of king Edward the third, who in the yére following did giue place vnto another.

William Melton. William archbishop of Yorke was againe treasuror of England, in the fift yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred thirtie and one, and inioied that place some part of Michaelmasse terme in the said yeere, after whome came the bishop of Norwich.

W. bishop of Norwich. W. bishop of Norwich was made treasuror in Michaelmas terme in the said fift yére of the reigne of king Edward the third: in which terme there had béene three lord treasurors successiuelie (a thing seldome or neuer heard, nor I thinke likelie againe euer to be) which office this bishop kept all Michaelmasse terme, in the first yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred thirtie and two, and somewhat more in the end, yet yéelding that honor to another.

Robert le Atlestons Robert le Atlestone, being lord treasuror in the seuenth yeere of the reigne of Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred thirtie and three, continued in the same office vntill the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our saluation one thousand three hundred thirtie sir, which was about three yeares, the same being a longer time than anie other had possessed that place, since the beginning of the reigne of the said king Edward the third.

Henrie Burwash bishop of Lincolne. Henrie Burwash bishop of Lincolne was againe treasuror the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred thirtie and sir, in which yére (as hath Scala chronicorum) the king holding his parlement at London, was aduised by his councell to prosecute his title to the crowne of France. Whereupon king Edward sent ambassadors to the duke of Bauiere emperor (which had married the other sister to the earle of Henalt, as king Edward the third had maried one) for suertie of aliance, and to reteine noble men about him with no small charge, which ambassadors were Henrie Burgwash bishop of Lincolne, and the earles William Montacute of Sarum, and William Clinton of Huntington, who returned to the parlement at London with their answer well liked. Of this man see more in the chancellors, being yet after his ambassage treasuror in some part of the eleuenth yére of Edward the third.

Richard de Burie bishop of Durham. Richard de Burie bishop of Durham did inioie the honor of lord treasuror, in the eleuenth yeere of the the reigne of king Edward the third: he was a man of great grauitie, and much esteemed of the nobilitie and gentlemen of the north. Of this man is more spoken in the chancellors of England.

William de la Zouch. William de la Zouch borne of the noble house of the lord Zouch, was treasuror of England, in the twelfe yeere of king Edward the third, in the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred thirtie and eight; he being bishop of Yorke was vicegerent to the king in the north parts, in the twentith yeere of the reigne of the said Edward the third, and in the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred fortie and six, at what time he tooke Dauid Bruce king of Scots. This man went to Rome, and after a long contention betweene him and William Kelseie, Kilsbie, or Kelseie (for all these different names are found in authors) touching the archbishoprike of Yorke, he was after two yeares thus spent consecrated bishop of Yorke by pope Clement the sixt. After which this William in the eleuenth yeare of his bishoprike, being long troubled with a grieuous disease, began the worke of a chapell on the south side adioining to the church of saint Peters in Yorke, where he purposed to be buried: but died before it was finished, and lieth interred in the said church before the altar of saint Edward the confessor.

Richard Sadington knight. Sir Richard Sadington knight was treasuror in the fouretéenth yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred & fortie. There was one Robert Sadington liuing about this time, of whom is more mention in the chancellors of England: but as yet I well know not whether they were both one man or no; sith authors maie misplace Robert for Richard, as they haue often done.

Robert Northborow bishop of Couentrie. Robert Northborow, being at that time (as I iudge) bishop of Couentrie, was treasuror of England, in the fouretéenth yéere of the reigne of Edward the third, being the yeere of our Lord one thousand three hundred and fortie, in which yéere he was remoued, whom with the chancellor the king meant afterward (as after shall appeare) to haue sent into Flanders as pledges for monie which the K. owght there. After whom I suppose that Sadington came in place, although I haue a little misplaced him at this time, following the fansies of other men more than mine owne.

A bishop of Chester. A bishop of Chester was lord treasuror of England in the fiftéenth yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being about the yéere that the word became flesh, one thousand three hundred fortie and one, in which office he did not long continue.

Robert Perning. Robert Perning or Pernicke was lord treasuror in the Easter terme, in the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred fortie and one, being the fiftéenth yéere of king Edward the third, in which yéere also he was made chancellor, and so continued both offices a while, vntill in the sixtéenth yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, as I gather by all circumstances of times, records, and histories: who in the seuentéenth yeere of the reigne of the said king Edward the third, being the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred fortie and three (as appeareth by the bookes of the law) being chancellor, deliuered a record with his hands into the court of the kings bench. Of this man more shall be set downe hereafter in my discourse of the chancellors.

Roger Northborow bishop of Couentrie. Roger Northborow (as I take it) being then bishop of Couentrie, did honorablie possesse the place of the lord treasuror of England, in the sixtéenth yéere of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred fortie and two. Of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker in the life of John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie: Ibi (meaning at the tower) *concilium initum est, tandémque definitū, vt archiepiscopus & episcopus Cicestrensis regni cancellarius & Couentrensis thesaurarius, vnà cum alijs à satellitibus & lictoribus deprehensi, ad publicam custodiam rerum à se, absente rege, gestarum rationem reddituri ducerentur. Manè accedunt satellites Lametham, sed archiepiscopus ei pridie decesserat: tum Londinum reuersi Couentrensem & Cicestrensem episcopos cum alijs designatis capiunt, captos ad turrim deducunt, &c. * John Stratford.

William de Culans. William de Culans, being lord treasuror in the seauentéenth yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, three hundred, fortie and three, continued in the same office all Michaelmasse tearme, in the eightéenth yeare of the said Edward the third, and the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred fortie and foure: and being a yeare more. Betweene whom & Thomas Henlæ abbat of Westminster was great contention about the iurisdiction of the hospitall of saint James in the parish of saint Margaret in Westminster, which hospitall is now a statelie house belonging to the prince, and built by king Henrie the eight called the manor of saint James with a parke walled about with bricke.

William de Edington bishop of Winchester. William de Edington, lord chancellor and treasuror of England, and bishop of Winchester, was lord treasuror in Easter terme the nineteenth yeare of Edward the third, being about the yeare of our redemption one thousand, three hundred fortie and fiue, in which office he continued vntill the two and thirtith of the said king, one thousand three hundred fiftie and eight, being fourteene years, which was (as I thinke) as manie more years, as ante one man did possesse that place, since the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the third, vntill the time of this Willam Edington. He was so surnamed of the place where hée was borne, being the towne of Edington in Wiltshire: he was made bishop of Winchester (as some haue) about the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred fortie and seuen, being about the one and twentith yeare of king Edward the third. This man (chosen bishop of Canturburie, but yet neuer bishop) died (as hath Walsingham) in the fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred sixtie and six. I haue read of a bishop of Norwich that should also be treasuror in the foureand twentith of Edward the third, which must fall in the time that this Edington did continue that office: but how true it is, I leaue to others to consider, vntill I haue in my large booke of the liues of the lord treasurors dissolued that, and all other doubts and contrarieties that are here touched, or by authors reported.

John bishop of Rochester. John bishop of Rochester was lord treasuror in the two and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, in the yeare of our redemption 1358, in which office he continued in the thirtie three and thirtie fourth yéere of Edward the third.

Simon Langham bishop of Elie. Simon Langham, being of the priorie of Westminster, made abbat of that house, was shortlie after made lord treasuror of England, which office he held in the fiue & thirtith and six and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, who being bishop of London (as hath Matthew Parker) was in the yeare that the worldof the father tooke on it the forme of a seruant, by due account 1361, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, by the pope made bishop of Elie, where he sat fiue yeares, and was after in the yeare of our redemption, one thousand, three hundred, sixtie and six, being the fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, chosen bishop of Canturburie, and consecrated in the yeare of our redemption 1367, as saith the same Matthew Parker. On which date of his consecration he demanded homage homage of the erle Stafford of Thomas Rosse, John Birrell, Robert Brockill, & Rafe Sentleger, knights for their lands which they held of the sée of Canturburie. Shortlie after which in the yere of our redemption one thousand, three hundred, sirtie and eight, being the two and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, he was made cardinall, & died at Auinere the two and twentith daie of Julie, about the yeare of our redemption, as saith one Anonymus M.S. 1376, being the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, and was buried besides Auinion, in a place which he had raised from the foundation: three yeares after which his bones were brought to Westminster where at this daie he hath one honorable tome on the south side of the shrine amongst the kings, on whose tome the monks of Westminster did sometime place this same epitaph in the remembrance of him:

Simon de Langham sub petris his tumulatus,
Istius ecclesiæ monachus fuerat, prior, abbas,
Sede vacante fuit electus Londonienſis
Præsul & insignis eligi, sed postea primas
Totius regni, magnus regisque minister:
Nam thesaurarius & cancellarius eius,
Ac cardinalis in Roma presbyter iste,
Postque Prænestinus est factus episcopus atque
Nuntius ex parte papæ, transmittitur istuc
Orbe dolente pater, quem nunc reuocare nequimus:
Magdalenæ festo milleno septuageno
Et ter centeno sexto Christi ruit anno:
Hunc Deus absoluat de cunctis quæ malè gessit,
Et meritis matris sibi cælica gaudia donet.

Of this man I haue intreated in my discourse of the cardinals pag. 1165. and in my collection of all the chancellors of England hereafter following.

John Barnet bishop of Worcester.

John Barnet made bishop of Worcester in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred sirtie and two, being the six and thirtith yeare of king Edward the third, was treasuror of England in the seuen and thirtith yeare of Edward the third, in which office he continued, being treasuror in Michaelmasse tearme in the eight & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the said Edward the third, which fell in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred sirtie & foure, and so he continued in the three & fortith yeere of king Edward the third still treasuror. He was made bishop of Bath in the yeare of our redemption 1363, in which bishoprike he remained three yeares, and was by Urbane the first then bishop of Rome translated from Bath to Elie in the yeare of Christ 1866, being the fortith yeere of the reigne of king Edward the third, in which place he sat six yeares: and being a verie old man, and hauing béene treasuror about six yeares, he died at Hatfield the seuenth ides of June, in the yeare that God became man one thousand three hundred seuentie and three, and the seuen and fortith yeere of the often named king Edward the third, he was buried in the church of Elie besides the high altar on the south part.

Richard de Chesterfield.

I haue read and séene by manie noted that one named Richard de Chesterfield was treasuror to the king in the one and fortith yeare of king Edward the third, whome they will haue lord treasuror: which by no possible meanes as farre as I can yet conceiue maie be true: bicause it appeareth by record that John bishop of Elie (which was this Barnet if you marke the time of his translating to Elie) was treasuror in the same yeare: but it maie be that he was treasuror of the chamber or houshold to the said king in the said one and fortith yeare of his reigne.

Thomas de Brantingtom.

Thomas de Brantington, being treasuror for the king in the parts of Guisnes marches and Calis, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred sirtie and seuen, being the one and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, was made bishop of Excester by especiall letters of the king in the yére of our saluation one thousand three hundred sirtie and eight, being the three and fortith yeare of the said Edward the third, and was lord treasuror of England in the foure and fortith & fiue & fortith yére of Edward the third: in which fiue and fortith yeare, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred seuentie and one, he was in a parlement at the petition of the lords remoued, at what time also there passed a law, that the chancellor, treasuror, and clerke of the priuie seale, shuld no more be spirituall men: but that secular men should haue those offices.

Sir Richard Scrope lord of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scrope or Scrobs knight lord of Bolton and chancellor of England, was treasuror of England in the six and fortith, seuen & fortith, & eight and fortith of Edward the third, and then gaue place to sir Robert Ashton knight. This Richard made out of the ground the castell of Bolton consisting of foure great strong towers, and of other statelie lodgings, which castell was erecting eightéene yeares, the charges whereof came pearelie vnto a thousand marks, which was eightéene thousand markes, or twelue thousand pounds: the ounce of siluer being then but at twentie pence, which being now treble and at fiue shillings, doth at this daie amount vnto six and thirtie thousand pounds, which castell he finished before Richard the second died. He bought the heire generall of saint Quintine, that was honor of Hornelie castell in Richmontshire, which heire he was content one Coniers a seruant of his should marrie, and haue the preferrement of that ward: and so Hornelie castell came to the Conierses, of which house the first lord was William Coniers, grandfather to him that died in the time of quéene Marie without heire male, whereby his inheritance came to his three daughters. Which William the first lord Coniers of that name did much cost vpon Hornelie castell: being before but a meane thing. I haue read of this lord Scrope, that he had a sonne called William, whereof we will speake more hereafter, that was earle of Wilshire, who being beheaded in his fathers life, left no issue behind him. After which the father surviuing was made treasuror to the king and died in honor, although he was not restored to his dignitie of chancellorship: but at what time he should be the second time treasuror (after the death of his sonne William) in the time of Henrie the fourth, I can not as yet certeinlie learne. But it maie be that he was againe treasuror in the ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth: for that I find not by any former search who then possessed that place. It séemeth that he had two wiues, the one the daughter of the lord Spenser the other the daughter of Michaell de la Pole erle of Suffolke called Blanch. He had three sons, for whom he bought of the king the three daughters and heires of Robert lord Tiptoft, whereof the eldest daughter Margaret was married to Roger his second sonne, the second daughter was married to William his eldest sonne, the third daughter called Millescent was married to Stephan the third sonne of the said Richard.

Sir Robert Ashton.

Sir Robert Ashton knight, constable of Douer castell, was lord treasuror in the fiftith and one and fiftith of king Edward the third in Michaelmasse tearme, which was the last Michaelmasse tearme wherein the king reigned, being about the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred seuentie and six, of which name there was also one that was chiefe baron in the time of Edward the second, as I haue read.

Henrie Wake bishop of Worcester.

Henrie Wake or Wakefield, being made bishop of Worcester in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred seuentie and fiue, being the fortie and ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, was made lord treasuror of England in the

yeare

yeare that the word of the father toke flesh in the wombe of the woman, one thousand three hundred seuentie and six, in the one and fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, in which office he continued part of Easter tearme in the first yeare of king Richard the second, being about the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred seauentie and eight, he died in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred ninetie and fiue, as saith Walsingham.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester was made lord treasuror of England towards the latter end of Easter tearme, in the first yeare of king Richard the second, falling in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred seauentie and eight, as I at this time account it: from which place he was shortlie remoued in the second yeare of king Richard the second.

Richard earle of Arundell.

Richard earle of Arundell and Surrie, made lord treasuror of England in the second yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, whereof part fell in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred seauentie and eight, & part in the yéere one thousand three hundred seauentie and nine, continued about one yeare in the same, and then gaue place to him which possessed the same office last before him, he married Elisabeth the daughter of William de Bohune earle of Northampton & Hereford, by whome he had issue Thomas earle of Arundell, Jone married to William Beauchampe lord Aburgauennie, Elisabeth married to Thomas lord Powbzate, Margaret married to sir Rowland Lenthall, and Alice married to John Charleton lord Powes: this Richard was beheaded in the one and twentith yeare of Richard the second.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester was the third time lord treasuror of England, in the third yeere of the after deposed king Richard the second, & was remoued from his office in the fourth yéere of the said Richard, in the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred and eightie, after the account of such as begin the yéere on the fiue and twentith of March.

Robert Hales.

Robert Hales chiefe prior of the knights of the Rhodes, intituled by the name of the knights of S. Johns Jerusalem in England, was lord tresuror of England in the fourth yeere of the reigne of Richard the second, in which office he continued during his life: for shortlie after that he came into that place (which as I suppose he held Easter terme, and some moneths after) in the said yéere of Richard the second, in the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred eightie and one (the rebelles hauing spoiled the hospitall or famous college of those knights of saint Johns by Smithfield neere vnto London) amongest others did fetch this Robert Hales out of the tower of London (where the king then laie) and beheaded him on the tower hill.

Hugh lord Segraue.

Hugh Segraue knight, whome Walsingham calleth Regis senescallum the kings steward, was made lord treasuror of England in the fift yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, who continued in the said office the first, seauenth, eight, and some part of the Michaelmasse terme in the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred eightie and fiue.

John Fortham bishop of Durham.

John Fortham canon, being secretarie to the king, was made bishop of Durham the nine and twentith of Maie, in the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred eightie and one, being the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, and was inthronized in September, in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred eightie and two, being the first yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second. This man was made lord treasuror in Michaelmasse terme the ninth yeare of king Richard the second, being the yeare of our saluation one thousand three hundred eightie and fiue: and so continued part of the tenth yeare of king Richard the second, vntill he was by parlement discharged. He was translated from the bishoprike of Durham to Elie by Boniface the pope the fift calends of October, as hath the booke of Durham, one thousand three hundred eightie nine, being the twelfe yeere of the same Richard: but as saith the booke of Elie one thousand three hundred eightie and eight, being the thirteenth yeare of Richard the second. Which both may be true, because the one may haue relation to the yeare of his translation, and the other to the yeare of his inthronization, both which manie times happened in seuerall yeares of manie other bishops. He was bishop of Elie seuen and thirtie years, three moneths, and foure daies, and died a verie old man the thirteenth of December, in his manor of Dunham, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred twentie and fiue, falling in the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first.

John bishop of Hereford.

John Gilbert bishop of Hereford was by parlement made lord treasuror in the tenth yeare of king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred eightie and six, as I for this time take it, in which office he continued the eleuenth, and all Michaelmasse terme in the twelfe yeere of king Richard the second, and the one and twentith of March following: after which he was againe remoued, and then he with twelue more were appointed by commission to the gouernment of the whole realme vnder the king, of whome thus writeth one Anonymall chronicle M.S. Is fuit de ordine prædicatorũ, vir qui plus lingua quàm fide regebat, which bishop (as I suppose) was remoued to saint Dauids, after that he had bene thirteene yeares bishop of Hereford.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester.

Thomas Bzantington bishop of Excester. I haue read that the bishop of Excester was made treasuror in the twelfe yeare of Richard the second, vpon the remouing of John Gilbert, which bishop of Excester could not be Edmund Gifford, as some falselie name him, for there is no such man as I can find in the catalog of all the bishops of Excester: neither was it Edmund Stafford, for he was not made bishop of Excester vntill the twentith of June one thousand three hundred ninetie and fiue, being the daie before king Richard the second began the one and twentith yeere of his reigne, which is eight yéers after the time whereof we now intreat. Therefore it must néeds be Thomas Bzantington, for he being consecrated bishop of Excester the tenth of March, in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred & seuentie, being the foure and fortith yeare of Edward the third, and gouerning that see foure and twentie years, till the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred ninetie and fiue, in which came Edmund Stafford kéeper of the priuie seale; it must néeds be that (the bishop of Excester being treasuror in the twelfe yeare of Richard the second, falling in the yeere of our redemption one thousand three hundred eightie and eight) it was this man Bzantington, and that he was the fourth time made lord treasuror of England, about the eightenth yeare after that he was made bishop of Excester, who died in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred ninetie and fiue, as hath Ypodigma.

John Gilbert bishop of saint Dauids in Wales.

John Gilbert bishop of saint Dauids in Wales was lord treasuror in the thirteenth and fouretéenth yeares of the reigne of the deposed king Richard the second. Of whome, because there is somewhat spoken before, we will intreat the lesse of him in this place.

John

John Waltham bishop of Salisburie.

John Waltham, of whome I haue spoken more in my discourse of the archbishops of Canturburie, in the life of William Courtnete was bishop of Salisburie, maister of the rolles in the first yeare of Richard the second, and keeper of the priuie seale, after which he was treasuror of England, in the fiftéenth, sixtéenth, seauentéenth, and part of the eightéenth of Richard the second, for he died in Michaelmas terme in the said 18 yeare of Richard the second, in the yere of Christ 1395, others saie 1394, of whome thus writeth Walsingham: Hoc anno (which was 1395) obijt Iohannes de Waltham episcopus Sarum & regni thesaurarius, qui tantùm regi complacuerit, vt etiam (multis licèt murmurantibus) apud monasterium inter reges meruit sepulturam.

Roger Walden bishop of London.

Roger Walden sometime secretarie to the king and treasuror of the towne of Calis (in the twelfe yére of Richard the second) was made lord treasuror in the eightéenth of the same king, about the yére of our Lord 1365, in which office he continued the two and twentith of the said Richard the second. He was elected and made bishop of Canturburie, but after reiected and deposed, and thereupon was by pope Innocent the seuenth made bishop of London on the tenth of December, in the yére of Christ 1404, being the first yeare of Henrie the fourth, in the which bishoprike he continued about one yere, and died in the yeare 1406, being buried at saint Bartholomews priorie in Smithfield, who of a poore man (as saith Walsingham) was made lord treasuror of England.

G. bishop of saint Dauids in wales.

G. bishop of S. Dauids was lord treasuror of England in the two and twentith yere of Richard the second, which bishop I suppose to be Gute de Mone, whom the booke Ypodigma & Thomas Walsingham call bishop of S. Dauids, and saie that he died in the yére of our redemption 1407, writing in this sort: Eodem anno Guido de Mone Meneuensis episcopus præsentis lucis fensit eclipsim, qui dum vixit magnorum malorum causa fuit.

William Scrope earle of Wilshire.

William Scrope knight, vicechamberleine to Richard the second was lord treasuror, he bought of William Montacute earle of Salisburie the Ile of Man, with the crowne thereof. He was one of those to whom king Richard the second let the kingdom to farme, he was lord treasuror of England in the 21 of Richard the second, and was after created earle of Wilshire, in the said 21 yere of the same Richard the second, in the yére of Christ 1397. He was after beheded at Bristow in the 23 and last yeare of the then deposed king Richard. Of which William Scrope and others thus writeth that worthie poet sir John Gower in his historie of Richard the second, commonlie taken as part of his worke intituled Vox clamantis.

Henrie Bolingbroke cõming into England and deposing Richard the second.

Dux probus audaci vultu, cum plebe sequaci*
Regnum scrutatur, si proditor inueniatur,
Sic tres exosos, magis omnibus ambitiosos,
Regni tortores, inuenerat ipse priores,
Ense repercussi pereunt, Gren, Scrop, quoq; Bussi,
Hi qui regales fuerant cum rege sodales,
Scrop comes & miles, cuius Bristolia viles
Actus declarat, quo mors sua fata pararat.
Gren quoque sorte pari, statuit dux decapitari
Bussi conuictus, similes quoque sustinet ictus,
Vnanimes mente, pariter mors vna repente,
Hos tres prostrauit gladius, quos fine vorauit,
Sicut & egerunt alijs, sic hi vociderunt,
Quo dux laudatur, regnúmque per omne iocatur.

Sir John Northberie.

Sir John Northberie made lord treasuror in the first yeare of king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare that God tooke on him the forme of a seruant, a thousand three hundred ninetie and nine, and continued in the same in the third yeare of Henrie the fourth, in which yeare he was also keeper of the priuie garderobe in the tower.

Henrie Bowet.

Henrie Bowet made bishop of Bath, about the yeare of our redemption 1401, being also about the second yeare of Henrie the fourth, in which bishoprike he continued eight yeares, and was after at the kings instance in the yére of Christ a thousand foure hundred and seuen, about the eight yeare of Henrie the fourth remoued to Yorke. This man was lord treasuror of England in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption 1403, in which place he continued not aboue a yére, if so long.

William lord Rosse.

William lord Rosse, the sonne of Thomas lord Rosse, did possesse the honorable place of the lord treasuror of England, in the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth, being about the yeare of our saluation one thousand foure hundred and foure, and shortlie after gaue place to the lord Furnuall. He married Margaret daughter of Fitzallen lord Matrauars, he had issue Thomas lord Rosse slaine in France, in the yeare one thousand foure hundred twentie and one, about the ninth yeare of Henrie the first, and manie other children.

Thomas lord Furnuall.

Thomas lord Furnuall kept the place and office of the lord treasuror of England, the first, seuenth, and some part of the eight yeare of king Henrie the fourth, as in Michaelmasse tearme of the same eight yeare, falling in the yeare of our redemption, one thousand foure hundred and six, after which this lord Furnuall (who had the custodie of the castell and honour of Wigmore, being in the kings hands by reason of the wardship and minoritie of Edmund Mortimer earle of March) was (as it séemeth) remoued from the treasurorship, in whose roome succeeded the bishop of London. To these lord Furnuals did Furnuals inne of Holborne sometime apperteine as their mansion house, being now an inne of chancerie for yong students of the law and atturneies, and belonging vnto Lincolns inne in Chancerie lane.

Nicholas Bubwith bishop of London.

Nicholas Bubwith made bishop of London in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and six: being the eight yére of Henrie the fourth, must be that bishop of London (as farre as I can yet conceiue) who was lord treasuror of England in Michaelmas tearme in the said eight yeare of Henrie the fourth: which office it séemeth that he held not long, for in Easter terme after in the same eight yeare, the office of the tresuror remained in the kings hands, and the accompts of the same terme go vnder the same title of being in the kings hands.

Sir Richard Scrope lord Scrope of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scrope lord of Bolton (wherof is so much spoken before) was as I suppose the second time treasuror of England in this ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth: whereunto I am induced by this reason; that first the king would not keepe that office so long in his hands as almost amounted vnto two yeares, but that he would bestow the same vpon some other: secondlie, for that I read that this Richard Scrope father to William Scrope earle of Wilshire beheaded (by this Henrie the fourth before he came to the crowne) at Bristow (in the last yeare of Richard the second, and in the first of this kings reigne) was after the death of the said William made treasuror of England, and so died in honour: thirdlie for that I cannot see how he might be treasuror in anie yeare since the death of the said William, vntill this ninth yeare of Henrie the fourth: and lastlie, for that I cannot in anie record or other author find anie other man mentioned to supplie that place in this yeare: for which causes I haue attempted to bestow him here, and that rightlie, for anie thing that I can yet learne.

Sir John Tiptoft knight.

Sir John Tiptoft or Tibetot knight, did possesse the place and office of the lord treasurorship of England in Michelmas terme, in the tenth yeare of king

Henrie

Henrie the fourth, being in the yere of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and eight.

Henrie lord Scrope.

Henrie lord Scrope of Masham and of Flaxfléet, was made lord treasuror of England, in the eleuenth yere of the reigne of K. Henrie the fourth, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and ten, as hath Walsingham: in which office he continued vntill the death of king Henrie the fourth, which hapned in the fourtenth yeare of the same king, and in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred & twelue, after the account of England: but one thousand foure hundred and thirteene after the account of such as bo begin the yeare at Januarie. He rebelled against king Henrie the fift, and was beheaded at Southhampton in the third yeare of K. Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and fiftéene the last of Julie. Of which Henrie so conspiring against Henrie the fift, I find these verses in a written booke of parchment, intituled Extractum breue de chronica Thomæ Helmham, prior Lenton de tempore regis Henrici quinti. In which verses by the capitall letters are set down the names of the principall conspirators, & the yere of our Lord wherein the same was done, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred & thirteene: the greater Romane capitall letters in the third verse seruing for the yere of Christ, & for the name Zorc deriued of this word COR in the fourth verse, & the English capitall letters onelie seruing for the names of the persons in this sort couched togither for common capacitie:

* This C serueth for the name of Scrope and the yeare of Christ.
b Richard is spelled by the first letters of the fourth verse, & Zorc by changing the letters of the word Cor, and adding to it the letter z, which signifieth a poke.
c By the first letter of the words of the fift verse set together backward ariseth the name of Thomas Graie.

Mox rex nauigium parat vt mare transeat armis,
Scrop furit Henricus proditione fremens,
SCrVtans a Consplrat RIMatVr DLenCla PLebi,
b Rumpe Jugo COR Ruens Res Dabit Vltra Bonum
c EJA Ruit Gens Ruita Malis Opus Hoste Triũphat, Vota voluntatis sic sacre Christe tuæ.
Versibus his quinque prætactis traditionem
Lector scire potes: hinc repetendo stude.
Hi tres, Richardus Zorc, Henri Scrúpque, Thomas Gray,
In regem surgunt proditione pares:
Munere Francorum corrupti terga dedere,
Iusto munus habet vindice quisque suum.

Thomas Fitz Allen earle of Arundell and Surreie was aduanced to the honorable office of the lord treasurorship of England, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and thirteene, being the first yeare of the reigne of the most victorious prince K. Henrie the fift, in which office it séemeth that he continued the first, second, and third of Henrie the fift. He in the yeare 1405, being the seuenth of Henrie the fift, on the nert date of the feast of saint Katharine, married Beatrice the bastard daughter of the king of Portingale, by whom he had no issue, hauing his sisters his heires, and died in the yeare 1415, being the third yeare of Henrie the fift, and was buried in the college at Arundell.

Thomas erle of Arundell.

Sir Roger Lech knight.

Sir Roger Lech (whom some call but not rightlie as I suppose sir Philip Lech, being brother vnto the said sir Roger) was treasuror of England, in Michaelmas and Easter tearme in the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and sixteene. He was at the séege of Rone with this king Henrie, in the first yeare of his reigne, being also treasuror for the warres in that votage.

Henrie lord Fitz Hugh.

Henrie lord Fitz Hugh was aduanced to the office of the lord treasurorship of England, in the fift yeare of Henrie the fift, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred & seuentéene, in which office he continued (as I gather) vntill the death of the said king Henrie the fift, which happened in August, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred twentie and two.

John Stafford clerke.

John Stafford clerke was made lord treasuror of England in the first yeare of king Henrie the sixt, being the yeare that the word became flesh 1422, in which office he continued in Michaelmas terme, and fourth of the said king Henrie the first, falling in the yeare of Christ 1425, he was chosen bishop of Bath, in the third yeare of king Henrie the sixt, in the yere 1424, he was chancellor of England, and remoued to the archbishoprike of Canturburie, of whome is mention made hereafter in the discourse of the chancellors of England, & touching whom I will for this time onelie set downe heere what Matthew Parker writeth of him in the life of Henrie Chicheleie an archbishop of Canturburie. Archiepiscopus (saith he) in the yeare of Christ our redéemer 1424: Cantuariensis 12. Octob. clerum in ecclesia Paulina conuocauit, in ea Henricus Beauford Winton episcopus regni cãcellarius, & Iohannes Stafford Bathoniẽsis electus episcopus regni thesaurarius, ad bellũ Gallicum opẽ à clero petiuit, & interposita paucorum dierum deliberatione, Wilhelmus Lindwood officialis curiæ Cãtuariẽsis de arcubus, hoc responsum ab inferiori cleri synodo acceptum episcopis declarauit: non esse penes cleri procuratores potestatem subsidium concedendi. Nam cùm in dicta synodo in singulis diocœsibus cõstituti essent, clerus his solutionibus consentiendi licentiã expressè ademit: quia tantis tributis diu pendendis ad magnam inopiam & egestatem deuenit. Itaque cancellarius à superiori synodo ad inferiorẽ transiens, longa & diserta oratione, ac regis iam minoris necessitate, ac de instanti in Gallia bello egit, ac nequicquam suasit.

Walter lord Hungerford knight of the garter, the sonne of sir Thomas Hungerford knight, was made lord treasuror of England in the fourth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first, being the yere of Christ 1425, in which office he continued about sir yeares, vntill some part of Michaelmas tearme in the tenth yeare of king Henrie the first, falling in the yeare that the sonne of God toke on him the forme of a seruant, one thousand foure hundred thirtie and one. He was also one of the councell to the said king, of whome is mention made by Matthew Parker in the life of Henrie Chicheleie archbishop of Canturburie, in these words: Proximo anno (which was about the yeare of our Lord 1425) synodus sub eodem archiepiscopo, 15 Aprilis inchoata est. Qua Iohanne Kempo Eboracẽsi archiepiscopo & Waltero Hungerfordo milite, regijs conciliarijs (illo cancellario hoc thesaurario regni) regis nomine postulantibus regi decimam concessit. Ac eisdem his petentibus, triennio post in recenti synodo media decima regi à clero data est. This lord treasuror maried Katharine, the daughter and heire of Thomas Peuerell knight, by whom he had issue Walter lord Hungerford of Hatchberie knight of the garter, that died without issue, sir Robert lord Hungerford of Hatchberie. Edmund Hungerford knight, that died without issue, Margaret maried to sir Walter Rodneie knight, and Elisabeth maried to Philip Courtneie knight: which Robert lord Hungerford and Margaret his wife, John Cheineie of Pim esquier, John Merwin esquier and others did (by the kings licence granted vnto them in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth) build the hospitall of Hatchberie in Wiltshire.

Walter lord Hungerford.

John lord Scrope of Upsall and Masham, made lord treasuror in the tenth yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption 1431, in which office he continued vntill some part of the twelfe yere of the said king, as I for this time do gather. Of whom thus writeth Matthew Parker in the life of Henrie Chichelie archbishop of Canturburie, touching a synod holden in the yeare of our Lord 1430, at what time, of the clergie he saith that Iohanne

John lord Scrope.

nes Stafford episcopus Bathoniensis cancellarius, & D. Scrope thesaurarius regni, necnon Wilhelmus Lindwood, custos priuati sigilli, pro rege subsidium postularunt, & mediam decimam tandem ægrè impetrarunt.

Rafe lord Cromwell.

Rafe lord Cromwell, lord of Taterſhall, poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſurorſhip of England, in Eaſter terme in the twelfe yeare of the after depoſed K. Henrie the firſt, being the yeare of Chriſt 1434, and ſo continued in that office about ten years, falling (as I ſuppoſe) in the yeare of our redemption 1444. This man being knight was created lord Cromwell by the ſaid king Henrie the firſt, and was lineallie deſcended of one of the heires of Robert lord Taterſhall, that married one of the daughters and heires of William Dalbinie earle of Arundell. This Rafe lord treaſuror died without iſſue, and made his teſtament in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred ſixtie and foure, being in the three and thirtith yere of king Henrie the firſt, after whoſe death the inheritance came to the three aunts being his heirs, whereof the firſt was married to the lord Bardolfe ſlaine at Brancehome more in Northumberland, the ſecond was married to ſir William Fitzwilliams knight of the ſepulchre, the third Eliſabeth to ſir John Clifton knight, & after his death to ſir Edmund Beneſted knight. Of one Rafe lord Cromwell I find this note ſet downe by Leland. Dominus Radulphus Cromewell & Matildis vxor eius fundatores collegij ſanctæ trinitatis de Taterſhall, quúmque Roberti ordine domini erant de Taterſhall, hos ſequutus eſt Radulphus Cromewell.

Sir Rafe Butler lord Sudleie.

Sir Rafe Butler knight of the garter, lord Sudleie (deſcended from John lord Sudleie, and William Butler baron of Wem, which maried Ione daughter and heire to John Sudleie lord Sudleie) did poſſeſſe the honorable place of the lord treaſurorſhip of England the ſeuenth of Julie, in the two and twentith yere of king Henrie the firſt, being the yere of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred fortie and foure, which office he kept about three yeres: for in the fiue and twentith yeare of the ſaid king, was the biſhop of Carleill lord treaſuror. This Rafe lord Sudleie builded the caſtell of Sudleie, in the time of king Henrie the firſt, and of Edward the fourth; who in the time of the ſaid Edward the fourth was committed to priſon by the king, firſt ſending for him to come to his preſence. Whereupon he going to the king, and reſting on an hill, from whenſe he did behold Sudleie caſtell, ſaid: It is thou, it is thou Sudleie caſtell and not I which am the traitor. After which comming to king Edward the fourth, he reſigned the ſaid Sudleie caſtell into the kings hands. Which caſtell came after to Jaſper duke of Bedford, and is now in the yeare 1585 in the poſſeſſion of Giles a Bridges lord Shandois. This Rafe being made baron in the twentith yeare of Henrie the firſt, maried Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir John Northberie, by whome he had iſſue Thomas his ſon that died without iſſue, leauing his two ſiſters to be his heires; whereof the eldeſt daughter called Eliſabeth, was maried to ſir John Northberie, whoſe heire generall was married to John Halwell of Deuonſhire, who had iſſue Ione his daughter and heire married to Edward lord Braie, of whome the lord Cobham now liuing is deſcended. The other ſiſter married to ſir Hamond Belknap, of whome is deſcended the worſhie gentleman Thomas Wotton of Bacton Maleherbe in Kent eſquire now liuing. The which Rafe lord Butler of Sudleie was Vexillifer, and high Butler of England, and ſteward in houſe to king Henrie the firſt.

Warmaduke biſhop of Carleill.

Warmaduke biſhop of Carleill was made lord treaſuror of England in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the firſt, in which office he continued about two yeares, in the ſeuen and twentith yere of king Henrie the firſt, being about the yeare of our redemption 1448, or (as ſome haue) 1449.

James Fines lord Dare and Sele.

James Fines created at Burie baron of Dare and of Sele, on the third of March, in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption, according to the Engliſh account 1446, was conſtable of Douer caſtell, and lord treaſuror of England in the eight and twentith yeare of the ſaid king Henrie the firſt, and was from thenſe remoued (as ſome haue) in the nine & twentith yere of the ſaid king, & was by the rebels of Kent Jacke Cade and his fellowes taken out of the tower to the Guildhall, where he was areigned before the maior and other the kings Juſtices; who deſiring to be tried by his peeres, was by the rebels forceablie taken from the officers, and beheaded at the ſtandard in Cheape. The maner whereof ſhall be more fullie ſet downe hereafter in my large booke of the liues of the lord treaſurors. Which his beheading ſome do attribute to the eight and twentith yere of the ſaid Henrie the firſt, being the yeare of our redemption 1450. He had iſſue ſir William Fines knight, and one daughter maried to ſir William Cromer knight, ſhiriffe of Kent, beheaded at that time alſo with his father inlaw. Of which Cromer is James Cromer of Kent now liuing deſcended.

John Lord Beauchampe.

John Lord Beauchampe, a perſon of great worſhipfulneſſe, poſſeſſed the place of the treaſurorſhip of England, the nine and twentith and thirtith yeares of king Henrie the firſt.

John Tiptoft.

John Tiptoft earle of Worceſter poſſeſſed the place of the lord treaſuror, in the one and thirtith and two and thirtith of king Henrie the firſt. Of whome is more mention made hereafter.

James Butler earle of Wilſhire.

James Butler, the ſonne of James earle of Ormond, being earle of Wilſhire and Ormond, poſſeſſed the office of the lord treaſuror of England in Eaſter tearme the three and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the firſt, falling in the yeare of our redemption 1455. Of whom is more ſpoken hereafter.

Henrie vicount Bourchier.

Henrie vicount Bourchier, borne of the noble houſe of the Bourchiers, the ſonne of William Bourchier earle of Ewe in Normandie, was lord treaſuror of England in the three and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the depoſed king Henrie the firſt, in which office he did not long remaine.

John Talbot earle of Shrewſburie.

John Talbot, the firſt earle of Shrewſburie of that name, poſſeſſed the place of the treaſurorſhip of England in the fiue and thirtith and ſix and thirtith yeres of king Henrie the firſt, and then gaue place to the earle of Wilſhire. This earle was ſlaine at the battell of Northampton, in the eight and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the firſt, being the yeare of our ſaluation 1460. He maried Eliſabeth the daughter of James Butler erle of Ormond, and had iſſue, John erle of Shrewſburie, James, Gilbert, Chriſtopher, and George; Anne married to ſir Henrie Vernon, and Margaret: this man was buried in the priorie of Worceſter.

James earle of Wilſhire.

James Butler, ſonne to James the fourth of that name earle of Ormond, was the ſecond time made lord treaſuror of England, about the 37 yere of king Henrie the firſt, in which office he continued (as I ſuppoſe) in the eight & thirtith yeare of the ſaid king. This man in the ſaid eight and thirtith yeare of the king conueied himſelfe awaie out of England into Dutchland (for feare of the nobilitie, as the duke of Yorke and others that rebelled againſt the king) ſending backe his ſouldiers into England, which he had before aſſembled vpon the ſea: but after he returned into England, and was againe put to flight at Mortimers croſſe by Edward earle of March after king

by

by the name of king Edward the fourth. He was made earle of Ormond in the nine and thirtith yeare and last yeare of king Henrie the first. He maried Eleanor the daughter of Edmund duke of Summerset, and died without issue, being beheaded at Newcastell in the yeare one thousand foure hundred sixtie one, in the first yeare of Edward the fourth.

Henrie vicount Bourchier.

Henrie vicount Bourchier was lord treasuror of England the second time, in the nine and thirtith and last yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred & sixtie. Who vpon the deposition of the said king Henrie the first by Edward the fourth, was also remoued from his office.

Thomas lord Bourchier.

Thomas Bourchier, made lord treasuror of England in the first yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred sixtie and one, continued not long in that office, but gaue place to John earle of Worcester.

John earle of worcester.

John Tiptoft earle of Worcester, the second time possessed the place of the lord treasuror of England, in the second and third yeare of king Edward the fourth. Of whom is more spoken before by me in my treatise of the constables of England pag. 869.

Edmund lord Greie of Ruthine after erle of Kent.

Edmund lord Greie of Ruthine, the sonne of John lord Grete of Ruthine, did inioy the office of the lord treasurorship of England, in the fourth yeare of the noble prince king Edward the fourth, being the yere of our redemption 1464. This man secretlie in hart forsaking the part of king Henrie the first, for iniuries receiued at the same king Henries hands, aided the said Edward the fourth, and was the chiefe means whereby he atteined the crowne. In Michaelmas tearme in the said fourth yeare of the king, there was a sergeants feast held in Holborne in the bishop of Elies house, to which the maior and aldermen repaired, being bidden thither. But when the maior loked to be set to keepe the state in the hall (forgetting that he was out of his owne liberties, for the bishops palace was an exempt place) as it had béene vsed (saith Iohn Stow) in all places of the citie & liberties of the same, out of the kings presence: the lord Greie of Ruthine then treasuror of England vnknowne to the sergeants, and (against their wils as they said) was placed in the highest rome. Whereupon the maior, aldermen, and commons departed. This Edmund doth Matthew Parker, in the life of Thomas Bourchier archbishop of Canturburie, make to be treasuror in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, being the yeare of Christ 1463: which may well inough stand with the former, being treasuror to John earle of Worcester in the said third yeare of the king. For vpon the remouing of the said earle in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, came this lord Greie in place. The words of which Matthew Parker (with a note of the yeare of Christ 1463 in the margent) are in this order. Edwardus rex, duobus iam annis fœliciter gesto regno, parliamentum Westmonasterij tenuit, quo etiã tempore archiepiscopus (which was Thomas Bourchier the brother of Henrie Bourchier earle of Eſſex) & clerus in synodo conuenerunt. In hac synodo Iohannes comes Wigorniæ, Henricus comes Essexiæ, D. Edmundus Grey thesaurarius Angliæ, D. Humfridus Cromewell, D. Wenlocke, D. Iohannes prior sancti Iohannis, & Robertus Stillington legum doctor custos priuati sigilli, regis conciliarij, allatis literis regijs petierunt a clero decerni regi ad Scotos repellendos subsidium. Quod quidem gratissimis omnium animis tam munifico regi concessum est, qui superiori anno ecclesiæ immunitates atque iura iniquis iudiciorum calumnijs (vti in Iohanne Stafford antea diximus) conuulsa & labefactata diplomate regio restaurauit.

Besides which, thus writeth Iohn Whethamsted, that learned abbat of saint Albons, of this lord Greie, declaring in what authoritie he was at first, in the daies of Henrie the first, and then in the reigne of Edward the fourth. His words be these. Anno 36 H. 6. venerunt tres viri monachi de cœnobio Cluniacensi, quibus ad audiendum eorũ nuntium missi sunt episcopus Dunelmensis custos priuati sigilli, dominus Edmundus Greie de Ruthine, & secretarius regis, quibus isti viri dixerunt eorum aduentum esse ob tria. Primò ad aperiendum quomodo reges Angliæ & præcipuè Henricus secundus fuerunt tam magni benefactores ad eorum ecclesiam, vt potiùs pro nunc dicatur earum patronus ac præcipuus fundator. Secundò venerunt ad petendum possessionem & confirmationem bonorum illorum, quæ dicti progenitores eis contulerant, & per tempus non paucum iamdudum à manibus eorum detenta & distracta erant. Tertiò ad impetrandum liberam licentiam ad ingrediendum singula loca religiosa ab eorum cœnobio dependentia, & quæ per nobiles progenitores regis posita fuerũt sub eorum regimine. Sed nihil hic eis gratũ fuit actum, vnde vi tristes discederent. Out of the which words of Whethamsted maie other things be gathered, besides the doings of the lord Greie: as that the kings of England, and specially Henrie the second, haue béene great benefactors and founders of the Charterhouse monks: with manie mo matters conteined in the same, which I referre to the wise and learned reader, which made me the willinger to set downe his words so largelie.

Moreouer, the same Whethamsted, continuing the history of Henrie the first, writeth of the battell of Northampton, wherin was this lord Greie, in this sort. In prælio Northamptonensi Edmundus Grey dominus Ruthine corpore licèt præsens (euen as the lord Stanleie was in the battell fought betwixt Richard the third & Henrie erle of Richmond, after king by the name of Henrie the seuenth) in campo domini regis Henrici sexti steterat, cor tamen eius non erat rectum in eo, néq; omnino fidelis habitus aut inuentus fuit. Nam venientibus turmis dictis ad fossam circumuallationis, & ipsam nõ multùm promptè propter eleuationem verticis in parte vlteriore ascendere valentibus, occurrit ipsis dominus cum suis copijs obuiàm, portigendóq; ipsis dextram traxit eos per manus in campum Martium, iuxta votum suum. Thus much Whethamsted of Edmund Greie lord Ruthine, who was made earle of Kent in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1464.

This Edmund Greie being lord Hastings, Wellford, and Ruthine (before he had the honour of this earledome) did by his deed of indenture dated the 18 of November, in the fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, falling in the yeare of our redemption 1446, giue to John Pinchbecke prior of Dusfield in Northamptonshire in almesse, during the life of the said prior, his field called Challocke, belonging to the manour of Challocke, to keepe the obits of sir John Greie, father to the said sir Edmund, and of dame Tiffance the widow of the earle marshall, and daughter of John Holland duke of Exceter and erle of Huntington, mother to the said sir Edmund, with masse, &c. and such other collects as the said Edmund should deliuer vnto the said prior. Out of this house of the Greies haue issued manie noble houses, and those of great antiquitie, wherof at this date there yet remaineth two honourable houses: the one being Henrie Greie earle of Kent now liuing, a man of singular estimation in the countrie of Bedford where he now liueth, as well for the nobilitie of his race, being descended of this Edmund Greie lord treasuror of England, for the good gouernment and carriage of himselfe, and for the orderlie and wise managing of the affaires of that countrie, deseruing no lesse honourable place in the commonwealth, than the honour of his race, and worthinesse of his behauiour doo well merit.

The lord Greie of Wilton.

The other house at this daie in honour, is the lord Greie of Wilton knight of the garter, and somtime deputie of Ireland, a man of no lesse merit for his seruice abrode in the feats of armes, than is the other Greie for his seruice at home in the affairs of peace. But I will not saie all that I thinke and know of them both, least some more maliciouslie than trulie blemish me with the note of flatterie. For I protest I am so farre estranged from that, as I being not at all knowne to the one, and but slenderlie to the other, and neuer benefited by anie of them both, there is no cause why I should vse anie flatterie: and yet such force hath vertue, as it will shine euen in despite of malice. But againe to the matter. There haue out of this house of the Greies, besides manie noble houses, issued one duke of Suffolke, two marquesses of Dorset, and fiue earles of Kent.

The seuerall houses of the Greies.

Againe I thinke it not impertinent for the continuance of antiquities, and of deserts of honour, to mention how manie seuerall houses there haue bin of the nobilitie of these Greis, and in what time they liued. First there was Reignold Greie lord Greie of Codnor, in the time of king Stephan: the second was Reignold lord Greie of Rotherfield, in the time of Richard the second: the third John Greie earle of Tankeruile in Normandie, in the time of Henrie the fift: the fourth this Edmund Greie lord Ruthine earle of Kent, and treasuror of England in the time of king Edward the fourth: the fift house Thomas Greie marquesse Dorset, in the time of king Edward the fourth: the first Edward Greie lord Lisle in the time of king Edward the fourth: the seuenth Edward Greie lord Powes, in the time of king Edward the fourth: the eight Henrie Greie duke of Suffolke, in the time of Edward the first. So that there were at one time, in one kings daies, which was the time of Edward the fourth, six noble men liuing of the name of Greies, which were the marquesse Dorset, the earle of Kent, the lord Lisle, the lord Powes, the lord Greie of Wilton, and the lord Greie of Rotherfield.

The Greies right honourable.

Wherefore to draw to an end of this lord treasuror, who hath occasioned me to be more liberall in treating of him and the Greies, than of any lord treasuror or noble name besides (for manie priuat reasons which I reserue to my selfe) I will yet speake more liberallie of him and the Greies in my large booke of the liues of the lord treasurors of England, and knit vp this Edmund Greie lord treasuror with the marieng of his wife Katharine, the daughter of Henrie Persie earle of Northumberland, by whome he had issue George Greie earle of Kent; Elisabeth, maried to Robert baron of Greiestocke; and Anne maried to John lord Greie of Wilton.

Sir Walter Blunt knight

Sir Walter Blunt knight, who was the first lord Montioie, possessed the place of the lord treasurorship of England, in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, which fell in the yeare that the word of the father toke flesh in the wombe of the virgine 1465. Of this man is mention made in the booke of the law called Long Quinto of Edward the fourth. He maried the daughter of one Dirham, and had issue, William, John, and James.

Sir Richard Wooduile.

Sir Richard Wooduile knight, chamberleine to the king, and constable of England, was made baron on the ninth of Maie in the second yeare of king Henrie the first, being the yeare of Christ 1424, and was after created earle Riuers in the fift yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1465, who thus aduanced was after lord treasuror in the first, seuenth, & eight of Edward the fourth. In which eight yeare of Edward the fourth, Thomas Cooke late maior of London, was accused of treason and arreigned for the same. Who after that he had béene manie times purged thereof, was yet at last found giltie, and by this lord Riuers then lord treasuror so handled, as that he could not be deliuered vntill he had paied eight thousand pounds to the king, and eight hundred to the quéene. This lord treasuror maried Jaquet the widow of John duke of Bedford, daughter to Peter of Lucenburgh earle of S. Paule, by whom he had issue Richard earle Riuers, Antonie lord Scales in the right of his wife, Edward Wooduile knight slaine at the battell of S. Albine in Britaine in the third yeare of Henrie the seuenth: Lionell bishop of Salisburie, Margaret maried to Thomas erle of Arundell, Margaret maried to William Herbert erle of Huntington, Anne first maried to William Bucher erle of Esser, and after to George Greie erle of Kent, Jaquet maried to John lord Strange, Elisabeth maried to sir John Greie yonger sonne to the lord Greie of Ruthine, and after the death of the said sir John Greie to king Edward the fourth: and Katharine maried to Henrie duke of Buckingham. Besides all which I haue read of one John, which was sonne to this earle Riuers, which John maried the old duchesse of Norfolke, & was beheaded with his father: the truth whereof I leaue to further triall. This Richard erle Riuers the lord treasuror in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption 1469, was by Robert Hiltard, who named himselfe Robert of Ridesdale, taken in the forrest of Dene as some haue, others saie at Grafton, and from thence brought to Northampton, where he was beheaded.

John Longstrother.

John Longstrother, prior of saint Johns Jerusalem in England, possessed the place of the lord treasuror of the realme, in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and nine, for in the same yeare he gaue place to the bishop of Elie.

William Greie bishop of Elie.

William Greie bishop of Elie, was after the translation of Thomas Burcher from Elie to Canturburie aduanced to that see by Nicholas the fift then bishop of Rome, who gaue it to the said William being then procurator for king Henrie the first at Rome, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred fiftie and foure. This man was lord treasuror in the ninth yeare of king Edward the fourth, being the yeare in which God became man one thousand foure hundred three score and nine, in which office he continued (as I gather) vntill the eleuenth of king Edward the fourth, or thereabouts. This Greie was borne of the noble house of the lord Greies of Codnor, as saith Bale, and trauelled into Italie to atteine great learning, where he heard the noble clerke Guarinus Veronensis read in Ferraria. He continued bishop of Elie foure and twentie yéeres, eleuen moneths and two daies, departing this life at Dunham the fourth of August, in the yere that the word of the father toke flesh in the wombe of the virgine, one thousand foure hundred seuentie and eight, as I haue red; and was buried at Elie betwéene two marble pillers, hauing bestowed great summes of monie vpon the reparation of that famous belfrie of the church of Elie, and vpon other ornaments of the same church.

Henrie Bourcher.

Henrie Bourcher erle of Esser did the third time possesse the honorable place of the lord treasuror of England, in the eleuenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth, in which office he continued (as I gather) about twelue yeares, being all the rest of the life of the said Edward the fourth, who departed this world about the ninth daie of Aprill, in the yeare from the conception of the Messiah one thousand foure foure hundred foure score and three, which Bourchier being made earle of Esser in the first yeare of king Edward the fourth, in the yeare of Christ 1461, maried Elisabeth the daughter of Richard de Conisburgh earle of Cambridge the sister of Richard duke of Yorke, by whome he had issue William lord Bourchier, Thomas, John, Henrie, and Humfreie knights.

Sir Richard Wood.

Sir Richard Wood knight, whome some call sir John Wood, being before vnder treasuror in the three and twentith yeare of king Edward the fourth, was in the same yeare of the same king made knight, about a moneth before the death of the said king Edward the fourth. This man did possesse the place of the lord treasuror of England (as I gather out of the record of Pellis exitus of that yeare) in the second yeare of the reigne of the vnnaturall, bloudie, and vsurping tyrant king Richard the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1484, which office I suppose that he kept, vntill the said Richard the third was slaine by Henrie earle of Richmond afterwards king of England, by the name of Henrie the 7. And here I thinke it not amisse before I go anie further (although it be somewhat out of order, sith it is best to obserue Decorum, and vnorderlie to treat of vnorderlie officers vnder such an vnorderlie king as Richard the third was) to make report of sir William Hopton knight, whome some will haue to be treasuror in the first yeare of the reigne of the same king, in the yeare of Christ 1483, attending on him to his coronation. But trulie, saving the correction of better séene antiquaries than my selfe, I can not as yet receiue him into the catalog of the lord treasurors of England, but rather suppose that he was treasuror of the houshold.

Sir William Hopton.

Sir Reinold Braie knight.

Sir Reinold Braie knight (the sonne of Richard Braie physician as some haue noted to king Henrie the first) being seruant to Margaret countesse of Richmond mother to Henrie the seuenth, was for the fidelitie to his ladie, & good seruice in furthering king Henrie the seuenth to the crowne, receiued into great fauour with the said king, and made lord treasuror of England, as appeareth by the record of Pellis exitus made vnder his name in the first yeare of the reigne of Henrie the seuenth, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand, foure hundred, eightie, and fiue: besides which office he had manie other offices and honours, part whereof were, that he was treasuror of the kings wars, that he was one of the executors to K. Henrie the seuenth, that he was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of the said king, and created a banneret at Blacke heath field. He died the eightéenth yeare of the Salomon of England king Henrie the seuenth, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred & three, and was honorablie buried at Windsore.

Sir John Dinham knight.

Sir John Dinham knight (the sonne of sir John Dinham knight) a faithfull seruant to the house of Yorke aswell in aiding the duke of Yorke, as in seruing king Edward the fourth sonne to the said duke of Yorke: to whom the said Edward the fourth, in the second yeare of his reigne had giuen one annuitie of fortie pounds by yeare, did after the death of the said king Edward the fourth, in the second yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, possesse the place of the lord treasuror of England, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred foure score and six, and so continued vntill in the sixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, and then gaue place to Thomas earle of Surreie, of which lord Dinham thus writeth Leland: Dominus Denham primus fuit fundator sancti Nicholai alias Hartland. He was created lord Dinham in the first yeare of king Edward the fourth, shortlie after the coronation of the said king, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred three score and one, he died in the sixtenth yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, being the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred, and the thirtith of Januarie was brought to the Greie friers in London; there buried: he maried Elisabeth the daughter of the lord Fitzwater, by whom he had issue George and Philip, and sir Thomas Dinham his base sonne that maried one of the daughters and heires of sir John Drmond, which Thomas was buried at Ashrug three miles from Berkhamsted. Besides which children this lord Dinham or Denham, for so I find both written in chronicles, had by his legitimat wife diuerse daughters, which were Margaret maried to Nicholas baron of Carew, Joane maried to the lord Zouch, Elisabeth maried to the lord Fitz Warren, and Katharine maried to sir Thomas Arundell of Cornewall knight.

Here I thinke it not amisse to saie somewhat of a note which I haue séene, that maketh John Touchet lord Audleie treasuror, which note is this. John Touchet lord Audleie treasuror of England, died the six and twentith daie of December, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred foure score and ten, falling in the first yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, and had issue James lord Audelie beheaded the eight and twentith of June, in the yeare of Christ 1497, being the twelfe yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, he maried the daughter of sir Richard Dauell knight: thus much the note. But trulie for anie thing I can yet learne, I can not perceiue when this John Touchet should be treasuror, and so cannot perceiue where he should be placed in this catalog of the treasurors of England. But as I will not receiue him into anie place of this succession at this time; so I will not altogither reiect him, in hope that following time will informe me of the truth therein.

Thomas Howard erle of Surreie.

Thomas Howard the sonne of John lord Howard (created the first duke of Norffolke of that name in the time of Richard the third) was at the same time also created earle of Surreie. This man (after the slaughter of his father at Boswoorth field, when the tyrant Richard the third was slaine by Henrie the seuenth) was after receiued into such fauour with the said king Henrie the seuenth, that he was aduanced to be lord treasuror of England, in the sixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred, which place he continued all the life of the said king Henrie the seuenth, who died in the foure and twentith yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred and nine. After which for the good seruice he vsed in the time of Henrie the seuenth, king Henrie the eight also permitted him to keepe that office, which he possessed vntill the fiftéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred twentie and three.

This man was created duke of Norffolke on Candelmasse daie, in the fift yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene, at what time also his son Thomas Howard was made earle of Surreie. This duke was aduanced to that honour (in recompense of the death of the king of Scots, and for the good seruice that he did against that nation in the said fift yeare of Henrie the eight) with an augmentation of his armes, to beare the armes of Scotland in the bend of the arms of Howard. Touching which victorie and death of the king of Scots Buchanan lib. 13. writeth to this effect, that the said Thomas Howard (as a note of the conquest) gaue to his seruants his cognisance (to weare on their left arme) being a white lion (the beast which he bare before as the proper ensigne of that house) standing ouer a red lion (the peculiar note of the kingdome of Scotland) and tearing the same red lion with his pawes. This Thomas duke of Norffolke maried two wiues, his first wife was Elisabeth the daughter of sir Frederike Tilnete knight, by whom he had issue Thomas erle of Surreie after duke of Norffolke, Edward slaine at Bret admerall of England, & Edmund Howard, with Elisabeth maried to Thomas Bulleine earle of Wilshire, and Muriell married to John Greie viscount Lisle. His second wife was Agnes daughter of sir Philip Tilnete knight, by whome he had issue William lord Howard of Effingham, with manie others. This Thomas duke of Norffolke died in the sixtænth yeare of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fortie and foure, and was buried at Thetford in Norfolke.

Thomas Howard.

Thomas Howard (sonne to the said Thomas duke of Norffolke) being earle of Surreie, possessed the place of the lord treasuror in the sixtænth yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare that Christ tooke flesh of the virgine Marie one thousand fiue hundred twentie and three: the which office he continued in the eight and thirtith yeare of the said king, being the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fortie and six; in which yeare on the eight and twentith of Januarie, the said king Henrie died (so that this duke and his father were lord treasurors of England almost eight and fortie yeares.) But about some few daies more than a moneth before the death of the said king, that is to saie, on the twelfe of December, this duke with his sonne Henrie earle of Surreie were committed to the tower, the one by water the other by land. Shortlie after which the said Henrie was beheaded at tower hill, the nineteenth daie of Januarie: about nine daies before the death of the king. And the duke remained as condemned to perpetuall prison, till the beginning of the reigne of queene Marie, who then set him at libertie. He married for his first wife Anne the daughter of king Edward the fourth, but had no issue by hir: after whose death he married Elisabeth daughter to Edward duke of Buckingham, by whome he had issue, Henrie earle of Surreie beheaded as before, Thomas viscount Bindon, and Marie married to Henrie Fitzroie duke of Richmont. He died about the beginning of the reigne of queene Marie.

Edward Seimor.

Edward Seimor earle of Hertford was after the death of king Henrie the eight made lord treasuror of England, in the first yeare of king Edward the sixt: being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fortie & six, in which yeare he was also made protector of England and duke of Summerset: of whom thus writeth Matthew Parker, calling him Regni camerarium, in the life of Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie in these words page 397. In testamento (meaning king Henrie the eight) Edwardo principi minori nouem annis nato hæredi suo sex decim tutores, ex episcopis solos Thomam Cranmerum Cantuariensem archiepiscopum & Cuthbertum Tonstallum Dunelmensem episcopum dedit. And a little after pag. 398. followeth: Verum pluribus (vt diximus) ei minori (that was king Edward) a patre constitutis curatoribus, ne numero suo atque multitudine ad dissentiones faciles essent & procliues vnus electus est, qui ex consilys reliquorum impuberis regis tutelam solus administraret. Is fuit Edwardus Seimerus comes Hertfordiensis, totius regni camerarius regisque auunculus. Qui suscepta tutela regis, totius regni atque dominiorum suorum protector & Somerseti dux nuncupatus atque creatus est. This duke of Summerset being treasuror of England continued in the same office vntill his death (as I gather) more than foure years, and was beheaded in the fift yeare of king Edward the sixt, being the yeare of our Lord, one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one.

Sir William Paulet knight, marquesse of Winchester was made lord treasuror vpon the death of the duke of Summerset: in the fift yeare of king Edward the first, and the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one, which office he kept by the space of twentie yeares and more: a longer time than euer anie other treasuror had done before, except the two last dukes of Norffolke. This man being a man of extreme age (as atteining to the yeares of ninetie seuen) died lord treasuror of England (the tenth of march, in the yeare of our saluation one thousand fiue hundred seuentie and one, being the fourtænth yeare of the reigne of the famous queene Elisabeth) at his manor of Basing. He in his life time did see the children of his childrens children growne to the number of one hundred and three, a rare blessing of God to men of his calling. He married Elisabeth the daughter of sir William Capell knight, by whome he had issue John marquesse of Winchester, Thomas, Chidiocke, and Giles; Alice married to Richard Stowell, Margaret married to sir William Berkelete, Margerie married to Richard Waller, and Eleanor married to sir Richard Peckhall.

Sir William Paulet.

Sir William Cecill knight of the garter and lord Burghleie, was aduanced to the honorable place of lord treasuror of England on the thirtænth daie of Julie, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand, fiue hundred, seauentie and two, being the fourtenth yeare of the reigne of our gratious queene Elisabeth. This man was descended of the honorable familie of the Sitsylts of Wales, sometime lords of Beaupor in the daies of Henrie the first, as appeareth by this pedegree here inserted.

Sir William Cecill.

1 In the yeare of Christ one thousand ninetie and one, Robert Sitsylt came with Robert Fitzhamon to the conquest of the countrie of Glamorgan, and after wedded a ladie, by whom he had Halterennes and other lands in Hereford and Glocestershires; he had a sonne called James Sitsylt.

D. Powell in hist. Cambriæ pa. 142, 143, &c. Robert Sitsylt.

2 James Sitsylt tooke part with Mawd the empresse against king Stephan, and was slaine at the siege of the castell of Wallingford Anno quarto Stephani, hauing then vpon him a vesture, whereon was wrought in needle worke his armes or ensignes, as they be made on the tome of Gerald Sitsylt in the abbeie of Dore, which are afterward truelie blazed, in a iudgement giuen by commission of king Edward the third, for the ancient right of the same armes. This James had a sonne called John Sitsylt, and foure daughters.

James Sitsylt.

3 John Sitsylt, the sonne of James, was after the death of his father, in the same warres with Roger earle of Hereford, and constable of England, and being taken prisoner at the siege of Lincolne, Anno. 6. Stephani, he paid for his ransome foure hundred marks, and therefore sold his lordship of Beaupor, and all his lands in the countie of Glocester: he tooke to wife a ladie called Mawd de Frenes and had issue Eustace.

John Sitsylt.

4 Eustace Sitsylt the son of John was wedded to Elianor the daughter of sir Walter Pembridge knight, and had by hir Baldwin and John; and foure daughters, whereof one of them was the wife of sir Thomas Fitzneale knight.

Eustace Sitsylt.

5 Baldwin Sitsylt the sonne of Eustace, was made knight by king Henrie the second, in the warres that the king had against the Welshmen, he was also killed in the same warres, at the siege of the castell of Cardiffe, his father being aliue; he tooke to wife the daughter of Maurice de Brompton, and had by hir Gerald Sitsylt, Eustace Sitsylt, Baldwin Sitsylt.

Henrie

Henrie Sitsylt, John Sitsylt, and Walter Sitsylt; and two daughters, Catharine and Elianor. Catharine was the wife of Hugh Muredake, and Elianor was the wife of Walter Wallis. This Baldwin Sitsylt knight toke to his second wife, Margerie the daughter of Stephan Radnor knight, and had by hir, Stephan Sitsylt, Roger Sitsylt, Hugh Sitsylt, and Dauid Sitsylt; and three daughters, the first was Mawd and she was a Nun, the second was Jone and she was the wife of John de Solers, the third daughter Anne was the wife of Owen ap Meredith. This man gaue certeine lands in the townesship of Kigestone, vnto the monks of Dore, and granted vnto the same monks fréedome of common and pasture, and other liberties in his woods.

Gerald Sitsylt. 6 Gerald Sitsylt, the first sonne of Baldwin Sitsylt knight, toke to wife Mabill the daughter of Sir William Moigne knight, and had by hir three sonnes, Gerald Sitsylt that died a child, Robert Sitsylt that married and had children, and Owen Sitsylt a monke of the abbeie of Dore. He had also three daughters, Catharine, that was wedded to sir Griffin ap Pozeford, and after to Dauid ap Euan, and the third time to Geffreie de Bret, sonne of sir Walter Bret knight. Anne the second daughter of Gerald Sitsylt was wedded to Robert the sonne of Richard Bromewich. And Ellen the third daughter of Gerald Sitsylt, was the wife of John Abrahall, father of sir John Abrahall knight.

Robert Sitsylt. 7 Robert Sitsylt, the sonne of Gerald toke to wife Alicia daughter of sir Robert Tregois knight, and had by hir James Sitsylt his first sonne, Gerald the second sonne, Thomas the third sonne, and Baldwin the fourth sonne; and Margaret the first daughter, and Elisabeth the second daughter.

James Sitsylt. 8 James Sitsylt the sonne of Robert, toke to wife Isabell the daughter of sir John Knell knight, and had by hir James and Gerald twins; James died yong: he had also Robert Sitsylt, and John Sitsylt; and fiue daughters, that is to saie, Alicia wedded to Walter Wonington, Grace wedded to Roger sonne of William Blunt, Elianor wedded to Thomas Paine, Margerie wedded to Morgan ap Meredith, and Sillie married to Howell ap Blethin, and after to sir Hugh Bruge.

Gerald Sitsylt. 9 Gerald Sitsylt, sonne of James, toke to wife Margaret, daughter of Stephan Dalaber, and by hir had John Sitsylt; and after he wedded Bridget the widow of sir Simon Ward knight, and had by hir James Sitsylt, and the third time married the daughter of Martine Hopton, and had by hir Martine Sitsylt, Henrie Sitsylt, and Dauid Sitsylt, and Jone a daughter. And the fourth time the same Gerald Sitsylt toke to wife Jane the daughter of Robert Emerton, and had by hir one sonne named Stigand Sitsylt, that was slaine in the warres of Striuelin in the time of king Edward the second, and had no issue, as the register of the abbie of Dore maketh mention.

Chron. de Dor. John Sitsylt. 10 John Sitsylt, the sonne of Gerald, toke to wife Sibill the daughter of Robert of Ewyas, and had by hir sir John Sitsylt knight, George Sitsylt, and a daughter named Margaret, that was the wife of sir Robert Baskeruile knight, who had by hir sir John Baskeruile knight; and by his second wife he had sir Richard Baskeruile knight, that toke to wife Jane the daughter and heire of George Sitsylt second sonne of this John Sitsylt, and had by hir sir John Baskeruile knight.

Sir John Sitsylt. 11 Sir John Sitsylt knight, toke to wife Alicia, the sister of the said sir Roger Baskeruile, and sir Roger married his sister, as is afore said.

This sir John Sitsylt had John Sitsylt and Roger Sitsylt.

✲ In the time of the warres that king Edward the third made against Scotland, at a place called Halidon hill nére Barwike anno 6. of Edward the third, there arose a great variance and contention betweene sir William de Facknaham knight, on the one side approuant, & this sir John Sitsylt knight, on the other side defendant, for an ensigne of armes, that is to saie; The field of ten barrets siluer and azure, supported of fiue scutcheons sable charged with so manie lions of the first rampants incensed geuls, which ensigne both the parties did claime as their right. But as both parties put themselues to their force to mainteine their quarrell, and vaunted to mainteine the same by their bodies; it pleased the king that iustice should be yelded for triall of the quarrell, without shedding of bloud: and so the bearing of the ensigne was solemnelie adiudged to be the right of the said sir John Sitsylt, as heire of blod lineallie descended of the bodie of James Sitsylt, lord of Beaupor slaine at the siege of Wallingford, as before is declared. The finall order and determination of which controuersie is laid downe by John Boswell gentleman, in his booke intituled The concords of Armorie, fol. 80. This sir John Sitsylt had a charge of men at armes, for the custodie of the marches to Scotland, in the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the third. D. Powell.

John Sitsylt. 12 John Sitsylt, the sonne of sir John Sitsylt knight, toke to wife Jone daughter of sir Richard Monington knight, and had by hir John Sitsylt (that died, his father being aliue) and Thomas Sitsylt.

Thomas Sitsylt. 13 Thomas Sitsylt married Margaret the daughter and heire of Gilbert de Winston, and had by hir Philip Sitsylt, and Dauid Sitsylt. This man was a great benefactor to the monks of Dore, and forgaue them great sums of monie which they did owe him.

Philip Sitsylt. 14 Philip Sitsylt married Margaret, the daughter of John Philips, and had by hir Richard, John, and Margaret.

Richard Sitsylt. 15 Richard Sitsylt or Cecill married Margaret the daughter of Philip Vaughan, and had by hir Philip Cecill, Margaret Cecill, John Cecill, Dauid Cecill, and James or Jenkin Cecill.

D. Powell. ✲ These pedegrées & descents I gathered faithfullie out of sundrie ancient records and euidences, wherof the most part are confirmed with seales autentike thereunto appendent, manifestlie declaring the antiquitie and truth therof; which remaine at this present in the custodie of the right honourable sir William Cecill, knight of the noble order of the garter, lord Burghleie, and lord high treasuror of England, who is lineallie descended from the last recited Richard Sitsylt, father to Dauid Cecill, grandfather to the said sir William Cecill now lord Burghleie. And at this date William Sitsylt or Cecill esquier cosen german to the said lord Burghleie, remoued by one degrée onelie, is possessed of the foresaid house of Halterennes in Ewyas land as the heire male of the house of Sitsylts, and is descended of Philip Cecill, elder brother to the said Dauid.

The descent of sir William Cecill now lord treasuror.

Fr. Thin. This sir William Cecill lord Burghleie, liuing at this instant in the yeare of Christ, one thousand, fiue hundred, eightie and sir, to the great support of this commonwealth, doth worthilie inioy the place of the lord treasuror of England, of whome (for auoiding the note of flatterie) I may not saie that good which we the subiects of England do féele by his meanes, and all the world doth sée in his rare and wise gouernment. And therefore leauing what may be said of him for his honorable deserts, from his countrie, his prince, and his countriemen, as well for rare gouernement at home, as for graue managing of the matter of state abroad, I beseech the almightie Lord to lengthen his yeares with perfect health and happie successe of all his good desires, to answer the worth of those his honourable deserts. Thus knitting vp this discourse of the treasurors, with no lesse honorable person of the temporaltie in this our age, than I began the same discourse with a rare person of the spiritualtie in that their age: this being knowne as singular in policie as the other was supposed to be in prelacie, I here set end to that which with much labour of bodie, trauell of mind, and charge of purse, I haue brought to this forme what so euer it be. Thus this much by Francis Thin touching the treasurors of England.]

The earle of Northumberland beheaded.

The 22 of August Thomas Persie earle of Northumberland late of Topcliffe, who had bene before attainted by parlement of high treason, as one of the principall conspirators in the late rebellion, and now brought out of Scotland, whither he had fled, was beheaded at Yorke about two of the clocke in the afternoone, on a new scaffold set vp for that purpose in the market place. In this moneth of August sir Thomas Smith, one of the quenes maiesties priuie councell, carefullie tendering the reformation of Ireland, sent his son Thomas Smith esquier thither with a certeine number of Englishmen to inhabit the Ards in Ulster, after the maner of a colonie vsed by the Romans.

Englishmen sent to Ulster in Ireland.

Anno Reg. 15

A strange star appeared; the bignesse therof, and of what continuance.

The eightenth of Nouember in the morning was seene a star northward verie bright and cleere, in the constellation of Cassiopeia, at the backe of hir chaire, which with three cheefe fired stars of the said constellation made a geometricall figure lozengwise, of the learned men called Rhombus. This starre in bignes at the first appearing seemed bigger than Iupiter, & not much lesse than Uenus when she seemeth greatest. Also the said starre neuer changing his place, was caried about with the dailie motion of heauen, as all fired starres commonlie are, and so continued (by little and little to the eie appearing lesse) for the space of almost sixteene moneths: at what time it was so small, that rather thought by exercises of oft bewing might imagine the place, than anie eie could iudge the presence of the same. And one thing is herein cheefelie to be noted, that (by the skill and consent of the best and most expert mathematicians, which obserued the state, propertie, and other circumstances belonging to the same starre) it was found to haue bene in place celestiall far aboue the mone, otherwise than euer anie comet hath bene seene, or naturallie can appeare. Therefore it is supposed that the signification therof is directed purposelie and speciallie to some matter, not naturall, but celestiall, or rather supercelestiall, so strange, as from the beginning of the world neuer was the like.

Earle of Darbie deceased.

The foure and twentith of Nouember Edward earle of Darbie, lord Stanleie, & Strange, of Knocking, lord and gouernor of the Iles of Man, knight of the noble order of the garter, and one of the quéens maiesties priuie councell deceased at his house called Latham in Lancashire. His life and death deseruing commendation, and craning memorie to be imitated, was such as followeth. His fidelitie vnto two kings and two quenes in dangerous times and great rebellions, in which time, and alwaies as cause serued, he was lieutenant of Lancashire and Cheshire, and latelie offered ten thousand men vnto the quenes maiestie of his owne charge for the suppression of the last rebellion. His godlie disposition to his tenants, neuer forcing anie seruice at their hands, but due paiment of their rent. His liberalitie to strangers, and such as shewed themselues gratefull to him. His famous housekeeping, and eleuen score in checkroll, neuer discontinuing the space of twelue yeares. His feeding especiallie of aged persons twise a daie three score and od; besides all commers thrise a weeke appointed for his dealing daies; and euerie good fridaie these fiue and thirtie yeares one with another two thousand seauen hundred, with meat, drinke, monie, and monie worth. There was neuer gentleman or other that waited in his seruice, but had allowance from him, to haue as well wages as otherwise for horsse and man. His yearlie portion for the expenses of his house foure thousand pounds. His cunning in setting bones disiointed or broken, his surgerie and desire to helpe the poore, his deliuerie of the George and seale to the lord Strange, with exhortation that he might keepe it so vnspotted in fidelitie to his prince as he had, and his ioie that he died in the quenes fauour. His ioifull parting this world, his taking leaue of all his seruants by shaking of hands, & his remembrance to the last daie.

The life and death of the foresaid earle of Darbie.

Rare qualities in a noble man.

Hall and Wilkinson executed.

The eight and twentith of Nouember John Hall late of Battell in Sussex gentleman, and Oswold Wilkinson late of Yorke and gaoler of Yorke castell (being before arreigned and condemned of treason) were drawne from the tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Great frost and a sharpe winter.

This yeere a great and sharpe frost almost continuallie lasted, from before the feast of All saints, till after the feast of the Epiphanie of our Lord, with somtime great and deepe snowes, and sometime raines, which freesed as fast as the same fell to the ground: wherethrough at Wrotham in Kent, and manie other places, the armes and boughs of trees being ouercharged with ise, brake off, and fell from the stockes of the same trees. Also the wind continued north and east, till after the Ascension daie, with sharpe frosts and snowes, whereby followed a late spring.

1573

Lord priuie seale deceased.

The twelfe of Januarie William lord Howard, baron of Effingham, lord priuie seale, knight of the noble order of the garter, and one of the priuie councell deceased at Hampton court. The eightenth of Januarie William lord Sommerset earle of Worcester began his iourneie towards France, to the christening of the kings daughter there in stead of the quenes maiestie of England, who sent with him a font of gold for that purpose, weieng three hundred and six and twentie ounces. The said earle with manie of his companie were robbed vpon the sea by pirats of much of their baggage, and three or foure of their men slaine. In France he and his traine were honorablie receiued. At the christening he gaue the child to name Elisabeth. They returned into England the seauen and twentith of Februarie.

Earle of Worcester sent into France.

Earle of Worcester robbed on the sea.

The narrow seas scowred.

In the moneth of Februarie, thorough sundrie heinous complaints brought to the quenes maiestie and hir councell of pirats that kept the narrow seas, doing manie robberies, as also the robbing of the earle of Worcester (as is aforesaid) hir highnesse, by the aduise of hir honourable councell, toke order with the lord admerall of England, that he should send to the seas ships, and men to scowre the narow seas, & to apprehend so manie pirats ships as might be met with. And for the better doing thereof, it pleased hir maiestie to send one of hir owne ships, named the Swallow to be the admerall, vnder the charge of William Holstocke of London esquier, comptrollor of hir highnesse ships, who had with him the Gillian, the barke Garet, and the barke of Yarmouth, and three hundred and three score able marriners, gunners, and souldiors in the said three ships, and one barke which scowred the narrow seas, from the north foreland, as farre westward as Falmouth in Cornewall, and toke twentie ships and barks of sundrie

Pirats on the west seas.

sundrie nations, to wit, English, French, and Flemmings (but all pirats) and in fashion of warre. He apprehended in those ships and barks to the number of nine hundred men of all nations, and sent them toward to Sandwich, Douer, Wight, and Portelmouth (whereof three of them that robbed the earle of Worcester were shortlie after executed at Wight.) Also the said William Holstocke did rescue and take from the aboue said pirats ships, fiftéene other merchants ships laden with merchandize, that were their prises, being of sundrie nations, and set at libertie the said fiftéene merchants ships and goods: which done, he returned to Portelmouth, and there ended his voiage in March.

Pirats executed.

A man hanged in saint Georges field.

The fourth of March, a man was hanged in chains in saint Georges field beyond Southwarke of London, for murthering the gaoler of Horsham in the same field. The seuentéenth of March deceassed Reinold Greie of Ruthin, earle of Kent, at Herneseie, and was buried at saint Giles without Creplegate. About the same time died Edmund lord Shandois.

The earle of Kent deceassed.

George Sanders murthered at Shoters hill.

The fiue and twentith of March being wednesdaie in Easter wéeke, and the feast of the Annuntiation of our ladie, George Browne cruellie murthered two honest men nére to Shoters hill in Kent, the one of them was a wealthie merchant of London named George Sanders, the other John Beane of Woolwich, which murther was committed in manner as followeth. On tuesdaie in Easter wéeke (the foure and twentith of March) the said George Browne receiuing secret intelligence by letter from mistresse Anne Dzurie, that master Sanders should lodge the same night at the house of one master Barnes in Woolwich, and from thense go on foot to saint Marie Craie; the nert morning he late in wait for him by the waie, a little from Shoters hill, and there slue both him & John Beane seruant to master Barnes. But John Beane hauing ten or eleuen wounds, & being left for dead, by Gods prouidence did reuiue againe: and créeping awaie on all foure, was found by an old man and his maiden, and conueied vnto Woolwich, where he gaue euident marks of the murtherer.

A discourse of the murther practised and committed.

Roger Clement alias trustie Roger.

Immediatlie vpon the déed doing, Browne sent mistresse Dzurie word thereof by Roger Clement (among them called trustie Roger) he himselfe repaired forthwith to the court at Grænewich, & anon after him came thither the report of the murther also. Then departed he thense vnto London, and came to the house of mistresse Dzurie, where though he spake not personallie with hir, after conference had with hir seruant trustie Roger, she prouided him twentie pounds that same daie, for the which she laid certeine plate of hir owne, & of mistresse Sanders to gage. On the nert morning being thursdaie (hauing intelligence that Browne was sought for) they sent him six pounds more by the same Roger, warning him to shift for himselfe by flight, which thing he forefollowed not to do. Neuer theless, the lords of the quéens maiesties councell caused so spéedie and narrow search to be made for him, that vpon the eight and twentith of the same moneth he was apprehended in a mans house of his owne name at Rochester and being brought backe againe to the court, was examined by the councell: vnto whome he confessed the déed (as you haue heard) and that he had oftentimes before pretended and sought to do the same, by the instigation of the said mistresse Dzurie, who had promised to make a marriage betweene him and mistresse Sanders (whome he seemed to loue excessiuelie) neuertheless he protested (though vntrulie) that mistresse Sanders was not priuie nor consenting thereunto.

Browne the murtherer reléued with monie.

He confesseth his offense vpon his examination.

Upon his confession he was arreigned at the kings bench in Westminster hall the eighteenth of Aprill, where he acknowledged himselfe guiltie, and was condemned as principall of the murther, according to which sentence he was executed in Smithfield, on mondaie the twentith of Aprill: at which time also vntrulie (as the hir selfe confessed afterward) he laboured by all meanes to cléere mistresse Sanders of committing euill of hir bodie with him, and then slong himselfe beside the ladder. He was after hanged vp in chains nére vnto the place where he had done the fact. In the meane time mistresse Dzurie and hir man being examined, as well by their owne confessions, as by falling out of the matter, and also by Brownes appeachment thought culpable, were committed to ward. And after mistresse Sanders being deliuered of child, and churched (for at the time of hir husbands death she loked presentlie to lie downe) was vpon mistresse Dzuries mans confession, and other great likelihods, likewise committed to the tower, and on wednesdaie the first of Maie she was arreigned with mistresse Dzurie at the Guildhall.

George Browne hanged in Smithfield, and afterward in chains on Shoters hill.

The effect of their indictment was, that they by a letter written had béene procurers of the said murther: & knowing the murther done, had by monie & otherwise reléued the murtherer: whereunto they pleaded not giltie. Howbeit they were both condemned as accessaries to master Sanders death, and executed in Smithfield the thirtenth of Maie, being wednesdaie in Whitsunwéeke, at which time they both confessed themselues guiltie of the fact. Trustie Roger mistresse Dzuries man was arreigned on fridaie the eight of Maie, & being there condemned as accessarie, was executed with his mistresse at the time and place aforesaid. Not long after, Anthonie Browne brother to the fornamed George Browne, was for notable felonies conueied from Newgate to Yorke, and there hanged.

Anne Sanders, Anne Dzurie, and trustie Roger hanged in Smithfield.

Anthonie Browne hanged at Yorke.

The tenth of Aprill seauen pirats which among others had bene taken on the north seas, were lead from Southwarke to Wapping, and fiue of them were there hanged: the other two had their pardon at the gallowes. The seauententh of Aprill a chandelers wife without Aldersgate of London, who had practised hir husbands death by poisoning and otherwise, was set on the pillorie in Cheape, with three other women, who had bene of hir counsell: two of them were with hir there whipped.

Pirats hanged at Wapping.

Foure women on the pillorie.

The seauenth of June, betweene the houres of one and two of the clocke in the after none, a great tempest of haile and raine happened at Tocester in Northamptonshire, wherethrough six houses in that towne were borne downe, and foureteene more sore perished with the waters which rose of that tempest. The hailstones were square, & six inches about. One child was there drowned, and manie sheepe with other cattell, which when the water was fallen, manie of them were lieng on the high hedges, where the waters had left them. The sixtenth of June, Thomas Woodhouse, a priest of Lincolnshire, who had laine long prisoner in the Fleet, was arreigned in the Guildhall of London, and there condemned of high treason, who had iudgement to be hanged and quartered, and was executed at Tiburne the nineteenth of June.

Haile in Northamptonshire.

Thomas Woodhouse.

The sixteenth of August, Walter earle of Esser, accompanied with the lord Rich, and diuerse other gentlemen, imbarked themselues in seuerall ships at Leirpole, and the wind sitting verie well, toke their voiage towards Ireland. The earle after manie and great dangers on the sea, at length wone Copemans Iland, from whence in a pinnesse of captein Perses he was brought safe to Knockfergus. The lord Rich with the like danger landed at castell Kil-

Erle of Esser and the lord Rich with other sailed into Ireland.

life,

lise, where being met by capteine Malbie, maister Smith, & maister Moze pensioners, he was conducted to Inch abbaie maister Malbies house, where he had in a readinesse on the morrow morning a hundred and fiftie horsemen for their safegard to Knockfergus, beside fiftie Kerns which went a foot through the woods: there was among these a thirtie bowes with a bagpipe, the rest had darts. Sir Brian Makephelin had preied the countrie, and taken awaie what was to be carried or driuen, but on the sixt of September he came to Knockfergus, to the earle of Esser, and there made his submission: the number of kine were estéemed thirtie thousand, besides shéepe and swine.

Bowes, bagpipes & darts among the Irish.

After him Ferdorough Macgillaspicke the blind Scots sonne, Roze, Oge, Macwilline did the like: and diuerse other sent their messengers to the earle, to signifie that they were at his lordships disposition as the baron of Dongarrow, Condenell, Odonell, and the capteine of Kilulto. The earle of Esser hauing the countrie of Clanboie and other, the quéens maiestie of England directed hir letters to the lord deputie of Ireland, willing him to make by commission the earle of Esser capteine generall of the Irish nation in the prouince of Ulster, and to diuide the countrie woone, Clanboie, and else where, &c. The eleuenth of October, Peter Burchet gentleman of the middle temple, with his dagger suddenlie assailed, cruellie wounded, and meant to haue murthered a seruiceable gentleman named John Hawkins esquier, as he with sir William Winter, and an other gentleman rode towards Westminster, in the high stréet neare to the Strand, beyond the Temple barre of London: for which fact the said Burchet being apprehended and commited to the tower, was afterward examined concerning the fact. Who answered that he toke the said maister Hawkins for an other gentleman: and being further examined, he was found to hold certeine erroneous opinions, for the which he was sent to the Lollards tower.

Erle of Esser capteine generall of Ulster in Ireland.

Peter Burchet wounded maister Hawkins.

Peter Burchet found to be an heretike.

From thence being called into the consistorie of Paules church, before the right reuerend father Edwine bishop of London, and others, & by them examined, he stood in his opinions, till the sentence of death as an heretike was readie to haue béene pronounced against him on the fourth of Nouember: but through the earnest persuasions of diuerse learned men, who toke great paines in that matter, he renounced, forswore, and abiured his opinions for erroneous & damnable, promising neuer to returne to them, and also willinglie to doo and performe all such penance as the bishop his ordinarie should inioine him.

Peter Burchet abiured his heresie, & submitted himselfe to doo penance.

The ninth of Nouember, the said Peter Burchet was remoued from the Lollards tower, to the tower of London, where on the next morrow about noone, whilest one that had kept him companie was gone downe, and locked the doze after him, leauing an other with him called Hugh Longworth, who stood at the window reading in the bible, the said Burchet walking vp and downe in the chamber, toke a billets end out of the fire, and knocked the said Longworth on the head, and left not till he had striken him starke dead: for the which on the next morow he was arreigned & condemned at Westminster, and then returned to Summerset house, where he remained that night: and on the next morrow being the twelfe of Nouember, he was brought to the gibet, where (after his right hand being striken off, and nailed to the gibbet) he was hanged nigh the place where hée wounded maister Hawkins. This yeare about Lammas, wheat was sold at London for thrée shillings the bushell: but shortlie after it was raised to foure shillings, fiue shillings, six shillings: & before Christmas to a noble, and seuen shillings, which so continued long after: beefe was sold for twentie pence, and two and twentie pence the stone, and all other flesh and white meats at an excessiue price, all kind of salt fish verie deare, as fiue herings two pence, &c: yet great plentie of fresh fish, and oft times the same verie cheape: pease at foure shillings the bushell, otemeale at foure shillings eight pence: baie salt at three shillings the bushell, &c. All this dearth notwithstanding (thanks be giuen to God) there was no want of anie thing to them that wanted not monie.

Peter Burchet killeth his keeper.

Peter Burchet hanged.

Anno Reg. 16.

Dearth without scarsitie, & afterwards plentie to them that had monie.

The fourth of Aprill being Palme sundais, there was taken saieng of masse in the lord Morleis house within Algate of London, one Albon Dalman preist, and the ladie Morleie with hir children, and diuerse others were also taken hearing of the said masse. There was also taken the same daie and houre for saieng masse at the ladie Gilfords in Trinitie lane, one Oliuer Heiwood preist: and for hearing of the said masse, the said ladie Gilford with diuerse other gentlewomen. There was also taken at the same instant in the ladie Browns house in Cowlane for saieng masse, one Thomas Heiwood preist, and one John Cowper Preist, with the ladie Browne, and diuers other were likewise taken being hearers of the said masse. All which persons were for the same offenses indicted, conuicted, and had the law according to the statute in that case prouided. There was also found in their seuerall chapels, diuerse Latine bookes, beads, images, palmes, chalices, crosses, vestments, pixes, pares, and such like.

1574

Priests saieng masse apprehended.

The ninth of Julie at six of the clocke at night, in the Ile of Thanet beside Ramesgate, in the parish of saint Peter vnder the cliffe, a monstrous fish or whale of the sea did shoot himselfe on shore, where for want of water, beating himselfe on the sands, he died about six of the clocke on the next morning, before which time he roared, and was heard more than a mile on the land. The length of this fish was twentie two yards, the nether law twelue foot the opening: one of his eies, being taken out of his head, was more than six horse in a cart could draw, a man stood vpright in the place from whence the eie was taken. The thicknesse from the backe whereon he laie, to the top of his bellie (which was vpward) was foure téene foot, his taile of the same breadth: betweene his eies twelue foot, three men stood vpright in his mouth, some of the ribs were six foot long, his tong was sixtéene foot long, his liuer two cart lode, into his nosetrils anie man might haue crept: the oile being boiled out of the head was *parmasitie, the oile of his bodie was whitish and sweet of taste. The seuenth of August, a solemne obsequie was kept in saint Paules church at London for Charles the ninth king of France, who deceased on the twentie day of Maie last before passed.

A monstrous fish (but not so monstrous as some reported) for his eies being great, were in his head and not in his backe.

*Sperma cete.

Obsequie at Pauls for the French king.

On the fiftéenth daie of August being sundaie, Agnes Bridges, a maiden about the age of twentie yeares, and Rachell Pinder, a wench about eleuen or twelue yeares old, who both of them had counterfetted to be possessed by the diuell (wherby they had not onelie maruellouslie deluded manie people, both men and women, but also diuerse such persons as otherwise séemed to be of good wit and vnderstanding) stood before the preacher at Paules crosse, where they acknowledged their hypocriticall counterfetting, with penitent behauiours, requiring forgiuenesse of God and the world, and the people to praie for them. Also their seuerall examinations and confessions were there openlie read by the preacher, and afterwards published in print for the further possessitie hereafter to beware of the like deceiuers.

Agnes Bridges & Rachell Pinder at Pauls crosse for counterfetting to be possessed.

The fourth of September in the after noone, such a storme of raine happened at London, as the like of long

A lad of eightéene yeares old drowned in a chanell in London, long time could not be remembred, wherethrough the chanels of the citie suddenlie rising, ran with such a forceable course towards the common sewes, that a lad about the age of eightéene yeares, minding to haue lept ouer the chanell neere vnto Dowgate, was borne ouer with the streame, and by the same carried from the conduit there towards the Thames, with such a swiftnesse, that no man with staues or otherwise could stay him, till he came against a cart whéele that stood in the watergate, afore which he was drowned and starke dead.

No maiors feast at the Guildhall.

This yeare the maior of London went by water to Westminster, and there toke his oth, as hath béene accustomed: he kept no feast at the Guildhall, although great prouision had béene made for that purpose, but dined at his owne house with his brethren the aldermen: the companies dined at their seuerall halles. This was done by the speciall appointment of the quéenes maiesties councell, to auoid infection of the plague, like to haue increased by comming togither of such a multitude. This wéeke from the two and twentith, vnto the eight and twentith of October, deceased in the citie and liberties, conteining an hundred and eight parishes, of all diseases, one hundred threescore & six, of the which number threescore and fiue were accounted to die of the plague. Michaelmas tearme, which had béene adiourned by proclamation, began at Westminster on the first of Nouember. The same first day in the morning, there happened two great tides at London, in the riuer of Thames, the first by course, the other within one houre following, which ouerflowed the marshes, with manie vaults and cellars neare adioining.

Tearme adiourned.

Two tides in one houre.

Fierie impressions marueilous.

The fourteenth of Nouember being sundaie, about midnight following, diuerse strange impressions of fire and smoke were séene in the aire to proceed forth of a blacke cloud in the north toward the south, which so continued till the next morning that it was date light. The next night following, the heauens from all parts did séeme to burne marueilous raginglie, & ouer our heads the flames from the horizon round about rising did méet, and there double and roll one in another, as if it had béene in a cleare fornace. The eightéenth date at night blew verie stormie & tempestuous winds out of the south, as hath not béene knowne the like out of that quarter, especiallie after midnight, till the next morning that it was date light. These are to be receiued as tokens of Gods wrath readie bent against the world for sinne now abounding, and also of his great mercie, who doth onlie thus but to shew vs the rod wherwith we dailie deserue to be beaten.

Anno Reg. 17.

Tempestuous winds out of the south.

This yeare at London after haruest, the price of wheate began by little and little to fall, from seuen shillings to three shillings the bushell, at which price it staied (little or nothing rising or falling) all the yeare after: but baie salt was raised from three shillings to foure shillings, fiue shillings, and six shillings the bushell, the like whereof had neuer béene séene or heard within this realme. The 24 day of Februarie, being the feast of saint Matthie, on which date the fate was kept at Deuke sburie, a strange thing happened there. For after a flood which was not great, but such as therby the medows néere adioining were couered with water, in the after noone there came downe the riuer of Seuerne great numbers of flies & bétels, such as in summer euenings vse to strike men in the face, in great heapes, a foot thicke aboue the water, so that to credible mens iudgement there were séene within a paire of buts length of those flies aboue a hundred quarters. The mils there about were dammed vp with them for the space of foure daies after, and then were clensed by digging them out with shouels: from whence they came is yet vnknowne: but the date was cold and a hard frost.

Baie salt deare.

1575

Flies in Februarie the number strange.

The six and twentith of Februarie, betwéene foure and six of the clocke in the after noone, great earthquakes happened in the cities of Yorke, Worcester, Gloucester, Bristow, Hereford, and in the countries about, which caused the people to runne out of their houses: for feare they should haue fallen on their heads. In Teukesburie, Bredon, and other places, the dishes fell from the cupbords, and the bookes in mens studies from the shelues. In Norton chappell, the people being on their knees at euening praier, the ground moouing, caused them to run awaie in great feare that the dead bodies would haue risen, or the chappell to haue fallen: part of Ruthen castell fell downe with certeine bricke chimneies in gentlemens houses. The bell in the shire hall at Denbigh was also caused to toll twise, by shaking of the hall, &c.

In earthquake in sundrie places of England, and what effects it wrought.

On Easter date, which was the third of Aprill, about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, was disclosed a congregation of anabaptists, Duchmen, in a house without the bars of Aldgate at London, wherof seauen and twentie were taken and sent to prison: and foure of them bearing fagots recanted at Paules crosse, on the fifteenth date of Maie in forme as followeth.

Anabaptists bare fagots at Pauls crosse.

The forme of recantation openlie made by the said anabaptists.

WHereas I. I. T. R. H. being seduced by the diuell the spirit of error, and by false teachers his ministers, haue fallen into certeine most detestable and damnable heresies, namelie:

The anabaptists heresies

1 That Christ toke not flesh of the substance of the blessed virgine Marie:
2 That infants of the faithfull ought not to be baptised:
3 That a christian man may not be a magistrat or beare the sword or office of authoritie:
4 That it is not lawfull for a christian to take an oth:

Now by the grace of God, and through conference with good and learned ministers of Christ his church, I doo vnderstand and acknowlege the same to be most damnable and detestable heresies, and doo aske God here before his church mercie for my said former errors, and doo forsake them, recant, and renounce them, and abiure them from the bottome of my heart, professing that I certeinlie beléeue:

Recanted.

1 That Christ toke flesh of the substance of the blessed virgine Marie:
2 That infants of the faithfull ought to be baptised:
3 That a christian man may be a magistrat, or beare the sword or office of authoritie:
4 That it is lawfull for a christian man to take an oth.

And further I confesse, that the whole doctrine and religion established and published in this realme of England, as also that which is receiued and preached in the Dutch church here in this citie, is sound, true, and according to the word of God: whervnto in all things I submit my selfe, and will most gladlie be a member of the said Dutch church, from henceforth vtterlie abandoning and forsaking all and euerie anabaptisticall error. This is my faith now, in the which I doo purpose and trust to stand firme and stedfast to the end. And that I may so doo, I beséech you all to praie with me, and for me, to God the heauenlie father, in the name of his sonne our sauiour

Iesus

Jesus Christ. The like recantation was made by them afterwards in the Dutch church.

Matthew Parker archbishop of Canturburie deceased.

The seauentæenth of Maie about midnight following, the reuerend father in God Matthew Parker doctor of diuinitie archbishop of Canturburie deceased at Lambeth, and was there honorablie buried, on whose tome (being of blacke marble) is written this most worthie epitaph here following:

Walter Haddon.

Sobrius & prudens, studijs excultus & vsu,
Integer & veræ relligionis amans,
Matthæus vixit Parkerus, fouerat illum
Aula virum iuuenem, fouit & aula senem,
Ordine res gessit, recti defensor & æqui,
Vixerat ille Deo, mortuus ille Deo est.

Matthew Parker liued soberlie and wise,
Learned by studie and continuall practise,
Louing, true, of life vncontrold,
The court did foster him both yoong and old,
Orderlie he dealt, the right he did defend,
He liued vnto God, to God he made his end.

Io. St. 1182. Matthew Parker a lerned antiquarie, and what monuments of his loue to learning he left behind him.

¶This reuerend father examined throughlie the English translation of the holie bibles, wherein he partlie vsed the helpe of his brethren bishops, and other doctors, and caused the same to be newlie printed in the largest volume, for the due furniture of manie churches then wanting. Also making diligent search for the antiquities of the Britons, and English Saxons, to the end those monuments might be carefullie kept, he caused them to be well bound and trimlie couered: and such wherof he knew verie few examples to be extant (among the which was Matthew Paris, Matthew Florilegus, and Thomas Walsingham) he caused to be printed. The famous palace of his see at Canturburie, by long continuance decaied & consumed with fire, he renewed, builded, and fullie restored with the charges of more than fourteene hundred pounds. He founded a grammar schole in Rochdale in the countie of Lancaster.

Founder of a grammar schole.

To Corpus Christi college in Cambridge he procured thirteene scholarships, and bare the charges in making and furnishing two chambers for scholars, and the inward librarie of the same college. Item he gaue to the outward and inward librarie of the said college a goodlie companie of printed bookes, & a great number of written booke of great antiquitie & much value. Item he procured to the said college the patronage of saint Marie Abchurch in London. Item he hath founded two felowships in the said college, and procured one charter of mortmaine to the summe of one hundred pounds by yeare. Item he hath giuen to the same college of siluer plate double guilt three hundred nine ounces, and three quarters, & surrendred to them a lease with the improuement of foureteene pounds and eight shillings yerelie for seuenteene yeres. Item one hundred pounds to the maintenance of a fier in the hall from Halomas to Candlemas; and by his last will and testament fiue hundred pounds. Item to diuers scholars chambers within the said college diuerse bedsteads, with sufficient bedding & books to remaine for euer. Item he hath founded for euer fiue sermons to be preached in diuerse places of Norfolke euerie yere in Rogation weeke; and fortie shillings to be diuided at Norwich to the poore and others. Item to the citie of Norwich one bason and ewer of siluer and double guilt of one hundred seauentie and fiue ounces. Item to the towne of Watsall in Norfolke for euer an annuitie of fiftie shillings to be diuided to the poore with a sermon in Rogation weeke. Item to Gunuill and Caius college one scholarship, with a standing cup, and a pot of siluer double guilt of fiue and fiftie ounces and three quarters, and one nest of goblets with a couer siluer and guilt; with a number of good bookes to their librarie. Item to Trinitie hall one scholarship, a standing cup and a pot of siluer and guilt of three and fiftie ounces, a nest of goblets siluer and guilt with a couer; and bookes to their librarie. Item to the vniuersitie librarie fiftie old ancient written bookes, and fiftie printed bookes. Of this prelat, to his further commendation the aforesaid doctor Haddon, in the second booke of his poems maketh very honorable mention, comprising in six verses the ensignes of his ancestors, with those also which were accessarie by the gratiousnesse of the prince, who preferred him to his prelacie. In the same verses also is comprehended as it were an harmonie or consent of most godlie qualities answerable vnto the ensignes that he bare; as thus:

Sermons perpetuallie founded at his charges in Norfolke: and what other particular gifts he bestowed to good purposes.

A benefactor to Corpus christi college.

Sunt antiquorum claues monumenta parentum, — De insignibus eiusdem Matthei.
Venit ab augusto principe stella triplex.
Sic benè conspirant virtus, doctrina, potestas,
Et placidæ pacis semina læta serunt.
Sed tamen ad finem decurrunt gaudia vitæ,
Ac homo puluis erit, puluis vt antè fuit.]

The 21 of Maie being Whitsun eeuen, one man and ten women anabaptists Dutch, were in the consistorie of Paules condemned to be burned in Smithfield: but after great paines taken with them, onlie one woman was conuerted, the other were banished the land. On the first of June the nine women being led by the shiriffs officers, and the man also tied to a cart & whipped, were all conueied from Newgate to the waters side, where they were shipped awaie neuer to returne againe. The twelfe of June stood at Paules crosse fiue persons Englishmen of the sect termed the familie of loue, who there confessed themselues vtterlie to detest as well the author of that sect H. N. as all his damnable errors and heresies.

Anabaptists banished.

Fiue persons of the familie of loue stood at Paules crosse.

The two and twentith of Julie two Dutchmen anabaptists were burned in Smithfield, who died in great horror with roring and crieng.

Anabaptists burned in Smithfield.

The thirtith of Julie in the afternoone was a great tempest of lightening and thunder, wherethrough both men and beasts in diuerse places were stricken dead. Also at that time fell great abundance of haile, whereof the stones in manie places were found to be six or seuen inches about. The fourth of September being sundaie about seuen of the clocke in the morning, a certeine glasse house, which sometime had beene the crossed friers hall neere to the tower of London burst out on a terrible fire: whereunto the lord maior, aldermen and shiriffes with all expedition repaired, and practised there all meanes possible, by water buckets, hookes, and otherwise to haue quenched it. All which notwithstanding, whereas the same house in a small time before had consumed great quantitie of wood by making of fine drinking glasses; now it selfe hauing within it neere fortie thousand billets of wood was all consumed to the stone walles, which walles greatlie defended the fire from spreading further, and doing anie more harme.

Thunder and haile, whereof insued great hurt.

The glasse house burned.

The six and twentith of September, a poulters wife in the parish of Christs church within Newgate of London was deliuered & brought to bed of foure childzen at one burthen, all females or maidenchildzen, which were christened by the names of Elisabeth, Marie, Margaret, and Dorothie: and the same daie moneth the mother was buried, but all the foure childzen liuing, and in good liking, were borne to church after hir. ¶On Michaelmas eeuen at night the like impressions of fire and smoke were seene in the aire to flash out of the northeast, north and northwest, as had beene on the fiue and twentith of November last before passed.

A woman brought a bed of foure childzen at one burthen.

The tenth of October manie French, and some Englishmen, but all pirats of the seas, were arreigned

To the number of two and twentie pirats condemned and iudged to die.

ned at the admeraltie court in Southwarke, where to the number of two and twentie were condemned, and had sentence of death pronounced against them. The maior of London went by water to Westminster, and there toke his oth as hath bene accustomed: he kept no feast at the Guildhall, but dined at his owne house with his brethren the aldermen and others. The companies dined at their seuerall halles, &c. This was done as in the yere last before passed, to auoid the infection of the plague, which might haue increased by comming togither of greater numbers of people. That weeke, from the two and twentith vnto the eight and twentith of October, deceased in the citie and liberties of all diseases one hundred thirtie and two, of the which number six and thirtie were accounted to die of the plague. The next weeke following ending the third of Nouember (thanks be giuen to God therefore) there deceased of all diseases but one hundred and ten, and of them of the plague but six and twentie.

No maiors feast at the Guildhall, and why.

The plague asswaged in London.

1 St. pag. 1185. God punisheth periurie.

¶ The eleuenth of Februarie Anne Aueries, widow, forswearing hir selfe for a little monie that she should haue paid for six pounds of tow at a shop in Woodstreet of London, fell immediatlie downe speechlesse, casting vp at hir mouth in great aboundance, & with horrible stinke, the same matter which by natures course should haue beene voided downewards, till she died. A terrible example of Gods iust iudgement vpon such as make no conscience of swearing against their brother. The fifteenth of Februarie, Edmund Grindale somtime bishop of London, late archbishop of Yorke, was in the chapterhouse of S. Paules church at London elected archbishop of Canturburie. The first of March in the night through a great flaw of wind then in the northeast, a tilt bote with about the number of one and thirtie persons, men and women, comming from Grauesend toward London, were all drowned; one boie excepted. The thirtith of Maie Thomas Greene goldsmith was drawen from Newgate of London to Tiburne, and there hanged, headed, and quartered, for clipping of coine both gold and siluer.

Archbishop elected.

Tilt bote drowned.

Greene hanged.

The fifteenth of June Martine Frobisher being furnished of aduenturors, with two small barkes & one pinnesse departed from Blackewall, vpon his voiage for the discouerie of a passage to Catata by the northwest seas. Vpon the first of Julie he had sight (as he iudged) of Freesland, but durst not approch the same, by reason of the great yce that laie alongst the coast. Not far from thense he lost his pinnesse and one of his barkes, who mistrusting the danger of tempests returned home, with report that their generall Martine Frobisher was cast awaie, which worthie capteine notwithstanding continued his course northwest, beyond anie man that hath heretofore discouered, and the twentith of Julie had sight of a high land, which he named Queene Elisabeths foreland; and after that another foreland with a great passage, diuiding (as it were) the two maine lands asunder: this place he named Frobishers streits. After he had passed sixtie leagues further, he went ashoare, found the same to be inhabited with sauage people, caught one of them into his barke, and returning, arriued in England in the moneth of August following. One of his companie brought from thense a peece of a blacke stone, much like to a seacole in colour, which being brought to certeine goldfiners in London, to make a saie thereof, found it to hold gold, and that verie richlie for the quantitie.

Frobishers first voiage for the discouerie of Catata.

A rumor that capteine Frobisher was cast awaie.

Queene Elisabeths foreland.

The nintenth of Julie a woman was burnt at Tunbridge in Kent for poisoning of hir husband: and two daies before a man, named Orleie, was hanged at Maidstone for being accessarie to the same fact. The tenth of August a rare peece of worke and almost incredible, was brought to passe by an Englishman borne in the citie of London named Peter Bales, who by his industrie and practise of his pen, contriued and writ within the compasse of a penie in Latine, the Lords praier, the creed, the ten commandements, a praier to God, a praier for the queene, his posie, his name, the date of the moneth, the yeare of our Lord, and the reigne of the queene. And on the seuententh of August next following at Hampton court he presented the same to the queens maiestie in the head of a ring of gold, couered with a christall, and presented therewith an excellent spectacle by him deuised for the easier reading thereof: therewith hir maiestie read all that was written therein with great admiration, and commended the same to the lords of the councell, and the ambassadors, and did weare the same manie times vpon hir finger.]

A woman burnt at Tunbridge for poisoning hir husband.

Rare workemanship shewed in the compasse of a penie by the handwriting of an Englishman.

This yeare, by reason of the troubles in the low countries, the English merchants sustained great losses diuers waies. For the men of warre that kept the seas, aduowing themselues to be reteined with the prince of Orenge, vnder colour to serch for their aduersaries goods, oftentimes boorded the English ships as they met with them on the seas, smallie to the profit of them to whome the same ships and goods apperteined. Some they staied and toke awaie with them. And at length there was a generall restraint made by the prince of Orenge, that no English ships should passe to or fro the towne of Antwerpe by the riuer of Scheld, such being arrested and deteined at Flishing as were comming downe that riuer, and other likewise that were bound vp the same time towards Antwerpe.

Anno Reg. 18. 1576

English merchants susteine great losse by sea, and why.

The English merchants complaine to the queene of their wrongs.

The English merchants, feeling themselues thus molested and damnified at sundrie seasons, exhibited their complaints to the queenes maiesties councell, who accordinglie dealt from time to time with the prince of Orenge and his deputies for redresse, but specialle now vpon this generall restreint. And although great difficultie appeared in the mater, aswell for contenting of the aduenturors of Flishing, as for that there had beene foure ships belonging to the prince arrested and staied at Falmouth: at length yet such English ships as were kept and holden at Flishing were released and sent home; but not till two of the English merchants aduenturors* men of good calling and estimation (hauing first as hath bin said made a certeine maner of protest) were faine to enter into bond for the loane of a summe of monie, and were therewith kept at Flishing till the contract in that behalfe might be performed. Wherupon the queenes maiestie, misliking that hir subiects should be thus hardlie dealt with, armed and set forth certeine of hir ships, which going to the seas to see that hir subiects might trauerse the same in safetie, toke diuerse of the Flishingers vessels, and brought them into the English streames. The Flishingers herewith on the other part toke and arrested other of the English ships, so that the troubles seemed rather to increase than to be in any wise appeased: although afterwards by sending to and fro, the matter was taken vp, and such order had as was thought to stand verie well for the suertie, commoditie, and good liking of the English merchants.

These foure ships were staied for satisfaction of one Simons ship, out of the which a Flishinger had taken certeine tuns of Canarie wines.

* Martin Caltrop & William Gerard.

The troubles increase.

But in the meane time, and before this could be brought to passe, through a disordered mutinie which chanced among the Spanish souldiers, it so fell out, that the states of those low countries agreed with the prince of Orenge, and set themselues wholie against the Spaniards. Wherevpon the yong count de Egmont, the marquesse de Hauerie entered the towne of Antwerpe, with a power of souldiers for the States, and meant to haue kept that towne against the

This was the fourth of November, 9500 one with another slain, drowned and burned.

the Spaniards that held the castell. But they doubting to be inclosed & shut vp by some siege, got more of their fellowes to them, entred the towne by force, & spitefullie killing no small number of people, sacked the towne, and put aswell the townesmen as others that were merchants resident there to their ransoms. Amongst other our Englishmen escaped not altogither free, so as diuerse were spoiled of that they had, and the whole number put to their ransome; although vpon the sending ouer of doctor Wilson his maiesties ambassador, so much of the ransome as remained vnpaid was promised to be remitted.

Thus were our merchants euill intreated on each hand, by reason of those ciuill tumults in the low countries, aswell this yeare as in the former yeares past, and small hope would be of better successe there, if some end should not be had of that ciuill dissention, which hath so long continued betwixt the king of Spaine and his subiects in those countries, not onelie to the hinderance of themselues, but also of others that haue to trade among them, specialtie for traffike sake and intercourse of merchandize. But at length they haue compounded their controuersies, and are growen to a full agréement and perfect conclusion of peace, which God grant may take place so effectuallie, as may turne to the quietnesse and publike commoditie not onlie of those countries but of their neighbors, whereby merchants and passengers may in suertie passe to and fro without disturbance, so as no occasion be giuen of breach of leagues and amities betwixt princes and countries, but that the same may be maintained to Gods glorie, and the suertie of the christian commonwealth.

A conclusion of peace betweene the parties before diuided.

In this yeare the right honorable Walter Deuereux earle of Essex and Eu, earle marshall of Ireland, vicount Hereford and Bourcher, lord Ferrers of Chartlie, Bourcher & Louaine, knight of the most noble order of the garter, fell sicke of a losenesse of his bodie the one and twentith of August being fridaie, and for the space of two and twentie daies together he was so grieuouslie tormented therwith, that finallie on saturdaie the two & twentith of September he departed out of this transitorie life, passing from hence to the ioies of heauen, as by his godlie end all that were about him gaue testimonie. The losse of this noble man was greatlie bémoned, aswell by the English as Irish, for the noble courage, vertuous qualities, and tender zeale to the aduancement of the commonwealth which apéered in him.

Walter Deuereux earle of Essex departeth this life.

¶ So that it were a fowle fault in the highest degree, not to laie vp some commemoration of so worthie and well deseruing a gentleman, both of prince and people, in perpetuall records: which I will do by Gods grace none otherwise than I am lead by such matter, yea memorable matter, as I find in a funerall sermon, made by the reuerend father in God Richard bishop of saint Dauis, at the buriall of this right honorable earle of Esser, in the parish church of Caermerthin in Wales, where the said bishop taking for his text these words of S. Iohn, in the 14 of the reuelation, Audiui vocem de cælo, dicentem: Beati mortui, &c. I heard a voice from heauen, saieng: Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, &c. After he had discoursed vpon the text as the spirit of God gaue him vtterance, he descended at last to a particular treatise tending wholie to the praise of this right noble man: saieng in sort as followeth.

Abr. Fl. ex concione funebri, vt patet in contextu.

Behold the heauie hand of God for our sins, vpon all the whole countrie in the death of this noble man, which is not onelie a messenger of Gods wrath towards this towne and countrie (wherein he was borne) but also in verie déed a great losse to the whole realme. And although this countrie, who shall misse so noble and so worthie a ruler and magistrate, that bore them so great affection, so readie to benefit all, and hurt none, and for the high calling he was of so able to pleasure and to do good: although I saie this countrie by the death of this noble earle is most earnestlie & effectuallie cited to appére before the Lord, and to fall to a reckoning: yet do I beléeue that the quœnes maiestie, hir highnesse councell, and all the nobilitie of the realme may hereby receiue admonition, and cause of further circumspection and aduigilancie. For such valiant and couragious noble men are the bulworks and walles of defense of the whole realme. They saie the realme is walled about, because it is inuironed with the sea: but I hold rather with their iudgements, that make the fidelitie and true harts of the subiects, and especiallie of such of the nobilitie that haue made themselues (by Gods especiall grace) expert to gouerne and rule vnder hir maiestie, aswell in warre as peace, the strong towers of defense both of hir maiestie and hir highnesse realme. This noble earle was one of these number: for I beléeue there is no prince in the world, that had a more faithfull noble subiect, than hir maiestie had of him in his time. And for the notable valiantnesse, experience, and vertues that were in him, I am persuaded that hir maiestie (if he had liued) might haue vsed his seruice to be a terrour to all enimies, forren or domesticall. And now that I may speake somewhat of his great nobilitie, his excellent, vertuous, and worthie qualities: first I thinke I may saie thus much in a generalitie, that it was easie for a man of any iudgement, that should behold his countenance and behauiour, to find in him nobilitie, maiestie and honor, planted by the especiall gift of God, euen from his mothers wombe. When I consider the nature of nobilitie with the causes efficient and finall, it séemeth vnto me that nobilitie may be compared vnto a riuer or a flood, which in the originall issueth out of foure principall wels, and all the foure rise out from the compasse of one hill. The welles of nobilitie are prudence, fortitude, iustice, and temperance: the hill whence they spring is the feare of God, or true religion.

The place of the erls birth: what losse all Engiad hath of him.

what noblemen are the wals of the realme.

The praise of the earle for sundrie considerations.

Comparison of true nobilitie vnto a riuer or flood, &c.

Although this worthie earle by progenie was of noble bloud, whose ancestors were of great honour, which of it selfe, if a man degenerat not too far from his forefathers, deserueth honorable acceptation in this world: yet was he not therewith satisfied, as it may apéere by his studie and trauell in his life time: for he séemed to be of that iudgement that Alphonsus king of Aragon (of whome we read in stories) was of. When a certeine man tooke in hand to set out the laud and praise of his nobilitie, he stood much in recitall that he was a king, a kings sonne, a kings nephue, a kings brother, and such like titles. The king interrupting his tale answered, that he neuer estéemed much of that kind of glorie: and that it was the praise and commendation of his ancestors, who by vertue and worthie qualities had deserued such high callings and honour, and not of him: and that his praise stood not in that which might fall vnto him by testament, but in the imitation and performing of the noble acts, prowesse, and valiantnesse of his forefathers. This noble earle likewise, not answered to his expectation in that he was a noble man by bloud and inheritance, gaue himselfe wholie all the daies of his life to purchase and win the nobilitie, that springeth immediatlie from the verie originall founteins of the same, as partlie I will put you in remembrance of. We will begin with prudence, which may be thus defined.

Panor. lib. 20. de rebus gestis Alphonsi.

The disposition of the earle to inlarge and augment his nobilitie.

Prudence is a power or faculte of the mind giuen of God, whereby man is made wise, prouident and circumspect; and whereby man atteineth knowledge, cunning, and expertnesse in all matters that Prudence a noble vertue wherewith this erle was indued.

the

the children of men haue to deale with in this world. This noble erle was of great wisedome, deepe iudgement, graue consideration, and so blessed with vnderstanding, experience, and manifold vertues and gifts of God, that he was right worthie to serue his maiestie in princelie and weightie affaires, both in warre and peace. He was of such prudent and excellent discretion, that he had a speciall grace to intertaine all states of men, superiour, equall, and inferiour, with such comelinesse and decencie, that for ciuilitie, humanitie, maners, and honorable behauior, he was a paterne and an example for nobilitie to imitate and to follow. In his youth he bestowed not the time in vanitie, idlenesse, or voluptuousnesse; but in atchiuing and winning of such sciences, properties and vertues, which might beautifie and increase his nobilitie, and prouailed therin so effectuallie, that he became excellent in all kinds of knowledge and qualities, meet, commendable, or necessarie for a man of honour. Concerning diuine matters, I haue in my time conferred with his lordship, and therefore can saie somewhat therein: and amongst others, one thing is notable, which in conference I receiued at his mouth. He affirmed this in effect, that there was nothing in the world that could blemish and abase the heroicall nature of nobilitie so much, as to haue the eies of vnderstanding so closed and shut vp, that a man in honour should not be able to discerne betwixt true religion, and the hypocriticall false religion; betwixt the right worshipping of God, & idolatrie; betwixt the traditions of men and Gods word: but remaine subiect to lies and superstition, and to call bad good, and good bad: and concluded that to be free from this seruile state, was a necessarie point of true nobilitie.

How he bestowed his youthfull yeares.

The bishops report of him vpon his own knowledge.

The erle perfect in the scriptures and matters of religion.

He was a fauourer of preachers.

His expertnesse in chronicles, histories, &c.

He therefore in his time had diligentlie trauelled in the scriptures, and so furnished himselfe with principles of christian religion, that he was able readilie to discerne sermons and disputations, and to find out who had veritie on their side: and also probablie to speake with authoritie of scripture in matters of controuersie. His vnderstanding by the especiall worke of the holie ghost was so illumined, that he claue & drew to true christian religion, as the adamant stone cleaueth and draweth to steele. His lordship therefore furthered and fauoured all preachers of Gods word, so that whosoeuer will iudge of the successe of Christs religion by humane reason, must confesse that the gospell hath lost a mightie protector, and an earnest defender. But God in setting out of his word, vseth to worke beside the expectation of man, and beyond the reach of reason. I haue yet further to speake of his lordship, that I beleeue there be verie few noble men in England, more readie and expert in chronicles, histories, genealogies, and pedegrees of noble men, and noble houses, not onlie within the realme, but also in forren realmes, than this noble earle was in his time. He excelled in describing and blasing of armes, and in all skill perteining thereto: and to be short, his vnderstanding and capacitie was so liuelie and effectuall, that it reached to all kind of matters that a perfect nobleman shall haue to deale withall in this world.

Fortitude a noble vertue wherewith this earle was indued.

Fortitude is another fountaine from whense nobilitie floweth, of Cicero In Tusculanis quæstionibus thus defined: Est affectio animi qua grauia patiendo legibus obtemperatur: It is an affection of the mind whereby to satisfie the lawes a man is content to suffer hardnesse; he meaneth mans lawes, and not Gods law. It seemeth therefore that it may be thus more euidentlie and fullie defined: Fortitude is an affection of the mind, wherby a man is made hardie and couragious to suffer difficulties and dangers, auoiding on the one side rashnesse, & expelling on the other side feare, to performe that which Gods law and honestie prescribeth and commandeth. Although by this definition we find, that the effect of fortitude resteth much in banishing of feare of bodilie hurts: yet doth it agree verie well with the feare of God. Iethro therefore counselling Moses to chose men to gouerne vnder him, saith; Prospice viros fortes, timentes Deum; Seeke out men indued with fortitude, fearing God, &c. Whereby we perceiue, that fortitude and the feare of God varie not, but are linked togither. Deepe was the sound of nobilitie that this valiant earle had fetched out of this fountaine. For in this togither with the well of prudence, he found that excellent knowledge of chiualrie, the cunning to lead an armie, to guide and to rule soldiors, that experience of stratagems & warlike policies, that notable magnanimitie and inuincible courage, whereby he indured and ouercame so manie dangers and perils, for the which he is renowmed in England and Ireland, and shall neuer be forgotten. He was by nature the sonne of Mars; and by practising feats of war and exercise aforehand he had made himselfe in manner a perfect warrior, afore that euer he came to the wars; and was for prowesse, magnanimitie, and high corage to be compared to the old Romane capteins, that be so much in stories commended. This fortitude is no lesse necessarie for nobilitie in time of peace than in time of warr. For it belongeth vnto them to minister iustice betwixt partie and partie, without respect of persons, which cannot be performed without the assistance of this vertue. I haue good cause to thinke of this noble earle, that there was no subiect in England, that could feare or corrupt him from executing of iustice. He was to the proud and arrogant a lion, and to the meeke and humble a lambe, neither is there anie contrarietie in this: for true nobilitie discerneth a due and conuenient time and place to vse both the one and the other.

The earles chiualrie, martiall knowledge and prowesse aduanced.

Fortitude needfull both in time of peace and warre.

Exod. 28, 21

Iustice is the third well of nobilitie, it is a constant and a perpetuall will to giue euerie man his owne. This is a diuine vertue, pretious, and commendable in all men, and especiallie in the nobilitie, who by reason of authoritie may do iniurie without remedie for the same. We see by experience that great is the number of them that would oppresse, if they had authoritie: we see also the iniuries that are done dailie by them that haue colour of authoritie, be it neuer so simple. But examine the life of this earle who will, and I beleeue there is no man liuing that can iustlie complaine of anie iniurie or wrong done by him. I once in my time heard him not a little offended with one of his men that was complained vpon; saieng that his seruant could do him no greater dishonor, than by pretense of his authoritie to do anie poore man wrong. Iob in the time of his authoritie & wealth, was commended to be a iust & a righteous man. And in the explication of part of that iustice Iob hath these words, Fui oculus cæco, vice pedum claudo, &c: I was the eies to the blind, and I was the feet to the lame, I was a father to the poore, and when I knew not the cause I sought it out diligentlie, I brake the chawes of the vnrighteous man, and plucked the preie out of his teeth. Here we find that who soeuer will do iustice, must not onelie do no wrong, but must also with all his might, succour and comfort the helpless and oppressed. In this part of iustice there was neuer noble man more forward than this good earle. He was the comfortable refuge of all such as were in aduersitie, or oppressed by power.

Iustice a noble vertue, wherwith this erle was indued.

The bishop reporteth of the earles iustice vpon his owne knowledge.

Iob. 29, 15.

Of Titus Vespasianus emperor of Rome we read, that he answered one of his frends, admonishing him to hold his hands, and not to make his liberalitie and gentlenesse common to all men, saieng; that it becommeth not a prince to let anie man part from

The paterne of a good earle indeed.

Suetonius.

from him with a heauie hart. This worthie erle was of like mind: for he was so full of humanitie and compassion, that he would be loth to let anie distressed part from him without some comfort and ease. In so much that in him (if euer in anie man) this adage, Homo homini Deus, A man a god to man, was as truelie performed, as in tyrants the contrarie adage, that is, Homo homini lupus, A man a woolfe to man. We read in chronicles of emperors, kings, & noble men, which for their bountifulnesse, gentlenesse, affabilitie, and goodnesse, deserued some honorable addition to their names; as amongst the emperors Antoninus pius, Anthonie the vertuous; amongst the British kings, Eliodorus pius, Eliodor the godlie; and amongst noble men, in the time of king Richard the second, sir Thomas Montacute the good earle of Salisburie; and in the time of king Henrie the first, sir Thomas Beuchampe the good earle of Warwike. This noble earle for the verie like qualities hath trulie deserued to be called, the good earle, the vertuous earle, and the valiant earle of Esser.

The humanitie, courtesie, affablenesse, and other vertues of this erle.

Temperance is the founteine of nobilitie; it is a vertue whereby a man obserueth a moderation, & a reasonable meane in the vse of all things perteining to bodie & mind: it is the mother of all other vertues, without which, the rest are blemished and disgraced. In the Dutch chronicles that tell of the liues of emperors, the first qualitie that is noted, is temperat, or not temperat, as an argument of the rest of his life and doings: for he is thought vnworthie to rule others that can not rule himselfe. This noble earle had a speciall grace, and an excellent gift of God in obseruation of this vertue, whether you respect diet, or the suppression of all vicious affections. I haue diuerse times noted in him, when vnderstanding was brought vnto him of some thrasonicall contumelious word, spoken by some glorious inferior aduersarie against him, he would neuer be stirred to anie perturbation of mind thereby, but with graue wisedome and magnanimitie contemne it and smile, deriding the vanitie and waiwardnesse of that cankered stomach that vomited such sowre rotten infection: for he did effectuallie consider that it became no better a noble hart to take in & receiue wranglings, brallings, chasings, and anger, than it is conuenient to dawbe a golden piller with mire and claie. Salomon was of that mind, and therefore saith; Be not thou hastie to be angrie, for anger resteth in the bosome of fooles. I haue had occasion by that I noted in his lordship to call to remembrance this saieng of Christ; A good man out of the good treasure of his hart bringeth forth good things: & the euill man out of the euill treasure of his hart bringeth forth euill things. For though occasion were ministred, yet should you neuer heare him vtter anie opprobrious words, no not against his aduersarie, so pure & immaculate did he studie to preserue the nobilitie of his mind. There be some that count themselues worthie honor & estimation, when they teare God in peeces with chasing and horrible oths: which this noble earle detested and abhorred, as a matter not onelie vndecent, but also repugnant to the nature of true nobilitie, attributing due reuerence to the name of the Lord, & thereby prouing the founteins of his nobilitie to spring out of the hill of the feare of God.

Temperance, a noble vertue wherewith this erle was indued.

Ecclesi. 7. 9.

Luke 6. 45.

The earle could not awaie with swearing, chasing, nor anie disordered dealing, &c.

But what was his religion, what faith God had blessed him withall, what godlie disposition he was of, and how abundantlie God had inriched him with his holie spirit; the confession of his faith, his speeches, naie rather his sermons in his sickenesse afore his death shall testifie for euer. For I receiued by the relation of such as are worthie credit, and were present about him, although not all, yet manie of his learned godlie saiengs at that time. Concerning his saluation, he reposed his affiance and sure trust in the bloud of Jesus Christ. He forgaue all the world, and by inuincible faith apprehended, laied hold, and imbraced remission of his sinnes, in the merits of the sacrifice of Christs bodie offered vpon the crosse for the sinnes of the world. Trentals, masses, diriges, pardons, and such other papisticall trifles he vtterlie contemned, as wicked and blasphemous against the death and passion of Christ. He fared like the children of Israell in the wildernesse, which when they were stinged with serpents euen to death: yet when they lookt vp to the brasen serpent, they were made whole, safe, and sound. So this noble earle grieued with the remembrance of his former vnthankefull life (as he iudged) immediatlie directed the eies of his mind to the passion of Christ, and forthwith felt such health of soule, that he was filled with ioie in the holie Ghost, and all his delight was in meditation of the ioie of the world to come, and the fruition of the presence of God for euer: insomuch that fiue or six daies before he died, he shewed himselfe more like an angell from heauen, than a man compassed with flesh and bloud.

The bishops report of the earle vpon his owne knowledge.

Numb. 21. 9.

The heauenlie contemplation of this earle drawing to his end.

My lord the archbishop of Dublin (as I was informed) could moue him in no question or article perteining to saluation, that he was not readie in, and learnedlie, and godlie resolued: yea, and made such answers in all things, that my lord of Dublin had them in great admiration, and affirmed that his speeches at that time should serue him for sermons as long as he liued. How trulie he relinquished the vanities of this world, and how effectuallie he thirsted after the ioies of the life to come, his godlie admonitions ministred vnto such as visited him, and his heauenlie lessons & exhortations to his seruants, shall testifie for euer: for they were such that his seruants report they shall neuer forget, and such as they shall be the better for whilest they liue. Thus haue I briefle and partlie declared vnto you, both the life and death of this worthie magistrate, to the end we should consider how seriouslie God doth call vs to a reckoning by the losse of such a good magistrat. Now a word or two to shew who they be that die in the Lord, and then an end. They principallie are said to die in the Lord, which suffer death vnder the beast, for confession of Christs religion, for they properlie die in the Lords cause. Such are the martyrs, as well of the primitiue church vnder the cruell emperours, as the martyrs of all ages since vnder antichrist of Rome. They also die in the Lord, which though they die not by the crueltie of the beast, yet they die in the faith of Jesus Christ, and are therefore blessed.

A wonderfull gift of the holie Ghost and most worthie to be chronicled.

How his seruants were affected at his last speeches.

Who they be that die in the Lord.

Of this number was this godlie earle, as I haue before declared. Wherfore I will conclude and direct my speech for two or three words to this good earle. O noble earle of Esser, in thy time the pearle of nobilitie: the mirrour of vertue and worthie qualities: the child of chiualrie: the beautifull floure of England: the pretious iewell and comfort of Wales: the trustie staie of Ireland. Thy life was most honourable: thy worthinesse incomparable: thy death pretious in the sight of God: for thou diedst in the Lord a right inheritour of the euerlasting kingdome of heauen. Wherefore by authoritie of the heauenlie oracle that saint John was commanded to write, thou art to be pronounced blessed for euer. Our sins haue shortened thy life, so that we could inioie the same no longer. Thou hast notwithstanding bequeathed thy bodie to be buried amongst vs here in Wales. Of verie dutie therefore O noble earle, thy tombe shall be with vs in reuerence, estimation, and honor; the fame and name of thy nobilitie, valiantnesse, vertue, and worthinesse shall neuer be forgotten; but shall liue and be kept with vs in memorie from generation to generation while the world standeth. Thus far the words

A speech conclusorie of the bishop directed to the earle departed.

The earle eternallie blessed.

The disposition and deuotion of this earle in the time of his sickenesse.

of

of the bishop vttered in a sermon preached in the eares of no meane audience, either for reputation or number. Now then briefly considering wherein true and perfect nobleness consisteth, & that the heroicall vertues with their naturall vse were most firmelie fixed in his heart, and practised by his hand: there is great reason to moue euen his enimies (if it were possible for so good a gentleman to haue anie) to confesse in him most absolute nobilitie; and that this epitaph alluding to his right honorable ensignes, is deseruedlie to be recorded; being an abstract of that notable epitaph intituled Epitapium genealogicum in obitum illustrissimi Gualteri comitis Essexiæ, & Euiæ, & comitis marischalli regni Hiberniæ, vicecomitis Hereford & Bourghcher, domini Ferrers de Chartleie Bourgcher & Louein, & prænobilis ordinis garterij militis, qui obijt Dublinij 21. Septemb. 1576. ætatis suæ 36 sepulti apud Maridunum 26. Nouemb. &c.

Si quisquam claret veterum splendore parentum,
Aut famam meritis morum probitate perennem,
Profiteatur in his nomen Essexius heros:
Qui præclara virûm gestat monumenta tot vnus,
Quot rarò licuit multis gestamina ferre,
Qui intrepidè ob patriam tot mille pericula passus,
Quot raro poterint vlla aulica corpora ferre.
*Aureolus partus matris, patriæ decus ingens,
Quo non exultat moderante Herefordia sola,
Aut Trinobantum, titulo probitatis honorem
Plebs referens: strenuum validúmue Britannia sola
Sensit, in aduersos Boreales, dum bene gessit:
Tota sed heroem cognouit marte feroci
Eugeniæ tellus Hibernica bella probantem.
Regia cum proprijs expendens, bella per annos,
Dura gerit binos, & multa pericula tentans,
Vltoniæ fines vultu dextráque quieti
Perficit, hinc comitis donatur nomine belli:
Nec tamen is potuit gladio finire labores.
Mors nemini parcens Dublinia funera fletu
Trans mare transuexit, Maridunica sydera voluens,
Clotho colum tenuit post septem lustra per annum,
Quinque dies Lachesis post hæc sua fila trahebat,
Terque dies septem septeno mense, videns hen
Atropos, eximy fulgentia lumina clausit:
Quatuor at pueris illustria stamina spondent.
In tribus regnis titulos gestabat honoris,
Nam comitem Euensem cognouit Gallia fortem,
Aurens heroem demonstrat circulus Essex,
Ob bella vires comes est is martis Hibernus.
Nobilitas innata tibi probitatis honorem,
(Armipotens Gualtere) dedit probitásque laborem,
Perpetuámque labor vitam, sic vita salutem.

*Nempe Dorothee filiæ Georgij comitis Huntingtoni: marito suo Richardo Deuereux patre viuente animam exhalante.

This epitaph with the said earles whole genealogie or pedegree compriſed in heroicall verſe, and ioined with the funerall ſermon, was preſented to the right honourable lord Robert now earle of Eſſex and Ew, vicount of Hereford and Bourchier, lord Ferrers of Chartleie Bourchier & Louaine, at ſuch time as he was the quéenes maieſties ward; with an epiſtle of the preſenter: which bicauſe it is a veine of godlie deuiſe, & tending to a verie honorable purpoſe, deſerueth here to be placed, anſwering the preſident heretofore ſet out in print, as followeth.

The epiſtle of E. W. prefixed before the genealogicall epitaph, and funerall ſermon publiſhed at the interring of the right honourable the lord Walter earle of Eſſex, &c.

MY lord, your abſence latelie from the funerals of my lord your father, was lamented by ſuch in Wales as would gladlie haue beheld the liuelie image of him in you; and if the tender neſſe of your yeares (rimeet for ſo tedious and ſo vnſeaſonable trauell) had not by neceſſitie diſappointed their hope, then ſhould the lamentable ſpech of the graue and reuerend father, the biſhop of ſaint Dauies (expreſſed with abundance of dolour & tears) haue left in you a deepe impreſſion of griefe for the intollerable loſſe of ſo honourable a parent. But it maie be iudged that God hath turned your abſence to your more benefit; ſith the importunacie of ſuch as loue & honour you, and who couet to haue your fathers vertues deſcend with his inheritance, hath obteined the publiſhing of that learned ſermon: wherin you maie at good leaſure view in the iuſt report of his life & death the paterne & forme of true nobilitie.

The death of the earle muſt lamented.

The heroicall deſcription of true nobilitie.

The heroicall deſcription that the biſhop maketh of nobilitie, comparing it vnto a mounteine, from which foure famous riuers muſt iſſue (the mounteine true religion, the riuers, prudence, iuſtice, fortitude, and temperance) is a rule to you: firſt to follow your father in truth of religion, then to be as he was, wiſe, iuſt, valiant, and temperat. The naturall and vnforced courteſie & affabilitie that was in your father, and that excellent mixture of diſpoſition and aptneſſe, both for warre and peace, doth promiſe to the world a ſingular perfection in you hereafter. For as your grandfather (who died in his yong yeares) did make ſhew of much more honour than was in the noble vicount his father: and this our earle by famous actions did altogither eclipſe the vertuous hope conceiued of your grandfather: ſo conſidering that God in nature continueth as it were the race by outward ſhew of good parts in you, and that you haue more aduantage of education, both by the place where you liue, and by the honour and wiſedome of your patrons than your grandfather or father had; we can not but hope of a further degree of excellencie in you to ouerſhine the goodneſſe both of your father and grandfather.

A perſuaſorie reaſon to moue the yong earle now liuing to an excellent imitation of his anceſtors.

Some people there be that can hardlie diſcerne betweene honour & profit, that do ouermuch thinke of the diſaduantage offered you by the earle your father, in diminiſhing ſome part of his patrimonie in his forren ſeruices; and will wiſh you perhaps with a contrarie courſe to deſerue more of your heire, and worſe of the world. But as I wiſh in you a liberall frugalitie vnder this rule and proteſtation, that nothing can be profitable that is not honeſt: ſo to deſerue well (as your father did) of your ſouereigne and countrie in matters apperteining to his maieſties obedience, rather throw the helue after the hatchet, and leaue your ruines to be repared by your prince, than anie thing to degenerat from honourable liberalitie. And as in attempting great things, it is good to be circumſpect, and with iudgment wiſelie to foreſee the end before you begin: ſo hauing entered into anie honourable attempt that maie be iuſtlie grounded vpon reaſon, follow the ſame with ſuch inuincible conſtancie in all extremities as your father did, for ſo ſhall you iuſtlie deſerue like teſtimonie as his maieſtie gaue to him in his gratious letters: namelie, that he was a rare iewell of his realme, and an ornament of his nobilitie.

Notable counſell to the earle to deſerue well of his ſouereigne and countrie.

The quéenes teſtimonie of the earle.

True religion and wiſedome (vpon whome iuſtice dependeth) do proceed from God by grace, and therefore by inuocation, praier, and ſtudie to be obteined: but the other vertues, as fortitude, temperance, courteſie, affabilitie, liberalitie and conſtancie, be peculiar to your houſe, deſcending by nature, and grafted as it were in your principles. So that to degenerat into the lothſome contraries of theſe, & in ſtead of the habit of vertue, to diſguiſe your ſelfe with vice, ſhall be harder to you, and more impoſſible for the contrarietie of your nature, than to atteine to good things to the perfection of excellencie. And to the end that you Vertues naturallie incident to the erle by courſe of deſcent.

you may know what you are by birth and bloud, and that you should not by ignorance or lacke of knowledge of your selfe, doo anie thing unworthie the noble houses from whense you are descended: a wellwiller of yours hath joined to this sermon (amongst other epitaphs conteining your fathers due praises) his statelie descent in well digested Latine verses: not to puffe you up with anie swelling vanities, but to giue you a reason how you beare your armour and badges of honour, and to remember you what errour you enter into, if you should blemish the vertues of your noble ancestours, or to doo anie thing (as I said) unworthie your birth and calling.

To what end the epitaph genealogicall was added to the funerall sermon.

Lastlie my lord, haue alwaies before your eies the feare of God, and the counsell of the earle your father at his death: namelie, that you should euer be mindfull of the moment of time, assigned both to your father and grandfather, the eldest hauing attained but to six and thirtie yeares, to the end that upon consideration of the short course of life that you in nature are to loke for, you might so implote your tender yeares in vertuous studies and exercises, as you might in the prime of your youth become a man well accomplished to serue hir maiestie and your countrie, as well in warre as peace: whereunto he commanded you to bend all your indeuours, & with those conditions heaped his blessings upon you. I praie therefore that God will increase those conditionall blessings, and the causes of them in you, to the end that hir maiestie may thinke of you hereafter as of a true seruant and humble subiect, one of the pillers of hir estate, hir maiesties kinsman by manie aliances, and the sonne of a most noble father.

The old earls counsell at his death to the yoong earle now aliue touching the shortnesse of life.

Your L. at commandement E.W.

Thus much concerning the two earles, the father departed, and the sonne surviuing, of whose procéeding in the steps of his father, there is no doubt but within few yeares the world shall haue iust cause (as there is present hope) to beare witnesse: whome in all his attempts we will leaue to such fortunat successe, as God the giuer thereof shall vouchsafe to prouide and afford.]

The tenth of Nouember a proclamation was published for the free traffike of merchants to be restored as had béen accustomed in times past betwixt the kingdoms and countries of the quénes maiestie of England and the king of Portingall, which traffike had been discontinued by reson of certeine staies and arrests made of diuerse subiects on both parts, with their goods & ships. But now it was accorded in name of both their maiesties, that all maner of both their subiects of what kingdome or countrie so euer they be, from the fiftéenth of the said moneth, might vse the like mutuall traffike for merchandizes, and in the same places: that is to saie, hir maiesties subiects in the kingdomes of Portingale & Algarbia, and in the Iles of Medera and Azore: and likewise the subiects of the king of Portingale in England and Ireland, as they were lawfullie accustomed before the said arrests. This restitution of the said traffike to remaine from the said fiftéenth date of Nouember in this yeare one thousand, fiue hundred, seauentie and six, during the space of three yeares next insuing. At the end of which terme, if by the said princes in the meane time it be not otherwise prouided for continuance of the said traffike to indure perpetuallie, no new arrests shall be made of anie things brought into the kingdoms and Iles aforesaid, of either of the said princes during the time of the said three yeares. It was further agréed by the said princes for the more sure preseruation of the amitie and friendship betwixt them, their said realmes and subiects, that neither of them shall receiue anie pirat or rouer into anie of the ports or créeks of either of their realmes, dominions, and countries, which may or shall haue committed anie piracie or robberie upon either of their subiects, nor shall shew anie fauour, giue anie aid or succor, or suffer anie to be giuen directlie or indirectlie to the said rouers or pirats. Neither shall they during the time of the said amitie, in either of their kingdoms, or anie place of their dominions, fauour, interteine, receiue or reteine, nor suffer to be fauoured, interteined, receiued, or reteined by anie of their subiects, anie rebels, traitors, or fugitiues, subiects to either of them.

A proclamation for the free traffike of merchants as before, &c.

Thus farre haue I continued this collection of the English histories, noting breefelie in these later yeares, such things as I find in the abridgement of Richard Grafton, and in the summarie of Iohn Stow, increased somewhat (as may appeare) in places with such helpes as haue come to my hand; humblie beseeching the reader to accept the same in good part, and to pardon me where I haue not satisfied his expectation: sith heerein I must confesse, I haue nothing contented my selfe, but yet at the request of others haue doone what I could & not what I would, for want of conference with such as might haue furnished me with more large instructions, such as had beene necessarie for the purpose.

THE CHRONICLES OF England, from the yeare of our Lord 1576, where Raphaell Holinshed left; supplied and continued to this present yeare 1586: by Iohn Stow, and others.

A Disciple of Socrates, by name Aristippus, a man suerlie of a verie sharpe iudgement and pleasant wit, when he was demanded what profit he tooke by the studie of wisedome, made this answer: Forsooth this profit, that with all sorts of men I can frankelie and boldlie speake. Which answer might well be of that mans making; bicause he bare a mind indifferentlie free, as well from hope as feare: for he serued no man, nor yet flattered anie person, nor otherwise behaued himselfe than his hart gaue him. Of the same mind it were to be wished that all storie-writers were: for then should Chronicles approch next in truth to the sacred and inuiolable scripture, and their vse not onelie growe more common, but also of greater account. And right good reason whie. For therein is conteined the rich and pretious treasure of time, the wisest counsellor vnder the cope of heauen. And that saw Thales the philosopher well inough, who being asked what of all was the eldest? answered, God: what of all the faireſt? the world: what of all the greateſt? place: what of all the swifteſt? the mind: what of all the strongest? necessitie: and what of all the wisest? time. Time in Greeke is called χρόνος, whereof the word Chronicles ariseth, termed τὰ χρόνικα, that is, obseruations of time: so that if nothing in wisedome dooth excell time, then who can but wax wise by reading and perusing the obseruations of time, which are meerelie & simplie Chronicles? Chroniclers therefore deserue a reuerence of dutie, whome time hath called and culled out as it were by the hand, to vse their ministerie and seruice for the disposing and distributing of the riches of his wisedome to all ages, that successors may be taught by their predecessors, wit by their follie, fealtie by their disloialtie, obedience by their rebellion, vnitie and peace by their dissention, plainnesse by their doublenesse, sobrietie by their vntemperance, courtesie by their churlishnesse, pitie by their vncharitablenesse; finallie all goodnesse by their badnesse; for the which (as we may see by a sea of examples in this booke) sith they were greeuouslie punished, it is our gaine by their smart to be admonished.

For ſurelie heerein ſtandeth a ſpeciall vſe of chronicles, that whileſt ſome offending againſt the lawes of God, of nature, and of nations, doo draw vnto themſelues deſerued vengeance: others by loue allured, or by feare inforced, ſeeing their rufull fals, and auoiding the meanes, may happilie eſcape the paine. This frute hitherto hath this hiſtorie of chronicles affoorded, no leſſe heereafter by the continuation following is like to be performed; beſides manifold matters of recreation, policie, aduentures, chiualrie, &c: abundantlie miniſtred; and all vnder the golden reigne of bleſſed queene Eliſabeth, the ſweet floure of amiable virginitie:

Cui vitam, ſtudiúmque Deus, regníque coronam
Perpetuet, beet, & tranquillo proſperet vſu:
Pôſtque hanc exactam vitam, ſtudium atque coronam,
Cœleſti vita, ſtudio, diademate donet.

A. F.

THE CONTINVATION of the chronicles of England from the yeare of our Lord 1576, to this present yeare 1586, &c.

I. Stow. In vnnaturall brother murthereth his naturall brother, but the vnnaturall brother was hanged as he well deserued.

HE tenth day of Nouember, in the citie of worcester, a cruell & vnnatural brother (as an other Cain) murdered his owne naturall & louing brother, first smiting his braines out of his head with an ax, and after cutting his throte to make him sure, and then buried him vnder the hearth of a chimnete, thinking thereby (though wrongfullie) quietlie to haue inioied his brothers goods long before in his possession: but not long after this secret murder comming to light, the murderer was rewarded according to his deserts, and to the terror of such vnnaturall murdering brethren. The seuententh of March, through a strange tempest which hapned in the North, nere to a towne called Richmond, not onelie cotages, trées, barnes and haiestakes, but also the most part of the church called Patrike Brumton was ouerthrowen, with most strange sights in the aire, both fearefull and terrible.

Anno Reg. 19.

Tempest in Richmondshire.

1577

In the moneth of Aprill, the decaied stone house called the tower vpon London bridge was begun to be taken downe, and the heads of traitors that were wont there on poles to be fired, were remoued thense, and set on the gate at the bridge fot toward Southwarke. The seuentéenth daie of Maie, Richard Robinson goldsmith was drawne from the tower of London to Tiburne, and there hanged for clipping of gold. The one and thirtith daie of Maie, Martin Frobisher with one ship and two barks furnished for that purpose, sailed from Harwich in Esser towards Catata by the northwest seas, and entered the streicts beyond quéne Elizabeths foreland, about thirtie leagues, where he went on shore, and finding store of the blacke stone, which the goldfiners had said to hold gold, and therefore called the same gold ore, he straught his ship & barke, caught a man, a woman, and a child of that countrie, and then on the foure and twentith of August returning from thense, arriued at Milford hauen in Wales on the twentith of September next following.

Tower on Londō bridge taken downe.

Robinson hanged for clipping of gold.

Second voiage to Catata.

Strāge sickenesse at Oxford.

The fourth, fift, and first daie of Julie, the assises being holden at Oxford, there was arreigned and condemned one Rowland Jenkes, for his seditious tong, at which time there arose amidst the people such a dampe that almost all were smouldered, verie few escaping that were not taken at that instant: the iurors died presentlie, shortlie after died sir Robert Bell lord chiefe baron, sir Robert de Olie, sir William Babington, master Wineman, master de Olie high shiriffe, master Dauers, master Harecombe, master Kirle, master Phetipace, master Grænewod, master Foster, master Nash, sergeant Baram, master Stephans, &c. There died in the towne of Oxford three hundred persons, and sickened there, but died in other places two hundred and od, from the first of Julie to the twelfe of August, after which daie died not one of that sickenesse, for one of them infected not an other, nor anie one woman or child died thereof.

¶ Of this sickenesse there passed a report in print, published vnder the name of W. B. who (as he saith himselfe) was present with sir William Babington, and therefore was able, and did (as he thought good) set downe the certeintie of that heaute accident, for the satisfaction of such friends of his as desired to know the vndoubted truth. And the same W. B. setting downe the opinion, that diuerse conceiued of this venemous maladie, saith that some supposed it to be of two sorts; howbeit (saith he) it is not so. For those that bled till they died, strooe so much with their sickenesse, that the bloud issued out at their vents: but yet had perfect memorie, euen to the yéelding of their breath, as was verie well perceiued by sir William Babington, who neuer ceased to call vpon God in his great agonie, &c. This reported W. B. as a certeine truth, to stop the fleeng rumors of those that (as he saith) haue spoken vntrulie in this behalfe, and published their owne fantasies.]

Ab. Fl. ex relatu W. B. impress. 1577.

Tempest in Suffolke.

On sundaie the fourth of August, betwéene the houres of nine and ten of the clocke in the forenone, whilest the minister was reading of the second lesson in the parish church of Blibrough a towne in Suffolke, a strange and terrible tempest of lightening and thunder strake thorough the wall of the same church into the ground almost a yard déepe, draue downe all the people on that side aboue twentie persons, then renting the wall vp to the reuestre, cleft the doore, and returning to the steeple, rent the timber, brake the chimes, & fled toward Bongie a towne fiue miles off. The people that were striken downe were found groueling more than halfe an houre after, whereof one man more than fortie yeares and a boie of fiftéene yeares old were found starke dead: the

the other were scorched. The same or the like flash of lightening and cracks of thunder rent the parish church of Wongie, nine miles from Norwich, wrong in sunder the wiers and wheeles of the clocks, slue two men which sat in the belfreie, when the other were at the procession or suffrages, and scorched an other which hardlie escaped. The tower on London bridge being taken downe, and a new foundation drawne, sir John Langleie lord maior of the citie of London laid the first stone on the eight and twentith daie of August, in the presence of the shirifes of London & the two bridgemasters, which new tower was finished in the moneth of September, Anno 1579.

The tower on London bridge new builded.

The thirtith daie of November, Cutbert Maine was drawne, hanged, and quartered at Lancestion in Cornewall for preferring Romane power. The seuentéenth of Januarie, one Simon Penbroke dwelling in saint Georges parish in Southwarke, being a figureflinger, and vehementlie suspected to be a conjurer, by commandement of the ordinarie iudge for those parties, appeared in the parish church of saint Saniors in Southwarke, at a court holden there. Which Simon being busied in interteining a proctor, and hauing monie in his hand, leaned his head vpon a pew wherein the proctor stood: which after he had done a certeine space, the proctor began to lift vp his head to see what he ailed, and found him departing out of life, and streightwaie the said Simon fell downe, ratling a little in the throte, and neuer spake word after. This was done euen as the iudge came into the church, who said it was the iust iudgement of God towards those that vsed sorcerie, and a great example to admonish other to feare the iustice of God. After, his clothes being opened, there were found about him fiue diuelish bookes of conjuration, and most abhominable practises, with a picture of tin of a man, hauing three dice in his hand with this poesie: Chance dice fortunatlie; & diuerse papers of such like matters, as he had dealt in for men, such men I meane as are mentioned in Leuiticus the twentith chapter and first verse: If anie soule turne himselfe after such as worke with spirits, and after soothsaiers, to go a whoring after them (saith the Lord) I will put my face against that soule, and will cut him off from among my people.

Anno Reg. 20. Cutbert Maine executed.

An example of sorcerers, and such as seeme to worke wonders to deceiue men of their monie.

The third daie of Februarie, John Nelson for deuising the quéenes supremasie, and such other traitorous words against hir maiestie, was drawne from Newgate to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. And on the seuenth of the same moneth of Februarie, Thomas Sherewin was likewise drawne from the tower of London to Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered for the like offense. The fiue and twentith of Februarie, John de Loy a Frenchman, and fiue English gentlemen, was conueied from the tower of London towards Norwich, there to be arreigned and executed for coining of monie counterfeit. And on the ninth of March, seuen pirats were hanged at Wapping in the ouze beside London.

Nelson and Sherewod executed.

Counterfetters of coine executed.

Pirats hanged.

1578

The ladie Margaret countesse of Lennor deceased on the tenth of March, at hir house in the parish of Hackneie besides London, and was buried at Westminster on the third of Aprill. The one and thirtith and last of Maie, Martine Frobisher with fiftéene saile of good ships, manned, vittelled, and otherwise well appointed, departed from Harwich in Esser on his third voiage towards Catala. And on the one and thirtith and last daie of Julie, after manie attempts, and sundrie times being put backe by Ilands of ice in the streicts, he recouered his long wished port, and came to anchor in the Ilands, newlie by hir maiestie named Meta incognita, where (as in the yeare before) they straught their ships with the like stone or gold ore out of the mines; and then on the last of August returning thense, arriued safelie in England about the first of October.

Frobishers third voiage.

The two and twentith of Januarie being thursdaie, about seuen of the clocke at night, John Casimere countie palatine of Rhene, duke of Bauare, landing at the tower of London, was there by diuerse noble men and others honourablie receiued, and conueied by cresset light and torch light to sir Thomas Greshams house in Bishops gate street, where he was receiued with sounding of trumpets, drums, fiefs, and other instruments of musicke, and there both lodged and feasted till sundaie next, that he was by the nobilitie fetched and conueied to the court at Westminster, where after he had talked with hir maiestie, he returned vnto Summersets house at the Strand, and was there lodged. In the weeke following he hunted at Hampton court. On sundaie the first of Februarie he beheld a valiant fulking and running at the tilt at Westminster. On the next morrow in the same place he saw them fight at barriers with swords on horsse backe. On tuesdaie he dined with the lord maior of London; on wednesdaie with the dutchesse of Suffolke, at hir house called the Barbican in Red crosse street; on thursdaie at the Stilliard, &c. On sundaie the eight of Februarie, the quéene made him knight of the garter, by deliuering to him the collar, & putting the garter on his leg at White hall. And on the fourteenth of Februarie, he departed from London to Rochester homewards, with great rewards giuen to him by the quénes maiestie, the nobilitie, men of honour, the lord maior of London, and other citizens of that citie.

Anno Reg. 21. The receiuing of Casimere.

The same moneth of Februarie; to wit, on the fourth daie, and in the night next following, fell such abundance of snow, that on the fift daie in the morning, the same snow was found in London to lie two foot déepe in the shallowest, and otherwise being driuen by the wind, verie boisterous in the northeast on banks one ell or a yard & a half déepe. In the which drifts of snow, farre déeper in the countrie, manie cattell, and some men and women were ouerthelmed and lost. It snowed till the eight daie of that moneth, and frised till the tenth, and then followed a thaw with continuall raine a long time after, which caused such high waters, and great flouds, that the marishes and low grounds being drowned for the time, and the water of the Thames rose so high into Westminster hall, that after the fall thereof, some fishes were found to remaine in the said hall.

1579 Déepe snow.

Great land waters.

The seuentéenth of Februarie, an Irishman for murdering of a man in a garden of Stepenheth parish, was hanged in chaines on the common called Mile end gréene. This common was sometimes, yea in the memorie of men yet liuing, a large mile long (from White chapell to Stepenheth church) and therefore called Mile end gréene, but now at this present, by grédie (and as séemeth to me vnlawfull) inclosures, and building of houses, notwithstanding hir maiesties proclamation to the contrarie, it remaineth scarse halfe a mile in length. The twentith daie of Februarie deceased sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seale of England, who was honourablie buried vnder a sumptuous monument or tome (by him in his life time erected) in S. Pauls church of London, on the ninth daie of March. This sir Nicholas Bacon in his life time gaue for sir scholers, to be found in Bennets college in Cambridge, to each of them three pounds six shillings and eight pence the yeare for euer.

A murtherer hanged on Mile end gréene.

Lord keeper deceased.

¶ The said sir Nicholas Bacons tome aforesaid, bearing

Ab. Fl. collect ex epitaph dicti prænobilis.

ing certeine representations of his wiues and children in imagerie worke, is adorned with a notable epitaph, wherein is pithilie described the meanes whereby he grew to be noble, as also immortall. The same being conteined in these verses following, and iustifiable by the verie epitaph, whereof this is a true transcription, great pitie but it shuld be perpetuall.

On the south side these verses.

Hic Nicolaum ne Baconum conditum
Existima illum, tam diu Britannici
Regni secundum columen; exitium malis,
Bonis asylum; cæca quem non extulit
Ad hunc honorem sors; sed æquitas, fides,
Doctrina, pietas, vnica & prudentia.
Non morte raptum crede, qui vnica
Vita perennes emerit duas: agit
Vitam secundam cœlites inter animus,
Fama implet orbem, vita quæ illi tertia est:
Hac positum in ara est corpus olim animi domus,
Ara dicata sempiternæ memoriæ.]

On the north side these.

Great snow in the moneth of Aprill.

This yeare in the moneth of Aprill, to wit on the foure and twentith date, fell such a snow betweene the hours of foure of the clocke in the morning, nine of the clocke before none of the same date, that in London the same snow was found to lie one foot deepe.

Sir Thomas Bromleie lord chancellor.

The 25 date of Aprill, sir Thomas Bromleie knight was made lord chancellor of England.

The chancellors of England, collected out of sundrie ancient histories.

The collection of Francis Thin.

THe creation of this sir Thomas Bromleie lord chancellor, hath occasioned me to treate of the chancellors of England, a matter which I haue beene the willinger to set downe, because I would minister cause to others (who haue long wanted of their cunning in this matter) to impart to the world some of their great knowledge herein, to the benefit of their countrie. But since I doubt that they will not accept this in good part till that come. And as I may, & perhaps dow (in this) somewhat more largelie (than in the iudgement of others shall seeme answerable to the most received opinion, touching the chancellors) treat of the antiquitie of them; so yet I haue no mind to erre, or to leade anie other into error. Wherefore, if things be not in perfection vpon this first rough hewing (as nothing is at the first so exquisit, as time doth not after amend it) yet disdaine it not, sith this may giue more light than before was knowen. And I determine God willing, either to amend, or to confesse and auoid in the large description of their liues, whatsoeuer imperfections haue now distilled out of my pen, either for mistaking or misplacing of name, person, or time; and so to the matter.

It hath beene some question amongst the best antiquaries of our age, that there were neuer anie chancellors in England, before the comming of Edward the confessor out of Normandie, whome they suppose to haue brought the same officer with him from thense into this realme. But sith I am with manie reasons and ancient authorities led to beleue the contrarie; I will imbrace the contrarie opinion thereunto, and hold in this discourse (as the order thereof shall prooue) that there were chancellors before saint Edwards time; for the confirmation whereof and for the authoritie of them; for the etymologie and originall of the name, and for the continuance of their office, thou shalt find an ample discourse in my booke purposelie written of the liues of the chancellors, whereunto I wholie refer thee: who I hope shall within these few yeares be partaker thereof, and in the meane time giue thee this tast of the age and names of the chancellors, and vicechancellors, and such keepers of the great seale, as serued in place of chancellors. For euerie one that was keeper of the great seale, was not intituled chancellor, no more than euerie chancellor was intituled the keeper of the greatseale. But because the one did serue in the vacancie of the other (so that after a certeine sort, the keeper of the great seale was vicechancellor, and possessed the place, though not the name of a chancellor; as in our age, sir Nicholas Bacon did: we therefore haue set downe the names of the one and the other, as they followed in succession of time, after this manner.

Turketill.

Turketill chancellor to Ethelbald, who began his reigne about the yeare of Christ 718, which Turketill gaue sir manours to the abbeie of Croisland, as I haue seene noted.

Saint Swithin.

Saint Swithin bishop of Winchester was chancellor, and chiefe of councell to the great monarch king Egbert, though some attribute him to Edgar, which Egbert began his reigne about the yeare of Christ 802.

Wilfinus.

Wilfinus, chancellor to king Athelstan, who began his reigne in the yeare of our redemption nine hundred and foure and twentie.

Adulphus.

Adulphus, chancellor to king Edgar, who began his reigne in the yeare that the world became fleshy, nine hundred fiftie and nine: of this man speaketh Hugo Petro Burgensis; and Leland calleth this Adulph Cancellarium & archigrammatum: chancellor or chiefe secretarie.

Hist. Elienſ. lib. 2. written in the time of K. Stephan.

Alsius or Aelsius the second abbat of Elie, chancellor to king Etheldred, who began his reigne in the yeare of Christ nine hundred seuentie and eight, this man, being by Ethelwold bishop of Winchester, consecrated abbat at the appointment of the said king Ethelred or Egelred, and being then abbat of Elie, when Ethelred gaue forth his commandement that the abbat of Elie should then, and for euer, be chancellor; I doubt not to place him here amongst the chancellors: the proofe of which matter I haue here verbatim set downe, out of the second booke of the historie of Elie. Statuit (which was Ethelred) atque concessit quatenus ecclesiam de Eli, ex tunc & semper in regis curia cancellarij ageret dignitatem, quod etiam alijs sancti videlicet Augustini & Glesoniæ ecclesijs constituit, vt abbates istorum cœnobiorum vicissim adsignatis succedendo temporibus annum trifariè diuiderent, cum sanctuarijs & cæteris ornamentis ministrando: &c.

Leofricus.

Leofricus Bathonicus chancellor to Edward the confessor, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fortie and fiue, and some yeares before: this man was bishop of Cridington in Cornewall, which see was after translated to Excester.

Wilfinus.

Wilfinus, or Wulfinus chancellor to Edward the confessor, in the latter end of the said yeare of Christ one thousand fortie and fiue, being the third yeare of his reigne; this man cannot be he which some would haue to be Wilfinus the abbat of Westminster. For that Wulfinus died one and fortie yeares before this Wulfinus the chancellor; sith that Wulfinus was made abbat of Westminster, about the yeare nine hundred fiftie and eight, and died in the yeare one thousand and foure; being bishop of Shireburne. Yet I will not at this time iudiciallie resolue, although I suppose it true, whether this Wilfinus the chancellor, and Wulfinus the bishop of Lichfield, witnesse to a deed, wherein Edward the confessor granted certeine liberties to Leofwine, abbat of the abbeie of Couentrie, built by Leofrike erle of Mercia, be all one man or no. Againe, there is an other man which was abbat of saint Albons called Wulfinus, which for affinitie to the name of this man I thought onelie to touch in this place.

Resen-

Resenbaldus. Resenbaldus, or Rembaldus, for I take them both by manie and ancient authorities to be all one man, was chancellor to Edward the confessor, and seale bearer, witnesse amongest others, to manie deeds which I haue seene of the confessors; some dated in the yeare one thousand three score and sir, and some otherwise. He was buried at Cirencester, or Cicester.

Mauricius. Mauricius chancellor to William the Conqueror in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three score and seuen, being the first and part of the second yere of William the Conqueror.

Osmundus. Osmundus, after bishop of Sarum, chancellor to William the Conqueror, in the yere one thousand three score and seauen, and after in the yere one thousand three score and fifteene, about the ninth yeare of the kings reigne.

Arfastus. Arfastus bishop of Helmane, who translated his see from Helmane to Tetford, was chancellor to William the Conqueror, in the yeere of Christ one thousand three score and eight, being in the second and third yere of the Conqueror, and also in the yere one thousand seuentie and seuen, being about the tenth yeare of William Conqueror.

Hirmanus. Hirmanus that was first made bishop of Suring or Wilton, and translated his see from Wilton to Shirburne, & from thense to Sarum; he is that Hirmanus which I suppose was chancellor to William the Conqueror, and called Hirmannus, and that wrote the life and miracles of saint Edmund king of the Eastangles.

William Uelson. William Uelson borne of a noble house, chapleine and chancellor to William the Conqueror (as hath Robertus Montensis) succeeded Arfastus in the bishoprike of Tetford, to whom by the gift of William Rufus succeeded in that see Herbertus Losinga abbat of Ramsele, which translated the bishops see to Norwich; of which Losinga were (as hath Matthew Westminster) these verses here set downe compiled:

Surgit in ecclesia monstrum genitore Losinga,
Simonidum secta, canonum virtute resecta,
Petre nimis tardas, nam Simon ad ardua tentat,
Si præsens esses, non Simon ad alta volaret, Proh dolor! ecclesiæ nummis venduntur & are,
Filius est præsul, pater abbas, Simon vterque.
Quid non speremus, si nummos possideamus?
Omnia nummus habet, quid vult facit, addit & aufert,
Res nimis iniusta, nummus sit præsul & abbas.

William Gifford. William Gifford bishop of Winchester was chancellor in the time of the Conqueror, and of William Rufus, & of Henrie, who made him bishop of Winchester in the yeare one thousand and one hundred, and was consecrated in the yeere of Christ one thousand one hundred and seuen: though it seemeth that Robert Bluet came in place of this William Gifford, removed about the fourth of the same Rufus from his office of chancellorship, as I suppose will be well proued, but after placed againe in that office. Of the death of this William is much contrarietie, for Matthew Westminster placed it three seuerall yeres, the eight and twentith and nine and twentith yeare of Henrie the first, and againe in the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred fortie and two, being the seuenth yeare of king Stephan.

Robert Bluet. Robert Bluet, Bloet, or Bloscit made chancellor in the yeere of Christ one thousand and ninetie, being the fourth yeare of William Rufus, he was made bishop of Lincolne in the yeare of our redemption one thousand ninetie and two: but as it appeareth to me by some authoritie that I haue seene, he did execute that office being bishop of Lincolne: he died at Woodstocke in the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred twentie and three, being about the three and twentith yere of the reigne of Henrie the first, whose epitaph Henrie Huntington recciteth in this manner:

Pontificûm Robertus honor, quem fama superstes
Perpetuare dabit, nec obiturus obit:
Hic humilis, dives (res mira) potens, pius vltor,
Compatiens, mitis, quùm pateretur erat,
Noluit esse suis dominus, studuit pater esse,
Semper in aduersis murus & arma suis:
In decima Iani mendacis somnia mundi
Liquit, & euigilans vera per hennè vidit.

Ranulphus. Ranulphus in the time of William Rufus, which might be that man which was after chancellor in the time of Henrie the first.

Waldricus. Waldricus chancellor to Henrie the first, about the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred and three, being the third yeare of his reigne.

Herbertus. Herbertus chancellor in the fourth yeare of Henrie the first, in the yeare of our salnation one thousand one hundred and foure (as appeareth by an anonymall pamphlet in written hand) of whome I am not yet resolued whether this were Herbertus Losinga bishop of Norwich or no.

Roger. Roger bishop of Salisburie, whome Henrie the first called a meet chapleine to serue souldiors, was chancellor to king Henrie the first, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand one hundred and one, being the first yeere of king Henrie the first, and in the yeere one thousand one hundred and seuen, about the seuenth yeare of the said Henrie the first, being chosen bishop in the yere of Christ one thousand one hundred and two, and consecrated in the yeare one thousand one hundred and seuen.

Galfridus. Galfridus Rufus bishop of Durham, witnesse to a deed wherein Henrie the first confirmed to the priorie of Christs church a peece of ground without Aldgate called Knighton guild, in the presence of Geffrie chancellor, Geffrie Clinton, and William Clinton: he was also chancellor in the two and twentith yeere of Henrie the first, and so vntill the three and thirtith yeare of the reigne of Henrie the first, and then was made bishop of Durham, which Geffrie died about the yere of our redemption one thousand one hundred fortie and one.

Ranulphus. Ranulphus, called by Matthew Westminster Arnulphus, chancellor to Henrie the first, and Richard the chapleine, keeper of the great seale, being at one time. This Ranulph was chancellor in the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred and sixteene, being the sixteenth of king Henrie the first, in which office I suppose that he continued, vntill the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred twentie and three, being the three and twentith of the said Henrie, in which yeare this chancellor (for so is he then called) fell from his horsse and brake his necke on a hill not far from Dunstable, where the king kept his Christmasse.

Reginald. Reginald chancellor to king Henrie the first, as Leland hath set him downe, writing in this sort in his notes of Montacute abbeie: Reginaldus cancellarius, so named (belike) of his office, he was a man of great fame about king Henrie the first: he fell to religion, and was prior of Montacute, and inlarged it with great buildings and possessions, &c.

Roger. Roger bishop of Salisburie againe chancellor in the latter end of the reigne of king Henrie the first, and in the beginning of king Stephan, in the yere of Christ one thousand one hundred thirtie and six, which Henrie the first died in the yeare of our redemption one thousand one hundred thirtie and fiue, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of the said Henrie. This Roger died in the yeare of Christ one thousand one hundred thirtie and nine, being about the fourth yeare of king Stephan.

Godfreie. Godfreie chancellor to Henrie the first (as I gather out of Matthew Parker in the life of William Corbell or Corbris) the six and thirtith archbishop of

Canturbu-

Canturburie, to which dignitie this William was aduanced in the three and twentith yeare of Henrie the first, being the yeare of Christ 1123, of which Godfreie the said Matthew further writeth in this sort, speaking of the said William the archbishop returned from Rome with the pall: Deinde Alexandrum Lincolnienſem epiſcopum Cantuariæ, Godefredum regni cancellarium Bathonienſem epiſcopum Londini conſecrauit. Concerning which Godfreie we will speake more hereafter in the lines of the chancellors, onelie at this time setting downe that this Godefredus was the quænes chapleine, and could not be that Galfridus before named, which was bishop of Durham; for this Godefredus died sir yeares before that Galfridus, for this bishop of Bath died in the yeare of our Lord 1135, being the last of king Henrie Beauclerke, and the first of king Stephan; & that bishop of Durham died in the yeare of our Lord 1141, being about the first yeare of the said king Stephan; and this Godfreie was the second bishop of Bath and Wels after the uniting of those two cities to one bishoprike by John de Towres, the first bishop of those two places in the yeare of our Lord 1092, being about the fift yeare of William Rufus.

Alexander bishop of Lincolne.

Alexander bishop of Lincolne (as may be after a sort gathered out of Wilhelmus Paruus lib. 1. cap. 6.) being cousine or nephue to Roger bishop of Salisburie was chancellor: the words of which W. Paruus be these: Eidem (that was to king Stephan) quoque ſublimato in regem, ſe (that was Roger bishop of Salisburie) talem exhibuit, vt obſequiorum gratia præclaram apud illum habere fiduciam videretur. Tantis ille beneficijs ingratus, & in ipſum epiſcopum (cuius opera nunquam epiſcopalia fuere) vltor diuinitus ordinatus, eundem tanquam exigui hominem momenti primo carcerati cuſtodia, poſtmodum etiam cibi inopia, & nepoti eius (qui cancellarius fuerat regis) intentato ſupplicio ita coarctauit, vt duo illa præclara caſtella (which were the castels of Vise otherwise called de Deuises, and the castell of Shirburne) in quibus theſauri eius erant repoſiti reſignaret. Thus much Wilhelmus Newburgensis, the truth whereof I leaue to other to consider, sith the words of those authors may be diuerslie expounded, either that this Alexander was chancellor, or his sonne, or else the sonne of Roger bishop of Salisburie. But be it any or none of them, as the truth shall hereafter be made plaine, yet bicause I haue mentioned Alexander in this place, I thinke it not amisse to set downe such verses as Henrie Huntington hath recited of this Alexander, which are:

This was about the beginning of the fourth yeare of K. Stephan, being An. Do. 1138, but Mat. Paris giueth it to An. Dom. 1139: who saith, Collo filij eius qui cancellarius fuit laqueum annectens, &c. And Henrie Huntington agreeth wholie with W. Paruus.

Splendor Alexandri, non tam reniteſcit honore,
Quàm per eum reniteſcit honor, flos námque virorum,
Dando tenere putans theſauros cogit honoris,
Et gratis dare feſtinans ne danda rogentur,
Quod non dum dederit non dum ſe credit habere
Oh decus! oh morum directio! quo veniente,
Certa fides, hilaris clementia, cauta poteſtas,
Lene iugum, doctrina placens, correctio dulcis,
Libertáſque decens, venere pudórque facetus.
Lincoliæ gens magna priùs, nec maxima ſemper,
Talis & iſte diu ſit nobis tutor honoris.

Robert.

Robert chancellor of England in the time of king Stephan, but I find not in what yeare, bicause the charter is without date, neither can I learne what he was, bicause I know not his surname.

Philip.

Philip chancellor to king Stephan, about the fourth yeare of his reigne, being about the yeare of our Lord 1139, witnesse to manie deedes which king Stephan made to the monks of Elie, and to Nigellus the bishop of that see.

Reinold.

Reinold abbat of Walden, whome I haue seene in one anonymall briefe written chronicle to be termed chancellor: but in what time he liued, or what other name he had I do not yet know, but by the course of the history much about this time.

John.

John chancellor of England in the time of king Henrie the second, but what he was or in what yeare of king Henrie he liued I do not know, and therefore leaue it to him that both can and ought to giue life to these persons whom he imprisoneth in the east castell of London; not doubting but in time he will do his countrie good, and correct other men; though now he be so streict laced, as that he will not procure anie furtherance of other mens trauels.

Thomas Becket.

Thomas Becket made chancellor (as some write) in the first yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the second, others sate in the fourth yeare: but the best authors agree that he gaue ouer the seale in the yeare of Christ 1162, being the eight yeare of the victorious prince the said Henrie the second against the will of the prince, he died in the yeare of our redemption 1170, as these verses do proue, being such as the superstitious age would permit:

Pro Chriſto, ſponſa Chriſti, ſub tempore Chriſti,
In templo Chriſti, verus amator obit,*
Anno mileno, centeno ſeptuageno,
Anglorum primas corruit enſe Thomas.
Quis moritur? præſul: cur? pro grege: qualiter? enſe:
Quando? natali: quis locus? ara Dei.

* Christes church in Canturburie.

Rafe Warneuile.

Rafe Warneuile archdeacon of Rone and treasuror of the church of Yorke, was made chancellor about the yeare that the word became flesh 1173, being about the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the second: of this man speaketh Matthew Paris and Matthew Westminster.

Walterus de Constantijs.

Walterus de Constantijs archdeacon of Oxford after bishop of Lincolne, in the yeare of our redemption 1182, from whense he was aduanced in the yeare 1184, being the one and thirtith yéere of king Henrie the second vnto the archbishoprike of Rone, of this man is more spoken in my discourse of the protectors of England pag. 1069.

Geffreie.

Geffreie the bastard sonne to king Henrie the second, after that he had surrendered the bishoprike of Lincolne, whereof he was neuer consecrat bishop, but kept the place and receiued the reuenues, was made chancellor much about the six and twentith yeare of king Henrie the second, being the yeare of Christ 1180: yet be there some that saie he resigned the bishoprike in the seuen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the second, in the yeare of Christ 1181. The difference whereof groweth (as I suppose) for that some accompt the beginning of the yeare of our Lord from the first of Januarie, as all other nations of Europe do; some from the birth of Christ, as we in England did long time since the conquest; and some from the fiue and twentith of March, on which it is supposed that the world began first to be created: which last accompt we in England (and the Scots as hath Lesleus) do kéepe, together with them of Genoa or Gene in Italie, contrarie to the order of all other nations. The begining of which maner of accompt amongst vs I cannot as yet certeinlie learne: but I suppose it began much about the time of king Edward the third, for all the former historiographers begin the yeare from the birth of Christ.

William Longchampe.

William Longchampe the proud bishop of Elie, legat of England for the bishop of Rome, chiefe iustice of the south and west parts of England, and deputie of that part of the realme, when Richard the first went to the warres of the holie land, was made chancellor in the said first of king Richard, being the yeare of our redemption 1189: of the sumptuous feast of whose inthronization thus writeth Ferthulphus (or Ferculphus) by the waie of comparison:

Præuiſis alijs, Elienſia feſta videre,
Eſt quaſi præuiſa nocte videre diem.

He died in the yéere of Christ 1197, going to Rome, in the abbeie of Pimie, being of the charterhouse order.

der. About which time in the first yeare of Richard the first, there was a vicechancellor called Malus Catulus.

Eustachius. Eustachius deane of Salisburie, was chancellor of England, being elected bishop of Elie the third ides of August, in the yeare that the word became flesh 1196, being the ninth yeare of king Richard the first, of whome thus writeth Matthew Parker, in the life of Hubert archbishop of Canturburie, contrarie to that which others affirme, writing that Eustachius succeeded William Lonchampe in the office of chancellor, and in the bishoprike of Elie. The words of Matthew Parker in the life of Hubert be these: Hubertus deposito magistratu ciuili, ecclesiæ curæ totus vacabat, consecrauitque postea Robertum de Salopesbi episcopum Banchorensem, & Eustachium qui in cancellarij munere ei successit Elienſem episcopum, Westmonasterij debita accepta ab vtróque subiectionis professione.

Hubert Walter or Walter Hubert. Hubert Walter or Walter Hubert, for such a transmutation of the name is vsed by authors, being first bishop of Salisburie and then archbishop of Canturburie, was made chancellor shortlie after the coronation of king John, which was in the yeare that the virgine brought forth Christ 1199, at what time a certeine noble man said vnto him in scorne, I haue often seene of a chancellor made a bishop, but I neuer before saw an archbishop made a chancellor.

Simon. Simon or rather Hugh, of which is more heraster, archdeacon of Welles in the first yeare of king John (after as I suppose that Hubert had left the office being so disgraced & abased as he thought) was witnesse to a deed, in which king John granted to the citizens of Yorke a guildhall, hanse, and other liberties, as I haue seene noted in the copie of the same charter, for which cause I haue here set it downe as an other man, although in truth I am fullie resolued that this Simon and the Hugh following were all one person, leauing it yet for euerie mans iudgement.

Hugh de welles. Hugh de Welles archdeacon of Welles, witnesse to the deed in which king John, in the sixt yeare of his reigne, confirmed to the monasterie of Westminster, Gistlep or Islep in Oxfordshire, in which house Edward the confessor was borne, he was made bishop of Lincolne about the tenth yeare of king Johns reigne, in the yeare of our Lord 1209, and died in the yeare of our Lord 1235.

Walter Braie. Walter Braie chosen bishop of Chester, in the yeare of our Lord 1210, was bishop of Worcester and after bishop of Yorke, a man of extreame age, was made chancellor in the seuenth yeare of king John as one anonymall chronicle saith, to hold that office during his life. Others saie that he was made chancellor in the yeare of Christ 1209, being the tenth yeare of king John after Hugh de Welles. But I suppose he surrendred that patent to hold it during his life, when he came to be bishop of Yorke. Of this man is more spoken in my treatise of the protectors of England, pag. 1069.

Richard de Marischo. Richard de Marischo, whom Matthew Paris termeth Tholenarius, as it were tolegatherer or treasuror if you list, being archdeacon of Northumberland, was chancellor in the fourth yeare of king John, as appeareth by a deed that I haue seene: and further he was made chancellor in the 15 yeare of king John, in which office he cõtinued to the 17 yeare of the said king, and as some do write during king Johns life, and died about the calends of Maie in the yeare of our redemption 1226, in the tenth yeare of the long reigne of king Henrie the third, as some haue. But the booke of Durham saith, that he was made bishop of that sée by Gwado the legat, and consecrated by Walter Braie bishop of Yorke, in the yeare of our redemption 1214, being about the sixteenth yeare of king John, and died suddenlie at Peterborow the first daie of Maie, in the yeare of Christ 1226, being the tenth yeare of king Henrie the third, after that he had béene bishop of Durham nine yeares, of whom a monke of Durham made this epitaph in formall deuise as you see following:

Culmina qui cupiſ — laudes pompásque ſiti
Eſt ſedata ſi — ſime penſare veli
Qui populos regi — memores ſuper omnia ſi-
Quod mors immi-tis — non parcit bonore poti-tis Vobis præpoſi — ſimilis fueram bene ſci
Quod ſum vos eri — ad me currendo veni

And here sith I am entered into the surname of Marischus, I will set downe what I found ingrauen on the wall of the doore of the chapter house of the monasterie of Bath (almost defaced with the wether) written in Grécke Saron characters. ✠ Hic iacet Alexander de Alueto, & Ernburga vxor eius, & Fulco de Alueto filius eorum: & Lucia de Marisci filia eorũ, & Iordanus de Marisci filius eiusdem Luciæ, & Wilhelmus de Marisci filius eiusdem Iordani. Which name of the Marisches, Marshes, or Mores, if it like them to expound it, as I doubt not but manie will quiddle therevpon, was as great a name in Ireland as it was in England.

Rafe Neuill bishop of Chichester. Rafe Neuill was confirmed (as it séemeth) chancellor by the whole consent of the nobilitie, in the yeare that the word became flesh 1226, being about the tenth yeare of king Henrie the third, after which he was made bishop of Chichester in the eleuenth yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1227, or as hath Matthew Westm. he was made bishop of Chichester in the yeare of Christ 1223, being before chancellor. After which the king in the two and twentith yeare of his reigne, offended with Neuill, tooke from him the great seale, & deliuered it to Gefreie of the temple, as hath Matthew Paris, and to John de Lerinton: although that the said Neuill remained still chancellor, and receiued the profits thereof, to whom the king would after haue reginen the seale in the yeare of Christ 1239, being the three and twentith yeare of the said king Henrie, but Neuill would not receiue it. This man died in the yeare of Christ 1243, being the seuen and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, at his palace at London not far from the new temple.

Gefreie the Templer. Gefreie the Templer & John de Lerinton were made keepers of the great seale. But shortlie after this Gefreie had the seale taken from him, because he grew in mislike of the nobilitie in continuall prouoking them to anger.

Hugh Pateshall chanon of Paules. Hugh Pateshall chanon of Paules is by Matthew Paris fol. 656, called chancellor in the three and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, which I much doubt to be true. Of this man shall be more said in the treasurors of England.

Simon the Norman. Simon the Norman keeper of the great seale in the three & twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1229: he had the seale shortlie after taken from him, and was banished the court, because he would not seale the patent, whereby Thomas earle of Flanders might take foure pence for custome of euerie sacke of woll that came out of England into Flanders. This Simon died in the yeare of Christ 1249, being the three and thirtith of king Henrie the third.

Richard Gralle abbat of Euesham. Richard Gralle or Grossus abbat of Euesham (the said Simon expelled) had the keeping of the great seale in the three and twentith yeare of king Henrie the third, he kept the seale three yeares, and being chosen bishop of Chester, he resigned the same in the yeare of Christ 1242, being the six & twentith yeare of king Henrie the third: he died (being wise & learned in the canon and ciuill law) in the same yeare in Gascoine, in a citie called in Latine Riola or Regula, where he was buried.

yeare

John de Lexinton.

John de Lexinton was againe made keeper of the seale in the six and twentith yeere of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption 1242, to execute that office, Rafe Neuill being in life and still chancellor, but in the kings disgrace, shortlie after which this Neuill died. This John Lexinton died 1257, being the 41 yeare of Henrie the third.

Ranulfe Bzton.

Ranulfe Bzton (as I read) is said to be chancellor and treasuror of the chamber, about the seuen and twentith yeare of Henrie the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1242. I suppose that he onelie had the keeping of the great seale as the rest had before him, during the life of Rafe Neuill, and so I leaue him to the iudgement of others, sith Matthew Paris continuallie nameth him treasuror and once chancellor, who suddenlie died after dinner beholding plaiers at dise, in the yeare of Christ 1246, being the thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third: of whom thus writeth the said Matthew Paris in his greater historie fol. 954. Ranulphus Brito quondam domino familiarissimus regi & reginæ (multis posthabitis nobilibus) & eiusdem cancellarius specialis, quum post mensalem refectionem aleatores certatim inspexisset colludentes, lætalis apoplexiæ inexpectato vulnere corruit sugillatus.

Sylvester de Euersden.

Sylvester de Euersden receiued the great seale the nine and twentith yeare of Henrie the third, being the yeare that the son of God became flesh one thousand two hundred fortie and six: he was vicechancellor & consecrated bishop of Carleill (being a man most cunning in the custome of the chancerie) in the yeare of Christ 1247, being the one and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third.

John Mansell.

John Mansell treasuror of Yorke, parson of Maidstone in Kent, and parson of Wigan, chancellor of Paules, maister or ruler of Beuerlete, chiefe iustice of England, one of the priuie councell to Henrie the third, his chapleine, ambassador into Spaine, and a worthie souldier, crossed to go to Jerusalem, who at one feast had two kings, two quænes, and I know not how manie noble men, and whose spirituall liuings were about foure thousand marks of yerelie reuenues (as I haue gathered) he was at the will and instance of the king made keeper of the great seale as vicechancellor (for Matthew Paris saith, Custodiam sigilli regij accepit tancellarij vices acturus & officium) about the one & thirtith of king Henrie the third, in the yeare that God toke on him the forme of a seruant 1247, he built a house of regular canons at Komnele two miles from the sea. To this man king Henrie the third, in the thirtith yeare of his reigne, did grant that his towne of Wigan should be a burrow.

John de Lexinton.

John de Lexinton, being after chiefe iustice of the forest from the riuer of Trent southward, was againe keeper of the great seale, vntill some part of the two and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, in the yeare of Christ 1248.

John Mansell.

John Mansell againe keeper of the great seale, who at Woodstocke in the two and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, did receiue the great seale of the said John Lexinton, which he kept (as I suppose and that with some good prowse) vntill the three & thirtith yeare of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption 1248. Of which John Mansell thus writeth an old anonymall chronicle concerning the barons warres: Sed & Iohannes Mansell multarum in Anglia ecclesiarum rector seu potius incubator, reddituum quoque quorum non erat numerus possessor magnificus, ita quòd ditior eo clericus non videbatur in orbe episcopali, puta dignitate minimè insignitus, metu baronum aufugit & latenter vltra mari de turri London, in qua rex Angliæ & regina sua tunc temporis tenuerunt se. Quem quum Henricus filius regis Alemaniæ fugientem insequeretur, & ipse capitur quum applicuisset Bononiæ à magistro Gerando de Fenes procuratore vt putabatur reginæ, &c.

Radulphus de Diceto.

Radulphus de Diceto was chancellor (as I read & suppose) much about this time: but for certeintie I refer the same to the large booke of their liues, where he shall not faile to haue his right time and place.

William of Kilkennie.

William of Kilkennie, being a modest, wise, and faithfull man, learned in the canon and ciuill lawes, was made keeper of the great seale, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred and fiftie, being the foure & thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. He was elected to the bishoprike of Elie, as saith the historie of Elie, the eightenth kalends of September, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred fiftie & fiue, being about the nine and thirtith yere of Henrie the third. But others sate that he being then vicechancellor, was elected bishop of Elie in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred fiftie and foure, being the eight and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, after that he had faithfullie and to his great commendation vsed and borne the great seale, he was cõsecrated to that bishoprike in the yere of Christ 1255, and died in the yere 1256 being about the one and fortith yeare of king Henrie the third, whose heart was buried at Elie.

Henrie de Wingham.

Henrie de Wingham was made chancellor in the nine and thirtith yeare of Henrie the third, and continued in the one and fortith and two and fortith yeare of Henrie the third, in which yeare (as some haue) and in the 43 of Henrie the third (as others haue.) He was chosen bishop of Winchester, vpon condition that he should giue place to Athelmer halfe brother to king Henrie the third, & son to Hugh Bzune earle of March, and of Eleanor king Henrie the thirds mother, being banished by the barons, if that he should againe returne into England, and then leaue the bishoprike of Winchester vnto him, which he did vpon the comming againe of the said Athelmer into England, and for that cause was after chosen bishop of London, being chosen thereto in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred fiftie and nine, being the three and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the third, and still chancellor, and is buried in Paules on the south side of the quier (next to Eustachius bishop of London) in a monument of marble, with this inscription on the wall to tell who it was: Hic iacet Henricus de Wingham quondam episcopus huius ecclesiæ, qui multa bona contulit ministris ecclesiæ sancti Pauli.

Walter Merton.

Walter Merton chancellor in the foure and fortith yere of king Henrie the third, being the yeare 1260.

Nicholas of Elie.

Nicholas of Elie made chancellor by the barons, in the said yeare of our redemption one thousand two hundred and sixtie, and Walter Merton displaced. But king Henrie the third, disdaining to haue officers appointed him by his subiects, did in the moneth of October following, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred and sixtie, or rather one thousand two hundred sixtie and one, depriue the said Nicholas, and replaced the said Walter Merton.

Walter Merton the second time.

Walter Merton bishop of Rochester the second time made chancellor as before appeareth.

John de Chesill.

John de Chesill archdeacon of London and treasuror of England, was made keeper of the great seale, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand two hundred sixtie and foure, being the eight and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. This man was consecrated bishop of London in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seuentie & foure, the third kalends of Maie, as hath Matthew Westminster: he died in the yeare that the word of the father became flesh one thousand two hundred seuentie and nine, the fourth ides of Februarie, in the seuenth yeare of the scourge of the Scots and Welshmen.

Vita Thomæ Cantelupi.

Thomas de Cantelupe, borne of the noble house of the lords Cantelupes (the son of William Cantelupe and Millesent, which as saith Leland drew his originall from the countesses of Yorke) being archdeacon of Stafford, was doctor and after bishop of Hereford in the yeare one thousand two hundred seuentie and six, and before that made chancellor, after the feast of saint Peters chaire, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand two hundred sixtie & fiue, being the nine and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third. He died beyond the seas comming from the court of Rome, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seuentie and eight, being the first yeare of the reigne of king Edward the first, or more truelie (as others haue) in the yeare one thousand two hundred eightie & three, being the eleuenth yeare of king Edward the first, whose bones were brought to Hereford.

Walter Gifford bishop of Bath.

Walter Gifford bishop of Bath and Welles, whome manie do call William, did inioy the state of the chancellor, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred sixtie & six, being the fiftith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third: he was translated from Bath to Yorke, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred fiftie and nine, being the nine and fortith yeare of the same Henrie the third, and died the seuenth kalends of Maie in the twelfe yeare of his bishoprike, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seuentie & seuen, being the first yeare of king Edward the first, or (as hath Nicholas Triuet) in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seuentie and nine, being the seuenth yeare of king Edward the first.

Geffreie Gifford.

Geffreie Gifford was chancellor also in the one and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand two hundred sixtie and seuen. This man was bishop of Worcester about the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred ninetie and nine, where he sat foure and thirtie yeares, foure moneths, and foure daies, and died in the yeare one thousand three hundred and foure, being about the two and thirtith yeare of king Edward the first.

John de Chesill.

John de Chesill was the second time honoured with the place of the chancellor, in the yeare that the word became flesh one thousand two hundred sixtie and eight, being the three and fiftith yeare in which king Henrie the third of that name did hold the scepter of England.

Richard de Middleton.

Richard de Middleton, so surnamed of the place where he was borne, was aduanced to the office of the chancellorship, in the said three and fiftith yeare of king Henrie the third, in the moneth of Julie, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand two hundred sixtie and eight, and was also (as appeareth by a charter which I haue seene) witnesse to the same deed, in the foure and fiftith yeare of the said king Henrie, who (as farre as I can gather) died in August, in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seuentie and one, being the six and fiftith yeare of the long gouernment of king Henrie the third. There was a writer of England that wrote many volums of this name liuing at this time, whom I doubt not (for anie thing that I can yet learne) to be the same man which was chancellor.

John de Kirbie.

John de Kirbie, after the death of Richard Middleton, was made keeper of the great seale in the said six and fiftith yere of king Henrie the third. Whether this were the same John Kirkbie, which after was bishop of Elie, and treasuror of England, I haue not as yet to determine, although I rather hold the affirmatiue than the contrarie.

Walter Merton.

Walter Merton the third time made chancellor of England, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred seuentie and three, being the first yeare of the reigne of that famous prince king Edward the first of that name: he was bishop of Rochester, and built Merton college in Oxford, and died in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred seauentie and eight, being the sixt yeare of the reigne of king Edward the first.

Robert Burnell.

Robert Burnell the eleuenth bishop of Bath and Wels (after the uniting of those two sees in one by John de Toures in the yeare of Christ one thousand ninetie and two) was made bishop of Bath in the yeare of our Lord (as saith Euersden) one thousand two hundred seuentie & foure, and chosen archbishop of Canturburie in the yeare one thousand two hundred seuentie and eight, but reiected by the pope: he was chancellor in the second yeare of the said Edward the first, in which place it seemeth that he long continued: of whom thus writeth an anonymall chronicle; Dominus Edmundus comes Cornubiæ fundauit nouum studium ordinis Cisterciensis apud Oxonias, & monachos de Thame primò ibidem introduxit, & dedit eis prima donatione manerium de Erdington, & fecit dedicare locum abbatiæ tertij idus Decembris: per dominum Robertum Burnell episcopum Bathon & Welles, cancellarium regis, & posuit fundamentum nouæ ecclesiæ eodem die Northosneiæ. This bishop was required with the son of Edward the first, and Gilbert de Clare earle of Glocester, in the time of Edward the first, to be deliuered for pledges for Lhewelin prince of Wales for his safe returne, if he came to the parlement, whereunto he was summoned by the said king Edward. In the time of this chancellor the court of chancerie was kept at Wistow. This man died in the yere of Christ one thousand two hundred ninetie and three, being the one and twentith yere of the reigne of king Edward the third.

John de Langhton.

John de Langhton made chancellor of England in the yere of our Lord one thousand two hundred ninetie and three, being the one and twentith yeare of the scourger of the Scots, king Edward the first, in which office he remained vntill the thirtith of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred and two. He was made bishop of Chichester about the six and twentith or rather the seauen and twentith yeare of king Edward the first, being the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred ninetie and eight, or rather one thousand two hundred ninetie and nine: and in the said yeare one thousand two hundred ninetie and nine he was before chosen bishop of Elie, but reiected by the pope, who made him archdeacon of Canturburie: from which Langhton this Edward did take the great seale in the thirtith yeare before said, and deliuered it to John Drokensford.

John Drokensford.

John Drokensford keeper of the wardrobe was made keeper of the great seale in the thirtith yere, as before, in which office he continued from about the fifteenth daie of August vntill Michaelmas.

William de Greinfield.

William de Greinfield, deane of Chichester, and canon of Yorke, was aduanced to the place of the chancellor, in the yeare that God became man one thousand three hundred and two, being about the thirtith yeare of the said king Edward the first, which office was giuen vnto him at saint Radigunds (as saith Anonymus M.S. He was after chosen bishop of Yorke, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred and three: who in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred and eight buried the bodie of the said king Edward the first at Westminster, though that king died in the yeare of our Lord God one thousand three hundred and seauen. This bishop died about the yere of our saluation one thousand three hundred and fifteene (being about the first yeare of king Edward the second) at Talwod, after that that he had béene bishop nine yeares, eleuen moneths, and two daies, and was buried in saint Nicholas porch of Yorke, receiuing his consecration at Rome in the yeare of Christ one thousand thrée hundred and fiue (after that he had béene there two yéeres) of pope Clement. This Greinfield was a man verie eloquent and pithie in counsell.

William de Hamelton. William de Hamelton, deane of Yorke, was created chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the sonne of God one thousand thrée hundred and fiue, being the thrée and thirtith yeare of that noble prince king Edward the first. This William surrendred his borrowed life in the yeare of our Lord one thousand thrée hundred and seuen, being about the fiue and thirtith yeare of the said king, at the abbeie of Fontnelle in Yorkshire, being a man that well deserued of the commonwealth.

Ralfe Baldocke. Ralfe de Baldocke chosen bishop of London, in the yeare of Christ one thousand thrée hundred and thrée, was confirmed at Titneshall by Robert of Winchelseie bishop of Canturburie, and consecrated at Lions by Peter of Spaine bishop of Alba, the third calends of Februarie, in the yere of our redemption one thousand thrée hundred and fiue. He was made lord chancellor of England, after the death of the said William Hamelton in the said fiue & thirtith yere of king Edward the first, and receiued the great seale in the Rogation wéeke following, being some foure or fiue wéekes after that he was aduanced to that office at the ercheker. Shortlie after which died king Edward the first; for which cause the said Baldocke sent the great seale to king Edward the second then at Carleill, by reason of his fathers death. This Ralfe Baldocke died on saint James éeuen in the yeare of our redemption one thousand thrée hundred and thirtéene, being the seuenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the second.

John Langhton. John Langhton bishop of Chichester againe made lord chancellor of England, in the yeare that the word of the father toke on him the forme of a seruant one thousand thrée hundred and seauen, being the first yeare of king Edward of Carnaruan, in which office it séemeth that he continued, vntill the yeare of our Lord one thousand thrée hundred and ten, being the third yeare of the reigne of the after deposed king Edward the second.

William Melton. William Melton, hauing two others ioined with him, had the great seale deliuered vnto them for a certeine time, to execute all such things as were to be done therewith during the kings pleasure. This man was a canon of Yorke, prouost of Beuerleie, treasuror of England, and archbishop of Yorke, as saith Anonymus M.S. He was consecrated bishop of Yorke at Rome, where he tarried two yeares for the same: he was a man neuer wearied with trauell. He first of all the bishops of Yorke (after a long controuersie betwéene the deane and canons of Yorke) visited the chapter by due order: he was wise, rich, seuere in correction, gentle, familiar, and humble: he finished the west part of the church of saint Peters in Yorke with thrée hundred pounds, he was archbishop of Yorke two and twentie yeares, fiue or six moneths, and two daies: he died at Cawod on saint Georges éeuen, in the yeare of Christ one thousand thrée hundred and thirtie, and was buried in the minster of Yorke nére to the font.

Walter Reinolds. Walter Reinolds bishop of Worcester, treasuror of England and archbishop of Canturburie, was made keeper of the great seale, and chancellor of England on the first of Julie one thousand thrée hundred and ten, in the said yeare of our Lord God one thousand thrée hundred and ten, being the said third yeare of that king Edward, whome his sonne Edward the third deposed from his kingdome. Of this man & all other chancellors, which were archbishops of Canturburie, shall be somewhat more said at another time, in the order and placing of the bishops of that sée; which caution I haue here set downe, because I would once for all make repetition thereof in one place, and not seuerallie in manie places, vnder the seuerall names of euerie chancellor that was inuested with that metropolitan honor of Canturburie.

John de Sandall. John de Sandall clerke, bishop of Winchester, & treasuror, was at Yorke made chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgin Marie was deliuered of the first begotten son one thousand thrée hundred and fouretéene, being the eight yeare of king Edward the second, in which place he continued two yeares and more; some part thereof being after that he was bishop of Winchester (as I gather) and then deliuered backe the seale at Westminster, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand thrée hundred and seuentéene, being the eleauenth yeare of the said king Edward the second. Of this man is more spoken in the treasurors of England.

John Hotham. John Hotham bishop of Elie was created lord chancellor of England in the yere of Christ one thousand thrée hundred and seauentéene, being the eleauenth yeare of king Edward the second, in which office he continued vntill the yeare of our Lord God 1319, being the thirteenth yeare of the last before named king Edward. During whose gouernment of the sée of Elie, in the yeare one thousand thrée hundred fortie and one, the steeple of the chaire fell downe, which made such terrible noise and shaking of the ground that it was supposed to haue béene an earthquake. He died of the palsie in the yere of our redemption one thousand thrée hundred thirtie and six, being the tenth yeare of that king Edward the third that first wrote himselfe king of both realmes, England and France.

John Salmon bishop of Norwich. John Salmon bishop of Norwich was aduanced to be chancellor, in the yeare that God toke on him the forme of a seruant, one thousand thrée hundred and nineteene, being the thirtéenth yeare of that king Edward the second, against whome the nobles rebelled for the misdemeanor of Piers de Gauestone (the Gascoine) earle of Cornewall. In this yeare one thousand thrée hundred and nineteene (as saith one anonymall chronicler M.S.) was William Atremine keeper of the seale vicechancellor taken prisoner by the Scots. The words of the which author for the more certeintie thereof we haue here set downe, in the yeare of Christ one thousand thrée hundred and nineteene. Episcopus Eborum, episcopus Eliæ thesaurarius, abbas beatæ Mariæ Eborum, abbas de Selbie, decanus Eborum dominus Willielmus Arymenee vicecancellarius Angliæ, ac dominus Iohannes Dabeham cum 8000 fermè hominum, tam equitum quàm peditum & ciuibus properanter * ciuitatem egredientes, quoddam flumen * Swale nuncupatum sparsis cuneis transeuntes, & indispositis seu potiùs confusis ordinibus cum aduersarijs congressi sunt. Scoti siquidem in martegnari amplitudinem eorum exercitus cautè regentes, in nostros agminibus strictis audacter irruerunt, nostrorum denique in breui laceratis cuneis atque dissipatis, corruerunt ex nostris tam in ore gladij quàm aquarum scopulis suffocati, plusquam 4000, & capti sunt domini Iohannes de Pabeham miles & dominus Willielmus de Arymenee vt præfertur de cancellaria, &c.* Which William Atremenée was also in the fiftéenth of the said king Edward the second, one of the keepers of the great seale, as I haue séene registred.

* Or Pabeham. * Yorke. * Twelue miles from Yorke.

Robert Baldocke. Robert Baldocke archdeacon of Middlesex, a man euillie beloued, and whom the old English chronicle calleth a false péeld priest, was made chancellor of England in the seauentéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the second, at the castell of Pikering Historiepisc. Norwich.

ring in Yorkeshire, he was after made bishop of Norwich, and did his fealtie for restitution of his temporalties in the nineteenth yeare of the said king Edward the second at Woodstocke in Oxfordshire, he was apprehended in the 20 yeare of Edward the second, being the yéere of our Lord 1326, or (as others haue) one thousand three hundred & fiue and twentie, & first committed to the custodie of Adam Tarleton or de Orleton bishop of Hereford, & after was put in the prison of the Newgate in London, in which twentith yeare of the said Edward the second the great seale was againe deliuered to William Airemée, who I suppose was then also made bishop of Norwich, and this Baldocke deposed from that sée, of which Baldocke thus writeth a Polychronicon of Durham: Robertus de Baldocke cancellarius An. 1325 captus cum Hugonibus de despensers, quia clericus fuit & sacerdos in noua porta Londiniarum, poni fecit Edwardus princeps & Isabella mater eius, vbi pro nimia miseria mortuus fuit infra breue.

William Airemee keeper of the seale.

John Hotham bishop of Elie.

John Hotham bishop of Elie the second time was at Westminster made chancellor of England, in the yeare that the word became flesh 1326, being the first yeare of the reigne of that king which first intituled himselfe king of England and France: but he continued not long in the same office, for he was removed in the second yeare of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption, one thousand three hundred twentie and eight. He was elected bishop in the yéere of Christ one thousand three hundred and sixtéene, in which place he ruled twentie yeares, and died in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred and thirtie of the palsey at Summersham, being buried in the church of Elie vnder a goodlie monument of stone, with the image of a bishop carued out of alabaster vpon his tome.

Henrie Cliffe master of the rolles.

Henrie Cliffe master of the rolles had the charge and keeping of the great seale of England, in the said yeare of Christ 1328, being the second yeare of king Edward the third, and was the kings chancellor also.

Henrie Burghwash bishop of Lincolne.

Henrie de Burgh, Burghwash, or Burgesse, nephue vnto sir Bartholomew Bladismere baron of Leeds in Kent, hauing béene treasuror of England, inioied the honor of the chancellor in the second yéere of king Edward the third, being the yeare that the sonne of God toke on him the forme of a seruant 1328, and was made chancellor at Northampton, which office he did not long inioie. Here because I haue a little mentioned sir Bartholomew Bladesmere, I will saie somwhat more of him, which is, that being orator for the king in diuers weightie affairs, he spent in those businesses 15000 pounds of the kings monie, and yet produced little or nothing to effect in the kings causes, except the procuring of this Henrie Burghwash to the bishoprike of Lincolne, who was buried in the east end towards the north of the church of Lincolne, at whose fæt was also buried Robert his brother a knight of great fame in the warres, in which church is also buried Bartholomew sonne to the said Robert. They founded a grammar schole, and fiue pretests, & fiue poore scholars in Lincolne.

John Stratford.

John Stratford bishop of Winchester, and after of Canturburie, and sometime treasuror of England, was made chancellor of the realme, in the yéere of our redemption one thousand three hundred and thirtie, being the fourth yeare of the said king Edward the third, who being sent in the first yeare of Edward the third, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred two and thirtie, ambassador beyond the seas about the affaires of the king & kingdome, did not (like cardinall Wolsele the chancellor in the daies of K. Henrie the eight) presumptuouslie carrie the great seale with him beyond the seas, but left the same in his absence with others, who both could and would answer the well or euill vsing thereof whilest he was in France. This man continued in the office vntill the eight yeare of Edward the third.

Richard de Burie or Richard de Angerule.

Richard de Burie, otherwise called Richard de Angerule (being borne in a litle village beside saint Edmundsburie, commonlie called the Berrie abbeie, was so surnamed Burie of that place) had to his father sir Richard Angerule knight. This man being first kept at schole by his vncle sir John Willobie priest, was afterward treasuror of England, chancellor and bishop of Durham: to which place of chancellorship he was aduanced in the yeare that the second person in trinitie was brought into the world 1334, being the eight yeare of that king of England which first quartered the armes of England and France. Which office he receiued by the kings gift at Westminster, in which yeare he was inthronized (being first consecrated bishop in the yere of Christ 1333) in the bishoprike of Durham by William Cowton prior of Durham: he kept the sée 11 years two moneths and 12 daies, & died in the yeare 1345, & was buried in the south angle of the church of Durham.

John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie.

John Stratford the second time lord chancellor, being now archbishop of Canturburie, was installed therein at Yorke in the yeare of Christ 1335, being the ninth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third.

Robert de Stratford.

Robert de Stratford or Strafford (as some haue written, but as I thinke corruptlie) being archdeacon of Canturburie (which office was first ordeined by Anselme archbishop of the said citie of Canturburie) was made chancellor of England on the foure and twentith date of March (being the éeue of the annuntiation of the virgin Marie) at Westminster, in the yeare that the word of the father toke on him the forme of a seruant 1336, being the eleuenth yeare of the gouernement of king Edward the third. He was after made bishop of Chichester, desiring to be remoued from that office of chancellorship, which was granted vnto him: whervpon he surrendered vp the seale to the said king Edward the third in the twelfe yeare of his reigne, being the yeare of our redemption 1338.

Richard de Bintworth bishop of London.

Richard de Bintworth chosen bishop of London, and confirmed by John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie at Otford in the tenth kalends of June 1338, was at Waltham aduanced to the honour of lord chancellor in the moneth of Julie, in the said yeare of Christ 1338, being the twelfe yeare of that king which first ordeined the knights of the order of the garter.

John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie.

John Stratford the third time lord chancellor of England, in which office he did not now long continue.

Robert bishop of Chichester.

Robert bishop of Chichester, being the foresaid Robert Stratford, was againe made lord chancellor of England, in the yere of our redemption 1340, being the fourtéenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the third, who was put out of that office, and should with the treasuror of England haue bene sent into France for a pledge for the paiment of certeine summes of monie.

Robert de Bourchier.

Robert de Bourchier, borne of the honourable house of the lord Bourchiers, was in the towre of London made lord chancellor of England in December, in the said fourtéenth yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our Lord 1340, though some saie he was made chancellor in the fiftéenth yeare of the said king.

Robert Pers ning iustice at the law.

Robert Perning, Pernicke, or Pernwicke, also treasuror of England, was made chancellor of England, land in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the the Messiah 1341, being the fiftéenth yeare of king Edward the third. He died in the yeare 1343, being the seuentéenth yeare of the foresaid king Edward the third. This man was a sergeant in the third yeare of Edward the third, when he began to plead as a sergeant, in which he continued vntill about the eleuenth yeare of Edward the third, and was after that iustice, treasuror, and chancellor, and did in the common place, being chancellor, sit and argue amongst the iustices, as appeareth in the law bookes of those yeares of Edward the third, of whom is last mention made in the seuentéenth yeare of Edward the third, where he is named chancellor.

Robert de Saddington. Robert de Saddington knight, was inuested with the dignitie of lord chancellor after the death of Perning in the yeare of Christ 1343, and the seuentéenth yeare of the often mentioned king Edward the third. There was also one sir Richard Saddington knight treasuror of England, of whome I haue spoken in my discourse of the lord treasurors.

John Offord or Vfford. John Offord or Vfford, deane of Lincolne, was made chancellor of England, in the yeare of our redemption 1345, being the nineteenth yeare of king Edward the third. He was elected to be bishop of Canturburie, and so was installed, but neuer receiued the pall. He died in the moneth of Maie, in the yeare of Christ 1349, being the three and twentith yeare of the reigne of that victorious king Edward, which neuer receiued greater honour than that he was father vnto Edward surnamed the Blacke prince the flower of chiualrie, and worthie conquerour of the French dominions.

John Thorsbie. John Thorsbie bishop of Worcester, archbishop of Yorke and cardinall, was installed in the seat of the lord chancellor, in the yeare that God became man, one thousand three hundred fortie and nine, being the three and twentith yeare of that king Edward the third, so often before recited, who at his great suite was discharged of the office of chancellor, by deliuerie of the great seale in Nouember, in the thirtith yeare of the said king, being the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred fiftie and six, after that he had kept that place by the space almost of seauen yeres. He in the tenth yeare of his bishoprike in the third calends of August, began the frame of the quéere of S. Peters church in Yorke, & laid the first stone therof, to which he gaue a hundred pounds. He died at Thorpe, and was buried at Yorke in the yere of Christ 1363, or as other haue 1373, after that he had béene archbishop one and twentie yeares, and one and twentie daies.

William de Edington. William de Edington, bishop of Winchester, lord treasuror of England, was made chancellor of this realme in Nouember in the said yeare of Christ 1356, and the thirtith yeare of the reigne of that king Edward, which at Sauoie in England kept king John of France his prisoner. See more of him in the treasurors of England.

Simon Langham. Simon Langham, abbat of Westminster, bishop of Elie, archbishop of Canturburie, and lord treasuror of England, was made lord chancellor in Februarie, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred sixtie and three, being the seauen and thirtith yeare of the gouernment of king Edward the third, and was chancellor in the fortith yere of the reigne of that king: being the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred sixtie and three. Of this Simon were these verses made, when he was remoued from Elie to the bishoprike of Canturburie:

Exultent cœli quia Simon transit ab Eli,
Cuius in aduentum flent in Kent millia centum.

Of whome also, bicause he richlie indowed the abbeie of Westminster with great gifts, of singular cost & value, a certeine monke compiled these verses:

Res es de Langham tua Simon sunt data quondam, Octingentena librarum millia dena.

Of this man is more spoken in the former discourse or treatise of the lord treasurors of England.

William de Wikeham. William de Wikeham, so called of the place of his birth, was by surname from his parents called Perot, and Long, whome Leland maketh treasuror of England, which by anie possible meanes cannot be so for anie thing that I can yet learne. This man being bishop of Winchester, and aduanced to that place in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred sixtie and seuen, in the one and fortith yeare of the reigne of Edward the third, in which place he sat seauen and thirtie yeares, was sometime kéeper of the priuie seale, and made also chancellor of England, in the yeare that the virgine brought forth the first begotten sonne one thousand three hundred sixtie and seauen, being the one and fortith yeare of the gouernement of the foresaid Edward the third, in which office he remained about foure yeares; and (in March in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred seauentie and one, being the fiue and fortith of king Edward the third) did deliuer vp the great seale to the king at Westminster. He was buried in the bodie of Winchester church, which he new built with the other places about it: of whome were these verses composed for the building of his colleges, the one at Oxenford and the other at Winchester:

Hunc docet esse pium fundatio collegiorum
Oxoniæ primum stat Wintoniæque secundum.

Robert Thorpe. Robert Thorpe knight, being before iustice of the law in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred and seauentie, was after at Westminster aduanced to the chancellorship, in March, the fiue & fortith yeare of king Edward the third, being the yeare of our redemption (as is before said) one thousand three hundred seauentie and one, who going home to his owne house, left the great seale with foure of the gardians or maisters of the chancerie, wherof the one was called Walter Powre, to kéepe and vse as néed required.

Sir John Knluet or Knluell (as some bokes haue by the transcriber corrupted) was made chancellor of England in Julie, in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred seauentie and two, being the six and fortith yeare of king Edward the third, in which office he continued (as I for this time do gather) vntill the fiftith yeare of the said king Edward, in which yeare (as héere at hand appeareth) came in place of the bishop of S. Dauids. Sir John Knluet.

Adam de Houghton, bishop of Peneuia or of Saint Dauids in Wales, was aduanced to the office of lord chancellor in the yeare of our redemption 1376, being the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third, who in the one and fiftith yeare of the said king, was with the earle of Salisburie, and the bishop of Hereford, sent ambassador beyond the seas. ¶ And here I thinke it not amisse to set downe the originall of the rolles in chancerie lane in this sort. Adam de Houghton.

Henrie the third did build a house for the Iewes conuerted to the faith of Christ, which house is at this daie (& hath béene long before this time) appointed for the kéeping of the kings rolles and records, being now called and knowne by the name of the rolles in chancerie lane besides Lincolns inne. In which house the maister of the rolles (for the time being) hath a goodlie and statelie lodging. In which also there is a faire chappell, called the chappell of the rolles, being a place commonlie appointed wherein men accustom to paie monie vpon contracts. Wherin also is buried John Yong, sometime maister of the rols and doctor of both laws, on the left side in his doctors wéed; and maister Allington vnder a state.

lie tome of white marble, iet, and other rich stone, on the right side of the said chappell, the epitaphs of both which persons are hereafter recited: besides which in this chappell are the ancient records of all inrolments, confirmations of the prince, & of other suites in the chancerie kept in chests and presses, built on each side about the middle part of the chappell, beneath the chaire or place of seruice. At the west end whereof (on certeine apointed daies therefore) the maister of the rols doth in the afternoones sit in a place formed and railed in, after the manner of the courts of Westminster, to heare and determine matters depending in the chancerie: which maister of the rolles now liuing is sir Gilbert Gerrard knight, sometime generall atturneie to the noble princesse quéene Elisabeth. And here before I leaue this chappell, I thinke it not amisse to set downe the epitaphs of the two persons before named there buried, with these words.

The epitaph of maister doctor Yong maister of the rols.

Io. Yong LL. doctoris sacror. scrinior. ac huius domus custodi decano olim EBOR. vita defuncto xxv Aprilis sui fideles executores hoc posuerunt M.D.XVI.

Dominus firmamentum meum.

Beside which in an old table hanging by are written in text hand these verses hereafter following:

Hic iacet ille Iohannes Yong cognomine dignus,
Tali quod nunquam marcesceret vtpote charus:
Omnibus apprimè summo testante dolore,
Quem neque celabant neque dissimulare valebant,
Dum sternit iuuenem mors immatura labentem,
Quis non defleret iuuenis miserabile fatum,
Ex quo multorum pendebat vita salúsque:
Horum inquam inprimis, quos ille benignus alebat
Impensis donec vitales carperet auras.
Nec satis illi erat hoc priuatis consuluisse
Rebus, quinetiam prudenter publica gessit
Munia siue forensia siue etiam extera summa
Cum laude, illa quidem dum sacris præfuit olim
Scrinijs, hæc verò legati functus honore.

The epitaph of maister Alington is in this sort.

Hospes qui fueram quondam si quæris amice,
Nomen Alingtonus stirps generosa fuit:
Hæc monumenta mihi coniux fidissima struxit,
Quæque mihi struxit destinat illa sibi.
Charáque coniugy tres natæ pignora nostri,
Sunt, vultus quarum marmora sculpta tenent,
Cum matre has omnes precor vt post funera summe
Cælica perducas in tua regna Deus.

Richardus Alington armiger qui hîc sepultus est obyt 23 die Nouembris 1561.

Now (as you haue heard before that this house of the rols was first a house of conuerts) it shall not be amisse also for the more proofe thereof, to set downe the grants of the princes and kings which conuerted the same to those vses.

The grant of Henrie the third, for erecting of the house of conuerts.

Rex archiepiscopis, &c. Sciatis nos intuitu Dei, & pro salute animæ nostræ, & animarum antecessorum & hæredum meorum concessisse, & hac charta nostra confirmasse pro nobis & hæredibus nostris, domum quam fundari fecimus in vico, qui vocatur Newstreet, inter vetus templum & nouum London, ad sustentationem fratrum conuersorum & conuertendorum de Iudaismo ad fidem catholicam, in auxilium sustentationis eorundem fratrum in eadem domo conuersantium, domos & terras quæ fuêre Iohannis Herbeton in London, & sunt in manu nostra tanquam eschaeta nostra, excepto gardino, quod fuit eiusdem Iohannis in vico prædicto de Newstreet, & quod priùs per chartam nostram concessimus venerabili patri Radulpho Cicestrensi episcopo cancellario nostro, & omnes alias eschaetas, quæ tempore nostro per feloniam, vel quacunque ex causa nobis accident in ciuitate nostra, vel in suburbio infra libertatem ciuitatis nostræ London. Quare volumus, & firmiter præcipimus pro nobis & hæredibus nostris, quòd prædicta domus habeat & teneat liberè & quietè, bene & in pace, ad sustentationem fratrum conuersorum & conuertendorum de Iudaismo ad fidem catholicam, in auxilium sustentationis eorundem fratrum in eadem domo conuersantium, domos & terras quæ fuerunt Iohannis Herbeton in London, & sunt in manu nostra tanquam eschaeta nostra excepto gardino quod fuit eiusdem Iohannis in vico prædicto de Newstreet, & quod priùs per chartam nostram concessimus venerabili patri R. Cicestrensi episcopo cancellario nostro, & omnes alias eschaetas, quæ tempore nostro per feloniam vel quacunque ex causa nobis accident in ciuitate nostra, vel in suburbio infrà libertatem ciuitatis nostræ London, sicut prædictum est. Hijs testibus venerabilibus patribus, W. Kaerl. & W. Exon. episcopis, H. de Burgo comite Kantiæ Radulpho filio Nicholai, Godfrido de Crancumbe, Iohanne filio Philip. Amaurico de sancto Aumundo, Will. de Picheford, Galfrido de Cauz, & alijs. Dat. per manum Ve. P. R. Cicestren. episcop. cancellar. nostri apud Westmin. 19. die Aprilis.

* Walt. Mer. mill.

The grant of Edward the third, where-by the said house was in the one and fiftith and last yeare of the said Edward con-uerted to the custodie of the rolles and records of the chancerie.

Rex omnib. ad quos, &c: salutem. Sciatis quòd nos, considerantes qualiter domus conuersorum in suburbio ciuitatis nostræ London, de patronatu nostro existens, & capella, edificia, & clausur. eiusdem, tempore quo dilectus noster Will. Burstall custodiam eiusdem domus ex collatione nostra primò habuit, per negligentiam & incuriã aliorum qui ante dictum Will. custodiam domus illius habuerunt & ibidem, morari seu inhabitari non curauerunt, multipliciter & quasi totaliter in ruina extiterunt, & quòd prædictus Will. tempore suo de bonis suis propriis grãdes costas & expensas super recuperatione & emendatione domus, capellæ, edificiorũ, & clausur. prædict. ac etiam super factur. nouar. domorum ibidem. Nos vt domos conuersorum capella, edificia, clausur. & nouæ domus supradict. cõpetenter sustententur, & custodientur in futurum, ad supplicationem prædicti Willielmi qui custos rotulorum cancellariæ nostræ existit, in præsenti concessimus de gratia nostra speciali pro nobis & hæredibus nostris, quòd post mortem eiusdem *dem Will. dicta domus conuersorum cum suis iuribus & pertinent. quibuscunque remaneat & moretur in perpetuum clerico custod. rotulorum cantellar. nostræ & hæredũ nostrorũ pro tempore existent. & similiter annex. eidẽ officio in perpetuum: & quòd cancellarius Angliæ vel custos siue custodes magni sigilli nostri & hæredum nostrorum Angliæ pro tempore existentium, post mortem ipsius Willielmi habeat & habeant potestatem ad quamlibet vacationem dicti officij custodis rotulorum per mortem, cessionẽ, vel mutationem, personæ quocunque tempore futur. * institutum succesiuè custodes rotulorum prædictorum in dicta domo conuersorum, & custodes illos ponend. in possessionem eiusdem cum suis iuribus & pertin. quibuscunque, in cuius, &c. T. R. apud Shene 11 Aprilis An. 51 Edw. 3.*

* instituendi.

But after the death of this king Edward, the said William Burstall master of the rolles (belike not supposing this to be a sufficient grant) procured this house by an act of parlement, in the first yeare of king Richard the second, to be more stronglie established, to the vse of the master of the rolles for the time. After which John de Waltham, master of the rolles, after bishop of Salisburie and treasuror of England, procured K. Richard the second in the 6 yeare of his reigne, by his letters patents to confirme the said house to the said Waltham and his successors masters of the rolles. And whereas by the patent of Edward the third, the master of the rolles was appointed and installed in that house by the chancellor, it is to be noted, that the same manner of induction and installment continued as long as the master of the rolles were of the clergie, as I haue seene set downe by others, and as the presidents of those installments and the writs themselues extant of record do well prowe.

Sir Richard Scrope knight lord of Bolton, hauing beene lord treasuror in the time of the deceased king Edward the third, was now in October about the latter end of the yeare 1378, or the beginning of the yeare 1379, being the second yeare of the after deposed king Richard the second, made lord chancellor, and had the great seale deliuered vnto him, who in the third yeare of the said king at a parlement did surrender vp his office. Of this man is more set downe in the discourse of the treasurors.

Sir Richard Scrope.

Simon Sudburie, so surnamed of the place of his birth, but by descent called Tibold the sonne of Nicholas Tibold, descended of a gentlemanlie race dwelling at Sudburie in Suffolke. This Simon was archbishop of Canturburie, and made chancellor about the yeare of Christ 1380, in the third yeare of Richard the second, and was by the rebels beheaded at the towre of London, in the fourth yeare of the disquieted gouernment of that vnfortunat, but valiant king Richard the second; after whom in the first yeare of the said king Richard, was K. B. of London, whereof I haue seene and taken a note: which bishop was (as I coniecture & haue some authoritie to prowe) Robert Braibrooke which followeth, & was made chancellor againe after sir Richard Scrope.

Simon Sudburie.

Sir Richard Scrope lord Scrope of Bolton.

Sir Richard Scrope knight lord of Bolton, made chancellor againe about the latter end of Nouember, by the lords of the parlement (as I take it) in the fift yeare of the reigne of king Richard last mentioned, and was the yeare following, being about the yeare of our Lord 1383 againe deposed from his office, and the king receiuing the great seale, kept it a certeine time, and therewith sealed such grants and writings as it pleased him, and in the end deliuered the same to Robert Braibrooke. Of this man see more in the treasurors before.

Robert Braibrooke bishop of London made lord chancellor in September following the moneth of Julie, when sir Richard Scrope was deposed, was aduanced to that dignitie on saint Matthews eeue, in the first yeare of the reigne of the said king Richard the second, in which he continued not longer than the March following, as hath Anonymus M. S. he was consecrated bishop of London the fift of Januarie 1381, he died the seuentæenth of August in the yeare 1404, being the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth.

Robert Braibrooke bishop of London.

Michaell de la Pole, or at Poole (as hath Thomas Walsingham) was made chancellor in the moneth of March, in the first yeare of the said king Richard the second, and was made earle of Suffolke in the ninth yeare of the said king, being after deposed from his office of chancellorship at his owne and earnest request in the tenth yeare of the said king. This man hauing fled the realme, for that he was pursued by the nobilitie, died at Paris in the thirteenth yeare of the said Richard the second, being the yeare of our redemption 1389, of whom that worthie poet sir John Gower, liuing at that time, in his booke intituled Vox clamantis, composed these verses:

Michaell de la Pole earle of Suffolke.

Est comes elatus, fallax, cupidus, sceleratus,
Fraudes per mille stat cancellarius ille,
Hic proceres odit, & eorum nomina rodit
Morsibus à tergo, fit tandem profugus ergo:
*Sic Deus in cœlis mala * de puteo Michaelis*
Acriter expurgat ne plùs comes ille resurgat.

* Michael de puteaco, or of the Poole.

Thomas Arundell, of the noble house of the earles of Arundell, was first bishop of Elie, and then of Yorke, and lastlie of Canturburie, he was made lord chancellor of England in the tenth yeare of the reigne of the vnfortunat king Richard the second, being about the yeare of our redemption 1386, in which office he remained about two yeares, as farre as my search will giue leaue to vnderstand.

Thomas Arundell bishop of Elie.

William Wickham was againe made lord chancellor of England, in the twelfe yeare of the said king Richard the second, but was in the end remoued from thense in September, in the fiftæenth yeare of the troublesome gouernement of the said king Richard.

William Wickham.

Thomas Arundell afore said was the second time created lord chancellor of England (in the said fiftæenth yeare of king Richard the second) in place of William Wickham, in which office he remained about fiue yeares, and was deposed and banished the realme in the twentith yeare of the said king Richard.

Thomas Arundell.

John Scarle, Scirlæ, or Serle, maister of the rolles, of the chancerie, and keeper of the great seale: he was chancellor, or in place of the chancellor, in the first yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare in which the sonne of God descending from the bosome of his father, take flesh in the wombe of his mother, one thousand three hundred ninetie and nine.

John Serle master of the rols.

Edmund Stafford keeper of the priuie seale, bishop of Exceter, and sometime bishop of Rochester, and lastlie bishop of Yorke, keeper of the priuie seale, and borne of the noble house of the Staffords, was made lord chancellor of England about the moneth of March, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand and foure hundred, being about the second yere of the vsurping king Henrie the fourth, in which office he continued vntill the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred and three, being the fourth yeare of the said king Henrie the fourth. He being keeper of the priuie seale was made bishop of Exceter the twentith of June, in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three hundred ninetie & fiue, being the daie before king Richard the second began the Edmund Stafford.

the one and twentith yeare of his reigne. He was consecrated at Lambeth, and kept the see of Excester three and twentie yeares. He increased two fellowships in Stapletons inne in Oxford, reformed the statutes of the house, and called it Excester college: he died the fourth of September, in the seuenth yeare of king Henrie the fift, being the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and nineteene. About the making of this Stafford chancellor (as farre as my memorie serueth) Ypodigma is much deceiued, if I haue not for want of the booke mistaken his iudgement.

Henrie Beauford.

Henrie Beauford, the sonne of Iohn of Gaunt by Katharine Swinesord, made bishop of Lincolne in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred ninetie and eight (as hath Ypodigma) was aduanced to the dignitie of chancellor in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred & three, being the fourth yeare of king Henrie the fourth his elder brother, by the daughter of the earle of Hereford, in which office he was in the fift yeare of king Henrie the fourth, and sixt of the same king (as our chronicles do remember.) He was made bishop of Winchester in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and foure, being the fift yeare of Henrie the fourth.

Thomas Langleie bishop of Durham.

Thomas Langleie priest, and bishop of Durham, was at Westminster made chancellor, in the yeare of our saluation one thousand foure hundred and fiue, being the first yeare of the reigne of the said king Henrie the fourth, in which office he continued (as farre as I know) vntill he was made bishop of Durham, which was on the seuenth of Maie, being the seuenth yeare of the reigne of king Henrie last before named, being the years of Christ one thousand foure hundred and six. He was bishop one and thirtie yeares, and died in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie and seuen, being the sixteenth yeare of king Henrie the first. See more following.

Thomas Fitzalen.

Thomas Fitzalen, brother to Richard earle of Arundell, being returned out of exile with Henrie of Bollingbroke duke of Hereford and Lancaster, and after king of England by the name of Henrie the fourth, was the third time being bishop of Canturburie, made lord chancellor of England, the ninth yeare of the said king Henrie the fourth, and continued therein about two years, being remoued from that place about September, in the eleuenth yeare of the reigne of the said king, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and ten.

Thomas Beauford.

Thomas Beauford knight, the sonne of Iohn of Gaunt son to king Edward the third, & brother to king Henrie the fourth, was made lord chancellor in the eleuenth yere of the said king Henrie the fourth, being the yeare that the sonne of God toke on him the forme of a seruant one thousand foure hundred and ten, in which office he remained not full three yeares, but left the same office together with his life, as I suppose, in the thirteenth yeare of the same king, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and twelue.

John Wakering clearke.

John Wakering clearke, maister of the rolles, was made keeper of the great seale, when Thomas Beauford left the office of chancellor, which seale he kept about the space of a moneth. For in Ianuarie after that he receiued the seale, there was a chancellor created.

Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie.

Thomas Fitzalen or Arundell, archbishop of Canturburie, was the fourth time inuested with the chancellorship, in the yeare of our saluation one thousand foure hundred and twelue, being the thirteenth yeare of king Henrie the fourth, in which office he continued during the life of the said king Henrie the fourth, who died in the fourteenth yeare of his kingdome, and in the yere of our Lord one thousand foure hundred and thirteene.

Henrie Beauford bishop at winchester.

Henrie Beauford bishop of Winchester, and after cardinall in the time of Henrie the first, being vncle to king Henrie the fift then reigning, was the second time made chancellor, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and thirteene, being the first yeare of the fift king Henrie, in which place he remained vntill the fift yeare of the said king Henrie, being the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred and seuenteene.

Thomas Langleie bishop of Durham.

Thomas Langleie bishop of Durham was the second time made lord chancellor of England, in the said yere of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and seuenteene, being the fift yeare of that worthie conqueror king Henrie the fift, which office he receiued at Southwicke, and continued in that honour (as farre as I can learne) by the space of six yeares or more, whereof fiue yeares were fullie ended in the life and death of the said Henrie the fift, and the first yeare ended in the last of the first or beginning of the second yeare of king Henrie the first.

Henrie Beauford bishop of Winchester.

Henrie Beauford bishop of Winchester before named, was the third time made lord chancellor of England, in the second yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first, being about the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred twentie and three, or one thousand foure hundred twentie and foure. For the second yeare of that king fell part in the one and part in the other of the said yeares of our Lord, in which office he continued about foure yeares, vntill he was made cardinall, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred twentie and six.

John Kempe bishop of London.

John Kempe, bishop of London, was made lord chancellor of England in the fourth yere of that king Henrie, who in his youngest yeares was crowned first king of England, and then king of France in Paris; in which office he remained (as I suppose) about six yeares.

John Stafford bishop of Bath.

John Stafford deane of S. Martins of Welles, prebend of Milton in Lincolne church, bishop of Bath and Welles, lord chancellor and treasurer of England, and bishop of Canturburie, was made lord chancellor of England in the moneth of Februarie, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie & one, falling in the tenth yeare of king Henrie the first: he remained in that office vntill Iohn Kempe was againe made lord chancellor, which was about the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first. And here I think it not vnmeet to remember that some haue noted William Wanflet that was bishop of Winchester, and chancellor of Oxford, to be chancellor of England, when he built Magdalen college in Oxford, in the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the first: which possiblie can not be, sith this Iohn Stafford held that office from the tenth of Henrie the first, vntill the eight & twentith of the same king, which was eightene yeares: during which time they place this Wanflet to bee chancellor of England. Which error (I suppose) they haue commited, in that they finding him chancellor at the time of the building of his college, in the said fiue and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first, haue taken him to be chancellor of England, when he was then but chancellor of Oxford: although in deed afterward he was chancellor of England, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of the said king, as after shall appeare.

John Kempe bishop of Yorke.

John Kempe bishop of Yorke and cardinall, was the second time made lord chancellor in the eight and twentith of king Henrie the first, being about the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and fiftie, in which office he died, being bishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our redemption (as saith

saith Matthew Parker, one thousand foure hundred fiftie and three, being the two & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the simple king Henrie the first. This man was first bishop of Rochester, next of Chicester, thirdlie of London, then of Yorke, where he sat eight and twentie yeares, and lastlie he was archbishop of Canturburie.

Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie.

Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie, the sonne of Rafe Neuill earle of Westmerland, and father to the valiant Richard Neuill earle of Warwike, was after the death of John Kempe by parlement made lord chancellor in the two & thirtith yeare of K. Henrie the first: though others make it to be in the three & thirtith yeare of the same king, in which place he continued not long. For in the yeare following an other was substituted, and he remoued.

Thomas Bourchier bishop of Elie.

Thomas Bourchier (brother to Henrie Bourchier earle of Esser) bishop of Elie, and bishop of Canturburie, was made chancellor in the three & thirtith yeare of the gouernement of king Henrie the first, in which he remained much about two yeares. In whose time, as saith Matthew Parker, about the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred three score and one, was the art of printing inuented at the citie of Argentorat in Germanie. About the which matter, and especiallie for the exact & certeine time thereof, manie writers although their count about one time do disagree: yet at the inuention of that worthie thing were these verses composed in the commendation of the same most excellent art.

In vita Thome Bourcheri episco. Cantuar.

O felix nostris memoranda impressio tectis,
Inuentore nitet vtraque lingua tuo.
Desierat quasi totum quod fundis in orbe,
Nunc paruo doctus quilibet esse potest.
Omnes te homines igitur nunc laudibus ornent,
Te duce quando ars hæc mira reperta fuit.

William Patan, or Paten aliàs William Wansled.

William Patan or Paten, borne of a gentlemanlie familie, being commonlie called William Wansled of the place of his birth, and being prouost of Eaton, and bishop of Winchester, was lord chancellor in the fiue and thirtith, six and thirtith, and the seuen and thirtith yeare of the vnfortunat king Henrie the first, as haue the records of the exchekер. By which appeareth the error of those, as I haue before noted, that mistaking the fiue and twentith of king Henrie the first, in which time he was but chancellor of Oxford; for the fiue and thirtith of the said king, in which he was chancellor of England.

George Neuill archbishop of Yorke.

George Neuill (the sonne of Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie, and brother to Richard Neuill earle of Warwike) being made bishop of Excester, came to that see in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred fiftie and fiue; in which see he continued ten yeares, and was remoued to Yorke in the yeare that God became man one thousand foure hundred three score and fiue, he was made lord chancellor in the eight & thirtith yeare of the reigne of the after deposed K. Henrie the first, in which office he remained about eight yeares, & then was remoued in the seuenth yeare of the worthie K. Edward the fourth, being the yeare that the word became flesh one thousand foure hundred three score & seuen. He was a great friend to saint Albons, procured Edward the fourth in the fourth yeare of his reigne to giue & confirme to John Whethamsted, abbat of saint Albons, the priorie of Penbroke. This bishop Neuill did after in the thirteenth yeare of king Edward the fourth grow in such disgrace with the king, that he was spoiled at one time of twentie thousand pounds, as in his life shall be more at large declared. To this man did Hugh Veine giue the manour of Hener Cobham, and Hener Brokas in Kent, in the fourth yeare of king Edward the fourth. He died at Blithlaw comming from Yorke, being almost fortie yeares old, and was buried at Yorke. And here I thinke it not amisse, to note the mistaking of time of such historiographers as haue set downe, that Edward the fourth did, in the fourth yeare of his reigne, take the chancellorship from the bishop of Excester (brother to the earle of Warwike, which must néeds be this George Neuill) & gaue the same to the bishop of Bath. For by that which I haue séene, this Neuill liued vntill the seuenth yeare of Edward the fourth, and that for this time I suppose to be the truest.

Robert Kirkeham maister of the rolles was made lord kéeper of the great seale (vpon the remouing of George Neuill) in the moneth of Julie in the said yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred three score and seuen, being the seuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth.

Robert Kirkeham maister of the rolles.

Robert Stillington doctor of the lawes, kéeper of the priuie seale in the third yeare of Edward the fourth, bishop of Bath & Wels, being made chancellor in the seuenth yeare of king Edward the fourth, did still so continue (as I gather) vntill the thirteenth yeare of the said king.

Robert Stillington doctor of the lawes.

Henrie Bourchier earle of Esser, and first aduanced to that title of honor by Edward the fourth, came in place of the last chancellor, about the fourteenth yeare (as some vntrulie haue noted) of Edward the fourth. But in my poore opinion, the same was in the thirteenth yeare of the said Edward the fouth: in which place he remained not much more than one Trinitie terme. For in the said thirteenth yeare, about the moneth of August, was Both lord chancellor of England.

Henrie Bourchier earle of Esser.

Laurence Both sometime maister of Penbroke hall bishop of Durham, and after of Yorke, was made lord chancellor about August or rather before, betweene that and Trinitie terme (after Henrie Bourchier) in the said thirteenth yeare of the valiant king Edward the fourth, after his redemption of the kingdome of England. This bishop (being brother to William Both sometime bishop of Yorke) did build the bishop of Yorks house at Baterseie, which manour he before bought of Nicholas Stanleie, whome Leland the minser and refiner of all English names doth most curiouslie in Latine call Nicholaum Stenelegium. He continued in the sée of Yorke three yeares & nine moneths, and died at Southwell in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred and foure score, being the twentith yeare of king Edward the fourth.

Laurence Both bishop of Durham.

Thomas Scot aliàs Rotheram.

Thomas Scot surnamed Rotheram, because of the towne of Rotheram in Yorkeshire where he was borne and bred vp, was bishop of Rochester, and then of Lincolne, where he sat nine yeares, and after that was bishop of Yorke: whereinto he installed first at Yorke, and then at Ripon, being prouost of Beuerleie, he was made chancellor of England in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred seuentie and foure, being the fourteenth yeare of the reigne of king Edward the fourth. This bishop, in the fifteenth yeare of the said king, went ouer the sea (as I haue séene noted) with the said Edward the fourth, when he went to haue an interuiew with the French king: of which meeting monsieur de Argentine by name Philip Comineus (besides our English chronicles) doth make mention, as a person that bare a part in that pageant.

John Alcot bishop of Rochester.

John Alcot bishop of Rochester was made chancellor, during the absence of king Edward, as I haue found recorded.

Thomas Rotheram.

Thomas Rotheram, being before lord kéeper of the priuie seale, was after his returne out of France the second time made lord chancellor, about the time in in which the said king had gotten Werwike from the Scots, being about the twentith yeare of the said Edward the fourth. For the free gaining of the towne was not much before his death; in which office this Rotheram continued all the life of king Edward the fourth, & in the time of the little or no reigne at all of the guiltlesse murthered yong prince king Edward the fift; vntill it was ascribed to him for ouermuch lightnesse, that he had deliuered in the beginning of the rebellious gouernement of the protectorship of the bloudie and vnnaturall Richard duke of Glocester the seale to the quéene, to whome it did not apperteine, and from whome he receiued it not. He founded a college at Rotheram, dedicated it to the name of Jesus, & indowed it with great possessions & ornaments, and annexed therto the churches of Langthton and Almanburie.

John Russell bishop of Lincolne.

John Russell bishop of Lincolne, a graue and learned man, had the seale deliuered to him by the said protector of England, during the time of the short reigne of the yong king Edward, when the same seale was taken from Rotheram: and so this Russell was made chancellor in the moneth of June, in the yeare of our saluation one thousand foure hundred foure score and three, being the first yeare of the vsurped gouernement of the bloudie tyrant the mishapen king Richard the third. This Russell is buried in the church of Lincolne, in a chappell cast out of the vpper wall of the south part of the church.

Thomas Barow maister of the rolles.

Thomas Barow maister of the rolles was made keeper of the great seale (as I haue séene recorded) which I suppose, was in the third and last yeare of the said king Richard the third: for in that yeare he was maister of the rolles.

Thomas Rotheram.

Thomas Rotheram made againe lord chancellor, in the first entrance of king Henrie the seuenth into the gouernement: but verie shortlie after he was displaced, and the bishop of Worcester placed in that rowme; he was archbishop of Yorke ninténe yeares & ten moneths; he was verie beneficiall to all his kinred, and aduanced some with mariages, some with possessions, and some with spirituall liuings. He died the nine and twentith date of December, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred, being the sixtéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight, at Cawood in Yorkeshire the morrow after the Ascension, being of the age of three score and sixténe yeares or more: he was buried in Yorke minster on the north side in our ladie chappell, in a tome of marble which he caused to be made whilest he was liuing.

John Alcot bishop of Worcester.

John Alcot bishop of Worcester, made in the yeare one thousand foure hundred three score and sixténe, was lord chancellor of England in the first yeare of the said K. Henrie the seuenth, the Salomon of England, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred foure score & fiue: shortlie after the entrance of the said Henrie into the gouernement of England. For though Rotheram were chancellor when he got the victorie, for that he had béene so before, & for that the king was neither prouided nor minded suddenlie to haue a man not méete for that place to execute the same: yet this Rotheram kept not that rowme manie moneths, but that Alcot came in place; because the king found Alcot a méeter person to execute the same office, answerable to the disposition of the kings humor. All which notwithstanding, whether for malice of others, or for his owne deserts, or both, or for more especiall trust that king Henrie put in Morton bishop of Elie, who had béene the meanes to bring him to the crowne, this Alcot fell shortlie in the kings disgrace, was displaced of his office, and Morton came in his rowme. So that in this first yeare of the said king Henrie the seuenth, there séemed to be three chancellors in succession one after another, if I haue not misconceiued the matter: all which before Morton in this first yeare of king Henrie the seuenth, may perhaps more properlie be termed keepers of the great seale, than chancellors.

John Morton bishop of Elie.

John Morton doctor of the ciuill law, an aduocat in the ciuill, of the councell to Henrie the first and to Edward the fourth, to whome also he was maister of the rolles, was made bishop of Elie in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred three score and eighténe, and lord chancellor of England, (vpon his returne from beyond the seas) in the first yeare of the worthie prince K. Henrie the seuenth, being the yeare that the word became flesh, one thousand foure hundred foure score and fiue: after which he was aduanced to the bishoprike of Canturburie; he died in the yeare of our redemption one thousand foure hundred foure score and ninténe, in the fiftéenth yere of the reigne of king Henrie the seuenth, as hath Matthew Parker.

William Warham archbishop of Canturburie.

William Warham aduocat in the arches, maister of the rolles, bishop of London, and then bishop of Canturburie; was (before his aduancement to the see of Canturburie) made chancellor of England in the time of Henrie the seuenth, in which office he continued vntill about the latter end of the seuenth yeare of king Henrie the eight. At what time surrendring the seale by reason of his age and weakenesse, the same great seale was deliuered to Thomas Wolsele.

Thomas Wolsele.

Thomas Wolsele somtime chapleine to Henrie Deane archbishop of Canturburie, after the kings almoner and abbat of saint Aulkins, who possessing manie other abbeies and bishoprikes, as in other places shall more largelie appeare, was aduanced to the gouernment of the great seale, about the beginning of the eight yeare of the triumphant reigne of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our Lord and Sauior Jesus Christ one thousand fiue hundred sixténe, to hold the same during his life (as I gather) in which office yet he continued not aboue thirténe yeares, vntill the one and twentith of the said king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred twentie and nine. During which time of his chancellorship, in the nintéenth yere of king Henrie the eight, being the yere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and seauen, he went into France, representing the king of Englands person, to set order for the deliuerie of pope Clement the seuenth and Francis the French king, at what time he carried the great seale ouer the seas to Calis, which seale he left with doctor Taylor maister of the rolles, to keepe the same at Calis vntill the cardinals returne out of the French dominions. He died in Leicester abbeie (not without suspicion of poison as was thought, which he had prepared for himselfe, and giuen to his apothecarie to deliuer when he called for it) the two and twentith of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and thirtie.

Thomas Moore.

Thomas Moore knight, sometime vndershiriffe of London, and chancellor of the dutchie of Lancaster, was aduanced to the honor of chancellorship of England, in the yere that the word became flesh one thousand fiue hundred twentie and nine, being the one and twentith yeere of that king Henrie which expelled pope Clement the seauenth his authoritie out of his dominions, in which office this rare witted knight (to vse Erasmus his epitheton) and learned chancellor continued not full three yeares; but in the foure and twentith yeare of the reigne of the said king Henrie the eight, with much labor and earnest sute he left his office. Touching which it shall not greéue me to set downe the words of Matthew Parker ker of the liues of the bishops of Canturburie in the life of Thomas Crannier writing after this maner: Interea rex dum papæ meditabatur excidium, singulorum de papali auctoritate sensus iudicijs haud obscuris collegit. Inter quos Thomas Morus, quia regis conatus pontificijs valdè suspectus fuit, cancellarij munere, venia regis ægrè impetrata, sese abdicauit.

Thomas Audleie. Thomas Audleie attornie of the dutchie of Lancaster, sergeant at the law (as most affirme) and speaker of the parlement, was made knight and lord kéeper of the great seale the fourth of June, in the foure and twentith yere of the reigne of the famous prince king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of our Lord God one thousand fiue hundred thirtie and two, not long after which he was indued with the title and honor of lord chancellor of England. This man in the tenth yere of his chancellorship, being the yere of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fortie and two, and the fiue and thirtith yeare of king Henrie the eight, changing the name of Buckingham college in Cambridge, did name it the college of saint Marie Magdalen, and indued it with some possessions. He died on Maie éeuen in the yeare of our saluation one thousand fiue hundred fortie and foure, being the fiue and thirtith yeare of Henrie the eight.

Histo. Cantab. per Caium. 78.

Thomas Wriotheslie. Thomas Wriotheslie knight of the garter, being created baron at Hampton court on the first of Januarie, in the fiue and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, in the yere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fortie and three, was after aduanced to the honor of the great seale and chancellorship of England, about the beginning of Maie, in the six and thirtith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the eight, being the yere of grace one thousand fiue hundred fortie and foure, in which office he continued vntill the death of the said king Henrie the eight, and in the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the first, vntill for his obstinacie in the Romane religion he was the first of March remoued, and the seale was deliuered to William Paulet lord Sent-John of Basing. This Wriotheslie (being created earle of Southampton by king Edward the first) died at his house of Lincolne place in Holborne the 30 of Julie, in the fourth yeare of the said king Edward, in the yéere 1550, & was buried at saint Andrews in Holborne commonlie called Holborne.

William Paulet. William Paulet knight being first steward of the lands of the bishoprike of Winchester, then treasuror of the houshold, lord Sent-John of Basing, lord great maister of the kings house, afterwards earle of Wiltshire, marquesse of Winchester, and treasuror of England, being of the priuie councell to king Henrie the eight, king Edward the first, quéene Marie, and quéene Elisabeth, had the kéeping of the great seale committed vnto him the seuenth daie of March, in the yeare that the second person in trinitie descended from the bosome of the father into the wombe of the mother one thousand fiue hundred fortis and seuen, being the first yere of the reigne of the yoong king Edward the first, which seale he had in custodie about seuen moneths, vntill the three and twentith or foure and twentith of October following, at what time sir Richard Rich was made lord chancellor.

Sir Richard Rich. Sir Richard Rich knight, lord Rich, was aduanced to the dignitie of lord chancellor of England about the 23 of October in the yere of our saluation one thousand fiue hundred fortie and seuen, being the first yeare of the reigne of the noble king Edward the first, in which place he remained about fiue yeers.

Thomas Goderich. Thomas Goderich or Godertke being bishop of Elie had the great seale deliuered to him, and was made lord chancellor of England the twentith of December (as Iohn Stow hath noted in his chronicle) in the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one, being the first yeare of the reigne of king Edward the first, in which office he continued all the life of the said king Edward, which died in Julie one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and three, being the seuenth yeare of his reigne, and about one moneth after vntill the thirteenth or foureteenth daie of August, in which quéene Marie made Stephan Gardener hir chancellor.

Sir Nicholas Hare. Sir Nicholas Hare, maister of the rolles, had at the comming of quéene Marie to the crowne the kéeping of the great seale, after the death of king Edward, as lord kéeper by the space of one fortnight, and shortlie after was Stephan Gardener made chancellor.

Stephan Gardener. Stephan Gardener bishop of Winchester was in August, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and three, being the first yeare of the reigne of the vnfortunat quéene Marie, made chancellor of England. This man going in ambassage vnto Calis left the great seale in the custodie of William Paulet marquesse of Winchester, which bishop after his returne into England continued in that office all the time of his life, which he ended the 19 of Nouember, in the yeare that the word became flesh one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue, being the third yeare of quéene Marie. After which the great seale lieng in the custodie of the prince, the on the new yeares daie following made a new chancellor.

Nicholas Heath. Nicholas Heath bishop of Rochester, almoner to the king, ambassador into Germanie, bishop of Worcester, president of Wales, and archbishop of Yorke, was vpon new yeares daie, in the yeare of our Lord God one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue, being the third yeare of the reigne of quéene Marie, aduanced to the honorable dignitie of the chancellorship. But quéene Marie deceasing the seauententh daie of Nouember, in the yeare of grace one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and eight, and the first yere of hir gouernement, this Heath vpon the placing of the worthie quéene Elisabeth vpon the throne of the English gouernment, was remoued from his office, and maister Bacon aduanced.

Nicholas Bacon. Sir Nicholas Bacon esquier, attourneie of the court of wards, was made knight, and lord kéeper of the great seale the two and twentith of December, in the yeare of our redemption 1558, being the first yeare of the now reigning Elisabeth the Saba of England. Which name of lord kéeper he still kept during his life, and the time of his office. In whose time there was an act of parlement established, to make the power of the kéeper of the great seale equall with the authoritie of the chancellor. This man continued in this office, and worthilie executed the same, being a man of rare wit and déepe experience, during the time of his life, which continued vntill the twentith of Februarie, in the yeare of our saluation 1578 after the account of England, being the one and twentith yeare of the rare and singular gouernement of the worlds wonder the famous quéene Elisabeth, which place this man kept eightéene yéeres, being (as I suppose) double as long time as anie other chancellor or kéeper of the great seale possessed that place, except Rafe Neuill bishop of Chichester, and John Stafford bishop of Bath and Wels, both which held it equallie eightéene yeares with him: a strange thing, that in the course of almost 600 yeares, no such officer might possesse that place by twentie years togither.

Thomas Bromleie. Thomas Bromleie, the generall solicitor of quéene Elisabeth, a councellor of the law, and one of the inner temple, was aduanced to the dignitie of lord chancellor on the fiue and twentith day of Aprill, in the yeare of our redemption 1579, being in the one & twentith yeare of the reigne of the said quéene Elisabeth, Elisabeth, which office at this date he beareth.

Thus (although I make be a little wethod in passing ouer the deepe sea of this difficultie of the chancellors, in which I am sure I am not ouer head and eares) I haue at length brought my chancellors to end: a worke of some labour and difficultie, of some search and charge, which I haue done onelie of my selfe without the furtherance or help of some others, who more inconsideratlie than trulie doo disorderlie report, that I haue atteined vnto this in obteining those names by some sinister means, from the priuat bookes of them who haue trauelled in the same matter. In which (as I said in the begining, so I saie againe) if anie imperfection for hast, by reason of the printers spéedie calling on me, haue now fallen out of my pen, it shall hereafter God willing be corrected in the large volume of their liues. Wherefore as I neither estéeme nor feare the secret reports of some others; so for their countries good it shall be well that they would deliuer something to the world to bring truth to perfection (if other men haue vnwillinglie set downe error) and not as they doo, for a litle commoditie gaine to themselues, neither benefit their countrie, nor speake well of such as would and doo helpe posteritie. Thus this much by Francis Thin, touching the chancellors of England.]

Ab.Fl. ex publicis æditionibus B.G. & T.C.

¶ Here though somewhat out of place (for it should haue béene entered in 1578) it were better to record the receiuing of the quéenes maiestie into Suffolke & Norffolke, than making no commemoration therof at all, to let it perish in thréehalfepenie pamphlets, and so die in oblivion. It make also serue for a rest of recreation, after so long an introduction of serious matters, as also (and that most worthilie) make remaine in record, to signifie what well affected subiects the quéens maiestie hath within hir dominions, to whome goods, lands, friends, kindred, or life, none of these seuerallie, nor all iointlie, are so pretious and deere, but for hir sake they can find in their hearts to estéeme them as dong. And now to the matter. The truth is (saith one that wrote the whole interteinment) that albeit they had but small warning certeinlie to build vpon, of the comming of the quænes maiestie into both those shires, the gentlemen had made such readie prouision, that all the veluets and silks were taken vp that might be laid hand on, and bought for ante monie, and sone conuerted to such garments and sutes of robes, that the shew thereof might haue beautified the greatest triumph that was in England these manie yeares. For (as it was said) there were two hundred yong gentlemen clad all in white veluet, and three hundred of the grauer sort apparelled in blacke veluet cotes, and faire chaines, all readie at one instant and place, with fiftéene hundred seruing men more on horssebacke, well and brauelie mounted in good order, readie to receiue the quénes highnesse into Suffolke, which surelie was a comelie troope, and a noble sight to behold: and all these waited on the shiriffe sir William Spring, during the quénes maiesties abode in those parties, and to the verie confines of Suffolke.

The receiuing of the quéene into Suffolke and Norffolke.

The number of gentlemen that receiued the quéene into Suffolke.

But before hir highnesse passed to Norffolke, there was in Suffolke such sumptuous feasting and bankets, as seldome in anie part of the world haue béene séene before. The maister of the rolles sir William Cordall was one of the first that began this great feasting, and did light such a candle to the rest of the shire, that manie were glad bountifullie and frankelie to follow the same example, with such charges and costs, as the whole traine were in some sort pleased therwith. And nere Burie sir William Drurie for his part at his house made the quénes highnesse a costlie and delicat dinner, and sir Robert Germine of Koethbroke feasted the French ambassadors two seuerall times, with which charges and courtesie they stood maruellouslie contented. The shiriffe sir William Spring, sir Thomas Kidson, sir Arthur Higham, and diuerse others of worship, kept great heuses, and sundrie either at the quénes comming, or returne, solemnelie feasted hir highnesse, yea and defraied the whole charges for a date or twaine, presented gifts, made such triumphs and deuises, as indéed was most noble to behold, and verie thankfullie accepted.

Persons of worship in Suffolke that feasted hir highnesse during hir abode amongst them.

Norffolke incited by the example of Suffolke to giue ye quéene royall interteinment.

The Norffolke gentlemen hearing how dutifullie their neighbors had receiued the prince, prepared in like sort to shew themselues dutifull: and so in most gallant maner they assembled and set forward with fiue and twentie hundred horssemen, wherof (as some affirme) were six hundred gentlemen, so brauelie attired and mounted, as in déed was worthie the noting, which goodly companie waited on their shirife a long season. But in good soth (as it was crediblie spoken) the bankets and feasts began here afresh, all kinds of triumphs that might be deuised were put in practise and prose. The earle of Surreie did shew most sumptuous cheare, in whose parke were speaches well set out, and a spectall deuise much commended: and the rest, as a number of iollie gentlemen, were no whit behind to the vttermost of their abilities, in all that might be done and deuised.

What order was taken in Norwich for the receiuing and recreating of the quéene.

But when the quénes highnesse came to Norwich, the substance of the whole triumph and feasting was in a maner there new to begin. For order was taken there, that euerie date for six dates together, a shew of some strange deuise should be séene. And the maior and aldermen apointed among themselues and their brethren, that no one person reteining to the quéene should be vnfeasted, or vnbidden to dinner & supper, during the space of those six dates: which order was well & wiselie obserued, and gained their citie more fame and credit than they wot of: for that courtesie of theirs shall remaine in perpetuall memorie whiles the walles of their citie standeth. Besides the monie they bestowed vpon diuerse of the traine, and those that toke paines for them, will be a witnesse of their well doing and good will, whiles the report of these things make be called to remembrance. Now, who can (considering their great charges and discréet gouernement in these causes) but giue them due laud and reputation, as farre as either pen or report make doo them good & stretch out their credit. For most assuredlie, they haue taught and learned all the townes and cities in England a lesson, how to behaue themselues in such like seruices and actions.

The maior of Norwich with his attendants set forth to receiue the quéene.

On saturdaie being the sixtenth of August 1578, and in the twentith yeare of the reigne of our most gratious souereigne ladie Elisabeth, by the grace of God quéene of England, France & Ireland, defender of the faith, &c: the same our most dread and souereigne ladie (continuing hir progresse in Norffolke) immediatlie after dinner set forward from Brakenash, where she had dined with the ladie Stile, being fiue miles distant from Norwich, towards the same hir most dutifull citie. Sir Robert Wood then esquier, now knight, maior of the same citie, at one of the clocke in the same happie date, set forward to méet with hir maiestie in this order. First there rode before him well and séemelie mounted, three score of the most comelie yong men of the citie, as batchellers apparelled all in blacke satten dublets, blacke hose, blacke taffata hats, and yellow bands, and their vniuersall liuerie was a mandilion of purple taffata, laid about with siluer lase: & so apparelled they marched forwards two and two in a ranke. Then one which which represented king Gurgunt, sometime king of England, which builded the castell of Norwich, called Blanch Flowre, and laid the foundation of the citie. He was mounted vpon a braue courser, and was thus furnished: his bodie armed, his bases of græne and white silke: on his head a blacke veluet hat, with a plume of white feathers. There attended vpon him three henchmen in white and græne: one of them did beare his helmet, the second his target, the third his staffe: after him a noble companie of gentlemen and wealthie citizens in veluet coats and other costlie furniture, brauelie mounted. Then followed the officers of the citie euerie one in his place. Then the sword-bearer, with the sword & hat of maintenance. Then the maior and foure and twentie aldermen, and the recorder all in scarlet gownes, whereof so manie as had béene maiors of the citie, and were iustices, did weare their scarlet clokes: then followed so manie as had béene shiriffs, and were no aldermen, in violet gownes and sattin tipets. Then followed diuerse others, to kéepe the people from disturbing the araie aforesaid.

The builder of Norwich castell represented.

The founder of Blanch Flowre staieth in person to méet the quéene.

Thus euerie thing in due and comelie order, they all (except Gurgunt, which staied his maiesties comming within a flight shot or two of the citie, where the castell of Blanch Flowre was in most beautifull prospect) marched forwards to a bridge, called Hartford bridge, the vttermost limit that waie, distant from the citie two miles or there abouts, to méet with his maiestie; who within one houre or little more after their attendance, came in such gratious and princelie wise, as rauished the harts of all his louing subiects, and might haue terrified the stoutest heart of anie enimie to behold. Whether the maiestie of the prince, which is incomparable; or ioie of his subiects, which exceeded measure, were the greater, I thinke would haue appalled the iudgement of Apollo to define. The acclamations and cries of the people to the almightie God for the preseruation of his maiestie ratled so lowd, as hardly for a great time could anie thing be heard. But at last, as euerie thing hath an end, the noise appeased: and the maior saluted his highnesse with the oration following, and yelded to his maiestie therewith the sword of the citie, and a faire standing cup of siluer and guilt, with a couer, and in the cup one hundred pounds in gold. The oration was in these words.

Prætoris Nordouicensis ad sereniſſimam Reginam, &c.

SI nobis ab Opt. Max. concederetur optio quid rerũ humanarũ nunc potißimùm vellemus: nihil duceremus antiquius (auguſtißima princeps) quàm vt tuus ille, qui ita nos recreat, caſtißimi ocelli radius poſſet in abditißimos cordium noſtrorũ angulos ſe conferre. Cerneres profectò quanta ſint hilaritate perfuſa, quàm in ipſis arterijs & venulis ſpiritus & ſanguis geſtiant: dum intuemur te huius regni lumen (vt Dauid olim fuit Iſraelitici) in hijs tandem finibus poſt longam ſpem, & ardentißima vota exoriri. Equidem vt pro me, qui tua ex authoritate & clementia (quod humillimis gratijs profiteor) celeberrimæ huic ciuitati præſum, & pro hijs meis fratribus, atq; omni hoc populo quem tuis auſpicijs regimus, ex illorum ſenſu loquar, quod & ipſe ſentio: ſic nos demum ſupplicibus votis expoſcimus, vt maieſtatem tuam beneuolam nobis, & propitiam experiamur: vt nunquam cuiquam populo aduenißti gratior quàm nobis. In illius rei luculentißimũ indicium, inſignia hæc honoris, & offi-

Prætoris pro se suisq; fratribus obtestatio.

cij noſtri, quæ nobis clementißimus princeps Henricus quartus quinto ſui regni anno cũ prætore, ſenatoribus, & vicecomitibus cõceßit: (cùm antea balliuis (vt vocant) vltra annalium noſtrorum memoriam regeremur) perpetuis deinde regum priuilegijs, & corroborata nobis, & aucta magnificè, maieſtati tuæ omnia exhibemus, quæ per tuam vnius clementiam (quam cum immortalibus gratijs prædicare nunquam ceſſabimus) viceſimo tam anno tenuimus: atq; vnâ cum illis, hunc theſaurum, quaſi pignus noſtrarum & voluntatum & facultatum. Quas omnes, quantæ, quantulæue ſint, ad tuum arbitrium deuouimus: vt ſi quid omni hoc fœliciſſimi tui temporis decurſu admiſimus, quod amantißimos, obſequentißimos, amplitudinis tuæ ſaluti, coronæ, emolumento deuotißimos non deceat: ſtatuas de nobis, & noſtris omnibus, pro tua clementißima voluntate. Sin ita clauum huius ciuitatis (Deo duce) reximus: vt eam in portu ſaluam maieſtati tuæ conſeruauerimus, & populum primum gloriæ Dei, & veræ religionis, deinde ſalutis, honoris, & voluntatis tuæ ſtudioſißimum, quantum in nobis eſt, effecerimus: tum non libet nobis id à te petere, quod inſita tibi ſingularis clementia facillimè à te ipſa impetrabit. Tantum obſecramus, vt amplitudinem tuam Deus omnibus & animi & corporis bonis cumulatißimè beare velit, Amen.

Henricus quartus ciuitati Nordouicensi princeps munificentißimus

Prætoris pro se suisq; fratribus quàm significanter facta oratio.

The maiors oration to the queene Englished.

IF our wish should be granted vnto vs by the almightie, what humane thing wee would chiefliе desire: we would account nothing more pretious (most roial prince) than that the bright beame of your most chast eie which dooth so cheare vs, might pearse the secret and strait corners of our hearts. Then surelie should you see how great ioies are dispersed there, and how the spirits and liuelie bloud tickle in our arteries & small veines, in beholding you the light of this realme (as Dauid was of Israel) now at length, after long hope and earnest petitions, to appeare in these coasts. Truelie on mine owne part, which by your highnesse authoritie and clemencie (with humble thanks bee it spoken) doo gouerne this famous citie, and on the part of these my brethren, and all these people which by your authoritie we rule (speaking as they meane, and as I my selfe doo thinke) this onelie with all our hearts and humble praiers we desire, that we maie so find your maiestie gratious and fauourable vnto vs, as you for your part neuer came to anie subiects better welcome than to vs your poore subiects here. For most manifest token whereof, we present vnto your maiestie here, these signes of honor and office, which we receiued of the most mightie prince Henrie the fourth, in the fift yere of his reigne, then to vs granted in the name of maior, aldermen and shiriffs; whereas before time out of mind or mention, we were gouerned by bailiffs (as they tearme them) which euer since haue beene both established and increased with continuall priuileges of kings: and which by your onelie clemencie (which with immortall thanks we shall neuer cease to declare) we haue now these twentie yeares inioied: and togither with those signes, this treasure is a pledge of our good willes and abilitie: which all how great or little so euer they be, wee powre downe at your pleasure, that if we haue neglected anie thing in all this course of your most happie reigne, which becommeth most louing, obedient and well willing subiects to performe, for the preseruation of your crowne, and aduancement of your

The maior speaketh in his owne and his brethren the aldermens behalfe.

Henrie the fourth a most bountifull prince to the citie of Norwich.

A most dutifull submission.

highnesse, you maie then determine of vs and all ours at your most gratious pleasure. But if we haue (God being our guide) so ordered the gouernance of this citie, that we haue kept the same in safetie to your maiesties vse, and made the people therein (as much as in vs lieth) first most studious of Gods glorie and true religion, and next of your maiesties health, honour, and pleasure; then aske we nothing of you: for that the singular clemencie ingraffed in your highnesse, will easilie of it selfe grant that which is requisit for vs to obteine. We onelie therefore desire, that God would abundantlie blesse your highnesse with all good gifts of mind and bodie.

wherein the dutie of subiects chiefle consisteth.

Which oration ended, hir maiestie accepting in good part euerie thing deliuered by the maior, did thankefullie answer him in these words, or verie like in effect: We hartilie thanke you maister maior, and all the rest, for these tokens of goodwill; neuertheless, princes haue no need of monie: God hath indued vs abundantlie, we come not therefore, but for that which in right is our owne, the hearts and true allegiance of our subiects, which are the greatest riches of a kingdome; whereof as we assure our selues in you, so do you assure your selues in vs of a louing and gratious souereigne. Wherewith was deliuered to the maior, a mace or scepter, which he carried before hir to hir lodging, which was in the bishop of Norwich his palace, two miles distant from that place. The cup and monie was deliuered to a gentleman, one of hir maiesties footmen to carrie. The maior said to hir, Sunt hic centum libræ puri auri. The couer of the cup lifted vp, hir maiestie said to the footmen; Looke to it, there is 100 pounds. With that hir highnesse, with the whole companie, marched towards Norwich, till they came to a place called the Towne close, distant from the citie a good slightshot, where the partie which represented Gurgunt came forth, as in due maner is expressed, and was readie to haue declared to hir maiestie this speech following; but by reason of a shower of raine which came, hir maiestie hasted awaie, the speech not vttered. But thus it was as here followeth.

The quéns maiesties acceptable answer vttered by hir owne mouth in person.

Gurguntius his speech cut off by a shower of raine.

Leaue off to muse most gratious prince of English soile,
What sudden wight in martiall wise approcheth neere:
King Gurgunt I am hight, king Belins eldest sonne,
Whose sire Dunwallo first, the British crowne did weare.
Whom truthlesse Gutlacke forst to passe the surging seas,
His kalkhod to reuenge, and Denmarke land to spoile.
And finding in returne, this place a gallant vent,
This castle faire I built, afort from forren soile:
To win a conquest, get renowme and glorious name,
To keepe and vse it well, deserues eternall fame.
When brute through cities, townes, the woods & dales did sound:
Elizabeth this countrie peerelesse queene drew neere:
I was found out, my selfe in person noble queene
Did hast, before thy face in presence to appeare.
Two thousand yeares welnie in silence lurking still;
Heare, why to thee alone this seruice I doo yeeld.
Besides that, at my cities sute their founder first
Should gratulat most this ioifull sight in open field,
Foure speciall points and rare concurring in vs both
This speciall seruice haue reserud to thee alone:
The glorie though of each in thee dooth far surmount,
Yet great with small compard, will like appeare anon.
When doubtfull warres the British princes long had wroong,
My grandsire first vniting all did weare the crowne.
Of Yorke and Lancaster, who did conclude those broiles?
Thy grandsire Henrie seuenth, a king of great renowne.
Mine vncle Brennus eke, my father ioining hands,
Old Rome did rase and sacke, and halfe consume with fire:
Thy puissant father so, new Rome that purple whore
Did sacke and spoile hir neere, of all hir glittering tire.
Lo Cambridge schooles by mine assignement founded first,
By thee my Cambridge schooles are famous through the world,
I thirtie wandring ships of banisht men relieued.
The throngs of banisht soules that in this citie dwell,
Do weepe for ioy: and praie for thee with teares vntold:
In all these things thou noble queene doost far excell.
But lo to thee I yeeld as dutie dooth me bind
In open field my selfe, my citie, castle, keie,
Most happie fathers kings in such a daughter queene,
Most happie England were, if thou shouldst neuer die.
Go on most noble prince, for I must hast awaie
My citie gates doo long, their souereigne to receaue:
More true thou neuer couldst, nor loiall subiects find,
Whose harts full fast with perfect loue to thee doo cleaue.

Gurguntius the eldest son of Belinus.

The ancientnesse of Norwich citie by the founders age may be gathered.

King Henrie the seuenth, and king Henrie the eight.

Gurguntius yeeldeth his estate to the quæne.

When hir maiestie drew nére the gates of the citie called saint Stephans gates, which with the wals there were both gallantlie and stronglie repared. The gate it selfe was thus inriched and beautified. First the portcullice was new made both timber & iron. Then the outward side of the gate was thus beautified. The quénes armes were most richlie and beautifullie set forth in the chiefe front of the gate. On the one side thereof, but somewhat lower, was placed the scutchion of saint George his crosse: on the other side, the armes of the citie: and directlie vnder the queenes maiesties armes, was placed the falcon, hir highnesse badge, in due forme, and vnder the same were written these words, God and the queene we serue. The inner side of the gate was thus beautified. On the right side was gorgeouslie set forth the red rose, signifieng the house of Yorke; on the left side the white rose, representing the house of Lancaster; in the midst was the white and red rose vnited, expressing the vnion, vnder the which was placed by descent the armes of the quéene, and vnder that were written these verses following.

S. Stephans gates in Norwich richlie beautified.

The vnion of the white rose and thered.

Diuision kindled strife,
Blist vnion quencht the flame:
Thense sprang our noble Phenix deare,
The peareless prince of fame.

And besides that, at this gate, the waits of the citie were placed with lowd musicke, who chærefullie & melodiouslie welcomed hir maiestie into the citie, this song being song by the best voices in the same.

The deaw of heauen drops this date on drie and barren ground,
Wherefore let fruitfull hearts I saie at drum and trumpets sound
Yeeld that is due, shew that u meet,
to make our ioy the more,
In our good hope, and hir great praise,
we neuer saw before.
The sun dooth shine where shade hath beene,
long darkenesse brought vs daie,
The star of comfort now coms in,
and here a while will staie.
Ring out the bels, plucke vp your spreets,
and dresse your houses gaie,
Run in for floures to strew the streets,
and make what ioy you maie.
The deaw of heauen, &c.
Full manie a winter haue we seene,
and manie stormes withall,
Since here we saw a king or queene in pompe and princelie pall.
Wherefore make feast and banket still,
and now to triumph fall,
With dutie let vs shew good will,
to glad both great and small.
The deaw of heauen, &c.
The realme throughout will ring of this,
and sundrie regions mo
Will say, full great our fortune is,
when our good hap they kno.
O Norwich, heere the wellspring runs, whose vertue still dooth flo,
And lo this day dooth shine two suns within thy wals also.
The deaw of heauen, &c.

This song ended, hir highnesse passed towards hir lodging, & by the waie in a church-yard, ouer against maister Pecks dore (a worthie alderman) was a scaffold set vp & brauelie trimmed. On this scaffold was placed an excellent boy, well and gallantlie decked, in a long white robe of taffata, a crimsin scarffe wrought with gold, folded on the Turkish fashion about his browes, and a gaie garland of white flowers on his head, which boie was not séene, till the quéene had a good season marked the musicke, which was maruellous swéet and good, albeit the rudenesse of some ringers of bels did somewhat hinder the noise and harmonie: and as soone as the musike ended, the boy stepped reuerendlie before the quæne, and spake these words that follow in comelie order.

The boies speach at maister Pecks dore.

Great things were meant to welcome thee (O queene)
If want of time had not cut off the same:
Great was our wish, but small is that was seene,
For vs to shew before so great a dame.
Great hope we haue it pleasd our princes eie,
Great were the harmes that else our paines should reape:
Our grace or foile dooth in your iudgement lie,
If you mislike, our griefs doo grow on heape:
If for small things we doo great fauour find,

Great

Great is the ioy that Norwich feeles this daie:
If well we waid the greatnesse of your mind,
Few words would serue, we had but small to saie.
But knowing that your goodnesse takes things well
That well are meant, we boldlie did proceed:
And so good queene, both welcome and farewell,
Thine owne we are in heart, in word, and deed.

The queene liked this deuise.

The boy there vpon slang vp his garland, and the quéenes highnes said, This deuise is fine. Then the noise of musike began againe, to heare the which the quéene staid a good while, and after departed to the cathedrall church, which was not far from thense. Then passed she forwards through saint Stephans stréet, where the first pageant was placed in forme following. It was builded somewhat in maner like a stage of 40 foot long, & in breadth eight foot. From the standing place vpward was a bank framed in maner of a frée stone wall, & in the height therof were written sentences, that is to saie: The causes of this common wealth are, God trulie preached, Justice dulie executed, The people obedient, Idlenesse expelled, Labour cherished, Vniuersall concord preserued.

The first pageant was in S. Stephans parish in this maner.

How the pageant was beautified with representation of the mysteries of the citie.

From the standing place downewards it was beautified with painters worke, artificiallie expressing to sight the portraiture of these seuerall lomes, and the weauers in them (as it were working) and ouer euerie lome the name thereof, that is to saie. Ouer the first lome was written, the weauing of worsted: ouer the second, the weauing of russels: ouer the third, the weauing of darnix: ouer the fourth, the weauing of tuft mochado: the fift, the weauing of lace: the sixt, the weauing of caffa: the seuenth, the weauing of fringe. And then was there the portraiture of a matrone, and two or three children, and ouer hir head was written these words: God nurture changeth qualities. Upon the stage there stood at the one end eight small women children spining worsted parne, and at the other end as manie knitting of worsted parne hose: and in the middest of the said stage stood a prettie boy richlie apparelled, which representing the common wealth of the citie. And all the rest of the stage was furnished with men, which made the said seuerall works, and before euerie man the worke in déed. Euerie thing thus readie, and hir maiestie come, the child representing the common wealth, spake to hir highnesse these words following.

1. Pointing to the spinners.
2. Pointing to the loomes.
3. Pointing to the workes.

Most gratious prince, vndoubted soureigne queene,
Our onelie ioy next God, and chiefe defense:
In this small shew, our whole estate is seene,
The wealth we haue, we find proceed from thense,
The idle hand hath here no place to feed,
The painfull wight hath still to serue his need.
Againe, our seat denies our traffike heere,
The sea too neare decides vs from the rest,
So weake we were within this dozen yeare,
As care did quench the courage of the best:
But good aduise hath taught these little hands,
To rend in twaine the force of pining bands.
From combed wooll we draw this slender threed,
From thense the loomes haue dealing with the same,
And then se againe in order doo proceed,
These seuerall works which skilfull art dooth frame:
And all to driue dame need into hir caue,
Our heads and hands together labourd haue.
We bought before the things that now we sell,
These slender impes, their works doo passe the waues,
Gods peace and thine, we hold and prosper well,
Of euerie mouth the hands the charges saues.
Thus through thy helpe and aid of power diuine,
Dooth Norwich liue, whose hearts and goods are thine.

This shew pleased hir maiestie so greatlie, as she particularlie viewed the knitting & spinning of the children, perused the lomes, and noted the seuerall works and commodities which were made by these meanes: and then after great thanks by hir giuen to the people, marched towards the market place, where was the second pageant thwarting the stréet at the enterance of the market, betweene master Skinner & master Mualh, being in breadth two and fiftie foot of assise, and was diuided into three gates, in the midst a maine gate, & on either side a posterne: the maine gate in breadth fourteene foot, each posterne eight foot, their heights equall to their proportion: ouer each posterne was as it were a chamber, which chambers were replenished with musike. Ouer all the gates passed a stage of eight foot brode, in maner of a pageant, curious, rich, & delitefull. The whole worke, from the pageant downewards, séemed to be iasper & marble. In the forefront towards hir maiestie was the armes of England on the one side the gate, & on the other side the *falcon with crowne and scepter. The other side was beautified with the arms of England on the one side of the gate, & the crest of England on the other. The pageant was furnisht with fiue personages apparelled like women. The first was the citie of Norwich; the second Debora; the third Judith; the fourth Hester; the fift Martia, sometime quéene of England. At the first sight of the prince, & till hir maiesties comming to the pageant, the musicians vsed their lowd musike, and then ceassed: wherewith hir highnesse stated, to whome the personage representing the citie of Norwich, did speake in these words.

*which is hir owne badge.

The second pageant with the situation of the same, and what representations it bare.

These musicians were inclosed in the chambers of the said pageant.

Whom fame resounds with thundring trumpe, that rends the ratling skies,
And perseth to the hautie heauens, and thense descending flies
Through flickering aire: and so contoines the sea & shore togither,
In admiration of thy grace, good queene thart welcome hither:
More welcome than Terpsicore was to the towne of Crote.
Sea-faring men by Gemini conceiue not halfe my ioie.
Strong Hercules to Theseus was neuer such delight,
Nor Nisus to Eurialus as I haue in this sight.
Penelope did neuer thirst Ulysses more to see,
Than I poore Norwich hungred haue to gaine the sight of thee.
And now that these my happie eies behold thy heauenlie face,
The Lord of lords I humblie praie, to bliss thy noble grace
With Nestors life, with Sibils helth, with Crelus stocke & store,
With all good gifts of Salomon, and twise as manie more.
What shuld I saie? Thou art my ioy next God, I haue none other,
My princesse & my peerlesse queene, my louing nurse and mother.
My goods & lands, my hands and hart, my limbs and life are thine,
What is mine owne in right or thought, to thee I doo resigne.
Grant then (oh gratious souereigne queene) this onlie my request,
That that which shall be doone in me, be construed to the best.
And take in part my slender shewes, wherein my whole pretense
Is for to please your maiestie, and end without offense.
So shall I clap my hands for ioy, and hold my selfe as rich
As if I had the gold of Inde, and double twise as mich.

The citie of Norwich speaketh to the quéenes maiestie.

How Norwich is affected to the quéenes highnesse.

Where princes sitting in their thrones set God before their sight
And line according to his law, and guide their people right,
There doth his blessed gifts abound, there kingdoms firmlie stand
There force of foes cannot preuaile, nor furie fret the land.
My selfe (oh peerlesse prince) doo speake by proofe of matter past,
Which proofe by practise I performd, and foild his foes at last.
For Jabin king of Canaan, poore Israell did spite,
And meant by force of furious rage to ouerrun vs quite.
Nine hundred iron chariots, he brought into the field,
With cruell captetne Sisera by force to make vs yeeld.
His force was great, his fraud was more, he fought, we did defend,
And twentie winters long did last this warre without an end.
But he that neither sleepes nor slackes such furies to correct,
Appointed me Debora for the iudge of his elect:
And did deliuer Sisera into a womans hand,
I slue them all, and so in rest his people held the land.
So mightie prince, that puisant Lord, hath plast thee here to be,
The rule of this triumphant realme alone belongs to thee.
Continue as thou hast begun, weed out the wicked rout,
Vphold the simple, meeke and good, pull downe the proud & stout.
Thus shalt thou liue and reigne in rest, & mightie God shalt please,
Thy state be sure, thy subiects safe, thy commonwealth at ease.
Thy God shall grant thee length of life, to glorifie his name,
Thy deeds shall be recorded in the booke of lasting fame.

Then spake Debora the second person.

The application of the former examples.

Oh floure of grace, oh prime of Gods elect,
Oh mightie queene and finger of the Lord,
Did God sometime by me poore wight correct
The champion stout, that him and his abhord;
Then be thou sure thou art his mightie hand,
To conquer those which him and thee withstand.
The rage of foes Bethulia did oppresse,
The people faint were readie for to yeeld:
God aided me poore widow nertheless,
To enter into Holofernes field,
And with this sword by his directing hand,
To slaie his foe, and quiet so the land.
If this his grace were giuen to me poore wight,
If widowes hand could vanquish such a foe:
Then to a prince of thy surpassing might,
What tyrant liues but thou maist ouerthro?
Persenere then his seruant as thou art,
And hold for aie a noble victors part.

Then spake Judith the third person.

The application of the former examples.

The fretting heads of furious foes haue skill,
As well by fraud as force to find their preie.
In smiling lookes dooth lurke a lot as ill,
As where both sterne and sturdie streams doo swaie,
Thy selfe oh queene, a proofe hast seene of this,
So well as I poore Hester haue I wis.
As Jabins force did Israell perplex,
And Holofernes fierce Bethulia besiege,
So Hamans slights sought me and mine to vex,
Yet shewd a face of subiect to his liege.
But force no fraud, nor tyrant strong can trap,
Those whom the Lord in his defense dooth wrap.

Then Hester spake the fourth person.

The application of the former exãples.

The prookes I speake by vs haue erst bin seene,
The prookes I speake, to thee are not vnknowne.
Thy God thou knowst most dread and souereigne queene,
A world of foes of thine hath ouerthrowne,
And hither now triumphantlie dooth call
Thy noble grace, the comfort of vs all.
Doost thou not see the ioie of all this flocke?
Vouchsafe to view their passing gladsome cheare,
Be still (good queene) their refuge and their rocke,
As they are thine to serue in loue and feare:
So fraud, nor force, nor foreine fo may stand
Against the strength of thy most puissant hand.

Then spake Martia the first person.

With long discourse (oh puissant prince) some tract of time we spend,
Vouchsafe yet now a little more, and then we make an end.
The thundring blast of fame, whereof dame Norwich first did speake,
Not onelie shooke the aire and skies, but all the earth did breake,
It rent vp graues, and bodies raisd, eche spirit tooke his place,
And this alonelie word was heard: Here comes the pearle of grace,
Here coms the iewell of the world, hir peoples whole delight,
The paragon of present time, and prince of earthlie might.
The voice was strange, the wonder more: for when we viewd the earth
Eche prince that erst had reigned here, receiud againe his breath,
And with his breath, a libertie to hold againe his place,
If anie one amongst vs all exceed your noble grace.
Some comfort euerie one conceiud to catch againe his owne,
His vtmost skill was trimlie vsde, to haue his vertues knowne.
The praises surpasse my skill to tell. But when eche one had said,
Apollo did himselfe appeare and made vs all dismaid.
Will you contend with hir (quoth he) within whose sacred brest
Dame Pallas and my selfe haue framd our souereigne seat of rest?
Whose skill directs the muses nine, whose grace dooth Venus staine:
Hir eloquence like Mercurie: like Juno in hir traine?
Whose God is that eternall Joue which holds vs all in awe?
Beleeue me, you exceed the bounds of equitie and lawe.
Therewith they shronke themselues aside, not one I could espie,
They coucht them in their caues againe and that full quietlie.
Yet I that Martia hight, which sometime ruld this land,
As queene for thirtie three yeares space, gat licence at his hand,
And so Gurguntius did, my husbands father deere,
Which built this towne and castell both, to make our homage here,
Which homage mightie queene accept: the realme and right is thine,
The crowne, the scepter, and the sword to thee we doo resigne,
And wish to God, that thou maist reigne, twise Nestors yeares in peace,
Triumphing ouer all thy foes, to all our ioies increase, Amen.

Herewith she passed vnder the gate, with such thanks as plainelie expressed hir noble nature: and the musicians within the gate vpon their soft instruments vsed broken musike, and one sang this dittie.

A dittie song to soft musicke at the quænes entrance vnder the gate.

From slumber soft as I fell fast asleepe,
From sleepe to dreame, from dreame to deepe delight,
Eche gem the gods had giuen the world to keepe
In princelie wise came present to my sight:
Such solace then did sinke into my mind,
As mortall man on mould could neuer find.
The gods did striue, and yet their strikes were sweet,
Eche one would haue a vertue of hir owne.
Dame Juno thought the highest place most meet
For hir, because of riches was hir throne.
Dame Venus thought by reason of hir loue
That she might claime the high st place aboue.
The virgins state Diana still did praise,
And Ceres praisd the fruit of fertile soile:
And Prudence did dame Pallas chieflie raise,
Minerua all for eloquence did striue,
They smild to see their quarelling estate,
And Joue himselfe decided their debate.
My sweets (quoth he) leaue off your sugred strife,
In equall place I haue assignd you all:
A souereigne wight there is that beareth life,
In whose sweete hart I haue inclosd you all.
Of England soile she is the souereigne queene,
Your bigors there doo flourish fresh and greene.
They skipt for ioy, and gaue their franke consent,
The noise resounded to the hautie skie:
With one lowd voice they cried all, content,
They clapt their hands, and therewith waked I.
The world and they concluded with a breath,
And wisht long reigne to queene Elisabeth.

The place of the quænes adode during the time of hir tariance in Norwich.

Herewith she passed through the market place, which was goodlie garnished, and thense through the other streets which were trimlie decked, directlie to the cathedrall church, where Te Deum was song, and after seruice she went to the bishops palace, where hir maiestie kept the time she continued in Norwich. All this was on saturdaie the sirteenth of August 1578. On the nert daie after, which was sundaie, when princes commonlie come not abroad (and time is occupied with sermons and laudable exercises) T. C. was to watch a conuenient season, where and how might be vttered the things that were prepared for pastime. And so vpon mondaie before supper, he made a deuise, as though Mercurie had bæne sent from the gods, to request the quæne to come abroad, & behold what was deuised for hir welcome, the whole matter whereof doth follow.

The manner of Mercuries coch & message to the quæne, requesting hir highnesse to come abroad, and see what pastime the gods had prouided for so noble a prince.

The coch that Mercurie came in vnto the quæne, was closelie kept in secret a long season, and when the time came it must passe towards the court, it had a trumpetter with it, and the cochman was made to driue so fast, as the horses should seeme to flie, which was so well obserued, as the people wondered at the swiftnesse therof, and followed it in such flocks and multitudes, that scarse in a great græne (where the preaching place is) might be found rome for anie more people. And when the coch approched in the hearing of a trumpet, the trumpetter sounded, and so came in to the græne sounding, vntill the coch was full placed before a window at the which the quæne stood, and might be plainelie sæne and openlie viewed. When Mercurie had espied hir highnesse, he skiped out of the coch, and being on the ground, gaue a iumpe or two, and aduanced himselfe in such a sort, that the quæne smiled at the boldnesse of the boie. Thus Mercurie beholding the quæne with great courage and audacitie, at the length bowed downe his head, and immediatlie stood bolt vpright, and shaked his rod, and so began his speech with a most assured countenance, and brauelie pronounced it in deed, to his great liking and commendation.

He reuealeth what he is by office.

Muse not good queene at me that message brings
From Joue or iust Jehoua Lord of might,
No earthlie god, yet gouerns mortall things,
And spirites diuine, and shunning angels bright.
This lord of late to shew his mightie power,
Hath wonders wrought when world lookt least therefore:
For at his becke, this daie and present hower,
The heauens shakt, the thunderbolts did rore.
The earth did moue, the dead therein did rise,
And out of graue the ghosts of men are gone,
The wandring spirites that houered in the skies
Drope downe from aire, for world to wonder on.
The saints themselues that sat in glorie great,
Were sent in hast to worke Jehouas will,
And I that oft my restlesse wings doo beat,
Was cald to vse my wings and office still.
A common post is Mercurie you know,
When he commands that made the world of nought.
And flies as fast as arrow out of bow,
When message may expresse Jehouas thought.
Whose power diuine full long per this hath seene,
That in this place should lodge a sacred queene.
And weighing well, the prince whereof I speake,
Might wearie way of common pastimes heere,
(For that he knowes hir iudgement is not weake)
Deuisd aboue, below there should appeere
(To welcome hir) some sights that rare should seeme,
And carelesse stood, what world thereof did deeme,
So that good queene, you take them well in worth.

Rare sights if anie such were as Mercurie nameth.

No sooner had Jehoua meant these things,
But clouds clapt hands, and soules of men came forth
Of heauen gates, yea goodlie crowned kings
Were flowen abroad from blessed Abrams brest:
Some in the aire, and tops of trees did rest,
Some fell on towres and statelie houses high,
Some sunke in seas, whose names were drowned now,
And some did light on land where euerie eie
May them behold, and note their manners throw.
And therewithall the blacke infernall spreets
Ran out of hell, the earth so trembling than,
And like yoong lads they hopt about the streets,
The satyres wild, in forme and shape of man,
Crept through the woods, and thickers full of breers,
The water nymphs, and feiries streight appeers
In vncouth formes and fashion strange to view:
The hags of hell that hatefull are of kind,
To please the time had learnd a nature new,
And all those things that man can call to mind,
Were glad to come and doo their dutie throw.
I seeing this, cald for my coch in hast,
Abide sir boie, then said Jehoua now,
Thou goest not yet vntill a prince be plast,
Where I appoint, thou hast nothing to saie.
Then still I stood, to know what should be done.

Mercurie is attentiue to his charge.

With that a swarme of people euerie waie
Like little ants about the fields gan run,
Some to prouide for pompe and triumph great,
Some for good fare, yea houshold cates and meat,
And some they ran to seeke where poets dwell,
To pen forth shews and paint out trifles well.
Some haild and puld to bring the carrege in,
Some ran to gaze on triumph neere at hand,
And some stood mute, as they amazd had bin
To see a court and princelie noble band
Come marching on, and make heere their abode.
But when I saw the carrege heere vnlode,
And well had weid the wonders I haue told,
O mightie God (quoth I) now giue me leaue
To go from thee some message to vnfold,
That by my speech the hearers may conceiue.
Thy godhead great hath brought this princesse here.
It shall be so (quoth he) dispatch and part,
And tell hir that she is to me so deere,
That I appoint by mans deuise and art,
That euerie daie she shall see sundrie shoes,

The charge giuen by Jupiter to Mercur: for ỹ recreation of the quæne.

If

If that she please to walke and take the aire,
And that so soone as out of doore she goes
(If time doo serue and weather waxeth faire)
Some odd deuise shall meet hir highnesse streight,
To make hir smile, and ease hir burthened brest,
And take away the cares and things of weight
That princes feele, that findeth greatest rest.
When I had thus receiud my charge at full,
My golden rod in liuelie hand I tooke,
And bad in hast my flieng hoples pull.
But yet I past, I gan about me looke,
To see that coch, and ech thing gallant were:
So downe I came all winged as you see.
And sith I haue espide that princesse there,
That greatest kings doo sue to by degree,
And manie mo that sues no whit, doo feare
I kisse hir steps, and shew my maisters will,
And leaue with hir such graces from aboue,
As alwaies shall command hir peoples loue,
(Uphold hir reigne, maintein hir regall state,
Find out falsе harts, and make of subiects true,
Plant perfect peace, and root vp all debate)
So with this grace good queene now heere adue,
For I may now on earth no longer staie,
Thus seruants must to maisters will obaie.

The quéenes rare estate described.

Mercurie hauing thus spoken to the quéene, whose gratious inclination is such, as will not haue anie thing dutifullie offered to passe vnregarded, was well heard, hir highnes standing at a window, and the spéech verie well taken and vnderstood. Mercurie as he came passed awaie, at whose coch the people that had seldome séene such a deuise maruelled, and gazed verie much; for it had hoples to draw it finelie painted and winged, to as great shew and order of that it presented, as wit might imagine: the cochman sutable to the same, and a trumpetter in right good garments, as decent for that purpose as could be deuised. But the coch was made and framed on such a fashion as few men haue séene: the whole whereof was couered with birds and naked spirits, hanging by the héeles in the aire and clouds, cunninglie painted out, as though by some thunder cracke they had béene shaken and tormented: yet staied by power diuine in their places, to make the more wonder and miraculous shew. And on the middle of that coch stood a high compassed tower bedecked with golden and gaie iewels, in the top whereof was placed a faire plume of white feathers, all to bespanged and trimmed to the most brauerie: Mercurie himselfe in blew satin lined with cloth of gold, his garments cut and slashed on the finest maner, a peaked hat of the same colour, as though it should cut and seuer the wind asunder; and on the same a paire of wings, and wings on his héeles likewise. And on his golden rod were little wings also, about the which rod were two wrigling or scralling serpents, which séemed to haue life when the rod was moued or shaken. So in this sort and forme was Mercurie and his coch set forth, and indéed at such a season as a great sort looked not for anie shew, nor things were readie, as some thought, to performe that was necessarie and expected: yet hap was so good, and the gratious fauour of the prince, that all was well taken, and construed to the best meaning of the deuisor. So ended that daies deuise, which offered occasion to further matter.

The description of Mercuries coch.

The description of Mercurie, his attire, abilliments, &c.

On tuesdaie following (for before that daie by meanes of the weather the quéene went not abrode) a verie pretie and pleasant shew was performed before hir highnes without saint Benets gates, as she went towards Tossie parke to hunt. At which season, although the deuisor was not well prouided of things necessarie for a shew (by meane of some crossing causes in the citie) yet hearing the quéene rode abrode, determined as he might (and yet by helpe of frends and hap) verie well to venture the hazard of a shew, and to be full in the waie where hir highnesse should passe towards hir dinner. In which determination manie doubts were to be cast, and manie perswaded him to tarrie a better time. But considering how time rolled on, and daies and houres did wast (without doing anie thing promised and not performed) he hastilie prepared his boies and men with all their furnitures, and so set forward with two coches handsomlie trimmed. The common people beholding the maner thereof, and grédie to gaze on that should be done, followed as their fansies did lead them: so that when the deuisor and his retinue came into the open field, there was as great a traine and preasе about the shew, as came with the court at that instant, which graced much the matter, and gaue it some erpected hope of good successe.

The deuisor ventureth the hazard of a shew.

First, there was a famed deuise, that Uenus and Cupid were thrust out of heauen, and walking on the earth, met a philosopher; who demanded from whense they came. They told the philosopher what they were, and he replied, and began with truth & tants to tickle them so nére, that Uenus fell in a great anger, and Cupid ran awaie, and left his mother and the philosopher disputing together. But Cupid because he would be nourished somewhere, ran to the court, and there sought for succor, & incountring the quéene began to complaine his state and his mothers, and told how the philosopher had handled them both. But finding neither answer nor aid, he returned againe, but not to his mother, for she was fallen mad vpon a conceipt that she was not made of. And Cupid wandering in the world, met with dame Chastitie & hir maids, called Modestie, Temperance, God exercise, and Shamefastnes: and she with hir foure maids incountring Cupid in a godlie coch, and without anie honest gard waiting on him, set vpon him, threw him out of his golden seat, trod on his pompe, spoiled him of his counterfeit godhead and cloke, & toke awaie his bow and quiuer of arrows, the one headed with lead, and the other with gold, and so sent him like a fugitiue awaie, and mounted vp into the coch hir selfe and hir maids, and so came to the quéene, and rehersed what had hapned. Although this was done in hir view, & because (said Chastitie) that the quéene had chosen the best life, she gaue the quéene Cupids bow, to learne to shoot at whom she pleased, sith none could wound hir highnesse heart, it was méet (said Chastitie) that she should doo with Cupids bow & arrows what she pleased; and so did Chastitie depart as she said to the powers diuine. Cupid in the meane while wandering in the world had found out Wantonnesse and Riot, who soone fell into beggerie and ruine (a spectacle to be loked into) and felt such dailie miserie with Wantonnesse and Riot, that Cupid was forced to fling awaie once againe, and hazard himselfe to fall into the hands of naughtie people, or where fortune assigned: and comming abrode, happened vpon the philosopher, who talked with him againe, told him his errors, and other points of pride and presumption; declaring it was a great blasphemie & abuse, to report & beléeue that in heauen were anie other gods but one, who had the onelie rule of all, & that made all of naught. In which reasoning & discourse Cupid waxed warme, & yet in his greatest heat knew not how nor where to cole himselfe, at which time came Wantonnesse & Riot, & persuaded Cupid to plaie no longer the fole in striuing with philosophers, and go awaie with them. So Cupid departed, & went awaie with Wantonnesse and Riot, & the philosopher remained, & declared that all abuses & follies should come to no better end than presentlie was expressed by the miserie of Wantonnesse, Riot, and Cupid. Then Modestie and hir fellows, leauing their mistresse dame Chastitie with the powers diuine, came soft and faire in their mistresse coch, singing a song of chaste life, as heere vnder followeth.

The whole manner of the deuise or shew.

Dame Chastitie & hir maids incounter with Cupid.

what associates Cupid found out to keepe him companie.

Chastitie and hir maids matched together, &c.

Chast life liues long and lookes on world and wicked waies, Chast life for losse of pleasures short, dooth win immortall praise.
Chast life hath merrie moods,
and soundlie taketh rest,

Chaſt life is pure as babe new borne,
that hugs in mothers breſt.
Lewd life cuts off his daies,
and ſoone runs out his date,
Confounds good wits, breeds naughtie blond,
and weakens mans eſtate.
Lewd life the Lord doth loth,
the law and land miſlikes,
The wiſe will ſhun, fond fooles doo ſeeke,
and God ſore plages and ſtrikes.
Chaſt life may dwell alone,
and find few fellowes now,
And ſit in regall throne,
and ſearch lewd manners throw.
Chaſt life feares no miſhap,
the whole account is made,
When ſoule from worldlie cares is crept,
and ſits in ſacred ſhade.
Lewd life is taught to ſcorne,
and put to great diſgrace,
In hollow caues it hides the head,
and walks with muffled face,
Found out and pointed at,
a monſter of the mind,
A rankred worme that conſcience eates,
and ſtrikes cleere ſenſes blind.
Chaſt life a pretious pearle,
doth ſhine as bright as ſun,
The faire houre glaſſe of daies and yeeres,
that neuer out will run.
The beautie of the ſoule,
the bodies bliſſe and eaſe,
A thing that leaſt is looкt vnto, yet moſt the mind ſhall pleaſe.

And when the ſong was ended, modeſtie ſent (as ſhe ſaid ſhe was) from hir maiſtreſſe, ſpake to the quéene a good ſeaſon, and ſo the matter ended. For this ſhew the deuiſer had gratious words of the quéene openlie and often pronounced by hir highneſſe. On the ſame daie the miniſter of the Dutch church, pronouncing to hir maieſtie at hir being abrode the oration following, preſented the cup therein mentioned, which was eſteemed to be worth fiftie pounds, verie curiouſlie and artificiallie wrought.

Oratio ad ſereniſſimam Angliæ reginam habita 19. Auguſti 1578 à miniſtro eccleſiæ Belgogermanicæ Nordouici in loco publico.

Quinam oratores antiqua ætate præclariſſima laudatiſſimi exiterunt.

Magna oratoribus, qui per celebratorum ætate vixerunt fuit laus, ſereniſſima regina, quòd indicum animos partim ſuauiloquentia, partim poſita rei perſonæque ante ipſorum oculos calamitate, in quemcunque vellent animi habitum transformarent. Prius membrum non vulgarem nobis ob oculos ponit hominum facilitatem, quòd adeò ſequaces dictóque audientes fuerint, vt ſe linguis duci paterentur. Poſterius magnam vbique apud gentes, quarum reſpublica optabili ordine fuit conſtituta, obtinuit gratiam: longè autem maiorem apud eos, qui Chriſto nomen dederunt: omnium verò maximam apud te (ô ſereniſſima regina) eccleſiæ Chriſti nutrix, cuius animum verbo Dei obſequentem inſtruxit, non fucatus hic ſermo, ſed Chriſti ſpiritus, pietatiſque zelus. Ipſiſſima piorum calamitas afflictorúmque lachrymæ, lachrymæ inquam Chriſti fidelium te commouerunt, miſera diſperſáque Chriſti membra quibuſuis iniurijs obiecta, mille iam mortibus territa, in tutelam ſalutémque animi iuxta ac corporis recipere ac protegere. Ob hæc ſingularia tua in nos pietatis beneficia, & quòd ſub tutore optimo magiſtratu in hac tua Nordouicenſi vrbe (quam maieſtas tua nobis ob Chriſti religionem exulantibus domicilij loco clementer conceſſit) viuimus, adde quòd populi in nos animum fauorabilem experimur, inprimis Deo patri, & Domino vnico ſeruatori noſtro Ieſu Chriſto, deinde & tibi ſereniſſima regina immortales non quas debemus ſed quas poſſumus agimus gratias. Porrò humile quidem & vnicum tamen noſtrum eſt votum, animi noſtri gratitudinem maieſtati tuæ oſtendere. Ecce igitur nullum munus, ſed animum noſtrum: nullum regium ſplendorem, ſed pietatis poſteritatiſque monumentum ſereniſſimæ tuæ maieſtati conſecratum. Hoc autem eo gratius maieſtati tuæ fore confidimus, quòd ex inculpati puriſſimíq; Ioſephi hiſtoria, Dei erga maieſtatem tuam bonitas, ad viuum ſit delineata, quem nulla aſtutia, nullum robur, nulla denique regnandi libido; ſed fides conſtans, chriſtiani pectoris pietas, cœleſtiſque virtus, ſingulari Dei fauore ex ſanguinaria fratrum conſpiratione, mortiſque metu, ad ſummam dignitatem, regnique decus euexerunt. In huius fratres non aliena videtur prouerbialis illa apud Hebræos ſententia, Inuidia malarum rerum appetitus, & ſtudium vanæ gloriæ hominibus ſæpiſſimè occaſio ſunt ſui interitus. Tamen quod Ioſephi animum attinet, ea fuit præditus & temperantia & fortitudine, vt nimis iniquus ſimul & prauus cenſeri poſſet, qui eum vel minimo vindicandi affectu accuſare velit; adeò Dei prouidentiæ & ſe & omne vitæ ſuæ ſtudium, vitæ inquam in alieno regno periclitantis, commiſit, vt non aliunde quàm à ſolo Dei nutu pendêre viſus ſit. Sed quorſum iſta? In te ne hæc ipſa aliáque conſimilia (ô ſereniſſima regina) & regni tui ratione omnium oculis conſpicua ſunt? Hæc inquam eſſe eccleſiæ Chriſti fœliciſſimum gaudium, ſpirituale diadema, & ſummum decus, huius verò regni verè regium ſplendorem, atque perennem gloriam, quis niſi mente captus inficias ire poteſt? Piſſimè tu quidem ſingulari Dei bonitate animum Ioſephi tum in regni tui conſeruatione, tum in regno Chriſti amplificando imitata es (ô nutrix eccleſiæ Dei fideliſſima) ſolius enim Dei eſt hunc per res (prout hominum oculis ſunt ſubiectæ) ſecundas diſperdere, illum autem per quæuis tetationum genera rerúmque diſcrimina extollere. Quos vt vaſa ſuæ miſericordiæ agnoſcit, ita etiam & bonitate & ſpiritus ſui tum conſolatione, tum fortitudine ad æternæ vitæ fœlicitatem proſequitur. Quod noſtrum votum ratum eſſe, maieſtatem tuam regnique ordinem ſpirituali prudentia ac ſapientia ſtabilire, eamque in longam ætatem ſeruare, tuæ item maieſtatis ſubditos vera ſui cognitione magis ac magis imbuere, dignetur bonus ille & clemens Deus, per merita filij ſui Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, Amen.

Beneficiorum à regia maieſtate collatorum agnitio cum obſequio &c.

Regia maieſtas in omnibus Ioſepho equiparata.

Monumentum antiquum regiæ maieſtati exhibitum.

Regiæ maieſtati poſt orationem oblatum eſt monumentum aliquod, in cuius ſuperficie artificioſè ſculpta erat hiſtoria Ioſephi: ex lib. Geneſios.

In circumferentia verò hoc carmen.

Innocuum pietas ad regia ſceptra Ioſephum,
Ex manibus fratrum, carnificíſque, rapit:
Carcere & inſidijs ſic te regina tuorum
Ereptam duxit culmina ad iſta Deus.

Inſcriptio erat in ipſius capacitate ſcripta in orbem, hoc modo.

Sereniſſimæ Angliæ reginæ Eliſabethæ, eccleſiæ Belgicæ Nordouici ob religionem exulãtes, hoc monumentum & pietatis & poſteritatis ergô conſecrabant, Anno ſalutis humanæ, 1578.

In interiore ipſius parte erat inſigne ſerpentis in gyrum conuoluti, cui media inſidebat columba, cum hoc Chriſti elogio: Prudens vt ſerpens, ſimplex vt columba.

The miniſter of the Dutch church his oration in Engliſh.

What orators were beſt commended in former times of beſt renowme.

THe oratours (moſt gratious queene) which liued in the age of them that woone greateſt renowme, were highlie commended for that they could transforme the iudges minds, partlie by eloquence, and partlie by ſetting downe before their eies the calamitie of the thing and perſon they ſpake of, into what diſpoſition them liſted. The firſt part declareth vnto vs no common felicitie of men, in that they were ſo willing in following, and attentiue in hearing, as they would ſuffer themſelues to be lead by eloquence. The laſt obteined great fauour amongſt all nations, whoſe common weale was gouerned in good order, and farre greater amongſt the chriſtians: but greateſt of all with thee (ô moſt excellent queene) the nurſſe of Chriſt his church, whoſe mind obedient to Gods word, the ſpirit of Chriſt, and zeale of godlineſſe, and not this prophane kind of ſpeech hath inſtructed. The verie calamitie of godlie men and teares of the afflicted, the teares I ſaie of faithfull chriſtians haue thoroughlie mœued thee to defend and protect the miſerable

In acknowledgement of benefits by hir maiestie with dutifulnes for the same.

serable and dispersed members of Christ obiect to euerie kind of iniurie, before beaten in peeces by a thousand deaths, with the safetie and preseruation as well of mind as bodie. For these thy singular benefits of godlinesse towards vs, and that we liue vnder so good a tutor, being magistrate in this thy citie of Norwich, which thy maiestie hath of clemencie granted vnto vs for a mansion place, which were banished for Christ his religion; and moreouer that we find the minds of the people fauourable towards vs, first wee giue immortall thanks, not such as wee ought, but such as we are able vnto God the father, and the Lord our onelie sauiour Iesus Christ; and then vnto thee most mercifull queene. Moreouer, it is our humble and yet our onelie petition, to shew vnto your maiestie the thankefulnesse of our mind. Behold therefore dedicated to your most excellent maiestie, not anie gift but our mind, no princelie iewell but a monument of godlinesse and posteritie. The which we hope will be so much the more acceptable to your maiestie; for bicause the goodnes of God towards your maiestie is liuelie drawne out of the historie of the innocent and most godlie Ioseph, whom neither policie, strength nor desire of bearing rule, but constant faith, godlinesse of a christian heat, and heauenlie vertue by Gods singular mercie deliuered from the bloudie conspiracie of his brethren and feare of death, and brought vnto high dignitie & roiall kingdome. To whose brethren that prouerbiall sentence of the Hebrewes is verie fitlie alluded: Enuie being the desire of euill things, and couetousnesse of transitorie renowme, is oftentimes the occasion of mans destruction. But touching the mind of Ioseph, the same was indued with such temperance and fortitude, that he might be thought no lesse vniust than wicked, that would accuse him so much as with the least affection of reuengement: so wholie did he commit himselfe and all the gouernement of his life, his life I say put in hazard in a strange kingdome vnto the prouidence of God, that he seemed to hang of no other thing than the onelie will of God. But to what end speake I this? Are not these selfe same things, and others their like (ô most excellent queene) by the eies of all men clearlie beheld in thee and the order of thy kingdome? What man (I saie) hauing his wits, can denie these things to be the most happie ioy, spirituall crowne, & chiefest ornament of Christes church, & trulie of this kingdome the princelie beautie and perpetuall renowne? Thou surelie doost folow most holilie the mind of Ioseph, by the singular goodnesse of God, as well in preseruing thy kingdome, as in amplifieng the kingdome of Christ (ô thou most faithfull nurse of the church of God.) For it is in God onelie to destroie this man by prosperitie (as the world seeth) and aduance another by al kinds of aduersities, tentations, & dangers. Whom as he acknowlegeth the vessels of his mercie, so by his goodnesse togither with the consolation and strength of his spirit, he dooth bring them to the happinesse of eternall life. Which our petition that good and mercifull God grant may be ratified, in establishing your maiestie and gouernance of your kingdome with spirituall wisedome and vnderstanding, in preseruing the same full manie years, and in-duing your maiesties subiects more and more with true knowledge of him, for his sonnes sake our Lord Iesus Christ, Amen.

A monument of antiquitie presented to hir maiestie.

Ioseph singularlie commended & not without cause.

The queenes maiestie compared to Ioseph, &c.

The oration ended, there was a certeine monument presented to hir maiestie, in the vpper part whereof was artificiallie grauen the historie of Ioseph out of Genesis. In the inner part of the same there was the figure of a serpent, interfolding it selfe: in the middest whereof did sit a doue with this sentence of Christ, Matth. 10, 16. Wise as the serpent, and meeke as the doue. In the circumference or compasse thereof was these verses to be read.

To roiall scepter, godlinesse,
Ioseph the innocent,
Dooth take from brothers bloudie hands,
and murtherers intent.
So thee, O queene, the Lord hath led from prison and deceit
Of thine, vnto these highest tops of your princelie estate.

On wednesdaie hir highnesse dined at my lord of Surreis, where were the French ambassadors also, at a most rare and delicate dinner and banket. At which season the deuiser did watch with his shew (called Manhod & Desert) at my lord of Surreis backedoore, going to the quænes barge: but the rome was so little, that neither the shot, the armed men, nor the plaiers could haue place conuenient. Wherevpon he and his assistants toke boats, and conueied their people downe the water, towards a landing place that they hoped the quæne would come vnto. And there hauing althings in redinesse, they houered on the water three long houres, by which meanes the night came on, and so they were faine to withdraw themselues and go homeward, trusting for a better time and occasion, which in deed was offered the next daie after by the quænes maiesties owne good motion, who told the deuiser she would see what pastimes were prepared, as hereafter you shall perceiue by the discourse of these matters, and by this shew of Manhod, and the shew of the Nymphes. Neuertheless, as hir maiestie returned homeward; within Bishops gate at the hospitall doore, maister Stephan Limbert, maister of the grammar schole in Norwich stood readie to render hir an oration. Hir maiestie drew neare vnto him, & thinking him fearefull, said gratiouslie vnto him: Be not afraid. He answered hir againe in English: I thanke your maiestie for your good incouragement: & then with good courage entered into this oration following.

The quænes maiestie is banketted at the earle of Surreis.

O singular affabilitie of a prince to put awaie a subiects bashfulnesse.

Ad illustrissimam principem Elisabetham, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ reginam &c: ante fores πτωχοδοχεῖ Norduicensis, oratio Stephani Limberti ludimagistri publici.

Egyptum fama est inundante Nilo (serenissima regina) & aureo Pactoli flumine quotannis Lidiam irrigari, quæ res in ijs agris maxima fecunditatis causa putatur. In nos autem atq; adeo vniuersam Angliam, quæ latè patet, non è Tmolo aut alijs nescio quibus montibus, sed ex illo perenni & vberrimo fonte bonitatis tuæ, multi maximiq; pietatis, iusticiæ, mansuetudinis, aliorúmq; innumerabilium bonorum, præ quibus iam viluit aurum & obsoleuit, copiosissimi riui profluxerunt. Atq; vt ex infinitis vel vnum leuiter attingam, propterea quòd de pluribus dicere nec est huius loci & temporis nec facultatis meæ. Insignem illam misericordiam celsitudinis tuæ, nobilissima regina, & ad leuandum pauperrimorum hominum inopiam incredibilem propensionem, qua de plurimis virtutibus nulla Deo gratior (πρὸς γὰρ Διός εἰσιν ἅπαντες πτώχοι vt canit Homerus) in summa principe nulla mortalibus admirabilior esse potest, quibus tandem laudibus efferemus? Quàm honorificis verbis prosequemur? πτωχοδοχεῖον, hoc est, hospitium pauperum celeberrimum est apud omnes posteros regiæ virtutis atq; beneficentiæ monumentum futurum, institutum quidem ab illustrissimo Henrico patre celsitudinis tuæ, à nobilissimo Edouardo fratre Egregiæ necnon impares Angliæ dotes.

Henricus & Edouardus reges, necnon Elisabetha regina præcipui benefactores agnoscuntur.

tre maximis tabulis conſignatum, a tua verò maieſtate, quod non minorem laudem meretur, Crinlefordienſibus fundis & poſſeſſionibus egregiè nuper auctum atq; amplificatum, vt non tam alienis iam ornamentis, quàm proprijs virtutibus meritò lætari poſsis. Recordata quippe es pro tua ſingulari prudentia atq; eruditione, diuinam illam ſapientiſſimi Platonis legem, quam vndecimo de legibus libro ſcriptam reliquit, πῶχ@ μηδεὶς ἡμῖν ἐν τῇ πόλει γιγνέσθω. Tantam igitur benignitatem, tam eximiam & incredibilem miſericordiam tuam (illuſtriſsima princeps) quibus complectemur ſtudijs? Quibus officijs, aut qua voce grati animi voluntatem teſtificabimur? Cùm enim omnes referendæ gratiæ ſtudio & labore, vel accuratiſsimas rationes exquiſiuerimus, ne vnius quidem huius beneficij, quo nos auguſtiſsimæ maieſtati tuæ obſtrictos eſſe & deuinctos agnoſcimus, magnitudinem aſſequi poterimus. Superabimur vel ab hoc vno & ſingulari merito, nedum ſperandum eſt, vt immenſo reliquorum meritorum pelago, quod tum in omnes tibi ſubditos publicè & generatim, tum in hanc ciuitatem propriè ac particulatim exundauit, pares eſſe queamus. Verè nos iam ὄλβιον incolimus, & in beatis illis inſulis de quibus meminit Heſiodus πας' ὠκεάνου ſβαθυδίνην ætatem agimus, qui non modò frugibus, lana, pecore, alijſq; ſubſidijs humanæ vitæ ſed multo magis veræ religionis verbiq; diuini, in quibus animi ſolùm acquieſcunt, pretioſiſsimis opibus abundamus. Sunt qui Britanniam alterum orbem appellârunt, quod hac ætate noſtra dici rectiſsimè poſſe arbitror. Cùm enim omnes vndique terræ grauiſsimis bellis affligantur, & diſcordiarum iactentur fluctibus, ſoli nos, celſitudine tua clauum moderante, in pacatiſsimo portu nauigamus, & ab orbe malorum diſiuncti, in cœlum quodammodo fælicitatis ſublati videmur. Quod eſt ergô officij noſtri, primùm deo Opt. Max. gratias agimus, cuius vnius bonitati omnem hanc, quantacúnq; eſt, beatitudinem acceptam referimus, precamurq; vt eam nobis propriam & perpetuam eſſe velit: deinde celſitudini tuæ, ſereniſsima regina, cuius opera, cura, ſolicitudine, & partam hanc nobis fælicitatem, & tot annos conſeruatam agnoſcimus. Lætamur hoc aſpectu tuo, & gratulamur incredibili ſtudio, quòd tum ex meo ipſius ſenſu loquor, tum omnes qui iam vndiq; confluxerunt Nordouicenſes tui à me dici poſtulant. Atq; vtinam in hæc pectora poſſes oculos inſerere, & occultos animorum noſtrorum ſinus perluſtrare, videres profectò incluſam intus, quæ tantis angustijs erumpere non poteſt, infinitam molem voluntatis. Fidem omnem, ſtudium, obſeruantiam, quæ tantæ principi debentur, vt hactenus promptiſsimè detulimus, ita ſtudioſiſsimè ſemper deferemus: & ſi quando caſus aliquis inciderit (quod Deus omen auertat) ſacroſanctæ maieſtatis tuæ, aut iſtius florentiſsimi regni, vel ſalus in diſcrimen veniat, vel dignitas periclitetur, non ſolum bonorum omnium ac facultatum effuſionem, ſed laterum noſtrorum oppoſitus & corporum pollicemur. Rogamus deinde & obſecramus excellentiam tuam, illuſtriſsima regina, vt & hoc noſtrum qualecunq; officium à ſumma beneuolentia animóq; quàm gratiſsimo profectum boni conſulas, & de nobis Nordouicenſibus ſic exiſtimes, ad lautiores te fortaſſe ſubditos veniſſe ſæpe, ad lætiores nunquam.

Pares gratias pro imparibus beneficijs agi non poſſe.

Angliam meritò alterum orbem nuncupari.

Nordouicenſium veranet ex intimis medullas prouenicus lætitia quam regiam maieſtatem videam.

The oration of Stephan Limbert, publike ſchoolemaiſter, to the moſt magnificent prince, Eliſabeth of England, France, and Ireland queene, &c: before the gates of the hoſpitall of Norwich.

IT is reported (moſt gratious queene) that Aegypt is watered with the yerelie ouerflowing of Nilus, and Lidia with the golden ſtreame of Pactolus, which thing is thought to be the cauſe of the great frutefulnes of theſe countries: but vpon vs, and further, ouer all England, euen into the vttermoſt borders, manie and maine riuers of godlineſſe, iuſtice, humilitie, and other innumerable good things, in compariſon of the which, gold is vile and naught worth, doo moſt plentifullie guſh out, and thoſe not from Tmolus, or other hilles I know not which, but from that continuall and moſt aboundant welſpring of your goodneſſe. And that of thoſe infinit goodneſſes I maie lightlie touch one, for that neither place, time, nor my abilitie dooth permit to ſpeake of manie: with what praiſes ſhall we extoll; with what magnificent words ſhall we expreſſe that notable mercie of your highneſſe (moſt renowmed queene) and vncredible readineſſe to relieue the need of poore men, than the which of manie vertues none can be more acceptable vnto God, as Homer writeth, neither anie vertue in a mightie prince more woondered at amongſt men. This hoſpitall of poore men is moſt famous, which will be a monument of princelie vertue and beneficence amongſt all poſteritie, inſtituted by the moſt mightie king Henrie your highneſſe father, confirmed with the great ſeale by the moſt noble king Edward your brother, but by your maieſtie, which deſerueth no leſſe praiſe, of late notablie increaſed and amplified by the lands and poſſeſſions of Cringleford, that you maie not now worthilie reioiſe ſo much in others ornaments, as your owne vertues. For you are ſaid for your ſingular wiſdome and learning, to haue ſtudied that diuine law of the moſt wiſe Plato, which he left written in the eleuenth booke of lawes. Such your great bountie therefore, ſo exceeding and incredible mercie (ô moſt vertuous prince) in what bookes ſhall we comprehend? With what duties, or with what voice ſhall we teſtifie the good will of a thankefull mind? For when we diligentlie ſeeke all the moſt exquiſit and curious means of thankeſgiuing: we cannot ſo much as atteine vnto the greatneſſe of this one benefit, by the which we acknowledge our ſelues bound and ſtreictlie holden to your moſt roiall maieſtie. We ſhall be ouercome, euen with this one and ſingular benefit, ſo much the leſſe hope haue we then in anie point to counteruaile the huge ſea of the reſt of your benefits, which ouerfloweth on euerie ſide as well publikelie & generallie ouer all your ſubiects, as properlie and particularlie vpon this citie. We certeinlie now inhabit, and lead our liues in thoſe moſt happie Ilands, of the which Heſiodus maketh mention, which not onelie abound with all maner of graine, wooll, cattell, and other aids of mans life; but much more with the moſt pretious treaſure of true religion and the word of God, in the which onlie the minds of men haue reſt and peace. There be that call England another world, which I thinke maie be moſt true in this our age. For whereas all lands on euerie ſide of vs are afflicted with moſt grieuous warres, and toſſed with the flouds of diſſention, we onelie (your highneſſe gouerning our ſterne) doo ſaile in a moſt peaceable hauen, and ſeuered from a world of miſchiefs, doo ſeeme after a ſort to be taken vp into a heauen of happineſſe. We therefore (according to our bounden dutie) firſt giue thanks vnto God almightie, vnto whoſe goodneſſe onelie with thanks we referre all this our happineſſe, how great ſoeuer it be, & praie that he would vouchſafe to make the ſame proper and perpetuall vnto vs. And afterwards vnto your highneſſe (ô moſt gratious queene) by whoſe ſtudie, care and diligence we confeſſe this bleſſedneſſe to be gotten, and ſo manie years preſerued vnto vs. We are glad in this beholding you, and we reioiſe with deſire more than maie be beleeued, which as I ſpeake of mine owne thought, ſo alſo all the ſubiects of Norwich deſire me to ſaie the ſame in their behalfe. And

The excellent and incomparable bleſſings of England.

King Henrie king Edward and queene Eliſabeth acknowledged ſpeciall benefactors.

Condigne thanks vnpoſſible to be giuen.

England deſcribedlie called another world.

Their vnfeigned reioiſing to ſee hir maieſtie.

I would

I would to God you could pearse these our breasts with your eies, and throughlie view the hidden and couered creeks of our minds! Then vndoubtedlie should you behold an infinit heape of goodwill closelie shut vp within, which cannot breake out of so narrow straits. All the faith, studie, and obedience, which are due to so great a prince, as hitherto we haue most willinglie imploied, so will we alwaies most diligentlie performe the same: and if at anie time anie chance shall happen (which fortune God turne from vs) that the state of thy blessed maiestie, or of this flourishing realme should come in danger, or the worthinesse therof be in hazard, we do not onlie protest the effusion of all our goods and substance, but also the putting foorth and brunt of our strengths and bodies therein. Finallie, we desire and beseech thy excellencie (most renowmed queene) well to accept of this our dutie, howsoeuer it be, proceeding from a singular good will, and a most thankefull mind, and so to thinke of vs citizens of Norwich, that perhaps you haue manie times come to people more wealthie, but to more ioifull neuer.

Immediatlie after the beginning of the oration hir maiestie called to hir the French ambassadors, whereof there were three, and diuerse English lords, and willed them to harken, and she hirselfe was verie attentiue, euen vntill the end thereof. And the oration ended, after she had giuen great thanks therefore to maister Limbert, she said to him; It is the best that euer I heard; you shall haue my hand: and pulled off hir gloue, and gaue him hir hand to kisse, which before kneeling on his knees, he arose and kissed; and then she departed to the court without anie other shew that night, but that she sent backe to know his name. The nert night being thursdaie there was an excellent princelie maske brought before hir after supper by maister Goldingham in the priuie chamber, it was of gods and goddesses both strangelie and richlie apparelled. The first that entred was Mercurie, then entred two torchbearers in purple taffata mandillions laid with siluer lace, as all other the torchbearers were; then entred a consort of musike, to wit, six musicians, all in long vestures of white sarsenet girded about them, and garlands on their heads, plaieng verie cunninglie; then two torchbearers more; then Jupiter and Juno, then two torchbearers more; then Mars and Venus, then two torchbearers more; then Apollo and Pallas, then two torchbearers more; then Neptune and Diana; and lastly Cupid concluding the matter.

The queenes high commendation of maister Limberts oration.

The description of an excellent and princelie maske.

Thus when they had once marched about the chamber, Mercurie dischargeth his message in these words to the queene: The god meaning maior and all his brethren, with the rest, haue not rested from praieng vnto the gods to prosper thy comming hither; and the gods themselues moued by their vnfained praters, are readie in person to bid thee worthilie welcome; and I Mercurie the god of merchants and merchandize, and therefore a fauourer of the cittizens, being thought meetest am chosen fittest to signifie the same. Gods there be also which cannot come, being tied by the time of the yeare, as Ceres in haruest, Bacchus in wines, Pomona in orchards. Onelie Pymineus denieth his good will, either in presence or in person: notwithstanding Diana hath so counterchecked him therfore, as he shall hereafter be at your commandement. For my part, as I am a reioiser at your comming, so am I a furtherer of your welcome hither; and for this time I bid you farewell.

Mercuries message to the queene.

Then marched they about againe, and that done Jupiter spake to the queene in this sort, and then gaue hir a riding wand of wheles Incurioslie wrought.

Feare not oh queene, thou art beloued so,
As subiects true will trulie thee defend:
Feare not my power to ouerthrow thy wo,
I am the God that can ech misse amend.
Thou doest know great Jupiter am I,
That gaue thee first thy happie souereintie.
I giue thee still as euer thou hast had,
A peereiesse power vnto thy dieng date:
I giue thee rule to ouercome the bad,
And loue to loue thy louing subiects aie.
I giue thee heere this small and slender wand,
To shew thou shalt in quiet rule the land.

Is Juno rich? No sure she is not so,
She wants that wealth that is not wanting heere,
Thy goods get friends, my wealth wins manie a foe,
My riches rust, but thine shine passing cleere.
Thou art beloued of subiects farre and nie,
Which is such wealth as monie cannot buie.
Farewell faire queene, I cannot giue thee ought,
Nor take awaie thy good that is so bound:
Thou canst not giue that I so long haue sought,
Ne can I hold the riches thou hast found.
Yet take this gift, though poore I seeme to be,
That thou thy selfe shalt neuer poorer be.

Then Juno spake, whose gift was a purse curioslie wrought.

Where force dooth fiercelie seeke to foster wrong,
There Mars dooth make him make a quicke recoile,
Nor can indure that he should harbor long,
Where naughtie wights manure in goodlie soile.
This is the vle that aids the force of warre,
That Mars dooth mend, that force dooth seeke to marre.
And though oh queene thou best a prince of peace,
Yet shalt thou haue me faithfullie sure at need:
The stormes of strife and blustering broiles to cease,
Which forren foes or faithlesse friends may breed.
To conquer, kill, to vanquish and subdue,
Such fained folke, as loues to liue vntrue.

Then after they had marched againe about, Mars gaue his gift, which was a faire paire of knives, and said:

These words were ingraued vpon the knives:

To hurt your foe and helpe your frend,
These knives are made vnto that end:
Both blunt and sharpe you shall vs find,
As pleaseth best your princelie mind.

In vaine (faire queene) from heauen my comming was,
To seeke to mend that is no waie amis:
For now I see thy fauour so dooth passe,
That none but thou, thou onelie she it is,
Whose beautie bids ech wight to looke on thee,
By view they may another Venus see.
Where beautie boasts, and fauour dooth not faile,
What may I giue to thee O worthie wight?
This is my gift, there shall no woe preuaile,
That seekes thy will against thy willes delight,
Not where they will, but where it likes thy mind,
Accept that friend if iotall thou him find.

Then spake Venus whose gift was a white doue.

The doue being cast off, ran directlie to the queene, and being taken vp and set vpon the table before hir maiestie, sate so quietlie as if it had beene tied. Then after they had marched againe about, Apollo presented his gift, which was an instrument called a bandonet, and did sing to the said instrument this short and pithie ditie, as he was plaieng therevpon:

It seemeth strange to see such strangers heere,
Yet not so strange but strangers knowes you well:
Your vertuous thoughts to gods doo plaine appeere,
Your acts on earth bewraies how you excell:
You cannot die, loue here hath made your lease,
Which gods haue sent, and God saith shall not cease.
Vertuous desire desired me to sing,
No subiects suite, though suters they were all,
Apollos gifts are subiect to no king,
Rare are thy gifts that did Apollo call,
Then still reioise, sith God and man saie so,
This is my gift, thou neuer shalt haue wo.

The song of Apollo to the queene.

Most worthie wight, what wouldst thou haue of me?
Thou hast so much, thou canst inioie no more:
I cannot giue that once I gaue to thee,
Nor take awaie the good I gaue before.
I robbed was by natures good consent,
Against my will, and yet I was content.
A Pallas thou, a princesse I will be:
I queene of losse, thou goddesse which hast got:
I sometime was, thou onelie now art she:
I take, thou gainest that lucke that was my lot.
I giue not thee this booke to learne thee aught,
For that I know alreadie thou art taught.

Pallas then speaketh and presenteth hir gift, which was a booke of wisdome.

What art thou (queene) that gods do loue thee so?
Who woon their wils to bend at thy will?
How can the world become thy cruell foe?
How can Disdaine or Malice seeke to kill?
Can sea or earth deuise to hurt thy hap?
Sith thou by gods doost sit in fortunes lap.
As heauen and earth haue vowed to be thine,
So Neptunes seas haue sworne to drench thy foes,
As I am god, and all the waters mine,
Still shalt thou get, but neuer shalt thou lose:
And sith on earth my wealth is nought at all,
Accept good will, the gift is verie small.

Then Neptune spake: his gift was a great artificiall fish, and in the bellie of it a pike, which he threw out before hir maiestie.

Who euer found on earth a constant friend,
That may compare with this my virgin queene?
Who euer found a bodie and a mind
So free from staine, so perfect to be seene?
Oh heauenlie hew, that aptest is to soile,
And yet doost liue from blot of anie foile.
Rare is thy gift, and giuen to few or none,
Maiist therefore of some that dare not say,
More shines thy light, for that I know but one,
That anie such shew, to follow on their waie.
Thou thou art shee, take thou the onelie praise,
For chastest dame in these our happie daies.

Diana presented a bow and arrowes nocked and headed with siluer; hir speach was this.

Accept

Accept my bowe, sith best thou doost deserue,
Though well I know thy mind can thee preserue.

Cupido his speach, his gift an arrow of gold.

Ah ha, I see my mother out of sight,
Then let the boy now plaie the wag a while,
I seeme but weake, yet weake is not my might,
My boiesh wit can oldest folke beguile.
Who so dooth thinke, I speake this but in iest,
Let me but shoot, and I shall quench his rest,
Marke here my shafts: this all is made of wood,
Which is but soft, and breeds but soft good will,
Now this is gilt, yet seemes it gold full good,
And dooth deceiue blind louing people still.
But here is one is seldome felt or seene:
This is of gold, meet for the noblest queene.
Wherefore dame faire, take thou this gift of me,
Though some deserue, yet none deserue like you,
Shoot but this shaft at king or Cesar: he,
And he is thine, and if thou wilt allow,
It is a gift that manie here doo craue,
Yet none but thou this golden shaft maie haue.

There was written vpon the shaft:

My colour, toy, my substance pure,
My vertue such as shall indure.

The quénes behauiour after all this welcomming.

Hir maiestie receiued these gifts verie thankefullie, the gods and goddesses with the rest of the maske marched about the chamber againe, and then departed in like maner as they came in. Then the quéene called vnto hir maister Robert Wood, the maior of Norwich, whom first she heartilie thanked, and toke by the hand, and vsed secret conference: but what I know not. And thus this delightfull night passed, to the ioy of all that saw hir grace in so pleasant plight.

The deuisor is commanded to be readie with his shewes to delight the queene.

On thursdaie in the morning, my lord chamberlaine gaue the deuisor warning the quéene would ride abrode in the after none, and he commanded him to be readie, dutifullie to present hir with some shew. Then knowing which waie the quéene would ride (by coniecture and instructions giuen) the deuisor caused a place to be made and digged for the nymphes of the water, the maner and proportion whereof was in this forme and fashion. First there was measure taken for threescore foot of ground euerie waie, the hole to be made deepe and foure square, which ground was all couered with canuas painted greene like the grasse, and at euerie side on the canuas ran a string through curteine rings, which string might easilie be drawne anie kind of waie, by reason of two great poales that laie along in the ground, and answered the curteine or canuas on each side, so that drawing a small cord in the middle of the canuas, the earth would seeme to open, & so shut againe as the other end of the cord was drawne backward. And in the same caue was a noble noise of musike of all kind of instruments, seuerallie to be sounded and plaied vpon, and at one time they should be sounded all together, that might serue for a consort of broken musike. And in the same caue also was placed twelue water nymphes, disguised or dressed most strangelie, ech of them had either vpon white silke, or fine linnen, greene sedges stitched cunninglie on a long garment, so well wrought and also set on, as scarse anie whit might be perceiued. And euerie nymph had in hir hand a great bundle of bulrushes, and had on hir head a garland of iuie, vnder the which iuie was a coife of mosse, and vnder the mosse was there long goodlie heare like golden tresses that couered hir shoulders, and in a maner raught downe vnto hir middle.

A proper deuise and verie delectable of a caue & twelue water nymphes, &c.

Now touching the beautie of the nymphes, they séemed to be the chosen children of the world, and became their attire so well, that their beautie might haue abused a right good iudgement. For diuerse of those that knew them before (albeit they were bare faced) could scarse know them in their garments, and sundrie toke them to be yong girles and wenches, prepared for the nonce, to procure a laughter. These nymphs thus apparelled, and all things in good plight and readinesse, there was deuised, that at the quénes comming néere the water side (as this caue stood at the brim of the riuer) one nymph should pop vp out of the caue first, and salute the quéene with a speach, and then another: and so till foure of them had finished their speaches, there they should remaine; and when they retired into their caue, the musike should begin: which sure had béene a noble hearing, and the more melodious for the varietie thereof, and bicause it should come secretlie and strangelie out of the earth. And when the musike was done, then should all the twelue nymphs haue issued togither, & danced a danse with timbrels that were trimmed with belles, and other iangling things, which timbrels were as brode as a siue, hauing bottoms of fine parchment, and being sounded, made such a confused noise and pastime, that it was to be wondered at: besides the strangenesse of the timbrels (yet knowne to our forefathers) was a matter of admiration vnto such as were ignorant of that new found toy, gathered and borrowed from our elders. So in order and readinesse stood that shew for the time.

quénes comming néere the water side.

The shew of Manhood and Desert with the furniture declared.

And to kéepe that shew companie (but yet farre off) stood the shew of Manhood and Desert, as first to be presented, and that shew was as well furnished as the other; men all, saue one boy called Beautie; for the which, Manhood, Fauour, and Desert, did striue (or should haue contended) but good Fortune (as victor of all conquests) was to come in, and ouerthrow Manhood, Fauour, Desert, & all their powers, and onelie by fine force (vpon a watchword spoken) should laie hand on Beautie, and carrie or lead hir away. The other tutors troubled with this kind of dealing, should talke togither, and sweare to be in one mind for an open reuenge: and vpon that Fortune should crie Arme, arme. The other side called for their friends, at the which stirre should appeare both their strengthes: but good Fortune should farre in power exceed his enimies. And yet to shew that Destinie (and who best can conquer) shall gouerne all, Fortune should make an offer, that six to six with sword and target should end the brall and businesse. Then six gentlemen on either side with rebated swords and targets (onelie in dublet and hose, and murrion on head) approched and would claime the combat, and deale togither twelue blowes apéece, and in the end fortune should be victor: and then the shot and armed men should fall at variance so sharpelie (vpon mistaking of the matter) that Fortunes side should triumph and march ouer the bellies of their enimies: in which time were legs and armes of men (well and liuelie wrought) to be let fall in numbers on the ground, as bloudie as might be. Fortune, regarding nothing but victorie, marcheth so awaie in great triumph: and then should haue come into the place a song for the death of Manhood, Fauor, and Desert, and so the shew should haue ended.

A bloodie fight and yet harmelesse done by art.

But now note what befell after this great businesse and preparation. For as the quénes highnesse was appointed to come vnto hir coch, and the lords and courtiers were readie to mount on horsebacke, there fell such a showre of raine (& in the necke thereof came such a terrible thunder) that euerie one of vs were driuen to séeke for couert and most comfort, insomuch that some of vs in bote stood vnder a bridge and were all so dashed & washed, that it was a greater pastime to sée vs loke like drowned rats, than to haue beheld the vttermost of the shewes rehearsed. Thus yon sée, a shew in the open field is alwaies subiect to the sudden change of weather, and a number of more inconueniences. But what should be said of that which the citie lost by this cause; veluets, silkes, tinsels, and some cloth of gold being cut out for these purposes, that could not serue to anie great effect after? Well, there was no more to saie, but an old adage, that Man dooth purpose, but God dooth dispose,

All the preparation disappointed by thunder and raine.

The cities losse by occasion of this tempest.

what was deuised to be done by the nymphs at the

to

to whose disposition and pleasure the guide of greater maters is committed. So this thursdaie toke his leaue from the actors, and left them loking one vpon another, & he that thought he had receiued most iniurie, kept greatest silence, and lapping vp (among a bundle of other misfortunes) this euill chance, euerie person quietlie passed to his lodging.

The next daie being fridaie, in which daie the court remoued, the streets towards saint Benets gates were hanged, from the one side to the other, with cords made of hearbs and floures, with garlands, coronets, pictures, rich cloths, and a thousand deuises. At the gates themselues there was a stage made verie richlie apparelled with cloth of gold and crimsin veluet, wher vpon in a close place made theron for the purpose, was placed verie swæt muske: & one readie to render hir this speach following. The dolefull houre of hir departure came, she passed from the court, to those gates, with such countenances, both of hir maiesties part, and hir subiects now dolorous, now chærefull, as plainlie shewed the louing hearts of both sides. When she came there the speach was thus vttered vnto hir in verie plausible sort:

The qnéns departure frō Norwich heauilie taken.

Terrestriall ioies are tide with slender file,
Each happie hap full hastilie dooth slide,
As summer season lasteth but a while,
So winter stormes doo longer time abide:
Alas what blisse can anie time endure?
Our sunshine daie is dasht with sudden shoure.
Could toong expresse our secret ioies of hart,
(Oh mightie prince) when thou didst come in place?
No no God wot, nor can expresse the smart
Thy subiects feele in this departing case.
But gratious queene, let here thy grace remaine
In gratious wise, till thy returne againe.
In lieu whereof, receiue thy subiects harts,
In fixed faith continuallie thine owne:
Who readie rest to loose their vitall parts
In thy defense, when anie blast is blowne.
Thou art our queene, our rocke and onelie staie,
We are thine owne to serue by night and daie.
Farewell oh queene, farewell oh mother deare,
Let Jacobs God thy sacred bodie gard:
All is thine owne that is possessed here,
And all in all is but a small reward
For thy great grace, God length thy life like Noy,
To gouerne vs, and eke thy realme in ioy. Amen.

Note the true hearts of the citizens and people.

These words were deuised by B. Goldingham, and spoken by himselfe, to whome hir maestie said: We thanke you hartilie. Then with the musicke in the same place was song this short dittie following, in a verie swæt voice, to the great delite of the hearers;

A dittie song in a verie swæt voice.

What vaileth life, where sorow sokes the hart?
Who feareth death that is in deepe distresse?
Release of life dooth best abate the smart
Of him, whose woes are quite without redresse.
Lend me your teares, resigne your sighes to me,
Helpe all to waile the dolor which you see.
What haue we doone, she will no longer staie?
What may we doo to hold hir with vs still?
Shee is our queene, we subiects must obaie,
Grant, though with greefe, to hir departing will.
Conclude we then, and sing with sobbing breath,
God length thy life (oh queene Elisabeth.)

Fridaies deuise vpon the remouing of the court.

On fridaie, the court vpon remoue, the citie troubled with manie causes, and some séeking to do seruice like the deuiser, moued him to do somewhat of himselfe, bicause his aids (as manie times they were before) were drawne from him, each one about his owne businesse, and he left to his owne inuentions and policie, at which exigent or casuall things of fortune, he drew his boies vnto him, that were the Nymphs on the water, and so departed the citie, with such garments and stuffe necessarie as fitted his purpose and the matter he went about. Then he chose a ground, by the which the quéne must passe, inclosing his companie in the corner of a field, being defensed with high and thicke bushes, and there some parts he made, which the boies might misse, bicause the time was short for the learning of those parts. But he being resolued to do somewhat might make the quéne laugh, appointed that seauen boies of twelue should passe through a hedge from the place of abode (which was gallantlie trimmed) and deliuer seauen spéeches. And these boies (you must vnderstand) were dressed like Nymphes of the water, and were to plaie by a deuise and degrees the feiries, and to danse (as nére as could be imagined) like the feiries. Their attire and comming so strangelie out, made the quénes highnesse smile and laugh withall. And the deuiser hearing this good hope, being apparelled like a water spirite, began to sound a timbrell, & the rest with him, all the twelue Nymphs togither (when the seauen had repaired in) sounded timbrels likewise. And although the deuiser had no great harting, yet as he durst, he led the yong folish feiries a danse, which boldnesse of his bred no disgrace, but as he heard, was well taken. The quéne vpon their retire in, hasted to hir highnes lodging, which was seuen miles off, and at that present, when the shew ended, it was past fiue of the clocke.

A pleasant deuise to make the quéne laugh.

The deuisers doings well taken of the quéne, &c.

All these shewes finished, hir maiestie in princelie maner marched toward the confines of the liberties of the citie of Norwich, which was supposed almost two miles. Before she came there, maister maior brake to my lord chamberlaine, that he was to vtter to hir maiestie an other oration, whereof my lord seemed to haue good liking: but before they came to the said confines, maister maior was willed to forbeare the vtterance of the same his oration, bicause it was about seauen of the clocke, and hir maiestie had then fiue miles to ride. Neuertheless he gaue to hir maiestie both his orations in writing, which she thanked him for. She also thanked the maior, euerie alderman, and the commoners, not onelie for the great chære they had made hir, but also for the open housholds they kept to hir highnesse seruants, and all others. Then she called maister maior and made him knight: and so departing, said: I haue laid vp in my breast such good will, as I shall neuer forget Norwich; and procéeding onward did shake hir riding rod and said: Farewell Norwich, with the water standing in hir eies. In which great good will towards vs all, I beséech God to continue hir maiestie with long and triumphant reigne ouer vs, Amen.

Maister maior purposing to vtter another oration, is willed to forbeare it, and why, &c.

The maior of Norwich knighted.

The quénes words at hir departing.

Now to come to the returne of the quænes maiestie from Norfolke and Suffolke, in which two counties hir highnesse knighted certeine gentlemen, as namelie in Suffolke George Colt, Philip Parkar, Robert Jermine, William Spring, Thomas Barnardiston, Thomas Kidson, Arthur Hedingham: In Norfolke, Thomas Kneuet, Nicholas Bacon, William Paston, Edward Clére, Rafe Shelton, Henrie Woodhouse, Thomas Gaudie, Robert Wood maior, Roger Woodhouse. These gentlmen hir maiestie knighted, for that they should all their life time after haue the greater regard to God and their prince. Now the quænes maiestie passing from Norwich, she came to sir Roger Woodhouses that night, where she was well receiued, and noblie interteined. From thense to Wood rising at sir Edward Clæres. From thense to sir Thomas Kidsons, where in verie déed the fare and bankets did so exceéd a number of other places, that it is worthie the mention. A shew representing the feiries (as well as might be) was there séene, in the which shew a rich iewell was presented to the quænes highnes. From thense to maister Reuets, where all things were well and in verie good order, and meat liberallie spent.

Gentlemen of Suffolke & Norfolke knighted.

The quénes maiestie departeth from Norwich and is now interteined by the waie.

But now to speake a little by the waie of Gods mightie hand and power, that framed mens hearts so well in manie parts, before the quénes highnesse came to Cambridgeshire, and to tell how blessedlie our great and good God did deale with our dere souereigne ladie, in causing euerie person to shew their dutie, is a matter of great discourse, and of no little weight and comfort to all good minds that shall consider of the same. Such a Lord is our great God, that can frame all things to the best, and such a souereigne ladie we haue, that can make the crooked paths streight where she commeth, & draw the harts of the people after hir wheresoeuer she trauelleth. So from master Reuets hir highnesse came to my lord Norths, who was no whit behind anie of the best for a franke house, a noble heart, and well ordered interteinement. And there was an oration made by a gentleman of Cambridge, with a statelie and a faire cup presented from the vniuersitie, all the ambassadors of France beholding the same. And the gentlemen of the shire (as in manie other places) did beare the quænes meat to the table, which was a great liking & gladnesse to the gentlemen, & a solemne sight for strangers & subiects to looke vpon. From my lord Norths to sir Giles Allingtons, where things were well, and well liked. From thense to sir John Cuts. From thense to M. Kapels, where was excellent good chære & interteinement. From thense to Hide hall, where I heard of no great chære nor banketting. From thense to Rockwood hall, but how the traine was there interteined, I am ignorant of. From thense to master Stonars, and from thense to my lord of Leicesters house, where the progresse ended, & (to knit vp all) the good chære was reuiued, not onelie with making a great feast to the quæne and the French ambassador, but also in feasting solemnelie (at seuerall times) the whole gard, on sundaie and mondaie before the quæne came, at his owne table, vsing such courtesie vnto them for the space of two daies, as was and is worthie of perpetuall memorie. Thus much of the quænes highnesse returne, whom God hath so well preserued, that she like a worthie prince to our great comfort prospereth in peace, to the great disgrace of the enimies of God, and aduersaries of our common weale and countrie, wherin God continue hir maiestie, Amen.

that

The vniuersitie of Cambridge present a faire and statelie cup to the quæne.

T.C.

The lord of Leicesters bountifull interteinement.

The quænes maiestie, now gone from Norwich, carried awaie with hir all the gladnesse of the citie, which sprang from hir presence; in place whereof succéeded melancholie sadnes: in somuch that the verie aier altered with the change of the countrie chære proceeding from the departure of hir highnes roiall person: which he meant that made these verses, wherwith the description of this progresse shall end.

Ad solem nubibus obductum die lunæ 18. Augusti, 1578.

Splendide Phœbe redi, cur te sub nube recondis?
Innuba Pallas adest, splendide Phœbe redi.
Hasta minax procul est, non Gorgonis ora videbis,
Pallas inermis adest, splendide Phœbe redi.
Scilicet à tanto metuis tibi lumine forsan:
Ne superet radios fœmina Phœbe tuos.
Pulcher Apollo tibi ne sit regina rubori:
Ipse decore tuo vincis, & illa suo.
Euge redux reducem quia pulsa nocte reducis
Phœbe diem: toto est gratius orbe nihil.
Hæc pepulit tetri tenebras noctémque papismi,
Et liquidum retulit religione diem.
Euge nigras nebulas radijs quia sæpe repellis
Phœbe tuis: pene est gratius orbe nihil.
Texuerant remoras discrimina mille papistæ:
Ne cœptum princeps continuaret iter:
Nec tamen hunc nebulæ potuerunt condere solem:
Quamuis tu nebulis cedis Apollo tuis.
Ergò iubar nostrum repulisse obstaculo cernis?
Sic age, sol nebulas lumine pelle tuo.
Splendide Phœbe redi, cur te sub nube recondis?
Innuba Pallas adest, splendide Phœbe redi.

Eiusdem in eandem.

Sustinet, ornat, habet, regnum, literaria, formam,
Prouida, docta, decens, Iuno, Minerua, Venus.
Singula dona trium simul Elizabetha dearum
Prouida, docta, decens, sustinet, ornat, habet.
Esse deas fusi: diuinam dicimus istam:
Quamuis nec liceat nec libet esse deam.

In shadowing clouds why art thou cloth'd? O Phebus bright retire:
Unspoused Pallas present is, O Phebus bright retire.
The threatning speare is flong far off, doubt not grim Gorgons ire:
Unarmed Pallas present is, O Phebus bright retire.
Perhaps thou art afraid: And why? at this so large a light:
Least that a woman should excell, thy beams (O Phebus) bright.
Let not a queene, a virgine pure, which is, and euer was,
O faire Apollo, make thee blush: you both in beautie passe.
O Phebus safe and sound returne, which, banishing the night,
Bringst backe the date: in all the world nothing of like delight:
She, onelie she, the darkenesse driue of popetie quite awaie:
And by religion hath restord the bright and lightsome daie.
O Phebus with thy beams, which foilst the clouds both blind & black,
The world, in maner all, a thing of like delight doth lacke.
A thousand dangers and delaies the papists had deuisd,
To thend our princesse should abridge hir progresse enterprisd:
Yet this our bright & shining sun, cast light through euerie cloud:
Although in clouds thou art content, Apollo oft to shrond.
Thou seest our sunne in comelie course, puts off ech stop and staie:
Do thou the like, and by thy light driue euerie cloud awaie.
In shadowing clouds why art thou cloth'd? O Phebus bright retire:
Unhoused Pallas present is: O Phebus bright retire.

To the sunne couered with clouds vpon mondaie, being the 18 of August 1578.

Hir kingdome all by prouidence, queene Juno doth vphold:
And of Minerua ladie learnd, is learned loue extold:
And Uenus faire of countenance, hath beautie vncontrold.
These sundrie gifts of goddesses three, Elisabeth possesseth:
By prouidence hir peoples peace, and comfort she increaseth:
Hir learning, learning amplifies: hir beautie neuer ceaseth.
I did but iest, of goddesses to giue them three the name:
This ladie maist thou goddesse call, for she deserues the same:
Although she will not vndertake, a title of such fame.

By the same concerning the quæne.

Matthew Hamont burnt at Norwich.

Matthew Hamont, by his trade a ploughwright of Hetharset three miles from Norwich, was conuented before the bishop of Norwich, for that he denied Christ our sauiour. At the time of his appearance it was obiected that he had published these heresies following. That the new testament and gospell of Christ are but meere foolishnelle, a storie of man, or rather a meere fable. Item, that man is restored to grace by Gods meere mercie, without the meane of Christs bloud, death and passion. Item, that Christ is not God nor the sauiour of the world, but a meere man, a sinfull man, and an abhominable idoll. Item, that all they that worship him are abhominable idolaters, & that Christ did not rise againe from death to life by the power of his godhead, neither that he ascended into heauen. Item, that the Holie ghost is not God, neither that there is anie such Holie ghost. Item, that baptisme is not necessarie in the church of God, neither the vse of the sacrament of the bodie and blood of Christ. For the which heresies he was condemned in the consistorie, and sentence was pronounced against him by the bishop of Norwich on the thirteenth date of Aprill, and thervpon deliuered to the shiriffes of Norwich. And bicause he spake words of blasphemie (not to be recited) against the quænes maiestie and others of hir councell, he was by the recorder, master sergeant Windham, and the maior sir Robert Wood of Norwich condemned to lose both his eares, which were cut off on the thirteenth of Maie in the market place of Norwich, and afterwards, to wit on the twentith of Maie, he was burned in the castell dich of Norwich.

The heresies that he held.

In Englishman made a locke and a keie, weieng but one whete corne.

This yeare in the moneth of Maie, Marke Scaliot blacke smith citizen of London, borne in the parish of saint Clements Dane without Temple bar, and now dwelling in Cornehill nére vnto Leaden hall, for triall of workemanship, made one hanging locke of iron, steele and brasse, of eleuen seuerall pèces, a pipe keie filed three square with a pot vpon the shaft, & the bow with two esses, all cleane wrought, which weied but one graine of gold or wheat corne. He also at the same time made a chaine of gold of three and fortie linkes, to the which chaine the locke and keie being fastened, and put about a fleas necke, she drew the same with ease. All which, locke, keie, chaine, and flea, weied but one graine and a halfe. A thing almost incredible, but that my selfe (amongst manie others) haue séene it, & therfore must affirme it to be true.

The bishop of winchester deceased.

The first of June deceased Robert Horne doctor of diuinitie, bishop of Winchester, and prelat of the garter, at Winchester place in Southwarke, and was

was buried at Winchester. ¶ This man was learned and eloquent, of a round and readie vtterance, sound in religion and zelous in the truth; in testimonie whereof he chose rather to forsake his native soile, and to liue a stranger in a forren land, than with offense of conscience to tarrie at home within the sight and hearing of the manifold abhominations which supported poperie: so that although death haue deuoured his mortall bodie, yet in respect of his vertue and godlinesse, his name shall be immortall; according to the truth of this sentence:

Corpore deposito viuit virtute superstes,
De virtute nihil mors violenta rapit.

John Wolton bishop of Excester.

John Wolton now liuing, was called to be bishop of Excester, & consecrated at Lambith by Edmund Grindall archbishop of Canturburie, in August 1579. He is a professor of diuinitie, and a preacher of the gospell, and vniuersallie séene in all good letters. This William Wolton, being in successiue order the eight and fortith that occupied the said sée, from the first that inioied the same episcopall aduancement, ministreth iust occasion to insert a catalog of all the bishops of Excester as they followed one after another in that sée, being an apt collection, and verie answerable to the description of Excester, and the ancient foundation of saint Peters church there; mentioned in the third yeare of the reigne of king Edward the first, page 1007, and continued to page 1028.

A catalog of the bishops of Excester collected by Iohn Vowell alias Hooker, gentleman.

Werstanus. 1 Werstanus, at a prouinciall synod holden in Westsex, in the yeare 905, was consecrated bishop of Deuon, and had his sée at bishops Tauton: and in the yeare following 906 he died, and was buried in his owne church.

Putta. 2 Putta, after the death of Werstanus, was elected and consecrated bishop, and had his sée at Tauton: and taking his iourneie towards Crediton, to sée and visit the king (or as some saie, Vffa the kings lieutenant) was by the said Vffas men slaine, and then vpon his death the sée was remoued to Crediton.

Eadulphus. 3 Eadulphus, brother to Alpsius duke of Deuon and Cornewall, and founder of Lanceston, was consecrated bishop of Deuon, but installed at Crediton, where he had his sée, and continued bishop two and twentie yeares, and then dieng about the yeare 932, he was buried in his owne church.

Ethelgarus. 4 Ethelgarus, in the yeare 932, succeeded Eadulphus, and in his time king Athelstane subdued the Cornish people, reedified this citie, and compassed the same with a stone wall: he founded the monasterie of saint Peters for monks of saint Benets order. This Ethelgarus, after he had béene bishop ten yeares, died, and was buried in his owne church.

Algarus. 5 Algarus, in the yeare 942 after Ethelgarus, was constituted & installed bishop at Crediton, and hauing béene bishop about ten yeares, died and was buried in his owne church.

Alfwoldus. 6 Alfwoldus, as Matthew Westminster writeth, was next bishop after Algarus, and consecrated by the aduise of Dunstane, in the yeare 952. In this time Odogarus earle of Deuon, and father in law to king Edgar, builded the abbeie of Taunstoke: and king Edgar called home all the monkes of saint Peters which were dispersed, and without anie abbat, and made Sidemannus abbat, who was afterwards bishop. This Alfwoldus after sixtéene yeares that he was consecrated, died and was buried in his owne church.

7 Alfwolfus, as Dicetus affirmeth, was consecrated bishop in the yeare of our Lord 969, and after nine yeares died, and was buried in his owne church. Alfwolfus.

8 Sidemannus of an abbat was made a bishop, in the yeare 978. In this mans time the Danes ouerran and spoiled the whole countries of Deuon and Cornewall, burned the towne of Bodmen, and the cathedrall church of saint Petrokes, with the bishops house. Whereupon the bishops sée was remoued from thense to saint Germans, where the same continued, vntill the remouing and vniting thereof vnto Crediton. Sidemannus in the twelfe yeare after his consecration died, and was buried at Crediton in his owne church 990. Sidemannus.

9 Alphzedus, whome Dicetus calleth Alstieus, abbat of Malmesburie, was consecrated bishop, and installed at Crediton: he was taken for a learned man, because he wrote two bookes, the one intituled De rebus cœnobij sui, and the other De rerum naturis. In this bishops time, king Ethelred endowed the bishoprike of saint Germans with lands, liberties, and priuileges. The Danes made a freth inuasion in and vpon all Deuon and Cornewall, burned and spoiled the abbie of Ordolphus at Tauestoke: they besieged Excester, and being remoued from thense, were fought withall at Pinneho, about three miles from the citie, and ouerthrowne. Alphzedus, after he had béene bishop about nine yeares, died in the yeare 999, and was buried in his owne church. Alphzedus.

10 Alwolfus (as Dicetus writeth) was the next bishop. In his time Sweno king of Denmarke, by intisement of one Hugh then earle of Deuon, came with a great host and besieged the citie of Excester, tooke it and burned it, and with great cruelties vsed the people, vntill in the end Almarus then earle of Deuon, and the gentlemen did yéeld and submit themselues, and so obteined peace. This Alwolfus about the fiftéenth yeare of his bishoprike, in the yeare 1014 died, and was buried in his owne church. Alwolfus.

11 Arnoldus, by the report of the archdeacon of London, succéeded Alwolfus, and was installed at Crediton. In this mans time, king Canutus gaue to Athelwold abbat of S. Peters of this citie great gifts, and sundrie priuileges, in recompense of his fathers great iniuries. Arnoldus in the fiftéenth yeare of his bishoprike 1030 died, and was buried in his owne church. Arnoldus.

12 Leuigus or Leuingus abbat of Tauestoke, and nephue to Brithwaldus bishop of Cornewall, was chosen the next bishop, and according to the orders then vsed, consecrated and installed. He was in great fauour and credit with king Canutus, vpon whome he attended in pilgrimage to Rome; and after his vncle the bishop of saint Germans being dead, obteined of the king that the bishops sée was remoued from saint Germans vnto Crediton, and both were thereby reduced and vnited into one bishoprike, and so hath euer since continued. Hée was after the death of Brithegus bishop of Worcester, remoued to that church, and there died, and was buried as some suppose: but some affirme, that in the time of Hardicanutus the king, at the accusation of Alfredus then archbishop of Yorke, for that he should be consenting to the death of Alfredus the sonne of Etheldred, that he should be deposed of his bishoprike there, and so did returne vnto Tauestoke, where he died. But Dicetus affirmeth, that he purged himselfe of this crime, and by that meanes was restored, both to the fauour of the king, and to his bi- Leuigus, or Leuingus.

shoprike againe, and died bishop of Worcester. It is recorded that he was bishop of Crediton fiftéene yeares.

Leofricus. 13 Leofricus, a man descended of the bloud and line of Brutus, but brought vp in the land of Lothoringia or Lorreine, was so well commended for his nobilitie, wisedome, and learning, that king Edward the Confessor had him in great fauour, and made him first one of his priuie councell; then lord chancellor of all England: and laklie the bishoprike of this prouince being void, he was made, consecrated, and installed bishop of the same. By him and by his meanes, the bishops sée was remoued from Crediton vnto this citie of Excester: for at his request, king Edward togither with quéene Edith his wife came to Excester, & remouing the monkes from hense to Westminster, did also remoue the bishops sée from Crediton vnto his citie, and did put the bishop in possession. For he conducting the bishop on the right hand, and the quéene on the left hand, brought him to the high altar of his new church, and there placed him in a seat appointed for him. He suppressed sundrie houses or cels of religion within his sanctuarie, and appropriated and vnited them to his owne church; as also by the good liberalitie of the king obteined great reuenues, possessions, priuileges, and liberties to be giuen vnto the church. In this mans time, William duke of Normandie made a conquest of this whole realme, as also in the yeare 1068 besieged this citie of Excester, which after by composition he restored to his former estate againe. Also in his time, Richard de Bzion, a noble man of Normandie, the sonne of Baldwin of Bzion, & of Albred the néece to the Conqueror, was made baron of Okehampton, warden of the castell of Excester, and vicount of Deuon. This Leofricus, after that he had well and worthilie ruled his church and diocesse by the space of three and twentie yeares, he ended his daies in peace, and died in the yeare 1073, and was buried in the cemiterie or churchyard of his owne church, vnder a simple and a broken marble stone, which place by the since inlarging of his church is now within the tower of the same, where of late, in the yeare 1568, a new monument was erected in the memorie of so good, worthie, and noble a personage, by the industrie of the writer hereof, but at the charges of the deane and chapter.

Olbertus or Olbernus. 14 Olbertus or Olbernus, a Norman borne, and brother to an earle named William, was preferred to this bishoprike, and in the yeare 1074 was consecrated and installed to the same. Polydorus writeth, that one Galfrid who ioined with Odo, earle of Kent and bishop of Baion, against William Rufus, should be bishop of Eron: but it was not, nor could not so be. In this mans time, William the Conqueror, and William Rufus his sonne died. This Olbertus or Olbernus, after he had béene bishop thirtie yeares, was blind, and died, and lieth buried in his owne church.

William warlewast. 15 William Warlewast a Norman borne, and chapleine both to the Conqueror and his two sons, William and Henrie: he was a graue and a wise man, and for the same was preferred by Henrie the king to this bishoprike, in the yere one thousand one hundred and seuen, and was consecrated by Anselmus archbishop of Canturburie, in the moneth of August the same yeare. He first began to inlarge his church, which at that time was no bigger than that which is now called the ladie chappell. He founded and builded the monasterie of Plimpton, and placed therein regular canons: in his latter daies he wared and became blind. And yet notwithstanding for his wisdome the king sent him in ambassage vnto pope Paschalis the second, wherein he so wiselie dealed, and so discréetlie behaued himselfe in his message, that he made a reconciliation betweene the pope and the king, and returned with great praise and commendation. Not long after his returne, and hauing small ioie of the world, he gaue ouer his bishoprike, and became one of the religious canons in his owne house of Plimpton, where he died and was buried, he was bishop about twentie yeares.

Robert Chichester. 16 Robert Chichester, deane of Sarisburie, was consecrated bishop vnder Anselmus archbishop of Canturburie, Anno 1128, and the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the first. He was a gentleman borne, and therefore estéemed for his zeale in religion, wherein he was deuout according to those daies; and thinking his labours to be best imploied that waie, did essoons go in pilgrimage, sometime to Rome, sometime to one place, sometime to another; and euer he would bring with him some one relike or other. He was a liberall contributor to the buildings of his church. In his time was founded and builded the monasterie of S. Stephans in Lanceston, and furthered by Reinold erle of Cornewall; but vnto it this bishop was an aduersarie, not for misliking the worke, but for feare of an intrusion vpon his liberties. Likewise at this time was builded the priorie of saint Nicholas in Excester, by the abbat of Battell, vnto which abbeie this priorie was a cell. In this mans time also king Henrie made William Rideuers a Norman (and his kinsman) earle of Deuon; and therewith the lordship of Tiuerton, and the honor of Plimpton, togither with the third pennie of his reuenues in Deuon, which in the whole was then thirtie marks, whereof this earle had ten. Also in this mans time king Henrie died, and king Stephan entred, and toke vpon him the crowne, whereof insued great warres. This bishop, after that he had occupied the place two and twentie yeares, died, and was buried in his owne church. But the monke of Westminster writeth that he should be bishop seuen and twentie yeares, and died in the yeere one thousand one hundred fiftie and fiue, but he neuer saw the records of this church which are to the contrarie.

Robert Warlewast. 17 Robert Warlewast, nephue to William the bishop of this church, deane of Sarisburie, was consecrated bishop by Theobaldus archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare one thousand one hundred and fiftie, he nothing degenerated from the steps of his predecessors, but was altogither of the same bent and disposition. In his time king Stephan died, and Henrie the second was crowned king. This Robert after that he had occupied this sée nine yéers or thereabout, died, & was buried at Plimpton by his vncle.

Bartholomeus Iscanus. 18 Bartholomeus Iscanus, otherwise Bartholomew of Excester, was consecrated bishop of Excester vnder Theobald archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare a thousand one hundred fiftie nine, he was called Iscanus of Isca, which is one of the ancientest names of this citie. He was a meane citizens son, but being verie apt vnto learning, his parents and friends kept him to schole; and he so well profited therein, that he came and proued to be a verie well learned man: and being bishop he wrote sundrie bookes, as of predestination, free will, penance, and others. Of all men he could not brooke nor fauor Thomas Becket archbishop of Canturburie for his contempt and disobedience against the king, for the which he sharplie improued, rebuked, and inueighed against him openlie in the parlement house holden at Northampton; and with such effectuall reasons, and pithie arguments, he did so temper the same, that the whole parlement relied vnto his iudgement and opinion herein against Thomas Becket. And after

after his death, such was the grauitie, modestie, and wisedome of the man, that he was specially chosen to be ambassador for the king vnto pope Alexander the third; and so wisely, and with such discretion vsed the same, that notwithstanding his cause and message had manie aduersaries, yet he reconciled the pope and the king, obteined the goodwill and fauour of the pope, and brought his message to good effect. This bishop was in great familiaritie and acquaintance with Baldwin of Excester his countriman, now archbishop of Canturburie, who was a poore mans sonne in this citie; but for his learning aduanced to this estate. In this bishops time, about the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred three score and eight, William Fitzralfe a citizen of this citie founded a cell for monks within this citie, and dedicated the same to saint Alexius, which not long after was united to saint Johns within the east gate of the same citie. In his time also Reinold of Courtneie a nobleman of Normandie, the son of Elorus the son of Lewes, named Lewes le Grosse king of France came into this land, and married Hawise daughter and heire to Hawd the daughter and heire to Adelis, sister and heire to Richard de Brione the first vicount of Deuon, and in hir right was vicount of Deuon. This Bartholomew, after he had béene bishop about fouretéene yeares, in the yere one thousand one hundred eightie and foure, died: but where he died, and where he was buried it doth not apeere. In this bishops time about the yeare one thousand one hundred and seuentie, one Johannes Cornitensis a Cornish man borne, was a famous learned diuine, he was a student at Rome and other places in Italie, and by that meanes grew into great acquaintance with pope Alexander the third: he wrote diuerse bookes, and namelie one De incarnatione Christi, against Peter Lombard, who affirmed, Quòd Christus secundum quod homo est, aliquid non est; and this he dedicated to pope Alexander.

John the chanter.

19 John the chanter of the cathedrall church of this citie was consecrated and installed bishop of this church, in the yeare one thousand one hundred eightie and foure, he was well reported of for his liberalitie in continuing the buildings of this church, wherein he was nothing inferior to his predecessors. In his time king Henrie Fitzempresse died, and he himselfe, hauing beene bishop about six yeares, died in the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred ninetie and one.

Henrie Marshall.

20 Henrie Marshall archdeacon of Stafford, the brother to Walter earle marshall of England, was consecrated bishop by Hubert archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare one thousand one hundred ninetie and one; he finished the building of his church, according to the plot and foundation which his predecessors had laid; and that done, he purchased the patronage and lordship of Woodburie of one Albemarlie, which he gaue and impropriated vnto the vicars chorall of his church. In this mans time, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred and one, one Simon Thurnaius a Cornish man borne, brought vp in learning, did by diligence and studie so prosper therein, that he became excellent in all the liberall sciences, and in his daies none thought to be like him. He left Oxenford, where he had beene a student, and went to Paris, and there became a priest, and studied diuinitie, and therein became so excellent, and of so deepe a iudgement, that he was made cheefe of the Sorbonists; at length he became so proud of his learning, and did glorie so much therein, that he would be singular, & thought himselfe to be another Aristotle: and so much he was therein blinded, and waxed so farre in loue with Aristotle, that he preferred him before Moses and Christ. But behold Gods iust iudgement. For suddenlie his memorie failed him, and he waxed so forgetfull, that he could neither call to remembrance anie thing that he had done, neither could he discerne, read, or know a letter of the booke. This Henrie, after that he had spent and liued twelue yeares in his bishoprike, he died, and lieth buried in the north side of the chancell of his church, in a verie faire tome of marble, in the yeare one thousand two hundred and six.

Simon de Apulia.

21 Simon de Apulia, in the yeare one thousand two hundred and six was installed bishop of this see, of him there remaineth no memoriall at all. In his time were famous Joseph Iscanus, and Alexander Neckam; the one was verie well learned in the Latine and Greeke tong, and in the liberall sciences; the other was prior of saint Nicholas, and was an vniuersall man, being a profound philosopher, an eloquent orator, a pleasant poet, and a deepe diuine. In this bishops time the doctrine of elenation, adoration, reseruation, and praieng for the dead, being established by pope Honorius the third, the parish churches within this citie were limited, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred twentie & two. In this mans time, in the yeare one thousand two hundred and twelue, one Johannes Deuonius, so surnamed, because he was borne in Deuon, being well bent to good studies, was much commended for his learning and modestie. He was familiar and of great acquaintance with Baldwin archbishop of Canturburie, and being made abbat of Ford, was in such fauor with king John, that he chose him to be his confessor and chapleine: he was a writer, and compiled diuerse bookes which were then accounted of. Being dead, he was buried in his abbeie, the people much lamenting the want of so good a man. This bishop hauing spent eightéene yeares, died, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred twentie and foure, & was buried in his owne church.

William Brewer.

22 William Brewer, verie shortlie after the death of the foresaid Simon, was elected bishop, and consecrated by Stephan Langton archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred twentie and foure. He was borne and descended of a noble house and parentage, being brother to sir William Brewer knight, the husband of the eldest daughter, & one of the heirs to William de Aerona, erle of Deuon; and who also was founder of the abbeies of Tor, of Hartland, and other monasteries. This bishop so wisely and discréetlie behaued himselfe, that he was had in great reputation among all men, and in special fauour with the king. For king Henrie, hauing giuen his sister ladie Isabell to wife vnto Frederike the emperor, did commend and betake hir to this bishop, to be conueied and conducted to the emperor. And such was the fame and good report spred of him, that as he passed through the countries, they were from place to place receiued with great honor; and being come to the citie of Coleine, the archbishop there did not onelie verie honorablie receiue them, but also accompanied them vnto the citie of Wormes, where the marriage was solemnized. When this bishop had séene the marriage, and all things performed, he toke his leaue, and was dismissed with great presents, and honorablie accompanied homewards by the archbishop and others. At his returne he was totallie receiued of all the noble men about the king, and most thankfullie by the king himselfe, and whome the king vsed as his special and most trustie councellor in all his weightie causes. This bishop being come home to his owne house, and minding (as his predecessors had done) to leaue some good memoriall behind him, he made a deane, and constituted twentie foure prebendaries within his church. To the one he improplated Brampton and Cliton Rawleie: for the others he purchased so much land, as out thereof he assigned to euerie prebendarie foure pounds by the yeare, and of these he ordeined his chapter. Also in this mans time, in the yeare one thousand two hundred and fortie, Gilbert Long and Robert his brother citizens of this citie builded and founded the hospitall of saint Johns, within the east gate of this citie, for the sustenance of certeine poore folks, called afterwards the poore children of saint Johns, & gaue all their lands and tenements to the same, which was sufficient. The yeare following, the cell of Alexius was remoued and adioined to saint Johns; and then the founders being dead, the charge and gouernement of that house was by those founders commended to the maior of this citie, & they thensforth were founders and patrons thereof. In the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred fortie and foure, there grew a contention concerning the poore lazer sicke people of the Magdalen without the south gate of this citie, whose maner and vsage was then, with a clapdish vpon euerie market daie to resort and come to the markets, and there to beg euerie mans deuotion: but by reason of their sicknesse, which was lothsome and abhorred, the peoples deuotion waxed short and scant against them: as also euerie man murmured against their going & begging at large. Where vpon the matter being brought into question betweene the bishop and this citie, it was concluded that a permutation should be made: and that therefore the bishops should be patrones, and haue the gouernement of saint Johns, and the maior and his successors to be gardians and founders of the hospitall of the Magdalen; with a prouiso, that the proctor of the hospitall of the Magdalen should on one daie in euerie moneth come with his box to saint Peters church at the time of seruice, and there receiue and gather the deuotion of the canons, which is vsed at these presents. This poore house remaineth still, but the other for want of good frends was suppressed and dissolued. This bishop, after he had continued in his church about nineteene yeares, he died, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred fortie and foure, and lieth buried in the middle of his owne church vnder a plaine marble stone.

Richard Blondie.

23 Richard Blondie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred fortie and fiue, was consecrated and installed bishop, Bonifacius then being archbishop of Canturburie. This Richard was a man of a mild spirit, but verie stout against such as in his time did offer anie iniurie to the church. And in his old yeares being but a weake man, he was much carried and ruled by such as were his officers and about him, who taking the opportunitie of the time, vsed all the meanes they might to inrich themselues. His cheefest officers were one Lodeswell his chancellor, Sutton his register, Fitzherbert his officiall, and Ermestow the keeper of his seale. These with others of the cheefe seruants of his household compacted among themselues, that whilest the bishop was yet liuing, who then laie sicke and verie weake in his bed, to make and conueie vnto themselues conueiances of such liuelihods as then laie in the bishops disposition; and accordinglie made out aduousons and other such conueiances as to them seemed best, all which were forthwith sealed and deliuered according to the orders among them concluded. But these their subtill dealings were not so closelie conueied, but that the next bishop following boulted and found the same out; and did not onelie reuerse all their doings, but also did excommunicat them, and who were not absolued vntill they had done their penance for the same: which was done at saint Peters church openlie, vpon Palmesun-daie, being the nineteenth daie of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred threescore and seuen. This bishop Richard in the twelfe yeare of his bishoprike, died, and was buried in his owne church.

Walter Wronescome.

24 Walter Wronescome, archdeacon of Surreie, was consecrated bishop of Excester vpon Passion sundaie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred foure score and six vnder Bonifacius then archbishop. He was borne in this citie of Exon, and was the sonne of poore parents; but he being of a verie towardnesse and good disposition, and verie apt to learning, they partlie of themselues, and partlie by helpe of their friends, did put him to schole and kept him to his booke, wherein he proued and prospered so well that he was verie well learned. At the time of his election he was no priest, and therefore not capeable of anie such dignitie: but immediatlie he toke that order vpon him, and forthwith was consecrated bishop. All which being done within fifteene daies, it was counted as for a miracle; namelie, that he should be elected bishop, then made priest, and at last to be consecrated within that space. For so manie dignities (as they termed it) to be cast vpon one man in so short a time, had not beene lightlie seene. He founded the college of Glasenetie in Perrin in Cornswall, and indowed the same with faire possessions and reuenues. He purchased the Barton of Rokesdon and Clist, and gaue it to the hospitall of S. Johns within the east gate of the citie of Excester. He instituted in his owne church the feast called Gabriels feast; and gaue a peece of land for the maintenance thereof. He also did by a policie purchase the lordship and house of Clist Sachilfield, and by a deuise did inlarge the Barton thereof, by gaining of Cornish wood from his deane and chapter: and builded then a verie faire & a sumptuous house, and called it bishops Clist, which he left to his successors. Likewise he got the patronage of Clist Fomeson, now called Sowton, and annexed the same to his new lordship, which (as it was said) was in this order. He had a frier to be his chapleine and confessor, which died in his said house of Clist, and should haue bin buried at the parish church of Faringdon, bicause the said house was and is in that parish: but bicause the parish church was somewhat far off, the waies foule, and the weather rainie, or for some other causes; the bishop willed and commanded the corps to be carried to the parish church of Sowton, then called Clist Fomeson, which is verie neere and bordereth vpon the bishops lordship: the two parishes there being diuided by a little lake called Clist. At this time one Fomeson a gentleman was lord and patrone of Clist Fomeson, and he being aduertised of such a buriall towards in his parish, and a leech waie to be made ouer his land, without his leaue or consent required therein, calleth his tenants together, and goeth to the bridge ouer the lake, betweene the bishops land and his, and there meeteth the bishops men bringing the said corps, and forbiddeth them to come ouer the water. But the bishops men nothing regarding the same, do preese forwards to come ouer the water; and the others do withstand and fall at strife about the matter, so long, that in the end my lords frier is fallen into the water. The bishop taketh this matter in such griefe, that a holie frier, a religious man, and his owne chapleine and confessor should so vnreuerentlie be cast into the water, that he falleth out with the gentleman, and (vpon what occasion I know not) he sueth him in the law, and so vexeth and tormenteth him, that in the end he was faine to yeeld himselfe to the bishops deuotion, and seeketh all waies he could to currie the bishops good will, which he could not obteine, vntill for his redemption demption he had giuen and surrendred vp his patronage of Sowton with a peece of land, all which the said bishop annexeth to his new lordship. Thus by policie he purchased the manor of bishops Clist, by a deuise gaineth Cornish wood, and by power wresteth the patronage of Sowton. This bishop after he had occupied this see about three and twentie yeares, died and was buried in his owne church, in a sumptuous tome of alabaster.

Peter Quituill.

25 Peter Quituill, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred foure score and one, was consecrated bishop of this church, vnder John archbishop of Canturburie. He first instituted a chanter and a subdeane in his church. To the one he impropriated Painton and Chidleigh, and to the other the rectorie of Eglosehaile in Cornewall, he was a liberall and a speciall benefactor to the hospitall of saint Johns in Excester as well in goods as in liuelihoods, he first began to inlarge & increase his church from the chancell downewards, and laid the foundation thereof. In his time in the yeare of Christ one thousand two hundred foure score and fiue, Walter Lichlade the first chanter was slaine in a morning as he came from the morning seruice, then called the Matins, which was then wont to be said shortlie after midnight. Vpon which occasion the king came vnto this citie, and kept his Christmasse in the same, and thereupon a composition was made betweene the bishop and the citie for inclosing of the churchyard, and building of certeine gates there, as appeareth by the said composition bearing date in Festo annunciationis beate Marie 1286. The king at the sute of the earle of Hereford, who at his being here was lodged in the house of the Greie friers, which then was neere the house of S. Nicholas, obteined of the bishop, that they should be remoued from thense to a more wholesome place, which was to the place without the south gate: wherof after the kings departure grew some controuersie, bicause the bishop refused to performe his promise made to the king. This man also impropriated the parish of S. Newleine, and the parish of Stoke Gabriell, and vnited the same to the office of the chancellor of the cathedrall church; & vnder condition, that the said chancellor should continuallie read a lecture within the said citie, of diuinitie or of the decretals: and if he should faile to doo this, that then it might and should be lawfull to the bishop to resigne the said parsonages impropriated, and to bestow it at his pleasure, as appeareth by the said grant vnder the seales of the said bishop, deane and chapter, dated the twelfe of the calends of Maie 1283. This bishop not long after, and in the eleuenth yeare of his bishoprike, died; being choked in drinking of a sirrup, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand two hundred ninetie and two, & was buried in his owne church. The Franciscans or Greie friers of this citie imputed his death to his hard dealing with them. For whereas he had promised the king to prouide a conuenient place for them to build their house in, and had willed their warden named Deodatus, to seeke out and make inquirie for the same: yet notwithstanding when he had so done, bicause the same was in his see, he did swarue from his said promise, and did vtterlie denie to performe the same, by the persuasion of one Peter Benefeld, a Dominican or Blacke frier, and Confessor vnto the said bishop. For he enuieng the good successe of the Franciscans, persuadeth with the bishop, that in no wise he should permit them to inioy the place which they had gotten, nor to build therein; bicause it was within his see: for saith he, as vnder colour of simplicitie they creepe into the hearts of the people, and hinder vs more preachers from our gaines and liuings; so be ye sure, that if the canons put foot within your liberties, they will in time so incroch vpon the same, as that they will be cleane exempted from out of your libertie, and iurisdiction. The bishop being soone persuaded and contented contrarie to his promise to yeeld thervnto, denieth the Franciscans; and vtterlie forbiddeth them to build or to doo anie thing within his see or libertie. About two yeares after, the bishop kept a great feast vpon the sundaie next before saint Francis daie, and among others was present with him one Walter Winborne one of the kings chiefe iustices of the bench; and who was present when the bishop at the request of the king made promise to further and to helpe the Franciscans, and who in their behalfe did now put the bishop in mind thereof, and requested him to haue consideration both of his owne promise and of their distresse. The bishop misliking these speeches, waxed somewhat warme and offended, and in open termes did not onelie denie to yeeld herevnto, but wished himselfe to be choked what daie soeuer he did consent or yeeld vnto it. It fortuned that the same weeke, and vpon the daie of saint Francis eue, the bishop tooke a certeine sirrup to drinke, and in too hastie swallowing thereof his breath was stopped, and he forthwith died. The Franciscans hearing thereof, made no little a doo about this matter, but blazed it abrode that saint Francis wrought this miracle vpon the bishop, bicause he was so hard against them.

Thomas Bitton.

26 Thomas Bitton the yeare following was elected bishop, & the see of Canturburie being void, he was consecrated by John Roman archbishop of Yorke. He left no memoriall of anie great things done by him, sauing that he continued in the building of his church; as also was a fauourer of such learned men as were in his diocesse in his time: namelie Robert Plimpton a regular canon of Plimpton, and professor of diuinitie, and who wrote two bookes, Walter of Eron a Franciscane frier of Carocus in Cornewall, who at the request of one Baldwin of Excester wrote the historie of Guie of Warwike; William of Excester doctor of diuinitie and warden of the Franciscane friers of this citie; Godfrie surnamed Cornewall, a subtill scholeman, and a reader of diuinitie sometimes in Paris. This bishop, after fourteene yeares that he had occupied this see, died, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred and six, and was buried in his owne church.

Walter Stapledon.

27 Walter Stapledon, in the yere of our Lord one thousand three hundred and seauen, being elected bishop of this citie, was consecrated by Robert Winchelsei archbishop of Canturburie. He descended of a most noble parentage, which ioined with his learning, wisedome, & politike head, did him great credit and fauour with the king, who had him not onelie one of his priuie councell, but also made him lord treasuror of England. At his inthronization or installing he kept a solemne obseruation. For being come first to the citie, immediatlie after his consecration, as soone as he came to the east gate, he alighted from his horsse, and went in on foot, all the street being couered and laied with blacke cloth; he was led on both sides with two men of worship: and sir Hugh Courtneie knight, who clamed to be steward of his feast, went next before him. The feast it selfe was verie sumptuous and liberall. A controuersie was betweene him & the said sir Hugh Courtneie, concerning his chalenge to be his steward, but it was compounded and ended. This bishop as he grew and increased in wealth, so he was carefull in the well disposing of part therof. For the increase of learning he builded and erected two houses in Oxenford, the one named Stapledons inne, but since Excester college, the other Hart hall. He was also a speciall ciall benefactor vnto the hospitall of saint Johns in Excester; vnto the which, for the releeuing of certeine poore children therein, he impropriated the rectorie or personage of Ernescome. In the controuersie betweene his maister king Edward the second, and Charles the French king, he was sent ambassadour to the French king, and ioined in commission with the queene, for the treatie of a peace and reconciliation: which though it were obteined, yet he ioining with the Spensers, who fauoured not the queene, he returned into England; leauing the queene behind him. And whereas they practised what they could, to put enimitie betweene the king and hir; and to set hir besides the cushion, they themselues fell into the same snares, which they had laid for others. For not long after, the queene, by the helpe of the earle of Henauld, and of sir John his brother, came into England with a great armie. Whereof the king and the Spensers, being affraied, departed from London to Bristow, leauing the bishop at London, and made him custos of the same; who requiring the keies of the gates of the citie of the maior, the commoners tooke him and beheaded him, as also his brother sir Richard Stapledon, in Cheapside, and carried his bodie to his house without Templebar, & there buried it in a sandhill; namelie the fifteenth of October in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred twentie and nine. But the queene forgetting all discurteses, and reuerencing his calling, commanded his corps to some more honourable buriall: whereupon the same was taken vp, and brought to this citie, and with great solemnitie was buried in his owne church, vpon the eight and twentith of March, where his epitaph by the writer thereof is set. Thus after that he had beene bishop about twentie yeares, he ended his daies.

James Barkeleie. 28 James Barkeleie, vpon the six and twentith of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred twentie and seauen, before the buriall of his predecessor in his owne church, was consecrated bishop of this citie. He descended of the noble house of the lord Barkeleie, and albeit he were reputed to be a verie godlie and a wise man, yet he had no time to yeeld the triall thereof. For he died in the fourth moneth after his consecration, vpon the foure & twentith daie of Julie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred twentie and seauen, and was buried in his owne church as some say, but some thinke he neuer came hither at all.

John Grandesson. 29 John Grandesson, being in Italie with pope John the two & twentith. After the death of James Barkeleie, the king presented him vnto the pope, who accepted the presentation, & consecrated him bishop of this diocesse on the eight of October, Anno 1327. He was borne and descended of the ancient house of the Grandessons, dukes of Burgognie, his father was named Gilbert, the brother of Otho the great lord Grandesson. Which Gilbert comming into this land, was well interteined by the king and nobilitie, and had a good liking of the countrie, that by meanes of Henrie earle of Lancaster, with whome he came into England, he married ladie Sibill, daughter and one of the heires to John Tregos, lord of the castell of Etwas, neere Hereford east, and by hir had issue fiue sonnes, and foure daughters; of which this bishop was one, and was borne in the parish of Ashperton, in the diocesse of Hereford. He was from his childhood verie well affected to learning, and became a good scholar and professor of diuinitie, of which method he wrote two books, the one intituled Pontificales maiores, and the other Pontificales minores. He was also verie graue, wise, and politike, and therby grew into such credit with pope John the two and twentith, that he was not onelie of his priuie councell, but also Nuntius apostolicæ sedis; and in all matters of weight and importance an ambassadour for him to the emperour, to the kings of Spaine, of France, of England, and of all others the mightiest princes of christendome. And being on a time sent in an ambassage to king Edward the third, he did with such wisedome and grauitie behaue himselfe, that the king was rauished in loue with him; and did so tenderlie loue and fauour him, that he neuer ceassed, vntill he had procured him from the pope, and then he gaue him the archdeaconrie of Notingham, and bestowed great liuings on him. He made him one of his priuie councell, and in the end preferred him to this bishoprike. After this, there being some disliking betweene pope Clement the first, and the king; he for his approued wisedome was sent in an ambassage to the pope, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred fortie and three, for an intreatie of a peace and an amitie betweene them to be had; and with such wisedome he did his message, that he obteined his purpose, and made a reconciliation. After his returne home to his bishoprike, he was altogither giuen in doing some good things. He builded & founded the college of saint Marie Otreie, and indowed the same with great and goodlie reuenues, he was a liberall benefactor to the vicars choral of his owne church, as also to the college of Glasneie in Perrin; he builded the two last arches in the west end of his church, vaulted the rose of all the church, and fullie performed and ended the buildings of the same, and then inriched his said church with plate, ornaments, and great riches. Also he builded a verie faire house in his sanctuarie at bishops Teington, which he gaue and left full furnished vnto his successors, and did impropriate vnto the same the parsonage of Radwaie, to the end as he setteth downe in his testament, Vt haberent locum vndè caput suum reclinarent, si fortè in manum regis eorum temporalia caperentur; and which his halsening in the end came partlie to effect. For not onelie the most part of the temporalties of this bishoprike, but this new builded house and impropriation are come to be the possessions and inheritances of temporall men. This bishop waxed old, and feeling in himselfe a decaie of nature, made his last will and testament, wherein he made such large and bountious legacies to the pope, emperour, king, queene, archbishop, bishops, colleges, churches, and to sundrie persons of high estates and callings; that a man would maruell, considering his great and chargeable buildings & works otherwise, how and by what meanes he could haue atteined to such a masse of welth and riches; but his wisedome and policie considered, it was easie. For first, he sequestrateth from himselfe and out of his house the troope of manie men and horsses, reteining and keeping no more than to serue his reasonable estate; his diet was frugall, his receipts great, his expenses no more than necessarie. Moreouer, he had taken and set an order with all the ecclesiasticall persons of his diocesse, that at the time of their deaths, they should leaue and bequeth all their goods to him or to some other in trust, In pios vsus, & towards his chargeable buildings; and so well he was beloued, and his doings liked, that they all accepted this his order: by meanes whereof he grew within the course of fortie yeares to infinite wealth and riches. He was in all his life time a plaine man, and void of all vaine glorie and pompe; and preuenting that none should be vsed at his buriall, commanded the same to be done plainelie & simplie; and that none of his executors, chapleins, seruants, nor none of his household should weare anie mourning blacke cloths at the same, but onelie their accustomable & common apparell, which then was commonlie greie coloured cloths. This bishop

bishop was no lesse graue and wise, than stout and of courage, if occasion did so require. And amongest other things this is reported of him; that about the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred thirtie and one, Simon Meyham, then archbishop of Canturburie, sent his mandatum to this bishop, that he would visit his church & dioceese vpon mondaie next after Ascension daie then following. This bishop (vpon what occasion it is not written) did refuse this mandatum, and apealed from the same, aduertising the archbishop that he should not visit his church nor dioceese. Notwithstanding, the archbishop at the time apointed came to this citie, and went to S. Peters church, nothing thinking that anie durst to withstand him. But the bishop knowing of his coming, goeth to the church dore, meeteth the archbishop, and forbiddeth him to enter into his church; but the archbishop pressing forward, as with force to enter, the bishop being then well garded, denied and resisted him: wher vpon the archbishop departed, and after at a prouinciall counsell holden at London, the archbishop complained hereof, but by meanes of the like discord betweene him & his suffragans, he prevailed not. In this bishops time one William of Excester, a verie well learned man, was a canon of this church; and he ioining with Nicholas de Cesena, Okeham, Wallingham, and others, did openlie preach, that Christ and his apostles were but poore men, and had no temporall possessions: neither was anie emperor or late man subiect to the pope, but onlie in matters of religion. But when he heard that pope John the three and twentith had excommunicated, and would condemne them all for heretikes; this William, to saue his liuings, secretlie shronke awaie from his old companions, and changed his copie, and writeth certeine conclusions against them and his owne preachings. Also in this bishops time, about the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred and fortie, one John of Bampton, so named, bicause he was borne at Bampton, in this dioceese, and a monke of the order of the Carmelites, was a verie good scholar, and first did openlie read Aristotle in the vniuersitie of Cambridge; where he was a scholar; and afterwards he studied diuinitie, and was made doctor: he wrote certeine bookes, which are not extant. This bishop, after that he had occupied this church about two and fortie yeares, he died vpon S. Swithins daie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred sirtie and nine, and was buried in a chappell which he builded in the west wall of his owne church.

Thomas Brentingham.

30 Thomas Brentingham, after the death of this John Grandeson, was at one instant chosen bishop of Excester and bishop of Hereford, who refusing the one toke the other, and was consecrated bishop of Excester vpon the tenth daie of March, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred and seauentie, being the feast daie of Nereus and Achilles, William of Worcester then archbishop of Canturburie. This Thomas was a man verie well learned, and experted both in ecclesiasticall matters, and in politike gouernement, and in both these respects greatlie reuerenced and estéemed; and for that cause, at the parlement holden at Westminster, in the tenth yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, was chosen one of the twelue péers of the realme vnder the king. He was a benefactor to the Calenderhaie of the vicars chorall of his owne church, and perfourned and supplied in buildings and otherwise, what his predecessors had left vndone. And hauing bene bishop foure and twentie yeares, he died the third of December, in the yeare of our Lord 1394, and was buried in the north side of the bodie of his owne church.

Edmund Stafford.

